THIS BOOK
MUST NOT BE REMOVED FROM THE LIBRARY

UNIVERSITY OF LONDON LIBRARY

REFERENCE ONLY

Mx. North Gallery

UNIVERSITY OF LONDON LIBRARY

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2026

https://archive.org/details/weekly-law-reports_1954_1

THE WEEKLY LAW REPORTS of The Incorporated Council of Law Reporting

CONTAINING DECISIONS IN

THE HOUSE OF LORDS, THE PRIVY COUNCIL,

THE SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE,

ASSIZE COURTS and

ECCLESIASTICAL COURTS.

EDITOR - - - R. P. COLINVAUX
ASSISTANT EDITOR - J. D. PENNINGTON
Barristers-at-Law

1954

Volume 1

BIBL. LONDIN UNIV.

PUBLISHED BY THE INCORPORATED COUNCIL OF LAW REPORTING
AT ITS OFFICE, 3 STONE BUILDINGS, LINCOLN'S INN, LONDON, W.C.2,
AND PRINTED BY THE EASTERN PRESS, LTD., LONDON AND READING

THE

INCORPORATED COUNCIL OF LAW REPORTING

FOR ENGLAND AND WALES

MEMBERS OF THE COUNCIL

Chairman—The Hon. Mr. Justice McNAIR

Vice-Chairman—Sir LESLIE FARRER, K.C.V.O.

EX-OFFICIO MEMBERS

The Rt. Hon. Sir REGINALD E. MANNINGHAM-BULLER, Q.C., M.P. — ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Sir HARRY HYLTON-FOSTER, Q.C., M.P. — SOLICITOR-GENERAL

FREDERIC H. JESSOP, Esq. — President of The Law Society

ELECTED MEMBERS

The Rt. Hon. Lord Justice JENKINS J. H. STAMP, Esq.	Lincoln's Inn
R. E. BURRELL, Esq., Q.C. J. V. NESBITT, Esq.	Inner Temple
W. LATEY, Esq., M.B.E., Q.C. MONTAGUE L. BERRYMAN, Esq., Q.C.	Middle Temple
The Hon. Mr. Justice McNAIR S. E. POCOCK, Esq., O.B.E. *A. G. P. JOHNSON, Esq.	Gray's Inn
H. EDMUND DAVIES, Esq., Q.C. R. E. MEGARRY, Esq.	Appointed on the nomination of the General Council of the Bar
Sir LESLIE FARRER, K.C.V.O. (Firm: Messrs. Farrer & Co.) KENNETH D. COLE, Esq. (Firm: Messrs. Linklaters & Paines)	The Law Society

* Co-opted Member.

Secretary—F. G. HUDSON, Esq.

Assistant Secretary—F. E. SMITH, Esq.

3 Stone Buildings, Lincoln's Inn, W.C.2

REPORTERS

House of Lords	F. H. Cowper	Barristers-at-Law
Privy Council	Charles Clayton
Court of Appeal No. 1 ...	B. A. Bicknell E. Dangerfield
Court of Appeal No. 2 ...	A. W. Grant
Court of Appeal No. 3 ...	P. B. Durnford, O.B.E. M. M. Hill
Chancery Division	J. L. Denison K. R. A. Hart F. R. Dymond I. G. R. Moses
Queen's Bench Division, Court of Criminal Appeal and Courts-Martial Appeal Court	S. Cobon J. F. Lamb J. D. Pennington C. J. Ellis
Probate and Divorce ...	J. B. Gardner
Admiralty and Ecclesiastical	H. Greenfield

HOUSE OF LORDS

Lords Chancellors: Lord Simonds, Lord Kilmuir

Lords of Appeal in Ordinary

Lord Porter
Lord Simonds
Lord Oaksey
Lord Morton of Henryton
Lord Reid
Lord Radcliffe
Lord Tucker
Lord Asquith of Bishopstone
Lord Cohen
Lord Keith
Lord Somervell

COURT OF APPEAL

Lords Chancellors: Lord Simonds, Lord Kilmuir

Lord Chief Justice of England: Lord Goddard

Master of the Rolls: Sir Francis Raymond Evershed

President of the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division: Lord Merriman

Sir Donald Bradley Somervell
Sir John Edward Singleton
Sir Alfred Thompson Denning
Sir David Llewelyn Jenkins
Sir William Norman Birkett
Sir Francis Lord Charlton Hodson
Sir John William Morris
Sir Charles Robert Ritchie Romer
Sir Hubert Lister Parker

CHANCERY DIVISION

Lords Chancellors: Lord Simonds, Lord Kilmuir

Sir Harry Bevir Vaisey
Sir Ronald Francis Roxburgh
Sir Henry Wynn-Parry
Sir Charles Eustace Harman
Sir Harold Otto Danckwerts
Sir George Harold Lloyd-Jacob
Sir Gerald Ritchie Upjohn

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION

Lord Chief Justice of England: Lord Goddard

Sir Malcolm Hilbery
Sir Roland Giffard Oliver
Sir Wintringham Norton Stable
Sir James Dale Cassels
Sir Hugh Imbert Periam Hallett
Sir Gonne St. Clair Pilcher
Sir George Justin Lynskey
Sir Austin Ellis Lloyd Jones
Sir Laurence Austin Byrne
Sir Frederic Aked Sellers
Sir Donald Leslie Finnemore
Sir Geoffrey Hugh Benbow Streatfeild
Sir Benjamin Ormerod
Sir Gerald Osborne Slade
Sir Edward Holroyd Pearce
Sir Patrick Arthur Devlin
Sir Hubert Lister Parker
Sir William Gorman
Sir Patrick Redmond Joseph Barry
Sir Terence Norbert Donovan
Sir William Lennox McNair
Sir Cecil Robert Havers
Sir Colin Hargreaves Pearson
Sir Hildreth Glyn-Jones
Sir Denis Gerrard
Sir John Percy Ashworth

PROBATE, DIVORCE, AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION

President: Lord Merriman

Sir Hubert Joseph Wallington
Sir Henry William Barnard
Sir Henry Gordon Willmer
Sir Charles Arthur Collingwood
Sir Seymour Edward Karminski
Sir William Arthian Davies
Sir Eric Sachs

Attorneys-General

Sir Lionel Frederick Heald
Sir Edward Manningham-Buller

Solicitors-General

Sir Reginald Edward Manningham-Buller
Sir Harry Braustyn Hylton-Foster

BIBL. LONDIN. UNIV.

TABLE OF CASES

(VOL. 1)

A

PAGE

ABABIO v. TURKSON 509
ABBEY NATIONAL BUILDING SOCIETY, Ex parte. REGINA v. JUDGE WILLES 136
ABBOTT, DUNSTER v. 58
ABERDEEN JOURNALS LD., ROBERTSON v. 1084
ADDISON v. BROWN 779
ADEBAYO v. OFFICIAL RECEIVER OF NIGERIA 681
ADLER v. DICKSON (PRACTICE NOTE) 1482
AICHROTH v. COITEE 1124
AJAMI v. COMPTROLLER OF CUSTOMS 1405
ALBION (NO. 2), THE 1220
ALLEN (INSPECTOR OF TAXES), LEWIN v. 1063
ALMA SHIPPING CO., S.A. v. V. M. SALGAONCAR E IRMAOS LTDA. 650
AMERICAN EXPRESS CO. INC., Ex parte. REGINA v. INDUSTRIAL DISPUTES TRIBUNAL 1118
AMPAH (ORSE. CHRISTIAN), INTSIFUL v. 253
AMUSEMENT EQUIPMENT CO. LD., PEACOCK v. 803
ANDERSON v. LAMBIE (PRACTICE NOTE) 303
ANGLO-DAL LD., HEISLER v. 1273
ANGLO-IRANIAN OIL CO. LD., S.-A. MARITIME ET COMMERCIALE OF GENEVA v. .. 492
ANSTAY (LONDON) LD., FRIEDMANN v. 406
ARCHDALE (JAMES) & CO. LD. v. COMSERVICES LD. 459
ARCHER v. CATTON & CO. LD. 775
ARDING v. ARDING (PRACTICE NOTE) 944
ASSOCIATED BROADCASTING CO. LD. v. COMPOSERS, AUTHORS AND PUBLISHERS ASSOCIATION OF CANADA LD. 1484
ATTORNEY-GENERAL, HILLIER v. In re HILLIER'S TRUSTS 9, 700

B

BACH AND NORTH WEST METROPOLITAN HOSPITAL BOARD, HIGGINS v. 411
BAGSHAW, DECD., In re. WESTMINSTER BANK LD. v. TAYLOR 238
BAKER, In re. Ex parte EASTBOURNE WATERWORKS CO. v. OFFICIAL RECEIVER .. 1144
BAKER v. JONES 1005
BAMBRIDGE v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS 1265, 1460
BAMPTON v. COOK (PRACTICE NOTE) 450
BANQUE DES MARCHANDS DE MOSCOU (KOUPETSCHESKY) (NO. 2), In re 1108
BARCLAYS BANK LD. v. DORELL, In re FOLLETT DECD. 1430
BARCLAYS BANK LD. v. JOLLIFFE. In re LORD HYLTON'S SETTLEMENT 1055
BARCLAYS BANK LD. v. ROBERTS 1212
BARCLAYS BANK LD., WARMAN v. 191
BARR (TRADING AS HENRY & GALT), INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS v. 792
BARRETT & POMEROY (BAKERS) LD., FISHER v. 351
BARROW GREEN ESTATE CO. v. EXECUTORS OF WALKER, DECD. 231
BASTED v. COZENS & SUTCLIFFE LD. 1069
BATES v. STONE PARISH COUNCIL 1249
BATH v. BRITISH TRANSPORT COMMISSION 1013
BAWDEN'S SETTLEMENT, In re. BESANT v. BOARD OF GOVERNORS OF LONDON HOSPITAL .. .. 33n.
BEDDER v. DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS 1119
BENEWITH, SURTEES v. 1335
BERNHARD BARTELS, PEARLMAN (VENEERS) S.A. PTY LD. v. 1457
BEST, SELLARS v. 913
BESANT v. BOARD OF GOVERNORS OF LONDON HOSPITAL, In re BAWDEN'S SETTLEMENT .. .. 33n.
BIRKENHEAD BOROUGH JUSTICES, REGINA v. Ex parte SMITH 471
BIRTWISTLE v. TWEEDALE (PRACTICE NOTE) 190
BLACKER, CHILDS v. 809
BLACKMAN v. RAILWAY EXECUTIVE 220
BOARD OF TRADE, Ex parte, v. OLLARD, OLLARD & SESSIONS. In re C. E. PORTER 1133
BOARLAND (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. MADRAS ELECTRIC SUPPLY CORPORATION .. 87
BOCOCK v. ENFIELD ROLLING MILLS LD. 1303
BOUND, MONSON v. 1321
BOWKER, KILDAHL v. In re LYBBE DECD. 573
BOWLER v. JOHN MOWLEM & CO. 1445

PAGE

BEALE, DECD., In re. PETTON v. CLEMENTS 185
BEAUSHAW v. HOLDEN, In re (GEORGE WOODHOW LD.) 5
BEAUMONT v. BEAUMONT 539
BEAUSSERON, DECD., In re. GERBOT v. BEAUSSERON 496
BEAVERT v. BEAVERT 1169
BEAUX, POWELL v. 491
BEGGS MOTOR BODIES LD., WHALLEY v. 541
BEGHETON BOROUGH JUSTICES, REGINA v. Ex parte JARVIS 203
BEIGHTON CORPORATION, HALBAKER v. 1181
BELSTOL AEROPLANE CO., THOMAS v. 694
BRITISH BUILDING CLEANERS LD., DRUMMOND v. 801, 1434
BRITISH CONTINENTAL FUR CO. LD., MARSHALL v. 1202
BRITISH SCHOOL OF EGYPTIAN ARCHAEOLOGY, In re. MURRAY v. PUBLIC TRUSTEE 546
BRITISH TRANSPORT COMMISSION, BATE v. 1016
BRITISH TRANSPORT COMMISSION, DEVINE v. 666
BRITISH TRANSPORT COMMISSION, JUDSON v. 385
BRITISH TRANSPORT COMMISSION v. WORCESTERSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL 581
BRITTEN, STEVENS v. 1044
BROADSTONE MILLS LD., PATRICK (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. 195
BROADWAY COTTAGES TRUST, INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS v. 659
BRODIE, DAVIES TURNER & CO. LD. v. 1304
BROWN, ADDISON v. 775
BROWN, HOPE v. 219
BROWN v. TEBB & CO. LD. 1151
BROWNING, MONTANT v. 1089
BUNGALOWS (MAIDENHEAD) LD. 759
BUSHFORD v. FALCO 672
BUTTERLEY CO. LD., INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS v. 1190
BUTTERWORTH v. KINGSWAY MOTORS 1184
BYCROFT, UNITED DOMINIONS TRUST LD. v. 1345

C

CALVERT AND WIFE v. PICK 450
CAMERON, DECD., In re. CURRIE v. MILLIGAN 1975
CAMPBELL, DECD., IN THE ESTATE OF 648
CANNON, DALY v. 261
CATTON & CO LD., ARCHER v. 775
CENTRAL LAND BOARD, STOCKSBRIDGE MILL CO. LD. v. 886
CHAIN LIBRARIES LD., THOMSON v. 999
CHAPMAN v. CHAPMAN 1
CHARLES v. S. SMITH & SONS (ENGLAND) LD. 451
CHESHAM v. CHESHAM 996
CHILDS v. BLACKER 819
CHILDS v. GIBSON 809
CHRISTIAN (DESR. AMPAH) v. INTSEPTL 938
CILIA v. H. M. JAMES & SONS (A FIRM). SPARK (THIRD PARTY) 721
CITY OF LONDON LICENSING JUSTICES, REGINA v. Ex parte STEWART 1925
CLEMENTS, GUTTON v. In re BRACE DECD. 993
CLEMENTS, TOLLEMACHE v. 845
COMMISSIONERS OF JUSTICES AND BEXLEY HEATHTHING CORPORATION v. 109
COMPOSERS, AUTHORS AND PUBLISHERS ASSOCIATION OF CANADA LD. ASSOCIATED BROADCASTING CO. LD. v. 1484
COMPTROLLER OF JUSTICES, SAINT ALBANS v. 1405
CONSERVICES LD., JAMES ARBUTHNOT & CO. LD. v. 459
CONSOLIDATED PRESS LD., JONATHAN CAPE LD. v. 1918
CONSTANCE, SERVILLE v. 487
COOK, BAMPTON v. (PRACTICE NOTE) 450
COOK, REGINA v. 126
COPE, DECD., IN THE ESTATE OF 606
CORBE, In re (PRACTICE NOTE) 899
CORTES, AMBROSE v. 1124
COZENS & SUTCLIFFE LD., BASTED v. 1069
CRANFORDS (BANSTATE) LD. v. WILLIAMS AND STEEL MANUFACTURING CO. LD. .. 1130
CROGGAN & CO. LD., JOHNSON v. 195
CROSSLEY, A DEBTOR, In re 1968
CURRIE v. MILLIGAN, In re CAMERON DECD. 1975
CUSTODIAN OF ISRAELI ABSENTEE PROPERTY, JABSOUR (F. & K) v. 189

D

DADSWELL, INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS v. 1204
DADSWELL, SEVERNE (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. 1204

PAGE
DALY v. CANNON 261
DAVENPORT, REGINA v. 569
DAVIES v. HALL 855
DAVIES, REGINA v. 214
DAVIES, TURNER & CO. LD. v. BRODIE 1364
DAVIS v. ST. MARY'S DEMOLITION AND EXCAVATION CO. LD. 592
DEANS, DECD., In re. WESTMINSTER BANK LD. v. OFFICIAL SOLICITOR 332
DEBTOR, In re A. Ex parte THE DEBTOR v. SCOTT 393, 1190
DEMOLITION AND CONSTRUCTION CO. LD., KNIGHT v. 563
DEMOLITION AND CONSTRUCTION CO. LD., RANSOME v. 563
DENHAM, STREET v. 624
DENNIS v. TAME .. .. 1338n.
DEVINE v. BRITISH TRANSPORT COMMISSION 686
DICKSON, ADLER v. (PRACTICE NOTE) 1482
DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS, BEDDER v. 1119
DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS, LOVELACE v. 1468
DOBIE v. BOARD OF GOVERNORS OF NATIONAL HOSPITAL. In re HAYES WILL TRUSTS 22
DOVELL, BARCLAYS BANK LD. v. In re FOLLETT DECD. 1430
DRUMMOND v. BRITISH BUILDING CLEANERS LD. 501, 1434
DUDLEY, EARL OF, WOODWARD v. 476
DUNSTER v. ABBOTT 58

E

EAD v. HOME SECRETARY 386
EAST ANGLIAN TRUSTEE SAVINGS BANK, Ex parte. REGINA v. INDUSTRIAL DISPUTES TRIBUNAL 1093
EASTAUGH v. MACPHERSON 1307
EASTBOURNE CORPORATION v. COMMISSIONERS OF CUSTOMS AND EXCISE 109
EASTBOURNE WATERWORKS CO. Ex parte, v. OFFICIAL RECEIVER. In re BAKER .. 1144
EASTERN NATIONAL OMNIBUS CO. LD., LAMPERT v. 1047
ELMS v. FOSTER WHEELER LD. 1071
ELSIE INGLIS (LONDON) MEMORIAL FUND, In re 407
ENFIELD ROLLING MILLS LD., BOCOCK v. 1303

F

FALCO, BUSHFORD v. 672
FALLOWS, REGINA v. (PRACTICE NOTE) 508
FARRIER v. WARD 306
FISHER v. BARRETT & POMEROY (BAKERS) LD. 351
FOLLETT, DECD., In re. BARCLAYS BANK LD v. DOVELL 1430
FORBES v. FORBES 1526
FORSTER'S SETTLEMENT, In re 1450
FOSTER WHEELER LD., ELMS v. 1071
FOX v. FOX 1472
FRANCE v. PARKINSON 581
FREVILLE, Ex parte THE TRUSTEE v. In re LUPKOVICS 1234
FRIEDMANN v. AUSTAY (LONDON) LD. 466
FRY, Ex parte 730

G

G.'S APPLICATION FOR A COMMITTAL ORDER, In re 1116
GATES, JONES v. 222
GENERAL COMMITTEE OF THE ROYAL MIDLAND HOSPITAL FOR INCURABLES, MINISTER OF HEALTH v. 79
GIBSON, CHILDS v. 809
GLADSTONE, SEMTEX LD. v. 945
GOOD'S LEASE, In re. GOOD v. TRUSTEE OF THE PROPERTY OF W., A BANKRUPT, AND W. 309
GOULANDRIS BROTHERS LD., V. M. SALGAONCAR E IRMAOS OF VASGO DE GAMA v. 481
GREAVES, DECD., In re. GREAVES v. GREAVES 760
GRECE v. BRANSBURY. In re BRANSBURY, DECD. 496
GREEN v. HERTZOG 1309
GREEN, RONBAR ENTERPRISES LD. v. 815
GREENBAUM, ORMAN BROTHERS LD. v. 1520
GRESHAM v. LYON 1100
GUNNER v. GUNNER (PRACTICE NOTE) 410
GURTON v. CLEMENTS. In re BRACE, DECD. 955

H

PAGE
HADFIELD, REGINA v. 1128
HALBAUER v. BRIGHTON CORPORATION 1161
HALL'S SETTLEMENT, In re. SANDERSON v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS .. 1185
HALL, DAVIES v. 855
HAROLD, SPRINGETT v. 521
HARRISON, INNES (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. 668
HARRISON v. METROPOLITAN-VICKERS ELECTRICAL CO. LD. 324
HARTLEY v. MAYOH 355
HAYES' WILL TRUSTS, In re. DOBIE v. BOARD OF GOVERNORS OF NATIONAL HOSPITAL 22
HEALEY v. A. WADDINGTON & SONS LD. 688
HEELEX INVESTMENTS LD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS 1368
HEISLER v. ANGLO-DAL LD. 1273
HERTFORDSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL, WATT v. 208, 835
HERTZOG, GREEN v. 1309
HESKETH v. WALLASEY CORPORATION 771
HIGGINS v. NORTH WEST METROPOLITAN HOSPITAL BOARD AND BACH 411
HIGHGATE JUSTICES, REGINA v. Ex parte PETROU 485
HILLIER'S TRUSTS, In re. HILLIER v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL 9, 700
HOBBY v. HOBBY 1020
HOME SECRETARY, EADE v. 386
HOPE v. BROWN 250
HUDSON (JOHN) & CO. LD. v. KIRKNESS 40
HUME, O'CONNOR v. 824
HYLTON (LORD) SETTLEMENT, In re. BARCLAYS BANK LD. v. JOLLIFFE 1055

I

INDUSTRIAL DISPUTES TRIBUNAL, REGINA v. Ex parte AMERICAN EXPRESS CO. INC. 1118
INDUSTRIAL DISPUTES TRIBUNAL, REGINA v. Ex parte EAST ANGLIAN TRUSTEE SAVINGS BANK 1093
INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, BAMBRIDGE v. 1265, 1460
INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS v. BARR (TRADING AS HENRY & GALT) 792
INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS v. BROADWAY COTTAGES TRUST 659
INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS v. BUTTERLEY CO. LD. 1199
INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS v. DADSWELL 1204
INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, HEELEX INVESTMENTS LD. v. 1368
INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS v. PULLMAN CAR CO. LD. 1029
INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, SANDERSON v. In re HALL'S SETTLEMENT .. 1185
INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS v. SUNNYLANDS TRUST 659
INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, WESTMINSTER BANK LD. v. 242
INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS v. WILLIAMS DEACON'S BANK. In re EARL LEVEN AND MELVILLE, DECD. 1228
INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS v. WILSONS (DUNBLANE) LD. 282
INNES (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. HARRISON 668
INTSIFUL, CHRISTIAN (ORSE. AMPAH) v. 253
ISAACS v. TITUS 398
IVORY v. IVORY 604

J

JABBOUR (F. & K.) v. CUSTODIAN OF ISRAELI ABSENTEE PROPERTY 139
JACKSON, RICHARDSON v. 447
JAMES (H. M.) & SONS (A FIRM), CILIA v. SPARK (THIRD PARTY) 721
JARVIS, Ex parte. REGINA v. BRIGHTON BOROUGH JUSTICES 203
JOHN MOWLEM & CO., BOWLER v. 1445
JOHNSON v. CROGGAN & CO. LD. 195
JOHNSON, STEPHENSON v. 375
JOLLIFFE, PARCLAYS BANK LD. v. In re LORD HYLTON'S SETTLEMENT 1055
JONATHAN CAPE LD. v. CONSOLIDATED PRESS LD. 1313
JONES, BAKER v. 1005
JONES v. GATES 222
JONES v. JONES 1474
JONES, PEOPLE'S REFRESHMENT HOUSE ASSOCIATION LD. v. 339
JONES, SMITH v. 1089
JOZWIAK v. SADEK 275
JUDSON v. BRITISH TRANSPORT COMMISSION 585

K

PAGE
KATZ, KRAKAUER v. 278
KEATS v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL 1357
KENYATTA v. THE QUEEN (PRACTICE NOTE) 1053
KESARMAL v. VALLIAPPA CHETTIAR 380
KILDAHL v. BOWKER. In re LYBBE, DECD. 573
KINGSWAY MOTORS, BUTTERWORTH v. 1286
KIRKNESS, JOHN HUDSON & CO. LD. v. 40
KNIGHT v. DEMOLITION AND CONSTRUCTION CO. LD. 563
KRAKAUER v. KATZ 278

L

LADD v. MARSHALL 1489
LAMBIE, ANDERSON v. 303
LAMPERT v. EASTERN NATIONAL OMNIBUS CO. LD. 1047
LASZCZYK v. NATIONAL COAL BOARD 1426
LEES (J. W.) (BREWERS) LD., SHAVE v. 1300
LEIGHTON v. MACLEOD. In re WORTHINGTON, DECD. 526
LEVEN AND MELVILLE (EARL), DECD., In re. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS v. WILLIAMS DEACON'S BANK LD. 1228
LEWIN v. ALLER (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) 1063
LEWIS & SMART LD., In re 755
LITTLE v. POWLES. In re POWLES 336
LLOYDS BANK LD. v. MARGOLIS 644
LOGAN v. LOGAN 1050
LONDON, CITY, LICENSING JUSTICES, REGINA v. Ex parte STEWART 1325
LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, KEATS v. 1357
LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. TANN 371
LONDON HOSPITAL BOARD OF GOVERNORS, BESANT v. In re BAWDEN'S SETTLEMENT .. .. 33n.
LOVE v. PHARAOH AND ROBERTS (PRACTICE NOTE) 190
LOVELACE v. DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS 1468
LUPKOVICS, In re. Ex parte THE TRUSTEE v. FREVILLE 1234
LUSTY (W.) & SONS LD. v. MORRIS WILKINSON & CO. (NOTTINGHAM) LD. 911
LYBBE, DECD., In re. KILDAHL v. BOWKER 573
LYON, GRESHAM v. 1100

M

MABER, REGINA v. (PRACTICE NOTE) 501
MCGANN, RICHMOND v. 1282
MCKAY, ROUTLEDGE v. 615
MACLEOD, LEIGHTON v. In re WORTHINGTON, DECD. 526
MCNALLY, REGINA v. 933
MACPHERSON, EASTHAUGH v. 1307
MACRAE v. H. G. SWINDELLS 597
MADRAS ELECTRIC SUPPLY CORPORATION, BOARLAND (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. .. 87
MAERKLE v. BRITISH CONTINENTAL FUR CO. LD. 1242
MAGEE v. MORRIS 806
MANCHESTER DRY DOCK CO. LD., PUGH v. 389
MARGOLIS, LLOYDS BANK LD. v. 644
MARSDEN v. REGAN 423
MARSHALL, LADD v. 1489
MARTIN SECKER & WARBURG LD., REGINA v. 1138
MARTIN-SMITH v. SMALE 247
MASON, BUNGALOWS (MAIDENHEAD) LD. v. 769
MAYOH & CO., HARTLEY v. 355
MELI v. THE QUEEN 228
MENDOZA & CO., RABIN v. 271
METROPOLITAN-VICKERS ELECTRICAL CO. LD., HARRISON v. 324
MIDDLETON v. ROWLETT 831
MILLIGAN, CURRIE v. In re CAMERON, DECD. 1375
MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE AND FISHERIES, WOOLLETT v. 1149
MINISTER OF HEALTH v. GENERAL COMMITTEE OF THE ROYAL MIDLAND COUNTIES HOME FOR INCURABLES 79
MINISTER OF HEALTH, ROE v. 128
MINISTER OF HEALTH, WOOLLEY v. 128
MINISTER FOR LANDS FOR NEW SOUTH WALES, PYE v. 1410
MINSTER TRUST LD. v. TRAPS TRACTORS LD. 963
MISKELL, REGINA v. 438
MONK (A.) & CO. LD., MONTGOMERY v. 258

PAGE
MONSON v. BOUND 1321
MONTAGU v. BROWNING 1039
MONTGOMERY v. A. MONK & CO. LD. 258
MOOR v. MOOR 927
MOORE, REGINA v. 893
MORLEY v. WOOLFSON (PRACTICE NOTE) 1363
MORRIS, MAGEE v. 806
MORRIS WILKINSON & CO. (NOTTINGHAM) LD., W. LUSTY & SONS LD. v. 911
MORRIS v. SANDERS UNIVERSAL PRODUCTS 67
MORTON v. MORTON (NO. 2) 737
MOSS (W.) & SONS LD., NORRIS v. 346
MUNDAY v. MUNDAY 1078
MURRAY v. PUBLIC TRUSTEE. In re BRITISH SCHOOL OF EGYPTIAN ARCHAEOLOGY .. 1078

N

NATIONAL ASSISTANCE BOARD v. PRISK 443
NATIONAL COAL BOARD, LASZCZYK v. 1426
NATIONAL COAL BOARD, WRAITH v. 264
NATIONAL HOSPITAL BOARD OF GOVERNORS, DOBIE v. In re HAYES' WILL TRUSTS 22
NEW SOUTH WALES MINISTER FOR LANDS, PYE v. 1410
NICHOLS v. WALTERS 1
NIGERIA, OFFICIAL RECEIVER OF, ADEBAYO v. 681
NORRIS v. W. MOSS & SONS LD. 346
NORTH WEST METROPOLITAN HOSPITAL BOARD AND BACH, HIGGINS v. 411
NUNEATON JUSTICES, REGINA v. Ex parte PARKER 1318

O

O'CONNOR v. HUME 824
OFFICIAL RECEIVER, Ex parte EASTBOURNE WATERWORKS CO. v. In re BAKER .. 1144
OFFICIAL RECEIVER OF NIGERIA, ADEBAYO v. 681
OFFICIAL SOLICITOR, WESTMINSTER BANK LD. v. In re DEANS, DECD. 332
OILCAKES AND OILSEEDS TRADING CO. LD., SINASON-TEICHER INTER-AMERICAN GRAIN CORPORATION v. 935, 1394
OLIVIER v. COLEIRO 845
OLLARD, OLLARD AND SESSIONS, Ex parte BOARD OF TRADE v. In re C. E. PORTER 1133
ORMAN BROTHERS LD. v. GREENBAUM 1520
ORPEN, BRADSHAW v. In re GEORGE WICHELOW LD. 5
ORWELL, SOLOMON v. 629
OTTERWAY & TRY LD., WINDSOR RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL v. 1494

P

PARKER, Ex parte. REGINA v. NUNEATON JUSTICES 1318
PARKINSON, FRANCE v. 581
PARKINSON v. H. AND J. PLUMPTON 75
PATRICK (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. BROADSTONE MILLS LD. 158
PEACOCK v. AMUSEMENT EQUIPMENT CO. LD. 803
PEARLMAN (VENEERS) S.A. (PTY.) LD. v. BERNHARD BARTELS 1457
PEOPLE'S REFRESHMENT HOUSE ASSOCIATION LD. v. JONES 339
PEPIN, WRIGHT v. 635
PERCIVAL v. STANTON 300
PETROU, Ex parte. REGINA v. HIGHGATE JUSTICES 485
PHARAOH AND ROBERTS, LOVE v. 190
PICK, CALVERT AND WIFE v. 456
PLUMPTON (H. & J.), PARKINSON v. 75
POOLE, STOWE BARDOLPH GRAVEL CO. LD. v. 1058, 1503
PORTER (C. E.), In re. Ex parte THE BOARD OF TRADE v. OLLARD, OLLARD AND SESSIONS 1133
POWELL v. BRAUN 401
POWLES, DECD., In re. LITTLE v. POWLES 336
PRACTICE DIRECTION (AFFIDAVITS) 1389
PRACTICE DIRECTION (ANCILLARY RELIEF) 898
PRACTICE DIRECTION (APPLICATIONS) 1389
PRACTICE DIRECTION (COLONIAL PROBATE) 1053
PRACTICE DIRECTION (COMPANIES COURT) 563
PRACTICE DIRECTION (COSTS AGAINST AIDED PERSONS) 275
PRACTICE DIRECTION (MORTGAGES) 1389
PRACTICE DIRECTION (PROBATE GRANTS) 854 PRACTICE DIRECTION (RESEALING) 1046

PAGE
PRACTICE DIRECTION (WITNESS LIST) .. 693
PRACTICE NOTE (ADLER v. DICKSON) .. 1482
PRACTICE NOTE (BAMPTON v. COOK) .. 450
PRACTICE NOTE (FAMILY PROVISION) .. 778
PRACTICE NOTE (GUNNER v. GUNNER) .. 410
PRACTICE NOTE (JUSTICES' CLERKS) .. 213
PRACTICE NOTE (KENYATTA v. THE QUEEN) .. 1053
PRACTICE NOTE (MORLEY v. WOOLFSON) .. 1363
PRACTICE NOTE (REGINA v. FALLOWS) .. 508
PRACTICE NOTE (REGINA v. MABER) .. 501
PRACTICE NOTE (TURIER v. WEBBER) .. 808
PRESTIGE & CO. LD., WINGROVE v. .. 524
PRISK, NATIONAL ASSISTANCE BOARD v. .. 443
PROBATE GRANTS (PRACTICE DIRECTION) .. 854
PUBLIC TRUSTEE, MURRAY v. In re BRITISH SCHOOL OF EGYPTIAN ARCHAEOLOGY .. 546
PUGH v. MANCHESTER DRY DOCKS CO. LD. .. 389
PULLMAN CAR CO. LD., INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS v. .. 1029
PYE v. MINISTER FOR LANDS FOR NEW SOUTH WALES .. 1410

Q

QUEEN, THE, KENYATTA v. (PRACTICE NOTE) .. 1053
QUEEN, THE, MELI v. .. 228

R

RABIN v. MENDOZA & CO. .. 271
RAILWAY EXECUTIVE, BLACKMAN v. .. 220
RAMSDEN v. RAMSDEN .. 1105
RANSOME v. DEMOLITION AND CONSTRUCTION CO. LD. .. 563
RAYLEIGH WEIR STADIUM, In re .. 786
RAZZEL v. SNOWBALL .. 1382
REGAN, MARSDEN v. .. 423
REGINA v. BIRKENHEAD BOROUGH JUSTICES. Ex parte SMITH .. 471
REGINA v. BRIGHTON BOROUGH JUSTICES. Ex parte JARVIS .. 203
REGINA v. CITY OF LONDON LICENSING JUSTICES. Ex parte STEWART .. 1325
REGINA v. COOK .. 125
REGINA v. DAVENPORT .. 569
REGINA v. DAVIES .. 214
REGINA v. FALLOWS (PRACTICE NOTE) .. 508
REGINA v. HADFIELD .. 1128
REGINA v. HIGHGATE JUSTICES. Ex parte PETROU .. 485
REGINA v. INDUSTRIAL DISPUTES TRIBUNAL. Ex parte AMERICAN EXPRESS CO. INC. 1118
REGINA v. INDUSTRIAL DISPUTES TRIBUNAL. Ex parte EAST ANGLIAN TRUSTEE SAVINGS BANK .. 1093
REGINA v. JUDGE WILLES...Ex parte ABBEY NATIONAL BUILDING SOCIETY .. 136
REGINA v. MABER (PRACTICE NOTE) .. 501
REGINA v. MCNALLY .. 933
REGINA v. MARTIN SECKER & WARBURG LD. .. 1138
REGINA v. MISKELL .. 438
REGINA v. MOORE .. 893
REGINA v. NUNEATON JUSTICES. Ex parte PARKER .. 1318
REGINA v. RIDER .. 463
REGINA v. SEYMOUR .. 678
REGINA v. WARREN .. 531
REGINA v. WINES .. 64
REGISTRAR OF TRADE MARKS, YORKSHIRE COPPER WORKS LD. v. .. 554
RICHARDSON v. JACKSON .. 447
RICHMOND v. MCGANN .. 1282
RIDER, REGINA v. .. 463
ROBERTS, BARCLAYS BANK LD. v. .. 1212
ROBERTS AND PHARAOH, LOVE v. .. 190
ROBERTSON v. ABERDEEN JOURNALS LD. .. 1084
ROBERTSON v. ROBERTSON .. 1537
ROE v. MINISTER OF HEALTH .. 128
RONBAR ENTERPRISES LD. v. GREEN .. 815
ROULSON, WESTALL RICHARDSON LD. v. .. 905
ROUTLEDGE v. MCKAY .. 615
ROWLETT, MIDDLETON v. .. 831
ROYAL MIDLAND HOSPITAL FOR INCURABLES GENERAL COMMITTEE, MINISTER OF HEALTH v. .. 79

S

PAGE
S.A. MARITIME ET COMMERCIALE OF GENEVA v. ANGLO-IRANIAN OIL CO. LD. .. 492
SADEK, JOZWIAK v. .. 275
ST. MARY'S DEMOLITION AND EXCAVATION CO. LD., DAVIS v. .. 592
ST. PAUL'S CHURCH, BATTERSEA, In re .. 920
SALGAONCAR (V. M.) E IRMAOS LTDA., ALMA SHIPPING CO., S.A. v. .. 650
SANDERS UNIVERSAL PRODUCTS, MORRIS v. .. 67
SANDERSON v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS. In re HALL'S SETTLEMENT .. 1185
SCOTT AND OFFICIAL RECEIVER, Ex parte THE DEBTOR v. In re A DEBTOR .. 393, 1190
SECRETARY OF STATE FOR AIR, WATSON v. .. 1477
SELLARS v. BEST .. 913
SEMTEX LD. v. GLADSTONE .. 945
SERVILLE v. CONSTANCE .. 487
SEVERNE (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. DADSWELL .. 1204
SEYMOUR, REGINA v. .. 678
SHAVE v. J. W. LEES (BREWERS) LD. .. 1300
SHAW v. SHAW .. 265
SICHEL v. SICHEL .. 612
SIMPSON v. SIMPSON .. 994
SINASON-TEICHER INTER-AMERICAN GRAIN CORPORATION v. OILCAKES AND OILSEEDS TRADING CO. LD. .. 935, 1394
SMALE, MARTIN-SMITH v. .. 247
SMITH, Ex parte. REGINA v. BIRKENHEAD BOROUGH JUSTICES .. 471
SMITH v. JONES .. 1089
SMITH (S.) & SONS (ENGLAND) LD., CHARLES v. .. 451
SNOWBALL, RAZZEL v. .. 1382
SOLOMON v. ORWELL .. 629
SOUTH WESTERN GAS BOARD, STUDHOLME v. .. 313
SPARK (THIRD PARTY). CILIA v. H. M. JAMES & SONS (A FIRM) .. 721
SPICER v. SPICER (RYAN INTERVENING) .. 1051
SPRINGETT v. HAROLD .. 521
STANTON, PERCIVAL v. .. 300
STARKIE v. STARKIE (NO. 2) .. 98
STEPHENSON v. JOHNSON .. 375
STEVENS v. BRITTEN .. 1340
STEVENS v. STEVENS .. 900
STEWART, Ex parte. REGINA v. CITY OF LONDON LICENSING JUSTICES .. 1325
STIRLING, DECD., In re. UNION BANK OF SCOTLAND LD. v. STIRLING .. 763
STOCKBRIDGE MILL CO. LD. v. CENTRAL LAND BOARD .. 886
STONE PARISH COUNCIL, BATEY v. .. 1249
STOW BARDOLPH GRAVEL CO. LD. v. POOLE .. 1058, 1503
STREET v. DENHAM .. 624
STUDHOLME v. SOUTH WESTERN GAS BOARD .. 313
SUNNYLANDS TRUST, INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS v. .. 659
SURTEES v. BENEWITH .. 1335
SWAN HUNTER & WIGHAM RICHARDSON LD., THOMASON v., THE ALBION (NO. 2) .. 1220
SWINDELLS (H. G.), MACRAE v. .. 597
SWYMER v. SWYMER .. 1329

T

T. W. CONSTRUCTION LD., In re .. 540
TAME, DENNIS v. .. 1338n.
TANN, LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. .. 371
TAYLOR, WESTMINSTER BANK LD. v. In re BAGSHAW DECD. .. 238
THOMAS v. BRISTOL AEROPLANE CO. LD. 694
THOMASON v. SWAN HUNTER & WIGHAM RICHARDSON LD. THE ALBION (NO. 2) .. 1220
THOMSON v. CHAIN LIBRARIES LD. .. 999
TITUS, ISAACS v. .. 398
TOOL METAL MANUFACTURING CO. LD. v. TUNGSTEN ELECTRIC CO. LD. .. 862
TOUT & FINCH LD., In re .. 178
TRADE MARKS, REGISTRAR OF, YORKSHIRE COPPER WORKS LD. v. .. 554
TRAPS TRACTORS LD., MINSTER TRUST LD. v. .. 963
TROY & CO. LD., BROWN v. .. 1181
TRUSTEE, Ex parte, v. FREVILLE. In re LUPKOVICS .. 1234
TUNGSTEN ELECTRIC CO. LD., TOOL METAL MANUFACTURING CO. LD. v. .. 832
TURIER v. WEBBER (PRACTICE NOTE) .. 808
TURKSON, ABABIO v. .. 509
TWEEDALE, BIRTWISTLE v. .. 190

U

PAGE
UNION BANK OF SCOTLAND v. STIRLING. In re STIRLING, DECD. 763
UNITED DOMINIONS TRUST LD. v. BYCROFT 1345

V

V. M. SALGAONCAR E IRMAOS OF VASGO DE GAMA v. GOULANDRIS BROTHERS LD. .. 481
VALLIAPPA CHETTIAR, KESARMAL v. 380
VON DEMBINSKA, In re 748

W

W, A BANKRUPT, TRUSTEE OF PROPERTY OF, GOOD v. In re GOOD'S LEASE 309
WADDINGTON (A) & SONS LD., HEALEY v. 688
WAKEHAM v. WAKEHAM 366
WALKER DECD., EXECUTORS OF, BARROW GREEN ESTATE CO. v. 231
WALLASEY CORPORATION, HESKETH v. 771
WALLASEY CORPORATION, WATERMAN v. 771
WALTERS, NICHOLS v. 1
WARD, FARRIER v. 306
WARMAN v. BARCLAYS BANK LD. 191
WARREN, REGINA v. 531
WATERMAN v. WALLASEY CORPORATION 771
WATSON v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR AIR 1477
WATT v. HERTFORDSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL 208, 835
WEBBER, TURIER v. (PRACTICE NOTE) 808
WELLS v. WELLS 1390
WESTALL RICHARDSON LD. v. ROULSON 905
WESTMINSTER BANK LD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS 242
WESTMINSTER BANK LD. v. OFFICIAL SOLICITOR. In re DEANS, DECD. 332
WESTMINSTER BANK LD. v. TAYLOR. In re BAGSHAW DECD. 238
WEST TARRING (RECTOR AND CHURCHWARDENS), In re .. .. 923n.
WHALLEY v. BRIGGS MOTOR BODIES LD. 840
WHEATCROFT BROS. LD.'S TRADE MARKS, In re 116
WICHELOW (GEORGE) LD., In re BRADSHAW v. ORPEN 5
WILLES (JUDGE), REGINA v. Ex parte ABBEY NATIONAL BUILDING SOCIETY 136
WILLIAMS DEACON'S BANK, INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS v. In re EARL LEVEN AND MELVILLE DECD. 1228
WILLIAMS AND STEER MANUFACTURING CO. LD., CRAXFORDS (RAMSGATE) LD. v. .. 1130
WILSONS (DUNBLANE) LD. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS v. 282
WINDSOR RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL v. OTTERWAY & TRY LD. 1494
WINES, REGINA v. 64
WINGROVE v. PRESTIGE & CO. LD. 524
WOODWARD v. EARL OF DUDLEY 476
WOOLFSON, MORLEY v. (PRACTICE NOTE) 1363
WOOLLETT v. MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE AND FISHERIES 1149
WOOLLEY v. MINISTER OF HEALTH 128
WORCESTERSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL, BRITISH TRANSPORT COMMISSION v. 850
WORTHINGTON, DECD., In re. LEIGHTON v. MACLEOD 526
WRAITH v. NATIONAL COAL BOARD 264
WRIGHT v. PEPIN 635
WRIGHT v. WRIGHT 534

Y

YATES' SETTLEMENT TRUSTS, In re. YATES v. YATES 564
YORKSHIRE COPPER WORKS LD. v. REGISTRAR OF TRADE MARKS 554

INDEX TO SUBJECT-MATTER

ACCOUNT. See LEGAL AID.

ADMINISTRATION OF ESTATES—Devastavit — Presumption — Action by landlord against executrix—No plea of plene administravit—Judgment for possession, mesne profits and costs—Execution—Return of nulla bona testatoris—Executrix carrying on business of testatrix—Assets exhausted—Second action brought by plaintiff against executrix—Plea of plene administravit—Whether presumption of devastavit rebutted — Whether executrix acted reasonably and ought fairly to be excused—Trustee Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 19), s. 61—County Court Rules, 1936, Ord. 32, r. 2.

County Court — County Court Rules — Whether affecting general law. Presumption.

* MARSDEN v. REGAN C.A. 1 W.L.R. 423

2. —— No personal representative constituted—Vesting of estate in probate judge—Securities deposited by deceased to secure a debt—Application by creditor for order vesting securities in official solicitor—Whether probate judge a trustee—Trustee Act, 1925 (15 Geo. 5, c. 19), s. 51 (1)—Administration of Estates Act, 1925 (15 Geo. 5, c. 23), s. 9.

Trust and Trustee. Probate. Official Solicitor.

* In re DEANS, DECD. WESTMINSTER BANK LD. v. OFFICIAL SOLICITOR

Wynn-Parry J. 1 W.L.R. 332

ADMINISTRATOR—Revocation of grant—Alleged failure to disclose certain assets—Revocation refused.

Probate.

* IN THE ESTATE OF COPE, DECD.

Collingwood J. 1 W.L.R. 608

AGRICULTURE—Agricultural holding—Definition — Shop — Demised land and premises used for horticulturist's business—Premises as a whole used as a retail shop for the sale of horticultural products—Horticultural processes carried on in substantially the whole of the premises ancillary to main use — Whether premises an "agricultural holding"—Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948 (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 63), ss. 1, 3, 94.

* MONSON v. BOUND

McNair J. 1 W.L.R. 1321

2. —— Agricultural holding — Notice to quit—Consent—Tenant's appeal to Agricultural Land Tribunal dismissed — Condition imposed on landlord—Approved bailiff to be appointed — Tenant's refusal to give up possession—Effect of condition—Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948 (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 63), ss. 24, 25.

* MARTIN-SMITH v. SMALE

C.A. 1 W.L.R. 247

3. —— Agricultural holding — Notice to quit — Validity — Reference to part only of land — Joint tenancy — Tenant dying within three months — "Tenant" including tenants —Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948 (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 63), s. 24 (1) (2) (g) — Interpretation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 63), s. 1.

Landlord and Tenant. Statute—Construction—Singular including plural. Joint ownership.

* WOODWARD v. EARL OF DUDLEY

Danckwerts J. 1 W.L.R. 476

4. —— Agricultural holding — Repairs — Compensation — Compensation for dilapidation or deterioration—Arbitrator—Arbitrator entitled to refer to the terms of the contract of tenancy—Agriculture Act, 1947 (10 & 11 Geo. 6, c. 48), ss. 9, 10 (3), 11 (1), (2) (d) (e) (f), (3), 37 (1) — Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948 (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 63), ss. 57 (1), 65—Agriculture (Maintenance, Repair and Insurance of Fixed Equipment) Regulations, 1948 (S.I. 1948, No. 184).

Arbitration.

* BARROW GREEN ESTATE CO. v. EXECUTORS OF WALKER, DECD. C.A. 1 W.L.R. 231

5. —— Agricultural Land Tribunal—Nominated members — Appointment — Members appointed by secretary — Validity of proceedings of improperly constituted tribunal — Validity of Minister's certificate—No application to the High Court within six weeks of service of notice of certificate—Jurisdiction of court to declare certificate void—Acquisition of Land (Authorisation Procedure) Act, 1946 (9 & 10 Geo. 6, c. 49), s. 1, Sch. I, paras. 15, 16—Agriculture Act, 1947 (10 & 11 Geo. 6, c. 48), ss. 73, 85, 92, Sch. IX, paras. 13, 15, 20 (2).

Tribunal — Statutory. Compulsory Purchase.

* WOOLLETT v. MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE AND FISHERIES Stable J. 1 W.L.R. 1149

C.A. See Vol. 3

6. ——. See COMPULSORY PURCHASE.

AGRICULTURAL HOLDING — Notice to quit—Validity—Meaning of "required" for use other than agriculture—Whether arbitration exclusive remedy—Minister's power to make regulations—Whether mandatory—Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948 (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 63), ss. 24, 26—Agriculture (Control of Notices to Quit) Regulations, 1948 (S.I. 1948, No. 190), reg. 4.

Arbitration. Statutory Instrument. "Required."

* JONES v. GATES - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 222

APPEAL—Against damages awarded by jury. See DAMAGES.

2. —— Failure of respondent to appear. See LANDLORD AND TENANT.

APPEAL—continued.

3. —— Fresh evidence. See PRACTICE.

4. —— from County Court. See COURT OF APPEAL.

5. —— from justices—Justices' liability for costs. See HUSBAND AND WIFE—Maintenance.

6. —— Jurisdiction of Court of Appeal to sanction compromise varying beneficial interests under settlement. See TRUST AND TRUSTEE.

7. —— Justices. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

8. —— Quarter Sessions—jurisdiction. See POLICE.

9. —— Security for costs of. See LEGAL AID.

10. —— to Privy Council. See PRIVY COUNCIL.

11. ——. See COURT OF APPEAL, HOUSE OF LORDS.

ARBITRATION—Ouster of jurisdiction of Court. See MAINTENANCE OF SUIT.

2. ——. See AGRICULTURAL HOLDING; SALE OF GOODS.

AUSTRALIA (NEW SOUTH WALES)—Compulsory acquisition—Resumption of land—Closer settlement—For Purposes of War Service Land Settlement Act, 1941—Compensation—Value as at February 10, 1942—Construction of statute—Workability—Technical, but no practical, difficulty—Closer Settlement (Amendment) Act, 1907 (N.S.W.), as amended, s. 4 (4) (b) (i) (ii).
Statute—Workability. Compulsory Purchase.
*RICHARD JAMES PYE v. MINISTER FOR LANDS FOR NEW SOUTH WALES
J.C. 1 W.L.R. 1410

BAILMENT. See CONTRACT.

BANKING—Bank guarantee. See SALE OF GOODS.

2. —— Mortgage to bank—Limitation See DEBT.

BANKRUPTCY — Bankruptcy notice — Sum specified to be due excessive – Damages awarded to creditor in High Court action—Damages reduced on appeal—Effect on bankruptcy proceedings—Set-off of costs—Validity of bankruptcy notice—Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5. c. 59), ss. 2 (ii). 5.
In re* A DEBTOR: Ex parte THE DEBTOR v. SCOTT AND THE OFFICIAL RECEIVER
Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 393

2. —— Costs — Taxation — County court — Adjudication on debtor's petition — Nonsummary case — Assets certified likely to realize less than £200—Items and amounts allowable—Bankruptcy Rules, 1952 (S.I. 1952, No. 2113 (L. 14)), rr. 100 (1), 114 (1); Appendix II, Parts I, IV.
In re* PORTER (C. E.) A BANKRUPT. Ex parte THE BOARD OF TRADE v. OLLARD, OLLARD & SESSIONS
Danckwerts J. 1 W.L.R. 1133

3. —— Debt—Attachment—Order for debt due from Crown to be paid to creditor's solicitors and held by them for six months—Undertaking by solicitors pursuant to order—Whether "attachment . . . completed . . . "receipt of the debt"—Husband and wife—Loans by wife for husband's business—Judgment for wife—Whether character of transaction altered so as to enable wife to prove in competition with other creditors—Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 59), ss. 36 (2), 40 (1) (2)—Crown Proceedings Act, 1947 (10 & 11 Geo. 6, c. 44), s. 27 (1).
Husband and Wife.
In re* LUPKOVICS. Ex parte THE TRUSTEE v. FREVILLE Upjohn J. 1 W.L.R. 1234

4. —— County court—Transfer of proceedings to High Court—Application of petitioning creditor for transfer—Object of application to secure benefit of legal aid—Effect of legal aid certificate in favour of person not entitled to sue—Discretion of court—Bankruptcy Rules, 1952, r. 21.
Legal Aid.
In re* CROSSLEY, A DEBTOR
Upjohn J. 1 W.L.R. 1353

5. —— Petition—Debt—Requirements—At date of act of bankruptcy debt of damages and untaxed costs — Costs subsequently taxed — Whether good petitioning debt—Validity of bankruptcy notice—Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 59), ss. 2 (ii), 4 (1), 5 (2).
In re* A DEBTOR. Ex parte THE DEBTOR v. SCOTT AND THE OFFICIAL RECEIVER
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 1190

6. —— Public examination of debtor — Adjournment — Adjournment generally with liberty to restore—Whether adjournment ultra vires—Power to adjourn "from time to time"—Meaning—Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 59), ss. 15 (3), 18 (1), 109 (2)—Bankruptcy Rules, 1952 (S.I. 1952, No. 2113), r. 192.
In re* VON DEMBINSKA C.A. 1 W.L.R. 748

7. —— Rating—Water rate—Whether payable in priority to other debts—Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 59), s. 33 (1) (a).
In re* BAKER, A BANKRUPT. Ex parte EASTBOURNE WATERWORKS CO. v. OFFICIAL RECEIVER Danckwerts J. 1 W.L.R. 1144

8. ——. See BUILDING—Contract.

BASUTOLAND — Criminal Law—Murder—Erroneous belief of accused that blows caused death—Whether mens rea in respect of their subsequent acts which in fact caused death—Preconceived plot to kill—One inseparable transaction.
Criminal Law.
* THABO MELI v. THE QUEEN
J.C. 1 W.L.R. 228

BREACH OF STATUTORY DUTY. See MINES AND MINERALS.

BUILDING — Contract — Certificate — Architect's certificate to be final and conclusive —Arbitration—Power of arbitrator to reopen certificate—Royal Institute of British Architects Contract No. 6.

Certificate. Arbitration — Case stated — Form — Questions of law — How they have arisen to be stated.

* WINDSOR RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL v. OTTERWAY & TRY LD.
Devlin J. 1 W.L.R. 1494

2. —— Contract — Insolvency of main contractor—Owner's right to pay unpaid sub-contractor—Retention money—Paid to contractor—Interest "fiduciary as trustee for "sub-contractor"—Voluntary liquidation of contractor—Effect.

Bankruptcy. Company—Winding up. Assignment—Equitable.

* In re TOUT & FINCH LD.
Wynn-Parry J. 1 W.L.R. 178

3. —— Regulations—Delegation of duties to foreman—Injury to foreman—Negligent selection of unsafe ladder by foreman—Injured by breaking of ladder—Technical breach of statutory duty by employers—Liability—Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948 (S.R. & O. 1948, No. 1145), regs. 4, 29 (1) (8)—Law Reform (Contributory Negligence) Act, 1945 (8 & 9 Geo. 5, c. 28), s. 1.

Joint tortfeasors. Statutory duty—Contributory negligence. Invitor and invitee—Defective ladder selected by invitee. Factory.

 JOHNSON v. CROGGAN & CO. LD.
Pilcher J. 1 W.L.R. 195

4. —— Safety regulations — Application —"Building"—Power station—Installation of plant—Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948 (S.I. 1948, No. 1145), regs. 2 and 30 (3).

* ELMS v. FOSTER WHEELER LD.
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 1071

5. —— Safety regulations — Demolition —Gas retorts surrounded by brick arches—Archways demolished—Collapse of adjoining wall—Fatal Accident.

* KNIGHT v. DEMOLITION AND CONSTRUCTION CO. LD. RANSOME v. THE SAME
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 563

6. —— Safety regulations — Safe means of access—"Every place"—Safe means of access "to every place at which any person ". . . has to work"—Whether duty limited to persons having to work on scaffolds—Concrete roadway—Uncompleted section—Scaffold board laid as temporary gangway to gate of premises—Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948 (S.I. 1948, No. 1145), reg. 5.

* BROWN v. TROY & CO. LD.
Gerrard J. 1 W.L.R. 1181

7. —— Safety regulations — Scaffold — Safe means of access—Scaffold protruding across access to building site—Safe means of access to "every place at which any person

BUILDING—continued.

". . . has to work"—Duty limited to employees of contractor—Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948 (S.I. 1948, No. 1145), regs. 4 (ii), 5.

* WINGROVE v. PRESTIGE & CO. LD.
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 524

8. —— Safety regulations — Scaffold — Upright not vertical—Remedial work by plaintiff—Injured by own negligence—Causation —Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948 (S.I. 1948, No. 1145), reg. 10 (1) (a).

Causation.

* NORRIS v. W. MOSS & SONS LD.
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 346

9. —— Safety regulations — Secure handhold and foothold—Flat roof under construction—Inapplicability of statutory regulations —Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948 (S.I. 1948, No. 1145), reg. 97.

* MONTGOMERY v. A. MONK & CO. LD.
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 258

10. ——. See METROPOLIS.

BUILDING CONTRACT. See NEGLIGENCE.

CANADA (ONTARIO)—Copyright—Infringement—Musical work—Relayed public performance—Transmission and reception equipment —Use of wires of independent telephone company—Equipment not a "gramophone" —No exemption from fees, charges or royalties — Copyright Amendment Act, (S.C. 1938, c. 27, s. 4), s. 10B (6) (a).

Copyright. "Gramophone."

* ASSOCIATED BROADCASTING CO. LD. v. COMPOSERS, AUTHORS AND PUBLISHERS ASSOCIATION OF CANADA LD.
J.C. 1 W.L.R. 1484

CATERING WAGES—Minimum wage—Sum paid by worker for benefit—Licensed non-residential establishment — Manager — Two agreements—Service agreement under which manager entitled to statutory minimum wage —Catering agreement entitling him to run catering business and receive profits in consideration of weekly payment to employer —Whether deductions in respect of "benefits "and advantages received in connexion with "employment" as manager—Catering Wages Act, 1943 (6 & 7 Geo. 6, c. 24), s. 10 (3).

* PEOPLE'S REFRESHMENT HOUSE ASSOCIATION LD. v. JONES
Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 339

CERTIFICATE—Sale of goods—Engineer—Secondhand machines to be supplied with "Hunt Engineering Certificate that they have "been fully reconditioned to their satisfac-"tion"—Inspection by Hunt Engineering Company on seller's instructions — Hunt reports to seller tendered as certificates—Breach of contract—Certificates in rem—Certificates in personam—Position of certifier—Whether duty not to influence certifier—Implied standard of quality—Meaning of "fully reconditioned."

* MINSTER TRUST LD. v. TRAPS TRACTORS LD. - - - Devlin J. 1 W.L.R. 963

CERTIORARI—Fire service. See CROWN PRACTICE.

2. ——. See LICENSING.

CHARITY—Education—Archaeology—Society for conducting excavations in Egypt and publishing works—Whether charitable—Supervening impracticability of objects—Whether resulting trust for subscribers.
Trust and Trustee—Resulting trust.
* In re BRITISH SCHOOL OF EGYPTIAN ARCHAEOLOGY. MURRAY v. PUBLIC TRUSTEE - Harman J. 1 W.L.R. 546

2. —— Education — Boy Scouts movement—Validity of bequest.
* In re WEBBER. BARCLAYS BANK v. WEBBER - - Vaisey J. 1 W.L.R. 1500

3. —— Hospital—Appeal for funds for erection and maintenance of voluntary hospital —Scheme impracticable after National Health Service Act, 1946 (9 & 10 Geo. 6, c. 81)—Resulting trust for donors.
National Health Service—Hospital—Gift—Appeal to public. Trust and Trustee—Resulting trust—Charity—Failure of object. Bona vacantia.
* In re HILLIER'S TRUSTS. HILLIER v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL
Upjohn J. 1 W.L.R. 9;
C.A. 1 W.L.R 700

4. ——. See NATIONAL HEALTH SERVICE; TRUST AND TRUSTEE; WILL.

CHILD—Dangerous premises. See LICENSOR AND LICENSEE.

2. —— Trespass by. See NEGLIGENCE.

CHILDREN AND YOUNG PERSONS. See CRIMINAL LAW.

CHOSE IN ACTION—Situs. See COMPANY.

2. ——. See CONFLICT OF LAWS.

COMMITTAL—breach of Maintenance Order. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

COMPANY—Winding up—Disposition after commencement—Dispositions made between presentation of petition and winding-up order —Bank overdraft facilities before and after presentation of petition — Arrangement to enable company to continue its business—Principles for exercise of discretion by court —Companies Act, 1948 (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 38), s. 227.
* In re T. W. CONSTRUCTION LD.
Wynn-Parry J. 1 W.L.R. 540

2. —— Winding up—Foreign corporation — Russian bank — No branch in England —Assets in England—Dissolution of bank in Russia—Winding-up order in England—Claim against liquidator of English assets for debt due from bank—Claim based on orders by bank payable in England—Transaction illegal by Russian law—Debt situate in Russia—Not a debt provable in winding up—Companies Act, 1929 (19 & 20 Geo. 5, c. 23), s. 261.

COMPANY—continued.
Conflict of Laws—Chose in action or debt —Situs.
* In re BANQUE DES MARCHANDS DE MOSCOU (KOUPETSCHESKY) (No. 2).
Roxburgh J. 1 W.L.R. 1108

3. —— Winding up—Void dissolution—Effect of declaration—Misfeasance summons pending at date of dissolution—Subsequent order declaring dissolution void—Whether summons revived—Companies Act, 1948 (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 38), s. 352.
* In re LEWIS & SMART LD.
Wynn-Parry J. 1 W.L.R. 755

4. —— Winding up. See WEST AFRICA.

COMPULSORY PURCHASE—Compensation —Agricultural land—Method of assessment—Defence Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 94)—Acquisition of Land (Assessment of Compensation) Act, 1919 (9 & 10 Geo. 5, c. 57), s. 2.
Agriculture—Agricultural land—Compulsory acquisition—Compensation.
* WATSON v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR AIR
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 1477

CONFLICT OF LAWS—Chose in action or debt—Transfer or discharge—Applicability of proper law or lex situs—Situs of chose in action—Insurance—English company—Policy effected in Haifa—Claim—End of Palestine mandate—Claim transferred to custodian by Israeli legislation—Whether assured or custodian entitled — Whether legislation operated extraterritorially—Whether confiscatory.
Conflict of Laws—Contract—Proper law—New State—Whether change of proper law effected. Conflict of laws—Foreign legislation. Insurance—Claim — Unliquidated damages — Chose in Action. Company — Residence — Agency abroad. Residence. Evidence—Foreign law—Proof—No witnesses—Decision by judge on foreign enactments. Statute—Extraterritorial effect. "Is"—"Any person who is ". . ."—Effect of regulations. "Moveables" —Chose in action. "Damages"—Insurance claim.
 F. & K. JABBOUR v. CUSTODIAN OF ISRAELI ABSENTEE PROPERTY
Pearson J. 1 W.L.R. 139

2. —— Chose in action. See COMPANY.

3. ——. See INFANT.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—Visiting forces. See JUSTICES.

CONTEMPT OF COURT—Committal order —Application by litigant in person—Such applicant not to be heard—R.S.C., Ord. 44, r. 2, note.
* In re G.'s APPLICATION FOR A COMMITTAL ORDER - - Vaisey J. 1 W.L.R. 1116

CONTRACT—Construction. See SHIPPING.

2. —— Construction—Extrinsic evidence. See LANDLORD AND TENANT.

3. —— Exceptions clause — Negligence — Municipal caravan site — Theft of caravan —Exemption from liability of local authority for loss by "any person using camping "ground."

CONTRACT—continued.

Bailment.
* HALBAUER v. BRIGHTON CORPORATION C.A. 1 W.L.R. 1161

4. —— Exceptions clause. See NEGLIGENCE.

5. —— Guarantee. See SALE OF GOODS.

6. —— Notice to determine—Nature of notice—Patent—Licence subject to compensation for exceeding quota—Agreement to suspend payments of compensation—Counterclaim seeking to enforce payments not sufficient notice.
Patent.
* TOOL METAL MANUFACTURING CO. LD. v. TUNGSTEN ELECTRIC CO. LD. C.A. 1 W.L.R. 862

7. —— Uncertainty. See MASTER AND SERVANT—Remuneration.

8. ——. See HUSBAND AND WIFE—Maintenance; RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

COPYRIGHT — Infringement — Assignment —Agreement for partial assignment—Exclusive right to publish work in "volume form" —Defendants' publication of whole work in single issue of weekly periodical—Periodical a "volume"—Assignees' right to sue without joining owner of copyright—Copyright Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 46), ss. 1 (2), 2 (1), 5 (2), (3).
* JONATHAN CAPE LD. v. CONSOLIDATED PRESS LD. - Danckwerts J. (sitting as additional Judge of Q.B.D.) 1 W.L.R. 1313

COSTS—Assisted person—House of Lords. See LEGAL AID.

2. —— Attendance of country solicitor. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

3. —— Court fees—Petition under Romilly's Act—Stamp duty—Whether court fees chargeable—Charities Procedure Act, 1812 (52 Geo. 3, c. 101), s. 3.
Revenue—Stamp duty—Court fees. "Stamp "duty."
* In re ELSIE INGLIS (LONDON) MEMORIAL FUND - - Harman J. 1 W.L.R. 407

4. —— Joint tortfeasors—Contribution—Written offer of contribution before trial—To be treated as payment into court—Whether tortfeasor making offer entitled to costs after notional payment into court—R.S.C., Ord. 30, r. 2 (2) (j).
Joint Tortfeasors.
* BASTED v. COZENS & SUTCLIFFE LD. (PRACTICE NOTE) - Devlin J. 1 W.L.R. 1069

5. —— Justices. See JUSTICES.

6. —— Legal Aid. See LEGAL AID.

7. —— Security for costs of appeal. See LEGAL AID.

COSTS—continued.

8. —— Taxation. See FATAL ACCIDENTS ACTS.

9. —— Trade Dispute—Industrial Disputes Tribunal—Crown Practice—Practice—Prohibition—Application for order—Parties to be served—Minister and union separately represented—Whether both entitled to costs.
Trade Dispute.
* REGINA v. INDUSTRIAL DISPUTES TRIBUNAL. Ex parte AMERICAN EXPRESS CO. INC. (PRACTICE NOTE) Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 1118

10. —— Trustees. See SOLICITOR.

11. ——. See BANKRUPTCY.

COUNTY COURT—Jurisdiction—Action for recovery of land —House — Legal charge — Mortgagee's action for possession against surety—Consent to judgment by defendant—County court judge's refusal to hear case—County Courts Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 53), ss. 43, 53; County Court Rules, 1936, Ord. 24, r. 4 (2).
* REGINA v. JUDGE WILLES. Ex parte ABBEY NATIONAL BUILDING SOCIETY 1 W.L.R. 136 Divl.Ct.

2. —— Practice. See SETTLED LAND.

3. —— Rules. See ADMINISTRATION OF ESTATES.

4. —— Transfer of bankruptcy proceedings to High Court. See BANKRUPTCY.

COURT OF APPEAL—County court—Appeal from—Damages—Assessment of—Personal injuries—Question of fact—No power in appellate court to intervene where amount considered extravagant.
Damages—Personal injuries—County court.
* SHAVE v. J. W. LEES (BREWERS) LD. C.A. 1 W.L.R. 1300

2. —— County court—Appeal from—New point—Action to enforce promissory note—Plaintiffs' claim in county court based on allegation that they were holders in due course — Action dismissed — Basis of plaintiffs' claim on appeal changed—New point of law not open to plaintiffs—Legal aid.
Hire-Purchase—Void provision—Agreement incorporating promissory note — Validity of promissory note—Hire-Purchase Act, 1938 (1 & 2 Geo. 6, c. 53), ss. 4, 5 (c).
* UNITED DOMINIONS TRUST LD. v. BYCROFT C.A. 1 W.L.R. 1345

3. —— Evidence—Fresh evidence—Witness confessed liar.
Evidence.
* LADD v. MARSHALL - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 1489

4. —— Evidence—Transcript—Reading by members of court out of court — Alternative use of judge's note—Saving of costs—R.S.C., Ord. 66A, rr. 3, 4.
Practice and Procedure—Trial—Parties seen by judge privately—Seen separately—Undesirability. Divorce.
* STEVENS v. STEVENS - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 900

CRIMINAL LAW — Aiding and abetting — Mens rea—Carriage of goods for hire—Failure to obtain necessary permit—Bona fide assurance by driver that permit granted—Contractor's duty to make inquiries—Road and Rail Traffic Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 51), s. 9 (1)—Transport Act, 1947 (10 & 11 Geo. 6, c. 49), s. 52.
Law Reports—Reporting of decisions—No principle of law.
Road Traffic — Licence — "A" carriers licence—25-mile radius.
* Davies, Turner & Co. Ld. v. Brodie
Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 1364

2. —— Attempt—Indecency—Attempt to procure act of gross indecency — Criminal intention—Overt acts—Surrounding circumstances—Court-martial.
Fact or Law.
* Regina v. Miskell
C.-M.A.C. 1 W.L.R. 438

3. —— Attempt — Preparation — Sale at excessive price—Preparation of illegal price tickets—Intention to attach to meat before delivery to customers—Act preparatory to commission of offence — Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, reg. 55ab—Meat (Prices) (Great Britain) Order, 1952 (S.I. 1952, No. 1122), art. 3.
Emergency Legislation.
* Hope v. Brown - Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 250

4. —— Carnal knowledge — Defence — Reasonable belief that girl over 16—"First "occasion on which he is charged"—Committal on separate occasions in relation to different girls—Trial on one indictment—Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 69), s. 5 (1)—Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1922 (12 & 13 Geo. 5, c. 56), s. 2, proviso.
"Occasion"—"Charged."
* Regina v. Rider
Chelmsford Assizes 1 W.L.R. 463

5. —— Court of Criminal Appeal—Jurisdiction—Summary conviction—Committed to quarter sessions for sentence—Powers of Court of Criminal Appeal to inquire into committal order—Criminal Justice Act, 1948 (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 58), s. 29 (3).
* Regina v. Warren C.C.A. 1 W.L.R. 531

6. —— Evidence—Evidence of accomplice —Murder—Boy attacked by gang—Subsequent death from stab wound inflicted by one of gang—Evidence by one of attackers previously acquitted on murder charge — Whether evidence of accomplice requiring corroboration.
* Regina v. Davies C. C. A. 1 W.L.R. 214

7. —— Evidence—Witnesses—Competency —Husband and wife—Husband charged with arson of wife's property—Competence of wife as witness—"Offence involving bodily injury "to child"—Child in house set on fire—Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), s. 12—Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 36), s. 4 (1)—Larceny Act, 1916 (6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50), s. 36

CRIMINAL LAW—continued.
—Children and Young Persons Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 12), Sch. I.
Children and Young Persons.
* Regina v. Moore
Leeds Assizes 1 W.L.R. 893

8. —— Fraud—Accounts—Falsification—Intent to show false profit to avoid dismissal —Intent to induce a course of conduct on part of employers—Whether intent to defraud.
Fraud—Intent to defraud.
* Regina v. Wines
C.C.A. 1 W.L.R. 64

9. —— Larceny — Larceny by servant — Cheques signed by master in blank — Servant paying master's cheques to his own creditors — Indictment charging larceny of moneys — Whether correct offence charged. Embezzlement — Servant paying master's cheques to friend—Money received in exchange—Indictment charging larceny. Fraudulent conversion. Banking—Current account—Relationship between banker and customer.
* Regina v. Davenport
C.C.A. 1 W.L.R. 569

10. —— Larceny—Receiving—Alternative counts—Indictment—Evidence consistent with either—Both counts to be included in indictment—Jury to be discharged from giving verdict on alternative count—Criminal Appeal Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 23), s. 5 (2).
*Regina v. Seymour - C.C.A. 1 W.L.R. 678

11. —— Mental deficiency—Procuration of mental defective girl—Carnal knowledge with girl under statutory supervision — Mental Deficiency Act, 1913 (3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 28), s. 56 (1) (a) (b).
Mental deficiency.
* Regina v. Cook
Leeds Assizes 1 W.L.R. 125

12. —— Murder — Provocation — Woman jeering at accused's impotence—Whether disability to be taken into account.
* Bedder v. Director of Public Prosecutions - - H.L.(E.) 1 W.L.R. 1119

13. —— Murder. See Basutoland.

14. —— Obscene libel—Contemporary novel —Test of obscenity—Tending to corrupt and deprave by present-day standards.
* Regina v. Martin Secker & Warburg Ld.
C.C.C. 1 W.L.R. 1138

15. —— Obscenity — Obscene libels — Seizure—Onus of proof—Publications seized from respondents' premises—Respondents summoned to show cause why the publications should not be destroyed—Magistrates' functions—Obscene Publications Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 83), s. 1.
* Thomson v. Chain Libraries Ld.
Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 999

16. —— Plea—Guilty—Application to withdraw plea before sentence—Matter within discretion of trial judge.
* Regina v. McNally - C.C.A. 1 W.L.R. 933

CRIMINAL LAW—continued.

17. —— Preventive detention. See PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE.

18. —— Sterilisation. See DIVORCE — Cruelty.

19. ——. See PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE.

CROWN — Freedom from taxation. See REVENUE—Income tax.

CROWN PRACTICE—Certiorari—Inferior tribunal—Fire service—Offence against discipline—Case heard by chief officer—Caution administered—Complaint of manner in which hearing conducted—Whether certiorari would issue—Administration of Justice (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1938 (1 & 2 Geo. 6, c. 63), s. 7 (2)—Fire Services Act, 1947 (10 & 11 Geo. 6, c. 41), s. 4—Fire Services (Discipline) Regulations, 1948 (S.I. 1948, No. 545), reg. 1 (1).
Fire Service. Military law—Court-martial—Certiorari—Whether subject to.
* Ex parte FRY
Divl.Ct. & C.A. 1 W.L.R. 730

DAMAGES — Negligence — Remoteness — Damage to plaintiff's motor car through negligence of garage—Loan to plaintiff of another car during repair—Loss of second car through plaintiff's negligence — Hire of third car — Claim against garage for cost of hire. Mitigation—Impossible owing to plaintiff's negligence.
* MACRAE v. H. G. SWINDELLS
Chester Assizes 1 W.L.R. 597

2. —— Personal injuries — County court. See COURT OF APPEAL.

3. —— Personal injuries — Husband and wife — Wife disfigured through defendant's negligence—Husband's desertion after accident—Damages for loss of husband.
Husband and Wife — Tort — Negligence — Negligence of third party. Damages—Consortium, loss of.
* LAMPERT v. EASTERN NATIONAL OMNIBUS CO. LD. - Hilbery J. 1 W.L.R. 1047

4. —— Personal injuries — Jury — Assessment of damages by jury—Limits of power by appellate court to intervene.
* BOCOCK v. ENFIELD ROLLING MILLS LD.
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 1303

5. —— Personal injuries — Summing up. See LICENSOR AND LICENSEE.

6. —— Sale of goods. See SALE OF GOODS.

7. —— Voluntary payments. See FATAL ACCIDENTS ACTS.

DEBT—Demand—Whether condition precedent to payment—Mortgage—Legal charge—Charge to secure repayment to bank "on "demand" of moneys due on current account—Foreclosure proceedings by bank within 12 years of demand but over 12 years after advance—Effect of covenant to repay "on "demand" — Charge in favour of bank a collateral security — Limitation of action —

DEBT—continued.

Limitation Act, 1939 (2 & 3 Geo. 6, c. 21), ss. 4 (3), 18 (4).
Mortgage. Banking. Limitation of action.
* LLOYDS BANK LD. v. MARGOLIS
Upjohn J. 1 W.L.R. 644

DEFAMATION. See EVIDENCE—Libel and slander; LIBEL AND SLANDER.

DISCOVERY—Privilege. See PRACTICE.

DIVORCE—Cruelty—Sterilisation of husband—After birth of first child—Whether sterilisation cruelty.
Criminal Law — Assault — Sterilisation — Legality.
* BRAVERY v. BRAVERY
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 1169

2. —— Insanity. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

3. ——. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

DURESS. See MALAYA.

EASEMENT. See JUSTICES—Case stated.

ECCLESIASTICAL LAW—Faculty—Armorial bearings—Royal arms—Introduction into church—Whether consent of bearer necessary.
* In re ST. PAUL'S CHURCH, BATTERSEA
Southwark Consistory Court 1 W.L.R. 920

2. —— Faculty—Armorial bearings—Royal arms—Introduction into church—Whether permission of Her Majesty necessary before issue of faculty.
* In re WEST TARRING (RECTOR AND CHURCHWARDENS)
Chichester Consistory Court 1 W.L.R. 923n.

EDUCATION—School—Attendance—"Walking distance"—Direct route not safe for children unless escorted—Meaning of "nearest available route"—Question of safety—Education Act, 1944 (7 & 8 Geo. 6, c. 31), s. 39 (5).
* FARRIER v. WARD - Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 306

ELECTRICITY — Regulations — Electricity supply—Fault in consumer's installation—Liability of suppliers—Failure to test earthing arrangements before commencing to give supply—Electricity Supply Regulations, 1937, reg. 27 (a).
Negligence—Dangerous thing.
* SELLARS v. BEST Pearson J. 1 W.L.R. 913

EMERGENCY LEGISLATION. See CRIMINAL LAW; TRADE DISPUTE.

EQUITABLE ASSIGNMENT. See BUILDING—Contract.

EVIDENCE — Foreign law. See WEST AFRICA (NIGERIA).

2. —— Fresh evidence on appeal. See PRACTICE.

3. —— Libel and slander — Identification of plaintiff with person defamed—Article in newspaper alleged to be fiction—Statements made at public meetings—Anonymous telephone messages to plaintiff—Admissibility to prove plaintiff identified with fictitious character.

EVIDENCE—continued.

Libel and slander.

*JOZWIAK v. SADEK
Ormerod J. 1 W.L.R. 275

4. —— Transcript. See COURT OF APPEAL.

5. ——. See CRIMINAL LAW.

EXECUTION—Sheriff—Writ of possession—Eviction of subtenant protected by Rent Acts—Claim by subtenant for wrongful eviction—Whether sheriff's officer landlord's agent—R.S.C., Ord. 47, r. 1.

Landlord and tenant—Rent restriction.

* BARCLAYS BANK LD. v. ROBERTS
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 1212

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS. See WILL.

EYES—Protection of. See FACTORY.

FACTORY—Dangerous machinery—Fencing — Duty to fence even though rendering machinery unusable—Grindstone — Factories Act, 1937 (1 Edw. 8 & 1 Geo. 6, c. 67), s. 14 (1).

* PUGH v. MANCHESTER DRY DOCKS CO. LD.
Liverpool Assizes 1 W.L.R. 389

2. —— Dangerous machinery — Fencing — Spindle moulding machine — Dangerous moving parts—Metal box guard with lid closed but not fastened—Lid raised by operative—Machine accidentally set in motion—Accident—Liability of employer—Liability of operative—"Wilfully interfere with or misuse"—Factories Act, 1937 (1 Edw. 8 & 1 Geo. 6, c. 67), ss. 14, 16, 119.

Factory—Duty on workman.

* CHARLES v. S. SMITH & SONS (ENGLAND) LD. - - Hilbery J. 1 W.L.R. 451

3. —— Eyes — Protection — Provision of goggles or effective screens—Independent contractor using mechanical implement—Duty of normal occupier of factory to employee of contractor—Factories Act, 1937 (1 Edw. 8 & 1 Geo. 6, c. 67), ss. 49, 139—Protection of Eyes Regulations, 1938 (S.R. & O. 1938, No. 654).

Factory—Sub-contractor—Duty to employees. "Occupier."

* WHALLEY v. BRIGGS MOTOR BODIES LD.
Leeds Assizes 1 W.L.R. 840

4. —— Floor — Opening — Dry dock — Whether dock an "opening" in a floor—Necessity to fence—Working ledge of dry dock unfenced—Workman returning to work—Fall onto ledge and into dock—Factories Act, 1937 (1 Edw. 8 & 1 Geo. 6, c. 67), ss. 25 (3), 26 (1).

Factory—Safe means of access. Negligence—Safe system of work—Fencing. Causation.

* BATH v. BRITISH TRANSPORT COMMISSION
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 1013

5. —— Floor — Opening — Meaning of "floor"—Statutory duty to fence—Foundry with sand bed—Unfenced hole in sand—

FACTORY—continued.

Whether "opening in floor"—Injury to workman through falling into hole—Liability of employer—Contributory negligence—Workman walks backwards into hole—Principles applicable—Factories Act, 1937 (1 Edw. 8 & 1 Geo. 6, c. 67), s. 25 (3).

Statutory duty—Contributory negligence.

* HARRISON v. METROPOLITAN-VICKERS ELECTRICAL CO. LD. SAME v. SAME.
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 324

6. —— Safe means of access — Transient occurrence — Entrance rendered slippery and unsafe by sudden snowstorm—Factories Act, 1937 (1 Edw. 8 & 1 Geo. 6, c. 67), s. 26.

* THOMAS v. BRISTOL AEROPLANE CO. LD.
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 694

FAMILY PROVISION—Limitation—Extension of time—Circumstance affecting administration or distribution of estate—Mistake as to time by applicant's solicitors—Evidence—Practice—Procedure summons inappropriate—Inheritance (Family Provision) Act, 1938 (1 & 2 Geo. 6, c. 45), as amended by Intestates' Estates Act, 1952 (15 & 16 Geo. 6 & 1 Eliz. 2, c. 64), s. 2 (1) (1A).

* In re GREAVES, DECD. GREAVES v. GREAVES - Roxburgh J. 1 W.L.R. 760

2. ——. See PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE.

FATAL ACCIDENTS ACTS—Costs—Taxation—Taxation as between solicitor and client—Fatal Accidents Acts, 1846–1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 7)—Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 49), s. 50—R.S.C., Ord. 22, r. 14 (9) (11).

* THOMASON v. SWAN HUNTER & WIGHAM RICHARDSON LD. THE ALBION (No. 2)
Willmer J. 1 W.L.R. 1220

2. —— Damages—Benefit to dependant—Claim by widower as deceased wife's dependant—Receipt of voluntary payment from beneficiaries of deceased's estate — Fatal Accidents Act, 1846 (9 & 10 Vict. c. 93).

Damages—Personal injury—Voluntary payment.

* PEACOCK v. AMUSEMENT EQUIPMENT CO. LD.
Parker J. 1 W.L.R. 803

FISHERY—Salmon—"Fixed engine"—Use of—Net with light anchors attached acting as brake — Whether offence committed — "Secured by anchors" — "Stationary" — Salmon and Freshwater Fisheries Act, 1923 (13 & 14 Geo. 5, c. 16), ss. 11 (1), 92 (1).

* PERCIVAL v. STANTON
Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 300

FOOD AND DRUGS—Act or default of third person—Practice—Sale of food unfit for human consumption—Proceedings against manufacturer—Effect of Food and Drugs Act, 1938 (1 & 2 Geo. 6, c. 56), s. 9 (2).

* FISHER v. BARNETT & POMEROY (BAKERS) LD. - - - Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 351

FOREIGN LAW — Evidence. See WEST AFRICA (NIGERIA).

FRAUD. See SALE OF GOODS—Warranty.

GAS—Nationalization—Liabilities transferred —Agreement by solicitor with gas undertaking —Undertaking vested in area board—Reference to undertaker in agreement to be read as if reference to area board—Remuneration to be calculated on the basis of undertaker's share and loan capital—Whether board's share and loan capital to be substituted—"Loan "capital" — Meaning — Gas stock — Finance Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 9), s. 8 (5)—Gas Act, 1948 (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 67), s. 17 (3) (b). Company. Revenue—Stamp duty.
 STUDHOLME v. SOUTH WESTERN GAS BOARD - - Lynskey J. 1 W.L.R. 313

GUARANTEE. See SALE OF GOODS.

HABEAS CORPUS. See PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE.

HIGHWAY. See JUSTICES—Case stated.

HIRE PURCHASE—Promissory note. See COURT OF APPEAL.

HOSPITAL—Nationalization. See WILL.

2. —— Negligence. See NEGLIGENCE.

3. ——. See CHARITY.

HOUSE OF LORDS—Appeal to—Leave to appeal — Court of Appeal, by — Preliminary point of law.
* ADLER v. DICKSON (PRACTICE NOTE) C.A. 1 W.L.R. 1482

HUSBAND AND WIFE — Attachment of debt. See BANKRUPTCY.

2. —— Divorce—Condonation—Confession of adultery by wife with X—Act of intercourse following confession—Effect of condonation not destroyed by husband later learning extent of adulterous association with X. Restitution of conjugal rights—Desertion—Bona fide offer by deserted but guilty wife to resume cohabitation—Husband paying maintenance — Decree for restitution of conjugal rights — Mutual affection not necessary. Desertion.
*WELLS v. WELLS - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 1390

3. —— Divorce — Desertion — Constructive desertion — Reasonable belief in adulterous association—Adultery not alleged in petition.
* FORBES v. FORBES Davies J. 1 W.L.R. 1526

4. —— Divorce — Discretion — Exercise — Review by appellate tribunal—Sanctity of marriage—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950 (14 Geo. 6, c. 25), s. 4.
Divorce—Practice—Undefended petition—Leading questions.
* MOOR v. MOOR - - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 927

5. —— Divorce—Insanity—Care and treatment—Absence from mental hospital for cure of fractured leg — Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950 (14 Geo. 6, c. 25), s. 1 (1) (d), (2) (a) (d).
* SWYMER v. SWYMER (BY HIS GUARDIAN AD LITEM)
Mr. Commr. Grazebrook Q.C. 1 W.L.R. 1329

HUSBAND AND WIFE—continued.

6. —— Divorce—Insanity—Care and treatment—Admission under an "urgency order" — Regrading as voluntary patient — Lunacy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 5), s. 11 (1)—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950 (14 Geo. 6, c. 25), s. 1 (1) (d), (2) (a), (d).
* CHAPMAN v. CHAPMAN (BY HER GUARDIAN AD LITEM)
Mr. Commr. Grazebrook Q.C. 1 W.L.R. 1332

7. —— Divorce — Practice — Answer — Amending to allege desertion by way of cross-petition—Three years not completed at date of original answer.
* ROBERTSON v. ROBERTSON Barnard J. 1 W.L.R. 1537

8. —— Divorce—Practice—Answer—Amendment — Petition by husband — Adultery and desertion alleged in answer—Application to amend answer by striking out allegation of adultery — No affidavit filed — Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1950 (S.I. 1950, No. 1940), r. 15 (3).
* CHEETHAM v. CHEETHAM C. A. 1 W.L.R. 990

9. —— Divorce — Practice — Intervener — Lesbianism alleged—Allegation not proved—Dismissal of intervener from suit.
* SPICER v. SPICER (RYAN INTERVENING) Karminski J. 1 W.L.R. 1051

10. —— Divorce—Practice—Petition within three years of marriage—Exceptional hardship or exceptional depravity — Evidence — Consideration of respondent's affidavit—Discretion of judge—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950 (14 Geo. 6, c. 25), s. 2.
* SIMPSON v. SIMPSON - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 994

11. —— Divorce — Practice — Pleading — General cruelty allegation—No particulars—What may be proved—Need for notice.
* GUNNER v. GUNNER (PRACTICE NOTE) Barnard J. 1 W.L.R. 410

12. —— Divorce—Practice—Trial—Right to begin—Desertion alleged—Just cause as defence.
* ARDING v. ARDING (PRACTICE NOTE) Karminski J. 1 W.L.R. 944

13. —— Justices—Clerk—Interventions by clerk—Notes of evidence based upon proof—Impropriety.
Husband and Wife—Justices—Appeal to Divisional Court—Costs—Impropriety of clerk —No order against justices or clerk—Representation by amicus curiae. Legal aid—Costs—Solicitor — Attendance of country solicitor. Solicitor.
* HOBBY v. HOBBY - Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 1020

14. —— Justices—Practice—Constitution of court—Different justices sitting on adjournments—Magistrates' Courts Act, 1952 (15 & 16 Geo. 6 & 1 Eliz. 2, c. 55), s. 98 (6).
* MUNDAY v. MUNDAY Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 1078

HUSBAND AND WIFE—continued.

15. —— Justices — Practice — Defence of belief in adultery—Notice.
* Jones v. Jones - Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 1474

16. —— Justices—Practice—Dismissal of case at close of complainant's evidence—Desirability of hearing both sides.
* Ramsden v. Ramsden
Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 1105

17. —— Justices—Practice—Party in person—Duty of court—Questions to be put to other party—Magistrates' Courts Act, 1952 (15 & 16 Geo. 6 & 1 Eliz. 2, c. 55), s. 61.
* Fox v. Fox - Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 1472

18. —— Maintenance—Agreement—Change of circumstances—Whether wilful neglect to maintain — Jurisdiction of court to review agreed terms—Whether reasonable at time of application — Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950 (14 Geo. 6, c. 25), s. 23.
Legal Aid—Costs—Husband and Wife—Order for security for wife's costs — Wife legally aided—Hardship.
* Morton v. Morton (No. 2)
C.A. 1.W.L.R. 737

19. —— Maintenance—Agreement—Foreign divorce—Agreement purporting to oust jurisdiction of foreign court—Enforceability in England—Public policy.
Contract—Implied term—Consent not to be unreasonably withheld—Husband's agreement to pay child's medical expenses if "reasonable" and approved by the husband"—National Health Service not used. National Health Service.
* Addison v. Brown. Same v. Same Streatfeild J. 1 W.L.R. 779

20. —— Maintenance—Agreement—Maintenance inadequate—Wife receiving national assistance—Liability of husband to National Assistance Board—National Assistance Act, 1948 (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 29), ss. 42 and 43.
National Assistance.
* National Assistance Board v. Prisk
Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 443

21. —— Maintenance—High Court—Application for injunction to restrain husband from dealing with property — No arrears under current order—Application for further provision pending.
* Wright v. Wright
Collingwood J. 1 W.L.R. 534

22. —— Maintenance—High Court—Children—Periodical payments—Whether court has power to make order for payment direct to children—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950 (14 Geo. 6, c. 25), s. 23 (1).
* Logan v. Logan
Collingwood J. 1 W.L.R. 1050

23. —— Maintenance—High Court—Committal order—Duration—No longer limited to one year—Debtors Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62), s. 5—Matrimonial Causes (Judgment Summons) Rules, 1952 (S.I. 1952, No. 2209/L. 21)—Bankruptcy Rules, 1952 (S.I. 1952, No. 2113/L. 14), r. 383.
* Sichel v. Sichel
Willmer J. 1 W.L.R. 612

24. —— Maintenance—Justices—Adultery by wife—Evidence—Variation of original order after adultery—Subsequent application to discharge—"Fresh evidence"—Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 39), s. 7.
* Brammer v. Brammer
Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 599

25. —— Maintenance—Justices—National assistance—Husband in receipt of national assistance — Living with another woman — Wife not "member of the same household" —Discretion of court to order maintenance—Quantum—National Assistance Act, 1948 (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 29), s. 7.
* Ivory v. Ivory Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 604

26. —— Maintenance — Justices — Second marriage of husband—Maintenance for first wife—Second wife's capabilities—Possibility of letting rooms.
Husband and Wife—Justices—Appeal to Divisional Court—Exhibits—Provision.
* Grainger v. Grainger
Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 1270

27. —— Maintenance — Justices — Wilful neglect to maintain—Separation by consent —No neglect to maintain wife—Finding of neglect to maintain child—Power to make order in favour of wife—Discretion as to amount in such circumstances.
Husband and Wife — Justices — Appeal to Divisional Court—Reasons—Justices' liability for costs.
* Starkie v. Starkie (No. 2)
Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 98

28. —— Maintenance. See Practice and Procedure.

29. —— Property — Matrimonial home — Desertion by husband—Right of wife to remain enforceable against husband's successor in title with notice—Right not lost by incomplete agreement to accept alternative accommodation —Right not superseded by express licence.
* Street v. Denham
Winchester Assizes 1 W.L.R. 624

30. —— Tort. See Damages.

INFANT—Custody—Divorce Court—Removal by wife from jurisdiction—Decree against wife on ground of desertion—Right of husband to custody to enable him to bring proceedings in foreign court—Care and control.
Conflict of Laws.
* Wakeham v. Wakeham C.A. 1 W.L.R. 366

INN—Duty to guest—Loss of guests' goods—Luggage left in locked boot of car in hotel garage — Luggage stolen — Inn-keeper's liability.
* Gresham v. Lyon
McNair J. 1 W.L.R. 1100

INSANITY. See Husband and Wife.

INVITOR AND INVITEE — Canvasser — Invitee or licensee — Duty of occupier to licensee—Averment of concealed or unusual danger — Darkness — Light switched off by occupier.

Licensor and Licensee. Trespass.

* DUNSTER v. ABBOTT - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 58

2. —— Dangerous premises—Causation—Injury caused by concurrent causes—Factory —Fire—Failure to turn off main switch—Other switch turned off—Wires transposed unknown to occupier—Fireman electrocuted —Whether occupier liable—Relevance of statutory duty regarding switches.

Factory—Persons benefitted by regulations —" Person employed "—Fireman electrocuted in factory premises while fighting fire—Mains switch not conforming to regulations —Firemen not " persons employed "—No right of action—Factories Act, 1937 (1 Edw. 8 & 1 Geo. 6, c. 67), s. 60 (as amended by Factories Act, 1948 (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 55), s. 12)—Regulations for the Generation, Transformation, Distribution and Use of Electrical Energy in Premises under the Factory and Workshop Acts, 1901 and 1907 (S.R. & O. 1908, No. 1312).

Factory — Electricity — Switch. Factory—Common law duty—Relevance of regulations. Fire Brigade. Causation. Regulations . . . 1907.

* HARTLEY v. MAYOH & CO.
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 355

3. —— Railway station—Patch of oil—Injury to pedestrian—Standard of duty—Steps taken to render premises reasonably safe.

Fact or law.

* BLACKMAN v. RAILWAY EXECUTIVE
C. A. 1 W.L.R. 220

4. ——. See BUILDING—Regulations.

JOINT TORTFEASORS. See COSTS.

2. ——. See PRACTICE—Discontinuance.

JUDICIAL PRECEDENT. See SHIPPING.

JUSTICES—Administrative or judicial decision. See LICENSING.

2. —— Appeal. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

3. —— Case stated—Case stated by consent—Application for declaration under National Parks and Access to the Countryside Act, 1949—Original jurisdiction of quarter sessions to make declaration—Jurisdiction in High Court to hear application on case stated —Quarter Sessions Act, 1849 (12 & 13 Vict. c. 45), s. 11—National Parks and Access to the Countryside Act, 1949 (12, 13 & 14 Geo. 6, c. 97), s. 31.

Highway—Easement—Right of way. Easement.

* BRITISH TRANSPORT COMMISSION v. WORCESTERSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL
Divl. Ct. 1 W.L.R. 850

4. —— Case stated. See PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE.

JUSTICES—continued.

5. —— Committal warrant — Affiliation order—Order made against American soldier—Arrears of payments—American forces' immunity from arrest—Magistrates' Courts Act, 1952 (15 & 16 Geo. 6 & 1 Eliz. 2, c. 55), ss. 64 (1) and 74—Army Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 58, as re-enacted), s. 145—United States of America (Visiting Forces) Order, 1942 (S.R. & O. 1942, (No. 966) I, p. 844).

Military Law — Immunity from arrest. Bastardy.

* REGINA v. BIRKENHEAD BOROUGH JUSTICES. Ex parte SMITH - Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 471

6. —— Constitution of court. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

7. —— Costs—Penalty in guise of costs —Order for costs exceeding costs of prosecution.

* REGINA v. HIGHGATE JUSTICES. Ex parte PETROU - - Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 485

8. —— Information. See WAGES.

9. —— Licensing jurisdiction. See LICENSING.

10. —— Retirement of clerk in matrimonial case. See PRACTICE—Husband and wife.

11. —— Submission of no case—Application by prosecution to call further evidence —Road traffic—Dangerous driving—Prosecution's omission of evidence identifying defendant as driver — Prosecution's case closed—Justices' refusal to allow case to be reopened—Whether judicial exercise of discretion—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 43), s. 11.

*MIDDLETON v. ROWLETT
Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 831

12. —— Summons—Issue of — Decision as to appropriate charge—Whether matter for justices or prosecution—Police applying for summons for careless driving—Justices insisting on summons for dangerous driving—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 43), ss. 11, 12.

Road Traffic—Careless driving—Summons, application for.

* REGINA v. NUNEATON JUSTICES, Ex parte PARKER - Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 1318

13. —— Warrant — Sunday — Observance —Search warrant—Issue of warrant to search club premises — Execution on Sunday — Whether lawfully executed — Sunday Observance Act, 1677 (29 Car. 2, c. 7), s. 6—Magistrates' Courts Act, 1952 (15 & 16 Geo. 6 & 1 Eliz. 2, c. 55), s. 102 (3)—Licensing Act, 1953 (1 & 2 Eliz. 2, c. 46), s. 152 (1).

Sunday. Licensing.

* MAGEE v. MORRIS - Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 806

14. ——. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

LAND CHARGE—Share in land—Registration—Property held on trust for sale—Purchase of share of property—No written contract—Receipt for purchase-money—Receipt registered as estate contract and general equitable charge

LAND CHARGE—continued.

— Interest only in proceeds of sale — Not registrable as land charge—Law of Property Act, 1925 (15 Geo. 5, c. 20), ss. 1 (6), 42 (6) —Land Charges Act, 1925 (15 Geo. 5, c. 22), ss. 10, Class C (iii), (iv), 20 (6), (8).
* In re Rayleigh Weir Stadium
Harman J. 1 W.L.R. 786

LANDLORD AND TENANT—Act of 1951—Residence—By member of tenant's family—"In right of the tenancy"—Tenant holding over after expiry of long lease—Daughter occupying house under oral agreement and paying rent—Occupation not "in right of the tenancy"—Leasehold Property (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1951 (14 & 15 Geo. 6, c. 38), s. 2 (1) (a).
* Richmond v. McGann
Pilcher J. 1 W.L.R. 1282

2. —— Act of 1954 — Notice to quit — Validity—Notice given on August 31, 1954, expiring October 4—Act coming into force on October 1—Notice not in form prescribed by Act—Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954 (2 & 3 Eliz. 2, c. 56), s. 24 (1) (3) (b).
Statute—Retroactive effect.
* Orman Brothers Ld. v. Greenbaum
Devlin J. 1 W.L.R. 1520

3. —— Forfeiture of lease — Mortgage — Relief for underlessee — "Underlessee" — Agreement to execute legal charge—Whether mortgagee an "underlessee"—Assignment of lease—Guarantee for sum lent by bank to assignee—Deposit of documents relating to the property by assignee with guarantor — Bankruptcy of assignee—Action by landlord against trustee in bankruptcy and assignee for forfeiture — Intervention in action by guarantor—Application under Law of Property Act, 1925, for order vesting property in guarantor—Law of Property Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 20), ss. 87 (1), 146 (4) (5) (d).
Mortgage. "Underlessee."
* In re Good's Lease. Good v. Trustee of the Property of W., a Bankrupt, and W. - - Harman J. 1 W.L.R. 309

4. —— Notice to quit — Ambiguity — To vacate "by" specified date—Validity.
Words and Phrases.
* Eastaugh v. Macpherson
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 1307

5. —— Rectification. See Vendor and Purchaser.

6. —— Rent restriction—Death of tenant —Widow occupying as statutory tenant—Acceptance of new rent book containing new conditions of tenancy—Statutory tenancy converted into contractual tenancy — Death of widow—Daughter's right to remain in possession—Increase of Rent & Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. 17), s. 12 (1) (g).
* Bungalows (Maidenhead) Ld. v. Mason
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 769

7. —— Rent restriction—Mortgage—Interest in arrear for more than twenty-one days—Arrears subsequently paid—Whether statutory protection revived—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. 17), s. 7 (a).
Mortgage.
* Nichols v. Walters - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 1

8. —— Rent restriction—Personal occupation—Shop and dwelling-house let together—Dwelling-house made uninhabitable owing to war damage and failure to repair—Occupation of dwelling-house abandoned—Shop still occupied—Whether any animus possidendi on part of tenant.
* Bushford v. Falco - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 672

9. —— Rent restriction—Rent Act avoidance —Agreement in writing—Letting for twelve months—Consideration sum of £47 and weekly rent of 2s. payable monthly—"Thereafter "(should tenant be desirous of continuing "tenancy) on monthly tenancy at rent of 2s. "per week"—Rent less than two-thirds of rateable value — Tenant holding over — Tenant's claim to protection of Rent Acts as statutory tenant—Evidence that written agreement did not accurately record the intention of the parties.
Contract—Construction—Extrinsic evidence.
* O'Connor v. Hume - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 824

10. —— Rent restriction — Shared accommodation—Shared use of kitchen—One tenant vacating premises—Right of other tenant to remain in occupation—Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949 (12 & 13 Geo. 6, c. 40), s. 8.
Court of Appeal—Notice of appeal—Failure of respondent to appear—Desirability of delaying drawing up of order.
* Isaacs v. Titus - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 398

11. —— Rent restriction — Sublease — Subtenancy with right of sharing living accommodation granted by statutory tenant—Statutory tenant's surrender of possession—Rights of subtenant determined—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. 17), s. 15.
Landlord and Tenant—Sublease—Surrender of head tenancy—Effect on sublease. Rent restriction — Statutory tenant — Nature of rights.
* Solomon v. Orwell - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 629

12. —— Rent restriction—Standard rent—Meaning of "rent"—Tenant performing services for owner—Tenant paying as rent difference between quantified value of services and rental value of house—Subsequent increase in tenant's wages—No pecuniary rent paid after increase in wages—Character of tenancy not affected by wage increase—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. 17), s. 12 (2), (7)—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939 (2 & 3 Geo. 6, c. 71), s. 3 (1).
Landlord and Tenant—"Rent."
* Montagu v. Browning
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 1039

13. ——. See Agriculture; Execution.

LAW REPORTS—Citation. See Practice.

2. ——. See Criminal Law.

LEGAL AID — Costs—Appeal—Security for costs—R.S.C. Ord. 58, r. 15 (2).
* BAMPTON v. COOK (PRACTICE NOTE)
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 450

2. —— Costs—House of Lords—Assisted person in court below—Appeal to House of Lords—Former assisted person unsuccessful respondent—Appearance not in forma pauperis.
* ANDERSON v. LAMBIE AND ANOTHER (PRACTICE NOTE)
H.L.(Sc.) 1 W.L.R. 303

3. —— Costs — Order against aided person —Form of order — Payment by instalments —Legal Aid and Advice Act, 1949 (12 & 13 Geo. 6, c. 51), s. 2 (2) (e)—Legal Aid (General) Regulations, 1950 (S.I. 1950, No. 1359), reg. 17.
* PRACTICE DIRECTION (COSTS AGAINST AIDED PERSON)
Lord Goddard C.J., Evershed M.R.
1 W.L.R. 275

4. —— Costs — Security for costs — Plaintiff out of jurisdiction — Security for defendant's costs — Action for account — R.S.C. Ord. 65, r. 6A—Legal Aid and Advice Act, 1949 (12 & 13 Geo. 6, c. 51), s. 1 (7) (b).
Account—Action for—Preliminary point—Agent—Letter inter partes possible basis of account—Writ indorsed in different terms—R.S.C. Ord. 15, r. 1.
* FRIEDMANN v. AUSTAY (LONDON) LD.
Roxburgh J. 1 W.L.R. 466

5. —— Costs — Taxation — Settlement of action — Items disallowed by taxing master —Consultation with leading and junior counsel—Country solicitor's attendance at and travelling expenses to consultation—Conference with junior counsel before accepting offer of settlement—Legal Aid and Advice Act, 1949 (12 & 13 Geo. 6, c. 51), Sch. III.
Solicitor—Costs. Counsel—Costs. Costs—Solicitor and client.
* WARMAN v. BARCLAYS BANK LD.
Harman J. 1 W.L.R. 191

6. —— Transfer from county court to High court. See BANKRUPTCY.

7. ——. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

LIBEL AND SLANDER—Libel—Statement that defendants had "dismissed" plaintiffs—Whether defamatory.
Practice—Preliminary point—Libel action—Whether statement capable of defamatory meaning not properly taken as preliminary point of law—R.S.C., Ord. 25, r. 2.
"Dismissed."
* MORRIS v. SANDERS UNIVERSAL PRODUCTS.
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 67

2. ——. See EVIDENCE.

LICENSING — Justices — Jurisdiction — Planning removal of licence—Administrative County of London—Consent of sub-committee and licensing planning committee—Condition imposed by licensing planning committee—Validity of condition—Whether justices have power to grant planning removal of licence with invalid condition attached—Mandamus

LICENSING—continued.
—Licensing Act, 1953 (1 & 2 Eliz. 2, c. 46), s. 58 (2).
* REGINA v. CITY OF LONDON LICENSING JUSTICES. Ex parte STEWART
Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 1325

2. —— Occasional licence — Application —Application for occasional licence in Brighton by holder of a full on-licence in Taunton—Justices' consent to occasional licence for off-licence premises "on the occasion of Christmas shopping facilities"—Consent given on condition that no liquor sold for consumption on the premises — "Occasion" — Whether occasional licence can be off-licence—Validity of justices' consent—Where consent administrative or judicial act—Customs and Excise Act, 1952 (15 & 16 Geo. 6 & 1 Eliz. 2, c. 44), s. 151—Licensing Act, 1953 (1 & 2 Eliz. 2, c. 46), s. 148.
Justices—Administrative or judicial decision —Licensing. Crown Practice—Certiorari—Application by party not interested—Disaction —Administrative or judicial decision—Licensing justices.
* REGINA v. BRIGHTON BOROUGH JUSTICES. Ex parte JARVIS - Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 203

LICENSOR AND LICENSEE—Dangerous premises—Child—Unaccompanied by adult—Public recreation ground—Child injured by fall from chute—Concealed danger—Whether licensee or trespasser — Liability of local authority.
Damages — Personal injuries—Jury—Summing up—"No sum of money can compensate."
* BATES v. STONE PARISH COUNCIL
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 1249

LIMITATION OF ACTION — Acknowledgment—Mortgage—Possession—No interest paid for over 12 years — Acknowledgment in solicitor's letter—Authority—Limitation Act, 1939 (2 & 3 Geo. 6, c. 21), ss. 4 (3), 18 (4), 23 (1), 24 (1), (2).
Solicitor—Authority. Mortgage.
* WRIGHT v. PEPIN
Harman J. 1 W.L.R. 635

2. —— Negligence—Injury caused by acts outside statutory period — Injury first discovered within statutory period—Limitation Act, 1939 (2 & 3 Geo. 6, c. 21), s. 2 (1).
* ARCHER v. CATTON & CO. LD.
Leeds Assizes 1 W.L.R. 775

3. —— Public authority—Hospital—Duty of Minister to provide "services of specialists" — Specialist performing services as agent of Minister protected by statutory limitation period—Limitation Act, 1939 (2 & 3 Geo. 6, c. 21), s. 21 (1).
National Health Service — Hospital — Specialist—Duty of Minister to provide "services of specialists"—Extension of duty to treatment carried out by specialists — Specialist acting as agent of Minister—National Health Service Act, 1946 (9 & 10 Geo. 6, c. 81), s. 3 (1) (c).
*RAZZEL v. SNOWBALL
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 1382

LIMITATION OF ACTION—continued.

4. —— Public authority—Persons protected — National Health Service — Hospital — Specialist employed part-time by hospital—Injury to patient—Person acting on behalf of hospital board in execution of public duty —Limitation Act, 1939 (2 & 3 Geo. 6, c. 21), s. 21 (1).

Negligence—Hospital—Negligence of medical staff—Part-time specialist—Vicarious liability. National Health Service—Negligence —Vicarious liability.

* Higgins v. North West Metropolitan Hospital Board and Bach
Pilcher J. 1 W.L.R. 411

5. —— See Debt; Family Provision; Malta.

LOAN—to partners. See Partnership.

MAINTENANCE. See Husband and Wife.

2. ——. See Practice and Procedure—Husband and wife.

MAINTENANCE OF SUIT — Common interest — Unincorporated association — Libel actions against officers and members of central council—Defendants' costs paid out of association's funds.

Tribunal—Domestic—Control by courts—Unincorporated association — Council empowered to be sole interpreters of rules—Jurisdiction of court—Association of weight-lifters. Arbitration—Ouster of jurisdiction of courts.

* Baker v. Jones
Lynskey J. 1 W.L.R. 1005

MALAYA—Land—Claim to set aside transfer —Occupation period—Duress—Knowledge of duress in transferee to be established—Titles to Land (Occupation Period) Ordinance, No. 39 of 1949, s. 27 (1) (5)—Land Code of the Federated Malay States (F.M.S. c. 138), ss. 2, 42.

Duress—Transfer of land in Malaya—Transferee's knowledge of duress to be established. "Indefeasible"—Title to land—"Not indefeasible"—Does not mean void.

* Kesarmal v. Valliappa Chettiar
J.C. 1 W.L.R. 380

MALTA — Limitation of action — Action, brought within time, raising invalidity of statute—Subsequent ad hoc action to test validity—Second action instituted out of time —Both actions forming one set of legal proceedings—Second action not time-barred—Customs Duty (Appropriation) Act, No. XIV of 1950—Malta (Constitution) Letters Patent, 1947, s. 39.

Limitation of action.

* Olivier v. Coleiro - J.C. 1 W.L.R. 845

MASTER AND SERVANT—Catering Wages Act — Statutory minimum remuneration — Garage with café attached—Joint engagement of man and wife as manager and manageress of garage and café respectively—Joint weekly wage—Full board but no lodging—Not within Catering Wages Act, 1943 (6 & 7 Geo. 6, c. 24), ss. 9 (1), 10 (1)—Wages Regulation (Unlicensed Place of Refreshment) Order, 1949 (1949 S.I. No. 433) — Wages Regulation (Unlicensed Place of Refreshment) Order, 1947 (1947, S.R. & O. No. 1375).

Catering Wages. "Lodging."

* Parkinson v. H. and J. Plumpton
Lord Goddard C.J. 1 W.L.R. 75

2. —— Remuneration—Employee to be paid by salary and bonus—Method of assessing bonus never agreed — Service terminated — Right of employee to bonus—Quantum meruit.

Contract — Uncertainty — Sum payable not stipulated—Reasonable sum. Quantum meruit. "Bonus."

* Powell v. Braun - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 401

3. —— Safe system of work. See Negligence.

4. —— Wages — Holidays with pay — "Worker"—"Employer"—Contract of service—Independent contractor—Degree of control—Whether person employed "worker" entitled to holidays with pay—Wages Councils Act, 1945 (8 & 9 Geo. 6, c. 17), ss. 10 (1), 16 (1), 23 (1)—Cutlery Wages Council (Great Britain) Wages Regulation (Holidays) Order, 1952 (S.I. 1952, No. 957), Schedule.

* Westall Richardson Ld. v. Roulson
Vaisey J. 1 W.L.R. 905

5. ——. See Catering Wages.

MATRIMONIAL HOME. See Husband and Wife—Property.

MENTAL DEFICIENCY. See Criminal Law.

METROPOLIS — Building — "Structure"— "Building or structure . . . beyond the "general line of buildings"—Erection of car shelter in forecourt of house—Tubular steel framework covered with canvas—Shelter fixed to gateposts in forecourt wall—Whether a "structure"—London Building Act, 1930 (21 & 22 Geo. 5, c. 158), s. 22.

Building. Statute—Construction—Meaning of word—View of man in Stoke Newington omnibus. Ejusdem generis rule.

* London County Council v. Tann
Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 371

MILITARY LAW—Arrest. See Justices.

2. —— Court-martial — Jurisdiction — Sergeant in regular forces—Completion of colour service—Not transferred to reserve—Whether subject to military law—Army Act (as re-enacted and amended) (44 & 45 Vict. c. 58), s. 90 (1), (3), (4).

* Regina v. Hadfield
C.-M.A.C. 1 W.L.R. 1128

MINES AND MINERALS—Coal—Regulations—Breach of statutory duty—Reconstruction of disused roadway—Roof insecure—Injury to workman engaged on reconstruction—Coal Mines Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 50), ss. 49, 51, 52 (1), 102 (8)—Coal Mines General Regulations, 1913 (S.R. & O. 1913, No. 748), reg. 8.

"Travelling road." "Working place."

* Wraith v. National Coal Board
Leeds Assizes 1 W.L.R. 264

MINES AND MINERALS—continued.

2. —— Coal—Regulations—Breach of statutory duty by employer and employee—Causation—Contributory negligence—Apportionment of liability—Coal Mines Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 50), s. 74—Coal Mines (Training) General Regulations, 1945 (S.R. & O. 1945, No. 1217).
*LASZCZYK v. NATIONAL COAL BOARD
Manchester Summer Assizes 1 W.L.R. 1426

3. —— Nationalization. See REVENUE.

MORTGAGE—Bank. See DEBT.

2. ——. See LANDLORD AND TENANT.

NATIONAL ASSISTANCE — Liability of husband. See HUSBAND AND WIFE—Maintenance.

NATIONAL HEALTH SERVICE—Hospital—Gift—Settlement—Trusts in favour of hospitals—Power to trustees if hospital "amalgamated with or absorbed in any other "charity or institution" to pay its share to or for the benefit of that charity or institution or for "other objects or purposes of charity "or benevolence or amelioration of human "suffering or advancement of knowledge"—National Health Service Act, 1946 (9 & 10 Geo. 6, c. 81), ss. 11 (8), 60 (1).
Charity—Benevolent purposes. Perpetuities, rule against — Charity — Defeasance clause — Non-charitable object. "Amalgamation." Company—Amalgamation—Meaning.
In re BAWDEN'S SETTLEMENT. BESANT v. BOARD OF GOVERNORS OF LONDON HOSPITAL - Danckwerts J. 1 W.L.R. 33n.

2. —— Hospital—Gift—Will—Trust funds to be divided equally between named hospitals—Whether "in existence"—Power of exclusion if "it shall be impracticable or inequitable "that such institution . . . should so share "in consequence of . . . having . . . become "amalgamated with some other institution "or institutions"—Effect of National Health Service Act, 1946 (9 & 10 Geo. 6, c. 81).
Trust and Trustee — "Impracticable" — "Inequitable." Company — Amalgamation — Meaning.
* In re HAYES' WILL TRUSTS. DOBIE v. BOARD OF GOVERNORS OF NATIONAL HOSPITAL - - Vaisey J. 1 W.L.R. 22

3. —— Hospital—Meaning—Home for incurables—No curative treatment provided—Whether home transferred to Ministry of Health—National Health Service Act, 1946 (9 & 10 Geo. 6, c. 81), ss. 6 (1), 79.
"Hospital." "Treatment."
* MINISTER OF HEALTH v. GENERAL COMMITTEE OF THE ROYAL MIDLAND COUNTIES HOME FOR INCURABLES
Vaisey J. 1 W.L.R. 79

4. ——. See CHARITY; LIMITATION.

NATIONALIZATION—Hospital. See WILL.

2. —— Transport. See REVENUE.

3. ——. See GAS.

NEGLIGENCE—Child—Injury to—Trespasser—Demolition work—Child injured while interfering with partly demolished wall—Liability of contractors — Duty of care — Extent.
Trespass.
* DAVIS v. ST. MARY'S DEMOLITION AND EXCAVATION CO. LD.
Ormerod J. 1 W.L.R. 592

2. —— Contract — Exceptions clause — Building contract — Redecoration of premises —Damage by fire—Contracting out of liability —General words—Whether including negligence—Clear intention of parties—Effect of provision for insurance.
Contract—Exceptions clause. Building—Contract—Standard agreement of Royal Institute of British Architects. Insurance—Provision for in contract—Effect on liability inter partes.
* JAMES ARCHDALE & CO. LD. v. COMSERVICES LD. - - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 459

3. —— Exceptions clause. See CONTRACT.

4. —— Hospital staff. See LIMITATION.

5. —— Husband and wife. See DAMAGES.

6. —— Onus of proof — Res ipsa loquitur —Operation under control of two persons—Hospital—Anaesthetist—Operations—Injection of spinal anaesthetic — Contamination by phenol—Plaintiffs permanently paralysed—Liability of hospital for acts of specialist anaesthetist—Liability of anaesthetist.
Hospital—Negligence.
 ROE v. MINISTER OF HEALTH. WOOLLEY v. SAME - - McNair J. 1 W.L.R. 128
C.A. See Vol. 2

7. —— Safe system of work—Dangerous premises — Employer's duty — Employee required to work on premises not in the occupation of the employer—Faulty electrical conduit — Employee electrocuted — Duty of employer to his workman.
* CILIA v. H. M. JAMES & SONS (A FIRM). SPARK (THIRD PARTY)
Byrne J. 1 W.L.R. 721

8. —— Safe system of work—Fireman—Fireman injured while travelling to emergency in vehicle with unlashed jack—Obvious risk—Whether fire authority entitled to require fireman to travel in dangerous situation—Standard of duty owed.
Fire Brigade. Volenti non fit injuria.
* WATT v. HERTFORDSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL
Barry J. 1 W.L.R. 208;
C.A. 835

9. —— Safe system of work — General precautions — Window-cleaning — Outside of sash window cleaned by window-cleaner standing on sill—Method recognized by trade —Fall of window-cleaner—Commercial impracticability of instituting system reducing hazards—Employers' liability.
* DRUMMOND v. BRITISH BUILDING CLEANERS LD. - Pilcher J. 1 W.L.R. 501
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 1434

10. —— Safe system of work. See FACTORY.

NEGLIGENCE—continued.

11. ——. See DAMAGES; ELECTRICITY; LIMITATION; RAILWAY; ROAD TRAFFIC.

OBSCENE LIBEL. See CRIMINAL LAW.

PARTNERSHIP — Dissolution — Accounts—Procedure—Claim by former partner to recover moneys lent to partners or partnership—No cause of action at common law—Moneys recoverable only by taking of accounts—Partnership Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 39), s. 44.
* GREEN v. HERTZOG C.A. 1 W.L.R. 1309

2. —— Dissolution — Deed — Indemnity clause—Construction—" All debts and liabili- " ties of the partnership "—Whether income tax on partnership trading profits included—Assessment on firm—Joint liability of partners—Income Tax Act, 1952 (15 & 16 Geo. 6 & 1 Eliz. 2, c. 10), ss. 144, 223.
Revenue—Income tax.
* STEVENS v. BRITTEN - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 1340

PASSING OFF — Sport — Boxing championship title—Foreign title—No confusion between plaintiff and defendant—Plaintiff no reputation in this country.
Slander of title.
* SERVILLE v. CONSTANCE
Harman J. 1 W.L.R. 487

PATENT—Determination of Licence. See CONTRACT.

PERPETUITIES, RULE AGAINST—Discretionary trust—No limit of time—Imperative trust to distribute trust fund among objects of fund at such time or times as trustees thought fit—Objects of fund unascertainable —Invalidity of trust—Claim for repayment of tax—Income Tax Act, 1918 (8 & 9 Geo. 5, c. 40), s. 27 (5).
Trust and Trustee—Uncertainty, trust void for. Revenue—Income tax—Repayment.
* INNES (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. HARRISON
Wynn-Parry J. 1 W.L.R. 668

POLICE — Pensions—Police constable—Disablement—Application for pension—Decision by medical referee—Not the result of service—Appeal—Quarter sessions—Jurisdiction—Right of appeal limited by regulations—Police Pensions Act, 1948 (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 24), s. 5 (1) (3)—Police Pensions Regulations, 1949 (S.I. No. 1241), rr. 43, 44, 45.
* EAD v. HOME SECRETARY
Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 386

POWER OF APPOINTMENT — General power—Nature as absolute property—Advancement—Grant of general power by will before 1926—Exercise of power by will after 1925—Whether appointment " constituted or created " before the commencement of " the Trustee Act, 1925—Powers over real or personal property—Trustee Act, 1925 (15 Geo. 5, c. 19), s. 32.
* In re BRANSBURY, DECD. GRECE v. BRANSBURY - - Vaisey J. 1 W.L.R. 496

PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE—Adjournment—Discretion of court—Jurisdiction of Court of Appeal to review judge's decision—Settlement—Tax avoidance scheme—Appeal in similar case pending in House of Lords—Risk of death of settlor meanwhile.
Judicial Precedent—Court of Appeal decision —Effect pending appeal to House of Lords—Similar decision only under appeal.
* In re YATES' SETTLEMENT TRUSTS. YATES v. YATES - - - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 564

2. —— Chancery Division—Applications, ex parte—Affidavits—Office copies—Mortgage—Redemption and foreclosure—Notice—Place of redemption.
*PRACTICE DIRECTIONS (APPLICATIONS: AFFIDAVITS: MORTGAGES).
Ch.D. 1 W.L.R. 1389

3. —— Affidavits—Chancery Division—Figures and dates—To be in figures and not in words—Costs of re-swearing and re-filing affidavit not complying with direction payable by solicitor personally.
Solicitor—Costs.
* LOVE v. PHARAOH AND ROBERTS (PRACTICE NOTE) - - Harman J. 1 W.L.R. 190

4. —— Company—Investigation of affairs—Motion—Notice—Board of Trade, how notified —R.S.C., Ord. 53B, r. 7 (c)—Companies Act, 1948 (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 38), s. 165.
* PRACTICE DIRECTION (COMPANIES COURT)
Ch.D. 1 W.L.R. 563

5. —— County Court. See SETTLED LAND.

6. —— Criminal law—Sentence—Preventive detention—Qualifying age—Offence committed before but conviction after thirtieth birthday.
* REGINA v. FALLOWS (PRACTICE NOTE)
C.C.A. 1 W.L.R. 508

7. —— Criminal law—Sentence—Probation order—Breach—Charge of—Probation order and statement of breach in respect of which charged to be included in papers.
* REGINA v. MABER (PRACTICE NOTE)
C.C.A. 1 W.L.R. 501

8. —— Discontinuance of action—Effect of settlement—Action for damages—Two plaintiffs and two defendants—Plaintiffs' claims settled—Damages and costs paid by second defendant—Plaintiffs' names left on record—Action brought to trial—No evidence offered by plaintiffs—Whether court has power to determine proportion of damages as between defendants.
Joint Tortfeasor—Contribution—Practice.
* CALVERT AND WIFE v. PICK
Gerrard J. 1 W.L.R. 456

9. —— Discovery—Privilege—Without prejudice negotiations to avoid litigation—Whether reports made for purpose of negotiations privileged from production—R.S.C., Ord. 31, r. 18.
* RABIN v. MENDOZA & CO.
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 271

10. —— Dismissal of action for want of prosecution—Long delay—Effect of plaintiff's twelve years' delay in prosecuting action — Notice of change of solicitors served with summons to dismiss for want of prosecution.

PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE—continued.

Rules of the Supreme Court—Waiver—R.S.C., Ord. 7, r. 2 (1) and (6) not complied with—Irregularity waived—Proceedings not void—R.S.C., Ord. 70, r. 1.

Court of Appeal—Evidence—Fresh evidence—Interlocutory matter—Affidavit evidence—Discretion of court as to admissibility of further evidence. Evidence.

* KRAKAUER v. KATZ - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 278

11. —— Divorce. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

12. —— Family Provision—Applicants with adverse interests—Representation by counsel—Inheritance (Family Provision) Act, 1938 (1 & 2 Geo. 6, c. 45).

* PRACTICE NOTE (FAMILY PROVISION) Ch.D. 1 W.L.R. 778

13. —— Habeas Corpus—Writ—Application by prisoner serving sentence—Conviction and sentence by competent court—Applicant lawfully in custody—No grounds for issue of writ.

* In re CORKE. (PRACTICE NOTE.) Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 899

14. —— Husband and wife—Justices—Retirement of justices—Presence of clerk.

Justices—Clerk—Retirement with justices—Matrimonial case.

* PRACTICE NOTE (JUSTICES' CLERKS) Divl.Ct. (Probate) 1 W.L.R. 213

15. —— Husband and wife—Maintenance—High Court — Practice — Ancillary relief — Application out of time—Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1950 (S.I. 1950, No. 1940 (L. 27)), r. 44 (1).

* PRACTICE DIRECTION (ANCILLARY RELIEF) Divorce 1 W.L.R. 898

16. —— Justices—Case stated—Form—To be prepared on foolscap.

* TURIER v. WEBBER. (PRACTICE NOTE.) Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 808

17. —— Law reports—Citation—Authenticity—Reports by persons not qualified as barristers—Estates Gazette.

* BIRTWISTLE v. TWEEDALE (PRACTICE NOTE) C. A. 1 W.L.R. 190

18. —— Medical report—Agreed report—Attempt to agree—Plaintiff's reports submitted to defendants at defendants' request—Implied understanding for defendants to reciprocate.

*DEVINE v. BRITISH TRANSPORT COMMISSION (PRACTICE NOTE) Denning L.J. (sitting as an additional judge in Q.B.D.) 1 W.L.R. 686

19. —— Parties—Misdescription—Amendment—Defendant sued in his trade name—Defendant appearing and defending action—Judgment for plaintiffs—Proceedings abroad to enforce judgment—Defendant's name differing from trade name—Leave to amend title of action.

* PEARLMAN (VENEERS) S.A. (PTY.) LD. v. BERNHARD BARTELS - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 1457

20. —— Payment into court—Defendants sued severally — Action for infringement of copyright — Claim for damages against all defendants for infringement and breach of confidence and against two defendants for conversion—Application for the payment of one sum into court by all defendants in respect of all causes of action—Whether permissible—R.S.C., Ord. 22, r. 1 (1) and (2); r. 4 (1).

* ROBERTSON v. ABERDEEN JOURNALS LD. Upjohn J. 1 W.L.R. 1084

21. —— Pleading cruelty in Divorce. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

22. —— Preliminary point. See LIBEL AND SLANDER.

23. —— Probate — Probate registry—Administration—Leave to swear death—Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 49), s. 162.

* PRACTICE DIRECTION (PROBATE GRANTS) 1 W.L.R. 854

24. —— Trial—Right to open—Registered design—Action to restrain threats—Threats admitted by defendants—Defence of infringement—Counterclaim.

* W. LUSTY & SONS LD. v. MORRIS WILKINSON & CO. (NOTTINGHAM) LD. Lloyd-Jacob J. 1 W.L.R. 911

25. —— Trial—Witness list—Chancery Division—Interlocutory applications after case has appeared in list.

* MORLEY v. WOOLFSON (PRACTICE NOTE) Harman J. 1 W.L.R. 1363

26. —— Trial—Witness list—Chancery Division—Length of trial—Date of hearing.

* PRACTICE DIRECTION (WITNESS LIST) Ch.D. 1 W.L.R. 693

27. —— Writ—Indorsement—Capacity of plaintiff—Fatal Accidents Acts—Action commenced by widow before grant of letters of administration—Described as "plaintiff" in indorsement and as "administratrix" in title and statement of claim—Writ not thereby rendered null—R.S.C., Ord. 3, r. 4—Fatal Accidents Act, 1846 (9 & 10 Vict. c. 93), s. 2—Fatal Accidents Act, 1864 (27 & 28 Vict. c. 95), s. 1.

Fatal Accidents Acts.

* BOWLER v. JOHN MOWLEM & CO. C.A. 1 W.L.R. 1445

28. ——. See COURT OF APPEAL.

PRIVY COUNCIL—Appeal—Jurisdiction—Criminal matter—Failure to appeal first to final court of appeal of colony.

* KENYATTA v. THE QUEEN (PRACTICE NOTE) J.C. 1 W.L.R. 1053

PROBATE—Practice—Resealing—Application—Advertisement—Colonial Probates Acts, 1892 and 1927 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 6 and 17 & 18 Geo. 5, c. 43).

* PRACTICE DIRECTION (COLONIAL PROBATE) Probate 1 W.L.R. 1053

2. —— Resealing — Grant—Confirmation—Resealing at Principal Probate Registry—Provision of copies for deposit.

* PRACTICE DIRECTION (RESEALING) Probate 1 W.L.R. 1046

PROBATE—continued.

3. —— See ADMINISTRATOR; PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE.

PUBLIC HEALTH — Nuisance — Dwelling-house—Rooms in need of decorative repair—Discomfort and inconvenience—Not injurious to health—Public Health (London) Act, 1936 (26 Geo. 5 & 1 Edw. 8, c. 50), s. 82 (1) (a).
* SPRINGETT v. HAROLD
Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 521

2. —— Prevention of disease—Rags—Collection—Sale or delivery of article to person under 14 — Whether goldfish an article — Public Health Act, 1936 (26 Geo. 5 & 1 Edw. 8, c. 49), s. 154.
"Article." "Article or thing." Statute—Construction—Penal Act—Doubt—Act to be construed against imposition of penalty.
* DALY v. CANNON Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 261

RAILWAY—Statutory duty—Permanent way men—Man injured at work on line—"Relaying or repairing the permanent way"—Men engaged on preliminary inspection—Whether "working for the purpose of relaying or repairing"—Railway Employment (Prevention of Accidents) Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 27), s. 1 (1): Sch. para. 12—Prevention of Accidents Rules, 1902 (S.R. & O., 1902, No. 616), r. 9.
Negligence—Safe system of work—Suspension—Railway—Inspection of permanent way—Re-layer struck by engine—Duty of ganger.
* JUDSON v. BRITISH TRANSPORT COMMISSION - - - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 585

RATES AND RATING—Lands Tribunal—Jurisdiction—Whether competent to entertain questions not the subject-matter of appeal or cross-appeal — Local Government Act, 1948 (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 26), ss. 48 (3) (4), 49 (1)—Lands Tribunal Act, 1949 (12 & 13 Geo. 6, c. 42), ss. 1, 3—Lands Tribunal Rules, 1949 (S.I. 1949, No. 2263), rr. 9, 38 (4).
ELLERBY v. MARCH (VALUATION OFFICER)
C.A. 3 W.L.R. 53

2. ——. See BANKRUPTCY.

RECTIFICATION. See VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

RES IPSA LOQUITUR. See NEGLIGENCE—Onus of proof.

RESTRAINT OF TRADE—Vendor and purchaser—Partnership—Vendor's covenant not "to carry on or be engaged or interested in "any business similar to or competing with" business sold—"Engaged"—Meaning—Severance of covenant—Limitation to competing business.
* RONBAR ENTERPRISES LD. v. GREEN
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 815

RESTRICTIVE COVENANT — Obsolete — Modification—Action to enforce covenants—Application to stay proceedings and for leave to apply to Lands Tribunal — Grounds required—Law of Property Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 20), s. 84 (9)—Lands Tribunal Act, 1949 (12 & 13 Geo. 6, c. 42), s. 1 (4).
Lands Tribunal.
* RICHARDSON v. JACKSON
Danckwerts J. 1 W.L.R. 447

REVENUE. — Charity. See TRUST AND TRUSTEE.

2. —— Entertainments duty—Corporation concerts—Concerts including variety performers — Whether exempt from duty — Finance Act, 1946 (9 & 10 Geo. 6, c. 64), s. 8 (1)—Finance Act, 1952 (15 & 16 Geo. 6 & 1 Eliz. 2, c. 33), s. 3.
"Recitation." "Music hall or other variety entertainment."
* EASTBOURNE CORPORATION v. COMMISSIONERS OF CUSTOMS AND EXCISE
Danckwerts J. 1 W.L.R. 109

3. —— Estate duty—Annuity—Valuation for purposes of estate duty—Basis of calculation—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), s. 7 (1) (5).
Annuity.
* WESTMINSTER BANK LD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS
Harman J. 1 W.L.R. 242

4. —— Estate duty—Valuation—Settled estate—Ultimate limitation to earl for time being—Class entitled to take including persons other than "relatives"—Tenants for life to insure for death duties—Deed of covenant by tenant for life to pay premiums—Acceptance by order of court of offer to convert policies to fully-paid policies—Death duties in respect of settled estate on tenant for life's death paid out of his free estate—Whether allowance to be made on assessment of free estate to estate duty—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), ss. 3, 7 (1)—Finance Act, 1940 (3 & 4 Geo. 6, c. 29), ss. 44, 45 (2), 59.
* In re LEVEN AND MELVILLE (EARL), DECD. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS v. WILLIAMS DEACON'S BANK LD.
Wynn-Parry J. 1 W.L.R. 1228

5. —— Estate duty—Valuation—Shares—Property deemed to pass—Shares in company controlled by deceased—Disposition within three years of death—Method of valuation—Finance Act, 1940 (3 & 4 Geo. 6, c. 29), s. 55.
* In re HALL'S SETTLEMENT. SANDERSON AND OTHERS v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS - Upjohn J. 1 W.L.R. 1185

6. —— Income tax—Balancing charge—"Sale"—Railway wagons vested in Transport Commission — Compensation — Whether transaction a sale — Liability to balancing charge—Income Tax Act, 1945 (8 & 9 Geo. 6, c. 32), ss. 17 (1) (a), (3), 68—Transport Act, 1947 (10 & 11 Geo. 6, c. 49), ss. 8, 29, 30, 31; Sch. VI.
Transport — Nationalization—Compensation.
"Sale." Compulsory purchase—Meaning.
* JOHN HUDSON & CO. LD. v. KIRKNESS (INSPECTOR OF TAXES)
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 40

7. —— Income tax—Balancing charge—Sale of assets—Permanent discontinuance of business—Income Tax Act, 1945 (8 & 9 Geo. 6, c. 32), s. 17.
* INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS v. BARR (TRADING AS HENRY & GALT)
H.L.(Sc.) 1 W.L.R. 792

REVENUE—continued.

8. —— Income tax—Capital or income expenditure—Gravel merchant—Cost of right to take gravel—Whether capital expenditure or expenditure on stock-in-trade—Income Tax Act, 1918 (8 & 9 Geo. 5, c. 40), Sch. D, Case I.
* Stow Bardolph Gravel Co. Ld. v. Poole (Inspector of Taxes)
Harman J. 1 W.L.R. 1058
C.A. 1503

9. —— Income tax—Discontinuance of trade — Gratuitous payment for work done — Account not finally settled when trade discontinued — Account re-opened — Liability to tax.
Revenue—Excess profits tax.
* Severne (Inspector of Taxes) v. Dadswell. Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Same - Roxburgh J. 1 W.L.R. 1204

10. —— Income tax—Earned income relief —Basis of computation—Deduction of charges on income—Income Tax Act, 1918 (8 & 9 Geo. 5, c. 40), ss. 14, 17, Sch. V, para. 17—Finance Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 36), s. 15 (1) (3)—Finance Act, 1927 (17 & 18 Geo. 5, c. 10), s. 40 (3).
Court of Appeal—Appellant appearing in person—Right to be heard.
* Lewin v. Aller (Inspector of Taxes)
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 1063

11. —— Income tax—Profits of trade—Stock in hand—Accountancy—Cotton spinners —Base stock system of accounting—Cotton stocks omitted from trading account or included at arbitrary figure—Method not appropriate for income tax purposes—Valuation of stock at cost or market price—Income Tax Act, 1918 (8 & 9 Geo. 5, c. 40), Sch. D, Case I.
Revenue—Case stated—Findings of fact—Insufficient to "accept" evidence.
* Patrick (Inspector of Taxes) v. Broadstone Mills Ld. - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 158

12. —— Income tax—Succession to trade—Crown — Sale of electricity undertaking to Crown—"Person succeeds to any trade . . ." —Whether "person" includes the Crown—Balancing charge—Income Tax Act, 1918 (8 & 9 Geo. 5, c. 40), Sch. D, Rules applicable to Cases I and II, r. 11 (2) (as substituted by Finance Act, 1926, s. 32 (1)—Income Tax Act, 1945 (8 & 9 Geo. 6, c. 32), s. 17 (1).
Crown — Prerogative — Taxation — Freedom from. "Person."
* Boarland (Inspector of Taxes) v. Madras Electric Supply Corporation (In Liquidation) - - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 87

13. —— Income tax—Transfer of assets to company incorporated abroad — Death of transferors—Settlement of shares in company —General bequest of shares—Liability of beneficiary to tax—"Associated operation"— "In relation to any of the assets transferred" —Finance Act, 1936 (26 Geo. 5 & 1 Edw. 8, c. 34), s. 18 (1), (2).
* Bambridge v. Inland Revenue Commissioners - Harman J. 1 W.L.R. 1265
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 1960

REVENUE—continued.

14. —— Income tax—Wear and tear allowance — Plant — Partnership converted into limited company—Plant sold at market value —Calculation of allowance—Income Tax Act, 1945 (8 & 9 Geo. 6, c. 32).
* Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Wilsons (Dunblane) Ld.
H.L.(Sc.) 1 W.L.R. 282

15. —— Income tax. See Partnership.

16. —— Profits tax—Company—Income stock—Interest on income stock payable only so far as net profits sufficient—Whether interest deductible in computing company's profits for purposes of profits tax—Not a "distribution"—Finance Act, 1937 (1 Edw. 8 & 1 Geo. 6, c. 54), ss. 19 (1), 20 (1); Sch. IV, para. 4—Finance (No. 2) Act, 1940 (3 & 4 Geo. 6, c. 48), s. 14 (1).
* Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Pullman Car Co. Ld.
Harman J. 1 W.L.R. 1029

17. —— Profits tax—Company—Principal and subsidiary companies—Notice given by principal requiring profits of subsidiary to be treated as its own profits — Subsequent exemption of principal from profits tax —Principal not thereafter liable to profits tax in respect of subsidiary's profits—Finance Act, 1937 (1 Edw. 8 & 1 Geo. 6, c. 54), s. 22 (1) (2)—Finance Act, 1947 (10 & 11 Geo. 6, c. 35), s. 31 (2).
*Heelex Investments Ld. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners
Upjohn J. 1 W.L.R. 1368

18. —— Profits tax—Nationalized industry —Compensation—Interim income payments— Income from "other property"— Liable to profits tax—Finance Act, 1937 (1 Edw. 8 & 1 Geo. 6, c. 54), Sch. IV, para. 7 — Coal Industry (Nationalisation) Act, 1946 (9 & 10 Geo. 6, c. 59), ss. 19, 22 (2), (3), (4)—Coal Industry (No. 2) Act, 1949 (12, 13 & 14 Geo. 6, c. 79), s. 1 (2).
Mines and Minerals—Coal—Nationalization.
* Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Butterley Co. Ld.
Roxburgh J. 1 W.L.R. 1199

19. —— Stamp Duty. See Costs.

20. —— Stamp objection in Court of Appeal. See Sale of Goods.

21. —— Tax avoidance. See Trust and Trustee.

ROAD TRAFFIC—Careless driving. See Justices.

2. —— Disqualification — Conditional discharge — Third party insurance — User of uninsured vehicle—No special reasons for not disqualifying—Conditional discharge inappropriate—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 43), s. 35—Criminal Justice Act, 1948 (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 58), s. 12 (2).
* Dennis v. Tame
Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 1338n

ROAD TRAFFIC—continued.

3. —— Disqualification—Conditional discharge—Third party insurance—Users of uninsured vehicle—No special reasons for not disqualifying—Conditional discharge inappropriate—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 43), s. 35—Criminal Justice Act, 1948 (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 58), ss. 7 (1), 12 (2).
* SURTEES v. BENEWITH
Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 1335

4. —— Disqualification — Driving while disqualified — Sentence of imprisonment — "Special circumstances" justifying imposition of fine — Sudden emergency — Road Traffic Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 43), s. 7 (4).
"Special circumstances."
* AICHROTH v. COTTEE
Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 1124

5. —— Negligence—Collision—Inference from facts—Collision in centre of crossroads of equal status — Plaintiff's car driven by hirer — Disappearance of hirer — Submission of no case to answer by defendant's counsel—No evidence called by defendant.
* FRANCE v. PARKINSON
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 581

6. ——. See CRIMINAL LAW.

SALE OF GOODS—C.I.F.—Bank guarantee—Provision for bank guarantee by buyers to sellers on first presentation of documents—Repudiation by sellers before receipt of guarantee—Event guaranteed—Time when guarantee to be provided.
Arbitration—Case stated—Findings of fact—Duty of parties to arbitration.
*SINASON-TEICHER INTER-AMERICAN GRAIN CORPORATION v. OILCAKES AND OILSEEDS TRADING CO. LD.
Devlin J. 1 W.L.R. 935
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 1394

2. —— Engineer's certificate. See CERTIFICATE.

3. —— F.O.B.—Construction of contract — Undertaking by vendor to furnish "a "guarantee"—Third party guarantee not furnished—Personal guarantee given by vendor—Whether a good discharge of contractual undertaking.
Guarantee. Contract—Construction—Meaningless term.
* HEISLER v. ANGLO-DAL LD.
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 1273

4. —— Memorandum in writing—Defence — Repeal of section 4 of Sale of Goods Act, 1893 — Defence pleading section 4 delivered before the repeal—Whether a prior vested right in litigation—Whether operation of section 4 procedural—Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 4—Law Reform (Enforcement of Contracts) Act, 1954 (2 & 3 Eliz. 2, c. 34), s. 2.
* CRAXFORDS (RAMSGATE) LD. v. WILLIAMS AND STEER MANUFACTURING CO. LD.
Pilcher J. 1 W.L.R. 1130

SALE OF GOODS—continued.

5. —— String contract—Repudiation—Failure of consideration—Recovery of purchase price—Goods subject to hire-purchase agreement—Vendor having no title at time of sale—Rescission by purchaser—Sale by hirer followed by further re-sales—Subsequent exercise of option to purchase by hirer—Perfection of title—Transmission of ownership—Implied condition that vendor has right to sell — Breach —Damages—Measure—Whether duty owed by defendants to third party to mitigate damage.
Damages—Sale of goods—String contract—Costs of legal proceedings—Whether reasonably incurred and contemplated at time of contract.
* BUTTERWORTH v. KINGSWAY MOTORS
Liverpool Assizes 1 W.L.R. 1286

6. —— Warranty—Collateral warranty—Sale of second-hand motor-bicycle—False statement in registration book as to year bicycle put on market—String contracts—No fraudulent misrepresentation by seller in question—Whether any warranty given.
Revenue—Stamp duty—Unstamped document admitted in evidence in court below—Duty of Court of Appeal—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 14. Court of Appeal.
Fraud — Who may sue — Sale of goods — Motor vehicle—False statement in registration book—String contracts.
* ROUTLEDGE v. MCKAY.
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 615

7. ——. See SHOP.

SCHOOL. See EDUCATION.

SETTLED LAND—Tenant for life—Powers—Grant of weekly tenancy—Whether letting was at the "best rent"—Onus of proof—No provision for re-entry on non-payment of rent—Pleadings—"Best rent" point not pleaded—Settled Land Act, 1925 (15 Geo. 5, c. 18), ss. 42 (5), 110.
County Court—Practice—Pleadings.
* DAVIES v. HALL - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 855

SETTLEMENT.—Tax avoidance. See TRUST AND TRUSTEE.

2. —— Variation of trusts—Inherent equitable jurisdiction—Statutory jurisdiction—Contingent interests of infant beneficiaries mortgaged by orders of court—Scheme to clear incumbrances by dissolution of trust—Purchase by trustees of life tenant's interest an administrative matter—Trustee Act, 1925 (15 Geo. 5, c. 19), s. 57.
* In re FORSTER'S SETTLEMENT
Harman J. 1 W.L.R. 1450

SHERIFF. See EXECUTION.

SHIPPING — Charterparty — Demurrage — "Average"—Despatch money—Calculation—"Charterers to have right to average days "allowed for loading and discharging."
Judicial Precedent — Decision at first instance—Whether binding on other judge at first instance—Construction of commercial document.
* ALMA SHIPPING CO., S.A. v. V. M. SALGAONCAR E IRMAOS LTDA.
Devlin J. 1 W.L.R. 650

SHIPPING—continued.

2. —— Charterparty — Demurrage — Lay time—Calculation—Cargo to be shipped "at "the rate of 600 tons when vessel is in a "berth and 350 tons whilst in stream."
* V. M. Salgaoncar e Irmaos of Vasco de Gama v. Goulandris Brothers Ld.
Devlin J. 1 W.L.R. 481

3. —— Charterparty—Time—Right to substitute vessel "at any time"—Clause—Construction.
Contract—Construction—Commercial document—Application of rules applicable to other documents—Surplusage.
* S.A. Maritime et Commerciale of Geneva v. Anglo-Iranian Oil Co. Ld.
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 492

SHOP — Sunday closing — Garage—Premises used for second-hand car business lawfully open on Sunday for sale of accessories—Display of cars for sale—Examination of cars by possible customers and discussion with assistant—Car driven by assistant on demonstration ride—No sale of car—"Serving of "customers"—Whether premises open for the serving of customers in connexion with second-hand car business—Shops Act, 1950 (14 Geo. 6, c. 28), ss. 47, 59, Sch. 5.
* Waterman v. Wallasey Corporation. Hesketh v. Same - Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 771

SLANDER OF TITLE. See Passing Off.

SOLICITOR—Authority to acknowledge debt. See Limitation of Action.

2. —— Costs — Trustee — Administrator — Insolvent estate—Solicitor acting as administrator—Court's discretion to allow costs—Exceptional circumstances.
Trust and Trustee—Remuneration—Solicitor. Executor and Administrator.
* In re Worthington, decd. Leighton v. MacLeod - Upjohn J. 1 W.L.R. 526

STARE DECISIS. See Practice; Shipping.

STATUTE—Construction. See West Africa.

2. —— Interpretation—"Article." See Public Health.

STATUTORY DUTY—Breach. See Building, Regulations; Mines and Minerals; Railway.

THEATRE—Play licensed for presentation—Unauthorized addition—Stage directions included in licensed script — Instructions by licensee that script to be adhered to—Performance by actor substantial departure from script—Whether licensee "caused to be pre-"sented" unlicensed part—Theatres Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 68), s. 15.
* Lovelace v. Director of Public Prosecutions - - Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 1468

TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING—Development—Assessment of development value—Evidence—Particulars of agreed assessments of comparable land in same area—Admissibility—Town and Country Planning Act, 1947 (10 & 11 Geo. 6, c. 51), Part VI—Lands Tribunal Rules, 1949 (S.I. 1949, No. 2263), r. 31 (4) (ii).
* Stockbridge Mill Co. Ld. v. Central Land Board - - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 886

2. —— Enforcement notice—Form—Compliance with statutory requirements—Validity of notice—Magistrate's jurisdiction—Town and Country Planning Act, 1947 (10 & 11 Geo. 6, c. 51), s. 23.
* Keats v. London County Council
Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 1357

TRADE DISPUTE—Industrial Disputes Tribunal—Jurisdiction—Bank—Dispute between trustee savings banks and bank employees—Whether a dispute in "a trade or industry ". . . or . . . undertaking"—"Undertaking" —"Trade"—Statutory control of expenditure —Whether increase of wage a necessary expense—Trustee Savings Banks Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 87), ss. 2, 6—Emergency Powers (Defence) Act, 1939 (2 & 3 Geo. 6, c. 62), s. 1 (4)—Supplies and Services (Transitional Powers) Act, 1945 (9 & 10 Geo. 6, c. 10), ss. 5 (2), 10—Industrial Disputes Order, 1951 (S.I. No. 1376 of 1951), arts. 1, 8.
Emergency Legislation—Statutory force—Inconsistent enactment. Trustee Savings Bank.
* Regina v. Industrial Disputes Tribunal Ex parte East Anglian Trustee Savings Bank - - Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 1093

2. —— . See Costs.

TRADE MARK—Registration—Distinctiveness—Geographical name—Whether inherently adapted to distinguish—"Yorkshire" copper tubes—Trade Marks Act, 1938 (1 & 2 Geo. 6, c. 22), s. 9.
* Yorkshire Copper Works Ld. v. Registrar of Trade Marks
H.L.(E.) 1 W.L.R. 554

2. —— Registration—Name of plant—Roses—Trade marks the "variety" names —Variety names sole designation of a rose — Not distinctive—Confusion—Wrongly registered — Rectification of register — Trade Marks Act, 1938 (1 & 2 Geo. 6, c. 22), ss. 9, 11 (1), 15, 32 (1).
"Distinctive mark."
 In re Wheatcroft Bros. Ld.'s Trade Marks - Lloyd-Jacob J. 1 W.L.R. 116

TRADING WITH THE ENEMY—Custodian of Enemy Property—Litigation—Rights vesting in custodian — German partnership — Action by partners against London agents for proceeds of sale of goods—Money in hands of custodian — Claims in conversion, breach of trust and for declaratory relief — Whether actions maintainable — Trading with the Enemy Act, 1939 (2 & 3 Geo. 6, c. 89), s. 7 —Trading with the Enemy (Custodian) Order, 1939 (S.R. & O. 1939, No. 1198), arts. 1, 2, 5 —Trading with the Enemy (Custodian) (No. 2) Order, 1945 (S.I. 1945, No. 887), art. 1 — Distribution of German Enemy Property Act, 1949 (12, 13 & 14 Geo. 6, c. 85), s. 1—Distribution of German Enemy Property (No. 1) Order, 1950 (S.I. 1950, No. 1642), art. 18

TRADING WITH THE ENEMY—continued.

(1) (3)—Trading with the Enemy (Custodian) Order, 1951 (S.I. 1951, No. 153), arts. 1, 4, 7.
* MAERKLE v. BRITISH CONTINENTAL FUR CO. LD. MAERKLE v. SAME
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 1242

TRESPASS—Child. See NEGLIGENCE.

TRIBUNAL—Domestic. See MAINTENANCE OF SUIT.

TRUST AND TRUSTEE—Company—Shares vested in trustees — Interlocutory motion by beneficiaries to direct trustees' method of voting—No order of court to presume beneficiaries past age of child-bearing.
Company. Presumption — Age of child-bearing.
* In re GEORGE WHICHELOW LD. BRADSHAW v. ORPEN - - Upjohn J. 1 W.L.R. 5

2. —— Scheme to avoid tax—Jurisdiction of Chancery Court to sanction—Compromise —Protected life interest—Construction summons—Decision of court of first instance that protected life interest not determinable—Appeal—Compromise of appeal—Jurisdiction of Court of Appeal to sanction compromise varying beneficial interests.
Settlement. Revenue—Tax avoidance scheme. Court of Appeal—Jurisdiction—Compromise of appeal—Variation of beneficial interests.
* In re LORD HYLTON'S SETTLEMENT. BARCLAYS BANK LD. v. JOLLIFFE
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 1055

3. —— Uncertainty, trust void for—Imperative trust to distribute income among specified class—Specified class unascertainable at any given time—Charities members of class—Payment of income to charities —Claim for exemption from income tax—Income not income of charities—Income Tax Act, 1918 (8 & 9 Geo. 5, c. 40), s. 37 (b).
Revenue—Income tax—Charity.
* INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS v. BROADWAY COTTAGES TRUST. SAME v. SUNNYLANDS TRUST
Wynn-Parry J. 1 W.L.R. 659

4. ——. See ADMINISTRATION; CHARITY—Hospital. NATIONAL HEALTH SERVICE; PERPETUITIES; WILL.

TRUSTEES—Costs. See SOLICITOR.

VENDOR AND PURCHASER — Purchaser for value without notice—Tenant in possession —Equities binding purchaser—Rectification—Sale at auction of farm occupied by tenant —Mutual mistake of vendors and tenant as to effect of repairing covenant—Claim by tenant against purchaser to rectify tenancy agreement—Whether purchaser affected by notice of equity to rectify—Law of Property Act, 1925 (15 Geo. 5, c. 20), s. 199 (1).
Landlord and Tenant. Rectification.
* SMITH v. JONES - Upjohn J. 1 W.L.R. 1089

2. ——. See RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

VOLENTI NON FIT INJURIA. See NEGLIGENCE.

WAGES — Wages Council — Information — Sufficiency—Failure to pay "statutory minimum remuneration . . . contrary to section "11 of the Wages Councils Act, 1945 "—Complexity of Order laying down statutory minimum remuneration—Insufficient information as to nature of charge—Wages Councils Act, 1945 (8 & 9 Geo. 6, c. 17), s. 11—Milk Distributive Wages Council (England and Wales) Wages Regulation Order, 1952 (S.I. 1952, No. 986), Sch. — Magistrates' Courts Rules, 1952 (S.I. 1952, No. 2190), r. 77.
Justices—Information.
* STEPHENSON v. JOHNSON
Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 375

WEST AFRICA (GOLD COAST)—Jurisdiction—Claims in respect of debt or liability against specified Stools — Certificate of Governor in Council—"The amount which "ought to be paid"—Reference re whole question of liability and not merely quantum—Asamangkese Division Regulation Ordinance, 1935 (Laws of Gold Coast, 1936 Rev., c. 78) (as amended by Asamangkese Division Regulation (Amendment) Ordinance, No. 5 of 1945 (Gold Coast), s. 2 (b)), s. 6 (2).
Statute — Construction —Ambiguity—Relevance of inconvenient results of one construction.
*ABABIO v. TURKSON - J.C. 1 W.L.R. 509

2. —— (NIGERIA)—Company—Winding up — Voluntary — Proposed reconstruction — One-man company — Nominee liquidator — Order for compulsory winding up—Evidence of creditors shut out—Discretion not properly exercised — Companies Ordinance (Laws of Nigeria, 1948, c. 38), ss. 132 (2), 140.
Company—Winding up.
*ADEBAYO v. OFFICIAL RECEIVER OF NIGERIA - - J.C. 1 W.L.R. 681

3. —— (NIGERIA)—Exchange control—Prohibition of export of notes of foreign legal tender—Whether notes legal tender—Expert evidence on foreign law—Competence of experienced bank manager — "Specially "skilled"—Exchange Control Ordinance, No. 35 of 1950 (Nigeria) s. 22 (1).
Evidence — Expert — Foreign law—Competency of experienced layman — "Specially "skilled"—"To the best of my knowledge." Exchange Control.
*SAID AJAMI v. COMPTROLLER OF CUSTOMS
J.C. 1 W.L.R. 1405

4. —— Will—Blind testator — Whether "by what appears on the face of the "will . . . he had . . . knowledge of its "contents"—Court entitled to take cognizance of elaborate provisions of will—Courts Ordinance, Laws of the Gold Coast, 1936 Rev., c. 4, Sch. 3, Ord. 49, r. 29.
Will. "Blind."
* CHRISTIAN (OTHERWISE AMPAH) v. INTSIFUL - - - J.C. 1 W.L.R. 253

WILL—Bequest to charitable institution—War memorial cottage hospital—Nationalization—Hospital taken over by hospital management committee—Name and objects of charity altered—Permanent charity—Bequest retained by charity.

WILL—continued.

Hospital — Nationalization — Bequest to charitable institution—War memorial cottage hospital—Name and objects of charity altered —Bequest not acquired by hospital management committee—Retained by charity.

Charity—War memorial cottage hospital—Name and objects of charity altered—Permanent charity—Entitled to retain bequest—Not affected by nationalization of hospital.

* In re BAGSHAW, DECD. WESTMINSTER BANK LD. v. TAYLOR
Danckwerts J. 1 W.L.R. 238

2. —— Construction—Annuity—One third of income of residuary trust fund payable to widow for life—If insufficient to provide £6,500 in any year "free of English income "and super-tax" trustees to pay balance "out "of the income of the trust fund"—Whether annuity a continuing charge on income.

In re CAMERON, DECD. CURRIE v. MILLIGAN - Roxburgh J. 1 W.L.R. 1375

3. —— Construction — "Children" — Whether including issue—Trusts for "child-"ren . . . and . . . issue"—Ultimate trusts for "children . . . similar to the trusts here-"inbefore declared so far as may be and the "law will allow" — Whether "issue" included in ultimate trusts. "Similar" trusts.

Accruer — Clause — Second accruer — "Share"—Accruing share not prima facie included in word "share" — No words in clause permitting other than natural construction of "share."

* In re LYBBE, DECD. KILDAHL v. BOWKER
Roxburgh J. 1 W.L.R. 573

4. —— Construction—Omission—Clause ungrammatical and illogical unless words supplied from precedent—Judicial notice that precedent available—Words inserted.

* In re FOLLETT, DECD. BARCLAYS BANK LD. v. DOVELL
Roxburgh J. 1 W.L.R. 1430

WILL—continued.

5. —— Construction—Protected life interest —Trustee's power to "resort to and spend "any part of the capital . . . and apply the "same for . . .[beneficiary's] maintenance "and general benefit . . ."—Beneficiary's claim for entire capital rejected—Transfer of capital subject to trustee's discretion.

Trust and Trustee.

* In re POWLES, DECD. LITTLE v. POWLES
Harman J. 1 W.L.R. 336

6. —— Construction—Testamentary character—Gifts to executor and trustee—To be disposed of in accordance with memorandum signed by testator—Such memorandum not to have testamentary effect—Gifts expressed not to create a trust—Whether executor entitled beneficially.

* In re STIRLING, DECD. UNION BANK OF SCOTLAND LD. v. STIRLING
Wynn-Parry J. 1 W.L.R. 763

7. —— Construction—Uncertainty—Condition subsequent—Gift of freehold house and contents and "any possessions I may have" to one daughter "on condition that she will "always provide a home for" another daughter—Condition subsequent—No gift over— "Possessions" — "Provide a home" — Whether condition valid—Precatory trust.

Trust and Trustee—Precatory trust. "Pos-"sessions"—Cash at bank—Proceeds of policy —Arrears of pension.

* In re BRACE, DECD. GURTON v. CLEMENTS
Vaisey J. 1 W.L.R. 955

8. —— Interlineation—Interlineation in codicil — Validity — Examination of circumstances.

Executor and Administrator—Executor—Remuneration—Bank—Bank appointed as executor and trustee by codicil — No charging clause—Bank entitled to charge.

* IN THE ESTATE OF CAMPBELL, DECD.
Wallington J. 1 W.L.R. 516

9. —— . See WEST AFRICA.

TABLE OF CASES CITED

PAGE

Acton Borough Council v. Morris [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1228; 117 J.P. 498; 97 S.J. 728; [1953] 2 All E.R. 932; 51 L.G.R. 609, C.A. 1157
Adams v. Musker, 15 T.C. 413 . . . . . 1063, 1065, 1067, 1068
Addie (R.) & Sons (Collieries) v. Dumbreck [1929] A.C. 358; 98 L.J.P.C. 119; 140 L.T. 650; 45 T.L.R. 267; 34 Com.Cas. 214, H.L. 593, 594
Adsett v. K. and L. Steelfounders and Engineers [1953] 1 W.L.R. 773; 97 S.J. 419; [1953] 2 All E.R. 320; 51 L.G.R. 418, C.A. 1015
A.G. Der Manufacturen I.A. Woronin Leutschig v. Frederick Huth & Co. (1946) 79 Ll.L.Rep. 262 156
Agius v. Great Western Colliery Co. (1889) 1 Q.B. 413; 68 L.J.Q.B. 312; 80 L.T. 140; 47 W.R. 403, C.A. 1287, 1298
Alabaster v. Harness [1895] 1 Q.B. 339; 64 L.J.Q.B. 76; 71 L.T. 740; 11 T.L.R. 96; 43 W.R. 196; 14 R. 54, C.A. 1005, 1012
Alderslade v. Hendon Laundry [1945] K.B. 189; 114 L.J.K.B. 196; 172 L.T. 153; 61 T.L.R. 216; 89 S.J. 164; [1945] 1 All E.R. 244, C.A. 461, 462
Aldin v. Stewart, 1916 S.C. 13; 9 B.W.C.C. 418 841
Aldritt v. Aldritt (unreported) June 12, 1951 444
Alexander v. Vanderzee (1872) L.R. 7 C.P. 530; 20 W.R. 871, Ex.Ch. 494
Alfin v. Hewlett (1902) 18 T.L.R. 664 . . . . . 1005, 1011, 1012
Alianza Co. v. Bell [1904] 2 K.B. 666; on appeal [1906] A.C. 18; 22 T.L.R. 94; 75 L.J.K.B. 44; 93 L.T. 705; 50 S.J. 74; 54 W.R. 413; 5 T.C. 172, H.L. 1061, 1509, 1510, 1516, 1517
Allen, In re, Dow v. Cassaigne [1903] 1 Ch. 276; 72 L.J.Ch. 159; 88 L.T. 246; 51 W.R. 403, C.A. 574, 578, 579, 580
Allen v. Allen [1951] W.N. 322; 115 J.P. 229; [1951] 1 All E.R. 724 . 1532, 1534
Allen v. Anthony (1816) 1 Mer. 282; 35 E.R. 679, L.C. 1091
Alliance Property Co. v. Shaffer [1949] 1 K.B. 367; [1949] L.J.R. 998; 65 T.L.R. 111; 93 S.J. 181; [1949] 1 All E.R. 312, C.A. 825
Anderson v. Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States (1926) 134 L.T. 557; 42 T.L.R. 302, C.A. 1278
Anderson v. Titmas (1877) 36 L.T. 711 1491
Andrew, In re, Ex parte Official Receiver (Trustee) (No. 2) [1937] Ch. 122; 106 L.J.Ch. 195; 80 S.J. 932; [1937] B. & C.R. 205; sub nom. In re Andrew, Official Receiver v. Standard Range and Foundry Co. (No. 2), 155 L.T. 586; 53 T.L.R. 90; [1936] 3 All E.R. 450, C.A. 1240
Andrews v. Barnes (1888) 39 Ch.D. 133; 57 L.J.Ch. 694; 58 L.T. 748; 4 T.L.R. 609; 53 J.P. 4; 36 W.R. 705, C.A. 1223
Anglo-Persian Oil Co. v. Dale [1932] 1 K.B. 124; 100 L.J.K.B. 504; 145 L.T. 529; 47 T.L.R. 487; 75 S.J. 408; 16 T.C. 253, C.A. 1061
Arranging Debtor, In re an [1921] 2 Ir.R. 1 1145
A/S Tallina Laevauhisus v. Estonian State S.S. Line (1947) 80 Ll.L.Rep. 99, C.A. 145, 147, 151
Ashby v. Tolhurst [1937] 2 K.B. 242; 106 L.J.K.B. 783; 156 L.T. 518; 53 T.L.R. 770; 81 S.J. 419; [1937] 2 All E.R. 837, C.A. 1167, 1168
Ashforth v. Redford (1873) L.R. 9 C.P. 20; sub nom. Ashworth v. Redford, 43 L.J.C.P. 57 494
Asia Mill v. Ryan (Inspector of Taxes) [1951] W.N. 390; 95 S.J. 544; [1951] T.R. 181; 44 R. & I.T. 698; 32 T.C. 275; 30 A.T.C. 110, H.L. 160
Athlumney, In re, Ex parte Wilson [1898] 2 Q.B. 547; 67 L.J.Q.B. 935; 79 L.T. 303; 42 S.J. 740; 47 W.R. 144; 5 Mans. 322 1131
Atlantic Maritime Co. Inc. v. Gibbon [1953] 3 W.L.R. 714; 97 S.J. 760; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1086; [1953] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 294, C.A. 317
Attenborough v. Attenborough (1855) 1 K. & J. 296; 25 L.T.(o.s.) 155; 69 E.R. 470 671
Attorney-General v. Bouwens (1838) 4 M. & W. 171; 1 Horn & H. 319; 7 L.J.Ex. 297; 150 E.R. 1390 1115
Attorney-General v. Brown [1920] 1 K.B. 773; 89 L.J.K.B. 1178; 122 L.T. 558; 36 T.L.R. 165; 84 J.P. 113 262
Attorney-General v. Campbell (1872) L.R. 5 H.L. 524; 41 L.J.Ch. 611, H.L. . 150
Attorney-General v. Edison Telephone Company of London (1880) 6 Q.B.D. 244; 50 L.J.Q.B. 145; 43 L.T. 697; 29 W.R. 428 1486
Attorney-General v. Hancock [1940] 1 K.B. 427; 109 L.J.K.B. 243; 164 L.T. 52; 56 T.L.R. 286; 84 S.J. 97; [1940] 1 All E.R. 32 . . . . . 89, 93, 96
Attorney-General v. Linehan [1929] I.R. 19 . . . . . 216, 218
Attorney-General v. Milne [1913] 2 K.B. 606, C.A.; [1914] A.C. 765; 83 L.J.K.B. 1083; 111 L.T. 343; 30 T.L.R. 476; 58 S.J. 577, H.L. . . 1186, 1188, 1189
Attorney-General v. South Wales Electrical Power Distribution Co. [1919] 2 K.B. 636; 36 T.L.R. 126 317

PAGE

Attwood v. Lamont [1920] 3 K.B. 571; 90 L.J.K.B. 121; 124 L.T. 108; 36 T.L.R. 895; 65 S.J. 25, C.A. 816, 820
Azoff-Don Commercial Bank, In re [1954] 1 Ch. 315; [1954] 2 W.L.R. 654; 98 S.J. 252; [1954] 1 All E.R. 947 1110

B.'s Settlement, In re [1952] 2 T.L.R. 489; [1952] 2 All E.R. 647 . . 1451, 1454
Badcock v. Hunt (1888) 22 Q.B.D. 145; 58 L.J.Q.B. 134; 60 L.T. 314; 5 T.L.R. 148; 53 J.P. 340; 37 W.R. 205, C.A. 1146
Bailey v. Curzon of Kedleston (Marchioness) [1932] 2 K.B. 392; 101 L.J.K.B. 627; 147 L.T. 269; 48 T.L.R. 283, C.A. 691
Baily (A.) & Co. v. Clark, Son & Morland (the Glastonbury case) [1938] A.C. 557; 107 L.J.Ch. 193; 159 L.T. 361; 54 T.L.R. 688; 82 S.J. 492; 55 R.P.C. 253; sub nom. In re Clark, Son & Morland Ld.'s Trade Mark [1938] 2 All E.R. 377, H.L. 554, 557, 558, 561
Bainbrigge v. Blair (1845) 8 Beav. 588; 1 New Pract.Cas. 283; 5 L.T.(o.s.) 454; 9 Jur. 765; 50 E.R. 231; sub nom. Blair v. Bainbrigge, 14 L.J.Ch. 405 . 527–9
Baker v. Adam (1910) 102 L.T. 248; 15 Com.Cas. 227; 11 Asp.M.L.C. 368 . . 143
Baker v. Baker [1950] W.N. 29; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 1) 81, D.C. . . . 98, 104, 107
Baker v. Baker [1954] P. 33; [1953] 3 W.L.R. 857; 117 J.P. 556; 97 S.J. 798; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1199, D.C. 1531, 1532
Baker v. Dalgleish Steam Shipping Co. [1922] 1 K.B. 361; 91 L.J.K.B. 392; 38 T.L.R. 245; 66 S.J. 318, C.A. 803, 804
Baker v. Market Harborough Industrial Co-operative Society, Wallace v. Richards (Leicester) [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1472; 97 S.J. 861, C.A. 581, 582
Balden v. Shorter [1933] 1 Ch. 427; 102 L.J.Ch. 191; 148 L.T. 471; 77 S.J. 138 . 487, 490
Ballantine v. Golding (1784) 1 Cooke's Bankrupt Laws, 8th ed., p. 487 . . . 153
Ballard v. North British Railway, 1923 S.C. 43, H.L. 130
Banco de Bilbao v. Sancha [1938] 2 K.B. 176; 107 L.J.K.B. 681; 159 L.T. 369; 54 T.L.R. 603; 82 S.J. 254; [1938] 2 All E.R. 253, C.A. 157
Bank of Toronto v. St. Lawrence Fire Insurance Co. [1903] A.C. 59, P.C. . . 144
Bank voor Handel en Scheepvaart N.V. v. Slatford [1953] 1 Q.B. 248; [1951] 2 T.L.R. 755; 95 S.J. 546; [1951] 2 All E.R. 779 . . . . . 150, 156
Bank voor Handel en Scheepvaart v. Slatford (No. 2) [1953] 1 Q.B. 279; [1952] 2 T.L.R. 861; 96 S.J. 784; [1952] 2 All E.R. 956; [1952] T.R. 493; 46 R. & I.T. 120; 31 A.T.C. 535; T.C. Leaflet No. 1629, C.A. 89, 97
Banque des Marchands de Moscou (Koupetschesky), In re, Royal Exchange Assurance v. The Liquidator; Wilenkin v. The Liquidator [1952] W.N. 151; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 739; [1952] 1 All E.R. 1269 . . . 146, 156, 1109, 1114
Barclays Bank v. Beck [1952] 2 Q.B. 47; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 595; 96 S.J. 194; [1952] 1 All E.R. 549, C.A. 645, 649
Barcock v. Brighton Corporation [1949] 1 K.B. 339; 65 T.L.R. 90; 93 S.J. 119; [1949] 1 All E.R. 251; 47 L.G.R. 253 . . . . . 197, 199
Barford v. Barford and McLeod [1918] P. 140; 87 L.J.P. 68; 118 L.T. 820; 34 T.L.R. 306; 62 S.J. 439 1407
Barker v. Barker [1950] W.N. 158; 94 S.J. 285; [1950] 1 All E.R. 812, C.A. . . 1533
Barker v. Lea (1823) T. & R. 413; 37 E.R. 1160 579
Barker v. M'Andrew (1865) 18 C.B.(N.S.) 759; 6 New Rep. 227; 34 L.J.C.P. 191; 12 L.T. 459; 11 Jur.(N.S.) 637; 13 W.R. 779; 2 Man.L.C. 205; 144 E.R. 643 1276
Barnes, In re [1939] 1 K.B. 316; 108 L.J.K.B. 232; 160 L.T. 95; 55 T.L.R. 248; 83 S.J. 32; [1938] 4 All E.R. 870, C.A. 243
Barnes v. Jarvis [1953] 1 W.L.R. 649; 117 J.P. 254; 97 S.J. 317; [1953] 1 All E.R. 1061, D.C. 110, 114
Barnett v. Blumka. See In re Gestetner Settlement.
Barnhart v. Greenshields (1853) 9 Moo.P.C. 18; 2 Eq.Rep. 1217; 22 L.T.(o.s.) 178; 14 E.R. 204, P.C. 1089, 1091, 1092
Barnsley District Coking Co. v. East Midlands Gas Board. Unreported decision of Roxburgh J. dated June 27, 1952 317
Barrington v. Kent Rivers Catchment Board, 64 T.L.R. 35; 112 J.P. 85; 92 S.J. 27; [1947] 2 All E.R. 782 325
Bartlett v. Inland Revenue Commissioners [1914] 3 K.B. 686; 84 L.J.K.B. 106; 111 L.T. 852; 7 T.C. 229 . . . . . 799, 801
Batchelor v. Evans [1939] Ch. 1007; 161 L.T. 160; 83 S.J. 639; [1939] 3 All E.R. 606 . . . . . 424, 425, 429
Battan Singh v. Amirchand [1948] A.C. 161; [1948] L.J.R. 827; [1948] 1 All E.R. 152, P.C. 255
Batty, In re, Public Trustee v. Bell [1952] Ch. 280; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 412; 96 S.J. 120; [1952] 1 All E.R. 425 497–500
Batty v. Hill (1863) 8 L.T. 791; 27 J.P. 628; 1 Hem. & M. 264; 2 New Rep. 265; 11 W.R. 745; 71 E.R. 115 487
Bawden's Settlement, In re, Besant v. Board of Governors of London Hospital [1954] 1 W.L.R. 33n.; 98 S.J. 11; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1235 31

PAGE

Beaumont v. Oliveira (1869) L.R. 4 Ch. 309; 38 L.J.Ch. 239; 20 L.T. 53; 33 J.P. 391; 17 W.R. 269, L.JJ. 550
Bebington's Tenancy, In re, Bebington v. Wildman [1921] 1 Ch. 559; 90 L.J.Ch. 269; 124 L.T. 661; 37 T.L.R. 409; 65 S.J. 343 . . . . . 476, 478
Beecham's Settlement, In re, Johnson v. Beecham [1934] Ch. 183; 103 L.J.Ch. 33; 150 L.T. 351 243
Beer v. Beer [1948] P. 10; [1948] L.J.R. 743; 63 T.L.R. 606; 112 J.P. 50; 92 S.J. 12; [1947] 2 All E.R. 711; 46 L.G.R. 47 1535
Bendall v. McWhirter [1952] 2 Q.B. 466; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 1332; 96 S.J. 344; [1952] 1 All E.R. 1307, C.A. 625–7
Benn v. Kamm & Co. [1952] 2 Q.B. 127; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 873; [1952] 1 All E.R. 833, C.A. 391
Bennett v. Bennett [1951] 2 K.B. 572; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 873; 115 J.P. 355; 95 S.J. 286; [1951] 1 All E.R. 1088 101
Bennett v. Bennett [1952] 1 K.B. 249; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 400; [1952] 1 All E.R. 413, C.A. 779, 782, 783, 784
Benson v. Benson [1941] P. 90; 110 L.J.P. 43; 165 L.T. 172; 57 T.L.R. 578; 85 S.J. 274; [1941] 2 All E.R. 335 1334
Beresford, In re (1952) 36 Cr.App.R. 1 1318
Berliner v. T. M. Fairclough & Sons. See T. M. Fairclough & Sons v. Berliner.
Berry, Ex parte. See In re Flack.
Berry v. Berry [1929] 2 K.B. 316; 98 L.J.K.B. 748; 141 L.T. 461; 45 T.L.R. 524 781, 784
Besant v. Board of Governors of London Hospital. See In re Bawden's Settlement.
Best v. Samuel Fox & Co. [1952] A.C. 716; [1952] 2 T.L.R. 246; 96 S.J. 494; [1952] 2 All E.R. 394, H.L. 1047, 1048
Beswick v. Smith (1907) 24 T.L.R. 169, C.A. 69, 71
Betts v. Penge Urban District Council [1942] 2 K.B. 154; 111 L.J.K.B. 565; 167 L.T. 205; 58 T.L.R. 283; 106 J.P. 203; 86 S.J. 313; [1942] 2 All E.R. 61; 40 L.G.R. 199, D.C. 522, 523
Bignell, In re, Bignell v. Chapman [1892] 1 Ch. 59; 61 L.J.Ch. 334; 66 L.T. 36; 40 W.R. 305, C.A. 528
Birch v. Birch [1902] P. 62; 18 T.L.R. 151 611
Birks (Berks) v. Trippet (Tripett) (1666) 2 Keb. 126; 1 Wms. Saund. 28; 1 Sid. 303; 84 E.R. 80 648
Birmingham and District Land Co. v. London and North Western Railway Co. (1888) 40 Ch.D. 268; 60 L.T. 527, C.A. 872
Bishop (E.) & Sons, In re [1900] 2 Ch. 254; 69 L.J.Ch. 513; 82 L.T. 756; 7 Mans. 342 684
Bishopsgate Motor Finance Corporation v. Transport Brakes (Winsor Garage, Third Party) [1949] 1 K.B. 322; [1949] L.J.R. 741; 65 T.L.R. 66; 93 S.J. 71; [1949] 1 All E.R. 37, C.A. 617
Black v. Tidy See In re Hawksley's Settlements.
Blackman v. Railway Executive [1953] 1 W.L.R. 2; 97 S.J. 10; [1953] 1 All E.R. 4 220
Blackmore v. Butler [1954] 2 Q.B. 171; [1954] 3 W.L.R. 62; 98 S.J. 405; [1954] 2 All E.R. 403; 52 L.G.R. 345, C.A. 1323
Blair v. Bainbrigge. See Bainbrigge v. Blair.
Blight v. Hartnoll (1881) 19 Ch.D. 294; 51 L.J.Ch. 162; 45 L.T. 524; 30 W.R. 513 663
Blow, In re, St. Bartholomew's Hospital (Governors) v. Campden [1914] 1 Ch. 233; 83 L.J.Ch. 185; 109 L.T. 913; 30 T.L.R. 117; 58 S.J. 136, C.A. 425
Blundell v. King [1905] 1 K.B. 516; 21 T.L.R. 143; 74 L.J.K.B. 91; 92 L.T. 53; 53 W.R. 412 1479
Blundell-Leigh v. Attenborough [1921] 3 K.B. 235; 90 L.J.K.B. 1005; 125 L.T. 356; 37 T.L.R. 567; 65 S.J. 474, C.A. 1295
Blunt v. Blunt [1943] A.C. 517; 112 L.J.P. 58; 169 L.T. 33; 59 T.L.R. 315; 87 S.J. 220; [1943] 2 All E.R. 76, H.L. 927, 930, 931, 932
Boaler, In re. See In re Vexatious Actions Act, 1896.
Boarland (Inspector of Taxes) v. Madras Electric Supply Corporation (In Liquidation) [1953] 1 W.L.R. 920; 97 S.J. 489; [1953] 2 All E.R. 467; [1953] T.R. 259; 46 R. & I.T. 451; 32 A.T.C. 279; T.C. Leaflet 1668 . . . . 88, 796
Bombay Province v. Bombay Municipal Corporation [1947] A.C. 58; [1947] L.J.R. 380; 62 T.L.R. 643, P.C. 89
Boots Pure Drug Co. Ld.'s Trade Mark, In re [1938] Ch. 54; 106 L.J.Ch. 352; 157 L.T. 225; 53 T.L.R. 1005; 81 S.J. 667; [1937] 4 All E.R. 231; 54 R.P.C. 327, C.A. 555
Borys (Micheal) v. Canadian Pacific Railway Co. [1953] A.C. 217; [1953] 2 W.L.R. 224; 97 S.J. 78; [1953] 1 All E.R. 451, P.C. 1486
Bottomgate Industrial Co-operative Society, In re (1891) 65 L.T. 712; 56 J.P. 216; 40 W.R. 139, D.C. 1094–6
Boulter v. Kent Justices [1897] A.C. 556; 66 L.J.Q.B. 787; 77 L.T. 288; 13 T.L.R. 538; 61 J.P. 532; 46 W.R. 114, H.L. 206
Bourhill v. Young. See Hay (or Bourhill) v. Young.
Bourne & Tant v. Salmon & Gluckstein [1907] 1 Ch. 616; 76 L.J.Ch. 374; 96 L.T. 629; 71 J.P. 329, C.A. 1146

PAGE

Bowater v. Rowley Regis Borough Council [1944] K.B. 476; 113 L.J.K.B. 427; 170 L.T. 314; 60 T.L.R. 356; 108 J.P. 163; [1944] 1 All E.R. 465, C.A. . 503
Bowerbank v. Monteiro (1813) 4 Taunt. 844 . . . . . 1346, 1350
Bowes v. Shand (1877) 2 App.Cas. 455; 46 L.J.Q.B. 561; 36 L.T. 857; 25 W.R. 730; 5 Asp.M.L.C. 461, H.L. 494
Bowman v. Bowman [1949] P. 353; [1949] L.J.R. 1416; 65 T.L.R. 461; 93 S.J. 464; [1949] 2 All E.R. 127, C.A. 995
Bowring-Hanbury's Trustee v. Bowring-Hanbury [1943] Ch. 104; 112 L.J.Ch. 37; 168 L.T. 72; 59 T.L.R. 121; 87 S.J. 39; [1943] 1 All E.R. 48, C.A. 636, 642, 643
Boyes, In re, Boyes v. Carritt (1884) 26 Ch.D. 531; 53 L.J.Ch. 654; 50 L.T. 581; 32 W.R. 630 . . . . . 763, 768
Bradberry, In re, National Provincial Bank v. Bradberry [1943] Ch. 35; 112 L.J. Ch. 49; 167 L.T. 396; 59 T.L.R. 131; 86 S.J. 349; [1942] 2 All E.R. 629 .. 243
Braddock v. Tillotsons Newspapers [1950] K.B. 47; 65 T.L.R. 553; 93 S.J. 464; [1949] 2 All E.R. 306, C.A. 1492
Bradford Corporation v. Meyers [1916] 1 A.C. 242; 85 L.J.K.B. 146; 114 L.T. 83; 32 T.L.R. 113; 80 J.P. 121; 60 S.J. 74; 14 L.G.R. 130, H.L. . . . 417
Bradley-Hole v. Cusen [1953] 1 Q.B. 300; [1953] 2 W.L.R. 193; 97 S.J. 45; sub nom. Hole v. Cuzen [1953] 1 All E.R. 87, C.A. 626
Bradshaw, In the Goods of (1887) 13 P.D. 18; 57 L.J.P. 12; 58 L.T. 58; 52 J.P. 56; 36 W.R. 848 . . . . . 610, 611
Brady v. McDonald [1931] N.Ir. 345 689
Braithwaite v. Foreign Hardwood Co. [1905] 2 K.B. 543; 74 L.J.K.B. 688; 92 L.T. 637; 21 T.L.R. 413; 10 Asp.M.L.C. 52; 10 Com.Cas. 189, C.A. 944
Bramford's Road Transport v. Evans [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1385; 97 S.J. 796; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1308; [1953] T.R. 341; 46 R. & I.T. 739; 32 A.T.C. 386; T.C. Leaflet No. 1672 . . . . . 44, 796
Branca v. Cobarro [1947] K.B. 854; [1948] L.J.R. 43; 177 L.T. 332; 63 T.L.R. 408; [1947] 2 All E.R. 101, C.A. 317
Breay v. Royal British Nurses Association [1897] 2 Ch. 272; 66 L.J.Ch. 587; 76 L.T. 735; 13 T.L.R. 467; 46 W.R. 86 1009
Brighty v. Norton (1862) 32 L.J.Q.B. 38; 7 L.T. 422; 3 B. & S. 305; 1 New Rep. 93; 9 Jur.(N.S.) 495; 11 W.R. 167; 122 E.R. 116 648
British Actors Film Co. v. Glover [1918] 1 K.B. 299; 87 L.J.K.B. 689; 118 L.T. 626; 34 T.L.R. 162; 62 S.J. 192 . . . . . 1314, 1316
British Insulated and Helsby Cables v. Atherton [1926] A.C. 205; 95 L.J.K.B. 336; 134 L.T. 289; 42 T.L.R. 187, H.L. 1061, 1505
British Mexican Petroleum Co. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners (1932) 16 T.C. 570 . . . . . 1204, 1210
British Red Cross Balkan Fund, In re, British Red Cross Society v. Johnson [1914] 2 Ch. 419; 84 L.J.Ch. 79; 111 L.T. 1069; 30 T.L.R. 662; 58 S.J. 755 . . 17
British Reinforced Concrete Engineering Co. v. Schelff [1921] 2 Ch. 563; 91 L.J.Ch. 114; 126 L.T. 230 . . . . . 816, 820
British School of Egyptian Archaeology, In re, Murray v. Public Trustee [1954] 1 W.L.R. 546; 98 S.J. 216; [1954] 1 All E.R. 887 . . . . . 715, 720
Broadbent v. Broadbent (1927) 43 T.L.R. 186, D.C. 1475
Brock v. Wollams [1949] 2 K.B. 388; 93 S.J. 319; [1949] 1 All E.R. 715, C.A. 630, 633
Brock (H. N.) & Co., In re [1910] 1 Ch. 130, 137; 79 L.J.Ch. 211; 101 L.T. 587; sub nom. In re Trade Marks Nos. 224, 722, 230, 405 and 230, 407; 26 T.L.R. 100; 26 R.P.C. 850, C.A. 118
Brockbank, In re, Ward v. Bates [1948] Ch. 206; [1948] L.J.R. 952; 92 S.J. 141; [1948] 1 All E.R. 287 8
Brockman, Ex parte. See R. v. Torquay Licensing Justices.
Bromley v. Tryon [1952] A.C. 265; [1951] 2 All E.R. 1058, H.L. 960, 961
Broome v. Speak [1903] 1 Ch. 586; 72 L.J.Ch. 215; 88 L.T. 580; 19 T.L.R. 187; 47 S.J. 230; 51 W.R. 258; 10 Mans. 38, C.A. 403
Brown v. Brash [1948] 2 K.B. 247; [1948] L.J.R. 1544; 64 T.L.R. 266; 92 S.J. 376; [1948] 1 All E.R. 922, C.A. 673, 675
Brown v. Dean [1910] A.C. 373; 79 L.J.K.B. 690; 102 L.T. 661; sub nom. Dean v. Brown, 54 S.J. 442, H.L. 1490, 1492, 1494
Brown (John M.) v. Bestwick [1951] 1 K.B. 21; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 2) 248; 94 S.J. 503; [1950] 2 All E.R. 338, C.A. 673
Brown's Estate, In re, Brown v. Brown [1893] 2 Ch. 300; 62 L.J.Ch. 695; 69 L.T. 12; 41 W.R. 440; 3 R. 463 . . . . . 645, 648, 649
Bryant v. Flight (1839) 5 M. & W. 114; 2 Horn. & H. 84; 3 Jur. 681; 151 E.R. 49 403
Bryce, In the Goods of (1839) 2 Curt. 325; 163 E.R. 427 425
Brydon v. Samuel. See In re Ogden.
Buchler v. Buchler [1947] P. 25; [1947] L.J.R. 820; 176 L.T. 341; 63 T.L.R. 100; 111 J.P. 179; 91 S.J. 99; [1947] 1 All E.R. 319, C.A. 902
Buckland v. Bedingfield. See In re Cottrell.
Buckland v. Guildford Gas, Light and Coke Co. [1949] 1 K.B. 410; 113 J.P. 44; 93 S.J. 41; [1948] 2 All E.R. 1086; 47 L.G.R. 75 . . . . . 593, 594, 595
Budge v. Hicks [1951] 2 K.B. 335; 95 S.J. 501; [1951] 2 All E.R. 245; sub nom. Hicks v. Budge [1951] 2 T.L.R. 349, C.A. 222, 223, 226

PAGE
Buffum v. Harris (1858) 5 Rhode Is. 243, 250 1407
Burchell & Hickisson (1880), 50 L.J.C.P. 101 . . . . . 1252, 1253, 1261
Burmester v. Burmester [1913] P. 76; 86 L.J.P. 54; 108 L.T. 272; 29 T.L.R. 323; 57 S.J. 392 538
Burns v. Campbell [1952] 1 K.B. 15; [1951] T.L.R. 1007; 95 S.J. 743; [1951] 2 All E.R. 965, C.A. 1445, 1447
Burrows v. Jemino (1726), 2 Stra. 733; Cas. temp. King. 69; Dick. 48; Mos. 1; 2 Eq.Cas.Abr. 524, pl. 7; 93 E.R. 815, L.C. 153
Burton v. English (1883) 12 Q.B.D. 218; 53 L.J.Q.B. 133; 49 L.T. 768; 32 W.R. 655; 5 Asp.M.L.C. 187, C.A. 494
Butt v. Kelson [1952] Ch. 197; sub nom. In re Butt, Butt v. Kelson [1952] 1 T.L.R. 214; [1952] 1 All E.R. 167, C.A. 5, 7, 8
Buzzacott, In re, Munday v. King's College Hospital [1953] 1 Ch. 28; [1952] W.N. 539; [1952] 2 T.L.R. 884; 96 S.J. 850; [1952] 2 All E.R. 1011 24

Cackett v. Cackett [1950] P. 253; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 1) 723; 94 S.J. 256; [1950] 1 All E.R. 677 1170
Cakebread v. Hopping Bros. (Whetstone) [1947] K.B. 641; [1948] L.J.R. 361; 177 L.T. 92; 63 T.L.R. 277; 91 S.J. 219; [1947] 1 All E.R. 389, C.A. .197, 200, 454
Calye's Case (1584) 8 Co.Rep. 32a; 77 E.R. 520; sub nom. Windham & Mead's Case 4 Leon 96 1102
Cammell Laird & Co. v. Manganese Bronze & Brass Co. [1934] A.C. 402; 103 L.J. K.B. 289; 151 L.T. 142; 50 T.L.R. 350; 39 Com.Cas. 194, H.L. 974
Canadian Eagle Oil Co. v. The King [1946] A.C. 119; 114 L.J.K.B. 451; 173 L.T. 234; 61 T.L.R. 577; [1945] 2 All E.R. 499; 27 T.C. 206, H.L. 299
Canadian Pacific Railway v. The King [1931] A.C. 414; 100 L.J.P.C. 129; 145 L.T. 129, P.C. 862, 879, 880, 881, 882, 883, 884, 885
Canadian Performing Right Society v. Ford Hotel [1935] 2 D.L.R. 391 1486
Cape Brandy Syndicate v. Inland Revenue Commissioners [1921] 1 K.B. 64; 37 T.L.R. 33; 12 T.C. 358 . . . . . 299, 1061
Capital and Counties Bank v. Henty (1882) 7 App.Cas. 741; 52 L.J.Q.B. 232; 47 L.T. 662; 47 J.P. 214; 31 W.R. 157, H.L. 67, 69, 70, 71, 73
Carew, In re, Channer v. Francklyn [1939] Ch. 794; 108 L.J.Ch. 291; 161 L.T. 139; 55 T.L.R. 875; 83 S.J. 545; [1939] 3 All E.R. 200 243
Carltona v. Commissioners of Works [1943] 2 All E.R. 560 1155–7
Carr v. Mercantile Produce Co. [1949] 2 K.B. 601; [1949] L.J.R. 1597; 113 J.P. 488; 93 S.J. 588; [1949] 2 All E.R. 531; 47 L.G.R. 642, D.C. 454
Carroll v. Andrew Barclay & Sons [1948] A.C. 477; [1948] L.J.R. 1490; 64 T.L.R. 384; 92 S.J. 555; [1948] 2 All E.R. 386; 1948 S.C. 100; 1948 S.L.T. 464, H.L. 391
Carruthers v. MacGregor, 1927 S.C. 816 133
Carter v. Mace 113 J.P. 527; [1949] 2 All E.R. 714, D.C. 1364–7
Cartwright v. Cartwright and Anderson (1878) 26 W.R. 684 1407
Cashill v. Wright (1856) 6 E. & B. 891; 27 L.T.(o.s.) 283; 20 J.P. 678; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1072; 4 W.R. 709; 119 E.R. 1096 1104
Cassidy v. Ministry of Health [1951] 2 K.B. 343; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 539; 95 S.J. 253; [1951] 1 All E.R. 574, C.A. 128, 130, 132, 133, 412, 418, 1384
Castelli v. Beddington (1852) 1 E. & B. 66 . . . . . 143, 144
Castle, In re, Nesbitt v. Baugh [1916] W.N. 195 . . . . . 242, 243, 246
Caswell v. Powell Duffryn Associated Collieries [1940] A.C. 152; 108 L.J.K.B. 779; 161 L.T. 374; 55 T.L.R. 1004; 83 S.J. 976; [1939] 3 All E.R. 722, H.L. . 130, 134
Cave v. Coleman (1828) 3 Man. & Ry.K.B. 2; 7 L.J.(o.s.)K.B. 25 618
Cavendish-Bentinck v. Fenn (1887) 12 App.Cas. 652, H.L. 758
Central London Property Trust v. High Trees House [1947] K.B. 130; [1947] L.J.R. 77; 175 L.T. 333; 62 T.L.R. 559 875
Chandler v. Emerton and Others, Justices [1940] 2 K.B. 261; 109 L.J.K.B. 663; 163 L.T. 80; 56 T.L.R. 790; 104 J.P. 342; 38 L.G.R. 329, D.C. 206
Channer v. Francklyn. See In re Carew.
Chapman, Ex parte. See R. v. Rotherham Licensing Justices.
Chapman v. Chapman [1954] 2 W.L.R. 723; 98 S.J. 246; [1954] 1 All E.R. 798; [1954] T.R. 93; 47 R. & I.T. 310, H.L. 1056, 1058, 1451, 1453
Chapman v. Chapman, unreported, April 4, 1951 104
Chapman's Settlement Trusts, In re, Chapman v. Chapman [1953] Ch. 218; [1953] 2 W.L.R. 94; 97 S.J. 29; [1953] 1 All E.R. 103; 46 R. & I.T. 64, C.A. . 565, 566, 567
Charlesby v. Charlesby (1947) 176 L.T. 532, C.A. 994, 996, 997
Charterland Goldfields, In re (1909) 26 T.L.R. 132 684
Chatterton, Ex parte. See In re Van Laun.
Chell Engineering v. Unit Tool and Engineering Co. [1950] W.N. 146; [1950] 1 All E.R. 378, C.A. 809, 811, 812, 814, 815
Chesterman's Trusts, In re, Mott v. Browning [1923] 2 Ch. 466, C.A. 157
Chilton v. Chilton [1952] P. 196; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 1316; 116 J.P. 313; 96 S.J. 378; [1952] 1 All E.R. 1322, D.C. 1533

PAGE

Chittenden, Ex parte. See R. v. Bath Licensing Justices.
Cholmeley's (Warden, etc., of Sir Roger) School at Highgate v. Sewell [1893] 2 Q.B. 254; 62 L.J.Q.B. 476; 69 L.T. 118; 57 J.P. 680; 37 S.J. 602; sub nom. Highgate School v. Sewell, 41 W.R. 637; 5 R. 501, D.C. . . 311
Christmas v. General Cleaning Contractors [1952] 1 K.B. 141; [1951] 2 T.L.R. 1218; 95 S.J. 802; [1952] 1 All E.R. 39, C.A. affirmed [1953] A.C. 180; [1953] 2 W.L.R. 6; 97 S.J. 7; [1952] 2 All E.R. 1110, H.L. . 721, 722, 725–7
Churchill v. Norris, Maidment v. Norris (1938) 158 L.T. 255; 82 S.J. 114; 31 Cox C.C. 1 1366
Cilia v. Cuschieri (1948) 33 Malta L.R., P. 1 848
Cillis v. Oakley (1914) 31 O.L.R. 603 1486
Civil Service and General Store, In re (1887) 57 L.J.Ch. 119; 58 L.T. 220; 4 T.L.R. 168 . . . . . 540, 542
Civil Service Co-operative Society v. General Steam Navigation Co. [1903] 2 K.B. 756; 72 L.J.K.B. 933; 89 L.T. 429; 20 T.L.R. 10; 47 S.J. 877; 52 W.R. 181; 9 Asp.M.L.C. 477, C.A. 1225
Clark, Son & Morland Ld.'s Trade Mark, In re. See A. Baily & Co. v. Clark, Son & Morland.
Clavering v. Ellison (1859) 7 H.L.Cas. 707; 29 L.J.Ch. 761; 11 E.R. 282, H.L. . 959
Clayton v. Ramsden [1943] A.C. 320; 112 L.J.Ch. 22; 168 L.T. 113; 59 T.L.R. 75; 86 S.J. 384; [1943] 1 All E.R. 16, H.L. 955, 959, 961
Clemence v. Clark (1880) 2 Hudson's Building Contracts (4th ed.) 54 . . . 1497
Coates v. Rawtenstall Borough Council, 157 L.T. 415; 81 S.J. 627; 101 J.P. 483; [1937] 3 All E.R. 602; 35 L.G.R. 614, C.A. 1253
Coats (J. & P.) Ld.'s Application In re, 155 L.T. 127; 80 S.J. 611; [1936] 2 All E.R. 975; 53 R.P.C. 355, C.A. 555
Cobb v. Cobb [1900] P. 145; 69 L.J.P. 52; 82 L.T. 626; 64 J.P. 200, D.C. . . 1027
Cockburn v. Edwards (1881) 18 Ch.D. 449; 51 L.J.Ch. 46; 45 L.T. 500; 30 W.R. 446, C.A. 1223, 1224
Cockshott v. Public Trustee. See In re Scarisbrick.
Coelenbier v. De Sommery. See In re De Sommery.
Cohn, In re [1945] 1 Ch. 5; 114 L.J.Ch. 97; 171 L.T. 377; sub nom. In re Cohen, 88 S.J. 430 147
Coleshill v. Manchester Corporation [1928] 1 K.B. 776; 97 L.J.K.B. 229; 138 L.T. 537; 44 T.L.R. 258; 92 J.P. 37; 26 L.G.R. 124, C.A. 59
Coller's Deed Trusts, In re, Coller v. Coller [1939] Ch. 277; 106 L.J.Ch. 326; 157 L.T. 84; 53 T.L.R. 859; 81 S.J. 550; [1937] 3 All E.R. 292, C.A. 1375, 1377, 1378, 1381
Collins v. Hertfordshire County Council [1947] K.B. 598; [1947] L.J.R. 789; 176 L.T. 456; 63 T.L.R. 317; 111 J.P. 272; [1947] 1 All E.R. 633. . . 418, 1384
Collins (Inspector of Taxes) v. Firth-Brearley Stainless Steel Syndicate (1925) 133 L.T. 616; 69 S.J. 695; 9 T.C. 520, C.A. 160
Collins (Edward) & Sons v. Inland Revenue Commissioners (1924) 12 T.C. 773 . 160
Colquhoun v. Brooks (1889) 14 App.Cas. 493, H.L. 150
Coltness Iron Co. v. Black (1881) 6 App.Cas. 315; 51 L.J.Q.B. 626; 45 L.T. 145; 46 J.P. 20; 29 W.R. 717; 1 T.C. 287, H.L. . . 1060, 1509, 1510, 1516, 1517
Combe v. Combe [1951] 2 K.B. 215; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 811; 95 S.J. 317; [1951] 1 All E.R. 767, C.A. 783
Commissioner of Stamps v. Hope [1891] A.C. 476; 60 L.J.P.C. 44; 65 L.T. 268, P.C. 145
Compania de Navigacion Zita S.A. v. Louis Dreyfus et Cie [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1399; 97 S.J. 815; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1359 . . . . . 482, 485
Compania Panamena Europea Navegacion v. Leyland (Frederick) & Co. [1947] A.C. 428; [1947] L.J.R. 716; 176 L.T. 524, H.L. 975
Concha v. Murrieta (1889) 40 Ch.D. 543; 60 L.T. 798, C.A. 147
Congreve v. Inland Revenue Commissioners [1948] W.N. 197; [1948] L.J.R. 1229; 92 S.J. 407; [1948] 1 All E.R. 948; 41 R. & I.T. 319; 30 T.C. 163, H.L.; affirming [1947] 1 All E.R. 168, C.A.; reversing [1946] 2 All E.R. 170 1265, 1268, 1461, 1466, 1467
Conway v. George Wimpey & Co. [1951] W.N. 27; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 215; 94 S.J. 823; [1951] 1 All E.R. 56, C.A. 450, 451
Conway v. Wingate [1952] W.N. 171; 96 S.J. 245; [1952] 1 All E.R. 782; [1952] T.R. 145; 45 R. & I.T. 319; 31 A.T.C. 148, C.A. 1340
Cook v. Ward (1830) 4 M. & P. 99; 6 Bing. 409; 8 L.J.(o.s.)C.P. 126; 130 E.R. 1338 . . . . . 276, 277
Cooke v. Midland Great Western Railway of Ireland [1909] A.C. 229; 78 L.J.P.C. 76; 100 L.T. 626; 25 T.L.R. 375; 53 S.J. 319, H.L. 1251
Coomber v. Berkshire Justices (1883) 9 App.Cas. 61; 2 T.C. 1, H.L. . . 89, 93, 97
Cooper, In re (1939) 160 L.T. 453 519
Cooper-King v. Cooper-King [1900] P. 65; 69 L.J.P. 33 1407
Cornish v. Stubbs (1870) L.R. 5 C.P. 334; 39 L.J.C.P. 202; 22 L.T. 21; 18 W.R. 547 881
Corsellis, In re, Lawton v. Elwes (1887) 34 Ch.D. 675; 56 L.J.Ch. 294; 56 L.T. 411; 3 T.L.R. 355; 51 J.P. 597; 35 W.R. 309, C.A. 528

PAGE

Cottrell, In re, Buckland v. Bedingfield [1910] 1 Ch. 402; 79 L.J.Ch. 189; 102 L.T. 157 243
Couchman, In re, Couchman v. Eccles [1952] Ch. 391; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 437; 96 S.J. 104; [1952] 1 All E.R. 439 . . . . . 81, 82
Couchman v. Hill [1947] K.B. 554; [1948] L.J.R. 295; 176 L.T. 278; 63 T.L.R. 81; [1947] 1 All E.R. 103, C.A. 617
Covell, In re (1889) 15 P.D. 8; 59 L.J.P. 7; 61 L.T. 620; 38 W.R. 79 . . . 610
Cow v. Casey [1949] 1 K.B. 474; [1949] L.J.R. 565; 65 T.L.R. 84; 93 S.J. 102; [1949] 1 All E.R. 197, C.A. 630
Cowley (Earl) v. Inland Revenue Commissioners [1899] A.C. 198; 68 L.J.Q.B. 435; 80 L.T. 361; 15 T.L.R. 270; 63 J.P. 436; 43 S.J. 348; 47 W.R. 525, H.L. 1186, 1189
Cox v. Hakes (1890) 15 App.Cas. 506; 60 L.J.Q.B. 89; 63 L.T. 392; 6 T.L.R. 465; 54 J.P. 820; 39 W.R. 145; 17 Cox C.C. 158, H.L. 317
Cox v. Stinton [1951] 2 K.B. 1021; [1951] 2 T.L.R. 728; 115 J.P. 490; [1951] 2 All E.R. 637, D.C. 1000, 1002, 1003
Cradock v. Piper (1850) 19 L.J.Ch. 107; 1 Mac. & G. 664; 17 Sim. 41; 1 H. & Tw. 617; 15 L.T.(o.s.) 61; 14 Jur. 97; 41 E.R. 1422 529
Crawter v. Marvin. See In re Marvin.
Crewkerne United Breweries v. Slade. See In re Slade.
Crosfield (Joseph) & Sons, In re (the Perfection Soap case) [1910] 1 Ch. 130; 79 L.J.Ch. 211; 101 L.T. 587; 26 T.L.R. 100; 26 R.P.C. 837, C.A. . . 562
Croston v. Vaughan [1938] 1 K.B. 540; 107 L.J.K.B. 182; 158 L.T. 221; 54 T.L.R. 54; 102 J.P. 11; 81 S.J. 882; [1937] 4 All E.R. 249; 36 L.G.R. 1, C.A. 457, 458
Crump, In re, Ex parte Crump (1891) 64 L.T. 799; 7 T.L.R. 556; 8 Morr. 174, D.C. 1191, 1198
Crutchfield v. Crutchfield [1948] L.J.R. 99; 62 T.L.R. 661; [1946] 2 All E.R. 730n. 1334
Cummings v. Richard Thomas and Baldwins [1953] 2 Q.B. 95; [1953] 2 W.L.R. 1104; 97 S.J. 370; [1953] 2 All E.R. 43, C.A. 452, 454
Cunard's Trustees v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 174 L.T. 133; [1946] 1 All E.R. 159; 27 Tax Cas. 122, C.A. 663
Cunliffe v. Goodman [1950] 2 K.B. 237; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 2) 109; 94 S.J. 179; [1950] 1 All E.R. 720, C.A. 223, 673
Cuttress v. Scaffolding (Great Britain) and Huntingdon Building and Development Co. [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1311; 97 S.J. 741; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1075, C.A. . . 593
Cyclists' Touring Club v. Hopkinson [1910] 1 Ch. 179; 79 L.J.Ch. 82; 101 L.T. 848; 26 T.L.R. 117; 54 S.J. 134; 17 Mans. 11 1009

Daborn v. Bath Tramways Motor Co. and Trevor Smithey [1946] 2 All E.R. 333, C.A. 835, 838
Dagnino v. Bellotti (1886) 11 App.Cas. 604; 55 L.T. 497, P.C. 1054
Dale v. Inland Revenue Commissioners [1954] A.C. 11; [1953] 3 W.L.R. 448; 97 S.J. 538; [1953] 2 All E.R. 671; 46 R. & I.T. 513, H.L. . . . 527, 528
Dallow v. Codd. See In re Macadam.
Daniels v. Davison (1809) 16 Ves.J. 249; 33 E.R. 978, L.C. 1091
Daniels v. Trefusis [1914] 1 Ch. 788; 83 L.J.Ch. 579; 109 L.T. 922; 58 S.J. 271 . 638
Davies v. Owen (Thomas) & Co. [1919] 2 K.B. 39; 88 L.J.K.B. 887; 121 L.T. 156; 83 J.P. 193; 17 L.G.R. 407 . . . . . 390, 391
Davies v. Powell Duffryn Associated Collieries (No. 2) [1942] A.C. 601; 111 L.J. K.B. 418; 167 L.T. 74; 58 T.L.R. 240; 86 S.J. 294; [1942] 1 All E.R. 657, H.L. 803, 804, 1306
Davies v. Swan Motor Co. (Swansea) [1949] 2 K.B. 291; 65 T.L.R. 278; [1949] 1 All E.R. 620, C.A. 358
Deakin, In re, Starkey v. Eyres [1894] 3 Ch. 565; 63 L.J.Ch. 779; 71 L.T. 838; 43 W.R. 70; 8 R. 702 . . . . . 666, 667
Dean v. Prince [1953] Ch. 590; [1953] 3 W.L.R. 271; 97 S.J. 490; [1953] 2 All E.R. 636 971
De Beeche v. South American Stores and Chilian Stores [1935] A.C. 148; 104 L.J.K.B. 101; 152 L.T. 309; 51 T.L.R. 189; 40 Com.Cas. 157, H.L. . . 147
Debtor, In re a, Ex parte The Debtor v. Scott and the Official Receiver [1954] 1 W.L.R. 393; 98 S.J. 127; [1954] 1 All E.R. 454, D.C. . 1191, 1194, 1195
Debtors (669 of 1926), In re [1927] 1 Ch. 19; 96 L.J.Ch. 33; 136 L.T. 182, C.A. 1191, 1196, 1197
De Lassalle v. Guildford [1901] 2 K.B. 215; 70 L.J.K.B. 533; 84 L.T. 549; 17 T.L.R. 384; 49 W.R. 467, C.A. 619
Denman v. Brise [1949] 1 K.B. 22; [1948] L.J.R. 1388; 64 T.L.R. 335; 92 S.J. 349; [1948] 2 All E.R. 141, C.A. 673
Dennis v. Tame [1954] 1 W.L.R. 1338n.; 118 J.P. 358; 52 L.G.R. 329 1335, 1337
De Sommery, In re, Coelenbier v. De Sommery [1912] 2 Ch. 622; 82 L.J.Ch. 17; 107 L.T. 253; 57 S.J. 78 671
Deutsche Bank und Disconto Gesellschaft v. Banque des Marchands de Moscou (Koupetschesky) (unreported, December 14, 1931) 1109, 1114

Page

de Walden (Lord Howard) v. Inland Revenue Commissioners [1942] 1 K.B. 389; [1942] 1 All E.R. 287; 25 T.C. 121 1463
Digby v. General Accident Fire and Life Assurance Corporation [1940] 1 K.B. 449; 56 T.L.R. 394; [1940] 1 All E.R. 364; varied C.A. [1940] 2 K.B. 206, 56 T.L.R. 839; [1940] 3 All E.R. 190; revd. H.L. [1943] A.C. 121; 58 T.L.R. 375; [1942] 2 All E.R. 568 . . . . . 947, 954
Diplock, In re. See Ministry of Health v. Simpson.
Direct Spanish Telegraph Co. v. Shepherd (1884) 18 Q.B.D. 202; 56 L.J.Q.B. 420; 51 L.T. 124; 48 J.P. 550; 32 W.R. 717, D.C. 1146
Director of Public Prosecutions, Ex parte. See R. v. Middlesex Quarter Sessions
Director of Public Prosecutions, Ex parte. See R. v. Norfolk Justices.
Director of Public Prosecutions v. Rogers [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1017; 97 S.J. 544; [1953] 2 All E.R. 644, C.C.A. 439
Dixon (C. W.), In re [1947] Ch. 251; [1947] L.J.R. 788; 117 L.T. 227; 63 T.L.R. 155; 91 S.J. 84; [1947] 1 All E.R. 279 759
Doe d. Armstrong v. Wilkinson (1840) 12 A. & E. 743; Arn. & H. 39; 4 Per. & Dav. 323; 5 J.P. 45; 113 E.R. 995 479
Doe d. Beadon v. Pyke (1816) 5 M. & S. 146; 105 E.R. 1005 . . . . . 680, 682
Doe d. Cox (1803) 4 Esp. 185; 170 E.R. 685 479
Doe d. Rodd v. Archer (1811) 14 East 245; 104 E.R. 595 . . . . . 478, 479
Dominion Students' Hall Trusts, In re [1947] Ch. 183; [1947] L.J.R. 871; 176 L.T. 224; 63 T.L.R. 90; 91 S.J. 100 317
Donoghue v. Stevenson [1932] A.C. 562; 101 L.J.P.C. 119; 147 L.T. 281; 48 T.L.R. 494; 76 S.J. 396; 37 Com.Cas. 350, H.L. . . . 592, 594, 595, 596, 1488
Dow v. Cassaigne. See In re Allan.
Dowell v. Dowell [1952] W.N. 296; 116 J.P. 350; 96 S.J. 362; [1952] 2 All E.R. 141, D.C. 446, 444, 742
Downshire Settled Estates, In re, Marquess of Downshire v. Royal Bank of Scotland [1953] Ch. 218; [1953] 2 W.L.R. 94; 97 S.J. 29; [1953] 1 All E.R. 103; 46 R. & I.T. 64, C.A. 565-9, 1451, 1455, 1455, 1456
Drake v. Bedfordshire County Council [1944] 1 K.B. 620; 113 L.J.K.B. 328; 170 L.T. 351; 108 J.P. 237; 60 T.L.R. 304; 88 S.J. 289; 42 L.G.R. 188; [1944] 1 All E.R. 633 1384
Draper v. Trist [1939] 3 All E.R. 513; 56 R.P.C. 225, C.A. 487
Drew & Co. v. Josolyne (1887) 18 Q.B.D. 590; 56 L.J.Q.B. 490; 57 L.T. 5; 3 T.L.R. 482; 35 W.R. 570, C.A. 179, 187, 188, 189
Drive Yourself Hire Co. (London) v. Strutt [1953] 3 W.L.R. 1111; 97 S.J. 874; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1475, C.A. 317
Drummond v. Collins [1915] A.C. 1011; 84 L.J.K.B. 1690; 113 L.T. 665; 31 T.L.R. 482; 59 S.J. 577; 6 Tax Cas. 525, H.L. 663
Du Bost v. Beresford (1810) 2 Camp. 511; 170 E.R. 1235 . . . . . 276, 277
Du Cros' Application, Registrar of Trade Marks v. Du Cros. See Trade Marks Registrar v. W. & G. du Cros.
Duffield v. Duffield [1949] W.N. 159; 113 J.P. 308; 93 S.J. 252; [1949] 1 All E.R. 1105; 47 L.G.R. 315, D.C. 1476
Duffin v. Markham (1918) 88 L.J.K.B. 581; 119 L.T. 148; 82 J.P. 281; 16 L.G.R. 807; 26 Cox C.C. 308 . . . . . 832, 833, 834
Dugdale v. The Queen (1853) 1 E. & B. 435; Dears C.C. 64; 22 L.J.M.C. 50; 17 J.P. 182; 17 Jur. 546; 118 E.R. 499 439
Dunn v. Fidoe [1950] W.N. 419; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 2) 611; 94 S.J. 579; [1950] 2 All E.R. 685; 156 E.G. 128 . . . . . 1321, 1323, 1325

E. T., In the Estate of. See In re Taylor.
Eccleshill Local Board, In re (1879) 13 Ch.D. 365; 49 L.J.Ch. 214; 28 W.R. 536 43
Edwards v. National Coal Board [1949] 1 K.B. 704; 65 T.L.R. 430; 93 S.J. 337; [1949] 1 All E.R. 743, C.A. 269, 695, 699
Edwards v. Railway Executive [1952] A.C. 737; [1952] 2 T.L.R. 287; 96 S.J. 493; [1952] 2 All E.R. 430, H.L. 593
Edwards-Taylor, In the Goods of. See In re Taylor.
El Condado, The (1939) 63 Ll.L.Rep. 330 156
Ellis, In re, Nettleton v. Crimmins [1935] Ch. 193; 104 L.J.Ch. 53; 152 L.T. 370 243
Ellis v. M'Henry (1871) L.R. 6 C.P. 228; 40 L.J.C.P. 109; 23 L.T. 861; 19 W.R. 503 153
Ellwood, In re [1927] 1 Ch. 455; sub nom. In re Ellwood, Ex parte River Dee Drainage Board v. Hooson, 96 L.J.Ch. 170; 136 L.T. 696; [1927] B. & C.R. 53, D.C. 1146
Employers' Liability Assurance Corporation v. Sedgwick Collins & Co. [1927] A.C. 95; 95 L.J.K.B. 1015; 42 T.L.R. 749; sub nom. Sedgwick Collins & Co. v. Rossia Insurance Co. of Petrograd, 136 L.T. 72, H.L. 156
Engall's Agreement, In re [1953] 1 W.L.R. 977; 97 S.J. 506; [1953] 2 All E.R. 503 789
English and Scottish Mercantile Investment Co. v. Brunton [1892] 2 Q.B. 700; 62 L.J.Q.B. 136; 67 L.T. 406; 8 T.L.R. 772; 41 W.R. 133; 4 R. 58, C.A. . 144

PAGE
English, Scottish and Australian Bank v. Inland Revenue Commissioners [1932] A.C. 238; 101 L.J.K.B. 193; 146 L.T. 330; 48 T.L.R. 170 145
Equitable Trust Co. of New York v. Dawson Partners (1927) 27 Ll.L.Rep. 49 . 964, 983
Errington v. Errington [1952] 1 K.B. 290; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 231; 96 S.J. 119; [1952] 1 All E.R. 149, C.A. 626, 627
Evans v. Evans [1953] P. 41; [1953] 1 W.L.R. 127; 97 S.J. 26; [1953] 1 All E.R. 70, C.A. 467
Evans v. Horner [1925] Ch. 177; 94 L.J.Ch. 220; 132 L.T. 730; 69 S.J. 161 . 1, 4
Everitt v. Everitt [1949] P. 374; 113 J.P. 279; 93 S.J. 286; [1949] 1 All E.R. 908; 47 L.G.R. 377, C.A. 1530, 1532–34
Excelsior Wire Rope Co. v. Callan [1930] A.C. 404; 99 L.J.K.B. 380; 142 L.T. 531; 94 J.P. 174; 35 Com.Cas. 300; 28 L.G.R. 543, H.L. 593, 594
Exchange Telegraph Co. v. Gregory & Co. [1896] 1 Q.B. 147; 65 L.J.Q.B. 262; 74 L.T. 83; 12 T.L.R. 18; 60 J.P. 52, C.A. 1085, 1088

Fairclough v. Whipp [1951] W.N. 528; [1951] 2 T.L.R. 909; 115 J.P. 612; 95 S.J. 699; [1951] 2 All E.R. 834; 35 Cr.App.R. 138; 49 L.G.R. 836, D.C. . . . 439
Fairclough (T. M.) & Sons v. Berliner [1931] 1 Ch. 60; 100 L.J.Ch. 29; 144 L.T. 175; 74 S.J. 755; sub nom. Berliner v. T. M. Fairclough & Sons (1930) 47 T.L.R. 4; 74 S.J. 703 480
Falk (Lewis) v. Jacobwitz [1944] Ch. 64; 113 L.J.Ch. 136; 170 L.T. 262; 60 T.L.R. 101; 61 R.P.C. 116 912
Falkiner, In re, Mead v. Smith [1924] 1 Ch. 88; 93 L.J.Ch. 76; 130 L.T. 405; 68 S.J. 101 . . . . . 763, 766, 767, 768
Fanshawe v. Fanshawe [1927] P. 238; 96 L.J.P. 133; 137 L.T. 496; 43 T.L.R. 666; 71 S.J. 762 539
Faraker, In re, Faraker v. Durell [1912] 2 Ch. 488; 81 L.J.Ch. 635; 107 L.T. 36; 56 S.J. 668, C.A. 238, 240, 241
Favorke v. Steinkopff [1922] 1 Ch. 174; 153 L.T.Jo. 47 145
Feilden v. Byrne [1926] Ch. 620; 95 L.J.Ch. 445; 135 L.T. 107 447–9
Fenn, Ex parte (1834) 2 Dow.P.C. 527 1117
Fenning Film Service v. Wolverhampton, Walsall and District Cinemas [1914] 3 K.B. 1171; 83 L.J.K.B. 1860; 111 L.T. 1071 . . . . . 1085, 1088
Ferguson (Alexander) & Co. v. Aikin (1898) 4 T.C. 36 . . . . . 799, 801
Ferris v. Weaven [1952] W.N. 318; 96 S.J. 414; [1952] 2 All E.R. 233 . . 625–7
Field Krupp Act, In re. See In re Fried Krupp Act.
Fillingham v. Bromley (1823) Turn. & R. 530; 37 E.R. 1204, L.C. 959
Fincham v. Edwards (1842) 3 Curt. 63; 163 E.R. 656 255
Finnegan v. Cementation Co. [1953] 1 Q.B. 688; [1953] 2 W.L.R. 1015; 97 S.J. 332; [1953] 1 All E.R. 1130, C.A. 1445, 1447, 1448
Firestone Tire and Rubber Co. (S.S.) v. Singapore Harbour Board [1952] A.C. 452; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 1625; 96 S.J. 448; [1952] 2 All E.R. 219; 50 L.G.R. 619; [1952] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 1, P.C. 417
Fisher, In re [1894] 1 Ch. 450; 63 L.J.Ch. 235; 70 L.T. 62; 38 S.J. 199; 42 W.R. 241; 7 R. 97, C.A. 1224, 1225
Fitch v. Dewes [1921] 2 A.C. 158; 90 L.J.Ch. 436; 125 L.T. 744; 37 T.L.R. 784; 65 S.J. 626, H.L. 823
Flack, In re, Ex parte Berry [1900] 2 Q.B. 32; 69 L.J.Q.B. 458; 82 L.T. 503; 44 S.J. 348; 48 W.R. 446; 7 Mans. 141 1146
Fleming v. Burrows (1826) 1 Russ. 276; 4 L.J.(o.s.)Ch. 115; 38 E.R. 107 . 955, 957
Foley v. Hill (1848) 2 H.L.Cas. 28; 9 E.R. 1002 571
Forbes v. Kemsley Newspapers [1951] 2 T.L.R. 656; 68 R.P.C. 183 . . . 487
Ford v. Batley (1853) 17 Beav. 303; 23 L.J.Ch. 225; 51 E.R. 1051 . . 242, 243, 246
Forres (Lord) v. Scottish Flax Co. [1943] 2 All E.R. 366; 87 S.J. 381, C.A. . . 971
Forster v. Ridley (1864) 4 De G.J. & Sm. 452; 4 New Rep. 417; 46 E.R. 993; sub nom. Foster v. Ridley, 11 L.T. 200, L.JJ. 529
Forster v. Rowland (1861) 30 L.J.Ex. 396; 7 H. & N. 103; 7 Jur.(N.S.) 998; 158 E.R. 410 638
Foster v. Robinson [1951] 1 K.B. 149; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 2) 120; 94 S.J. 474; [1950] 2 All E.R. 342, C.A. 827
Foster (John) & Sons v. Inland Revenue Commissioners [1894] 1 Q.B. 516; 63 L.J. Q.B. 173; 69 L.T. 817; 10 T.L.R. 152; 58 J.P. 444; 38 S.J. 128; 42 W.R. 259; 9 R. 161, C.A. 44
Fowler, Ex parte. See In re Wilkinson.
Fowler v. Attorney-General. See In re University of London Medical Sciences Institute Fund.
Frampton v. Frampton [1951] W.N. 250; 95 S.J. 400, D.C. 1476, 1477
Franklin v. Gramophone Co. [1948] 1 K.B. 542; [1948] L.J.R. 870; 64 T.L.R. 186; 92 S.J. 124; [1948] 1 All E.R. 353, C.A. 391
Frankland v. Ministry. See In re Marjoribanks' Trust Deed.
Franks v. Weaver (1847) 10 Beav. 297; 8 L.T.(o.s.) 510; 50 E.R. 596 . . . 488
Freeborn v. Leeming [1926] 1 K.B. 160; 95 L.J.K.B. 114; 134 L.T. 117; 42 T.L.R. 119; 90 J.P. 53; 70 S.J. 264; 24 L.G.R. 9, C.A. 421

PAGE

Fried Krupp Actien-Gesellschaft, In re [1917] 2 Ch. 188; 86 L.J.Ch. 689; 117 L.T. 21; sub nom. In re Field Krupp Actien-Gesellschaft, 61 S.J. 593 . . . 157

Gaisberg v. Storr [1950] 1 K.B. 107; 65 T.L.R. 485; 93 S.J. 600; [1949] 2 All E.R. 411, C.A. 783
Galbraith, In the Goods of [1951] P. 422; [1951] 2 T.L.R. 412; [1951] 2 All E.R. 470n. 608, 611
Gallagher v. Dorman, Long & Co., 177 L.T. 143; [1947] 2 All E.R. 38, C.A. 197, 199
Gape, In re Verey v. Gape [1952] Ch. 743; [1952] 2 T.L.R. 477; 96 S.J. 595; [1952] 2 All E.R. 579, C.A. 959–61
Gardiner v. Houghton (1862) 2 B. & S. 743; 121 E.R. 1247 153
Gardner v. Akeroyd [1952] 2 Q.B. 743; [1952] 2 T.L.R. 169; 116 J.P. 460; 96 S.J. 483; [1952] 2 All E.R. 306, D.C. 250, 251, 252
Gardner v. James [1948] W.N. 502; 65 T.L.R. 36; 113 J.P. 62; 92 S.J. 732; [1948] 2 All E.R. 1069; 47 L.G.R. 45 1337
Garrard v. Southey (A. E.) & Co. and Standard Telephones and Cables [1952] 2 Q.B. 174; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 630; 96 S.J. 166; [1952] 1 All E.R. 597 . . 722
Gears v. Braley [1940] 2 K.B. 442; 109 L.J.K.B. 969; 163 L.T. 240; 56 T.L.R. 886; 84 S.J. 644; [1940] 3 All E.R. 376, C.A. 1085
Gee, Walker & Slater v. Friary Hotel (Derby) (1949) 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 1) 59; 94 S.J. 112; sub nom. Walker & Slater v. Friary Hotel (Derby) [1950] W.N. 6, C.A. 1102
General Accident, Fire and Life Assurance Corporation v. McGowan [1908] A.C. 207; 77 L.J.P.C. 38; 98 L.T. 734; 24 T.L.R. 533; 52 S.J. 455; 5 T.C. 308, H.L. 171, 172, 173
General Cleaning Contractors v. Christmas [1953] A.C. 180; [1953] 2 W.L.R. 6; [1952] 2 All E.R. 1110, H.L. . 502, 503, 506, 507, 1435–7, 1439, 1440, 1442, 1443
George v. Tompson's Trustee [1949] Ch. 322; 93 S.J. 217; [1949] 1 All E.R. 554 . 1235, 1239, 1240
Gestetner Settlement, In re, Barnett v. Blumka [1953] Ch. 672; [1953] 2 W.L.R. 1033; 97 S.J. 332; [1953] 1 All E.R. 1150; [1953] T.R. 113; 46 R. & I.T. 467; 32 A.T.C. 102 . . . . . 659, 663, 664, 665, 666, 667, 671
Gibbons v. Nottingham Area No. 1 Hospital Management Committee. See In re Hutchinson's Will Trusts.
Gibbs, Ex parte, R. v. Income Tax General Commissioners. See Income Tax Commissioners for City of London v. Gibbs.
Gibbs v. Gibbs [1952] P. 332; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 1143; [1952] 1 All E.R. 942 . 1226
Giffen v. Wedd. See In re Monk.
Gilchester Properties v. Gomm [1948] W.N. 71; 64 T.L.R. 235; 92 S.J. 220; [1948] 1 All E.R. 493 617
Glamorganshire, The (1888) 13 App.Cas. 454; 59 L.T. 572; 6 Asp.M.L.C. 344, P.C. 317
Glasgow Corporation v. Muir [1943] A.C. 448; 112 L.J.P.C. 1; 169 L.T. 53; 59 T.L.R. 266; 107 J.P. 140; 87 S.J. 182; [1943] 2 All E.R. 44; 41 L.G.R. 173, H.L. 358
Glass, In re, Public Trustee v. South West Middlesex Hospital Management Committee [1950] Ch. 643n.; [1950] 2 All E.R. 953n. 240
Glastonbury Case. See A. Baily & Co. v. Clark, Son & Morland.
Glenboig Union Fireclay Co. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners (1922) 12 T.C. 427 . 1201
Glenister v. Glenister [1945] P. 30; 114 L.J.P. 69; 172 L.T. 250; 109 J.P. 194; [1945] 1 All E.R. 513 . . . . . 1530, 1532
Gold v. Essex County Council [1942] 2 K.B. 293; 112 L.J.K.B. 1; 167 L.T. 166; 58 T.L.R. 357; 106 J.P. 242; 86 S.J. 295; [1942] 2 All E.R. 237; 40 L.G.R. 249, C.A. 128, 132, 412, 417, 419, 1384, 1385
Golden Horse Shoe (New) v. Thurgood [1934] 1 K.B. 548; 103 L.J.K.B. 619; 150 L.T. 427; 18 T.C. 280, C.A. . 160, 1059–62, 1503, 1508–11, 1513, 1516, 1519
Goodisson v. Byrne [1938] 2 Ir.R. 580 422
Goldsoll v. Goldman [1915] 1 Ch. 292; 84 L.J.Ch. 228; 112 L.T. 494; 59 S.J. 188, C.A. 816, 819, 820, 822, 823
Gophir Diamond Co. v. Wood [1902] 1 Ch. 950; 71 L.J.Ch. 550; 86 L.T. 801; 18 T.L.R. 492; 50 W.R. 603 822
Gordon and Adams' Contract, In re, In re Pritchard's Settled Estate [1914] 1 Ch. 110; 83 L.J.Ch. 172; 109 L.T. 725; 58 S.J. 67, C.A. . . . 497, 499, 500
Gore v. English Fisheries Commissioners (1871) L.R. 6 Q.B. 561; 40 L.J.Q.B. 252; 24 L.T. 702; 35 J.P. 405; 19 W.R. 1083 301
Gough v. National Coal Board [1954] 1 Q.B. 191; [1953] 3 W.L.R. 900; 97 S.J. 811; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1283, C.A. 1262, 1263
Gowan v. Christie (1873) L.R. 2 Sc. & Div. 273, H.L. 1060, 1505
Grade v. Director of Public Prosecutions, 58 T.L.R. 327; 167 L.T. 252; 106 J.P. 228; 86 S.J. 321; [1942] 2 All E.R. 118; 40 L.G.R. 230, D.C. . . . 1471
Gramophone Co. Application, In re (1910) 27 R.P.C. 689 1486
Grant v. Lynam (1828) 4 Russ. 292; 6 L.J.(o.s.)Ch. 129; 38 E.R. 815 . . . 667
Grant v. Royal Exchange Assurance Co. (1816) 5 M. & S. 439; 105 E.R. 1111 . . 143

PAGE

Great Western Railway Co. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners [1894] 1 Q.B. 507; 63 L.J.Q.B. 405; 70 L.T. 86; 10 T.L.R. 128; 58 J.P. 397; 38 S.J. 96; 42 W.R. 211; 9 R. 122, C.A. 44, 55
Green v. Brand (1884) 1 T.L.R. 79; Cab. & El. 410 144
Greene v. Greene [1916] P. 188; 85 L.J.P. 224; 115 L.T. 127; 32 T.L.R. 520; 60 S.J. 620 1392
Greenwell v. Howell [1900] 1 Q.B. 535; 69 L.J.Q.B. 461; 82 L.T. 183; 16 T.L.R. 235; 48 W.R. 307, C.A. 420, 421
Greenwood, Ex parte. See In re Liverpool Civil Service Association.
Gregory v. Ford [1951] 1 All E.R. 121 . . . . . 947, 951
Griffiths v. Evans [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1424; 97 S.J. 812; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1364, C.A. 841
Griffiths v. Smith [1941] A.C. 170; 110 L.J.K.B. 156; 164 L.T. 386; 57 T.L.R. 185; 85 S.J. 176; [1941] 1 All E.R. 66; 39 L.G.R. 1, H.L. . 417, 1384, 1388
Griffiths (John) Cycle Corporation v. Humber & Co. [1899] 2 Q.B. 414; 68 L.J. Q.B. 959; 81 L.T. 310, C.A. 641
Grindell v. Bass [1920] 2 Ch. 487; 89 L.J.Ch. 591; 124 L.T. 211; 36 T.L.R. 867 . 636, 642
Groves v. Wimborne (Lord) [1898] 2 Q.B. 402; 67 L.J.Q.B. 862; 79 L.T. 284; 14 T.L.R. 493; 42 S.J. 633; 47 W.R. 87, C.A. 358–60
Guaranty Trust Co. of New York v. Hannay & Co. [1915] 2 K.B. 536; 84 L.J. K.B. 1465; 113 L.T. 98; 21 Com.Cas. 67, C.A. . . . 1243, 1246, 1247
Gutta Percha Corporation, In re [1900] 2 Ch. 665; 69 L.J.Ch. 769; 83 L.T. 401; 44 S.J. 628; 8 Mans. 67 684

Hall (J. P.) & Co. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners [1921] 3 K.B. 152; 12 T.C. 382 160
Hammond & Co. v. Bussey (1887) 20 Q.B.D. 79; 57 L.J.Q.B. 58; 4 T.L.R. 95, C.A. 1287, 1298
Hampden Ship Money Case (1637) 3 St.J. 826 96
Hankey v. Clavering [1942] 2 K.B. 326; 111 L.J.K.B. 711; 167 L.T. 193; [1942] 2 All E.R. 311, C.A. 479
Hardcastle v. Netherwood (1821) 5 B. & A. 93; 106 E.R. 1127 143
Harding v. Price [1948] 1 K.B. 695; [1948] L.J.R. 1624; 64 T.L.R. 111; 112 J.P. 189; 92 S.J. 112; [1948] 1 All E.R. 283; 46 L.G.R. 142, D.C. 342
Hares v. Curtin [1913] 2 K.B. 328; 82 L.J.K.B. 707; 108 L.T. 974; 76 J.P. 313; 10 L.G.R. 753; 23 Cox C.C. 411, D.C. 307, 308
Harmer v. Cornelius (1858) 5 C.B.(N.S.) 236; 28 L.J.C.P. 85; 32 L.T.(O.S.) 62; 22 J.P. 724; 4 Jur.(N.S.) 1110; 6 W.R. 749; 141 E.R. 94 . . . . 947, 948
Harnett v. Harnett [1924] P. 126; 93 L.J.P. 49; 131 L.T. 4; 40 T.L.R. 269; 68 S.J. 366, C.A. 1392
Harris v. Brights Asphalt Contractors [1953] 1 Q.B. 617; [1953] 1 W.L.R. 341; 97 S.J. 115; [1953] 1 All E.R. 395; 51 L.G.R. 296 722
Harrison, Ex parte, In re Peake (1884) 13 Q.B.D. 753; 53 L.J.Ch. 977; 51 L.T. 878, C.A. 1144
Harrison v. National Coal Board [1951] A.C. 639; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 1079; 95 S.J. 413; [1951] 1 All E.R. 1102; 50 L.G.R. 1, H.L. 1427
Hartley v. Mayoh & Co. [1954] 1 Q.B. 383; [1954] 1 W.L.R. 355; 98 S.J. 107; [1954] 1 All E.R. 375, C.A. 915
Haskins v. Lewis [1931] 2 K.B. 1; 100 L.J.K.B. 180; 144 L.T. 378; 47 T.L.R. 195; 95 J.P. 57; 29 L.G.R. 199, C.A. 1218, 1220
Hawkins v. Coulsdon and Purley U.D.C. [1953] 1 W.L.R. 882; 117 J.P. 360; 97 S.J. 473; [1953] 2 All E.R. 364; 51 L.G.R. 582 59
Hawkins v. Coulsdon and Purley Urban District Council [1954] 1 Q.B. 319; [1954] 2 W.L.R. 122; 118 J.P. 101; 98 S.J. 44; [1954] 1 All E.R. 97; 52 L.G.R. 117, C.A. 1251
Hawksley's Settlements, In re, Black v. Tidy [1934] Ch. 384; 103 L.J.Ch. 259; 151 L.T. 299; 50 T.L.R. 231 . . . . . 763, 768
Hay (or Bourhill) v. Young [1943] A.C. 92; 111 L.J.P.C. 97; 167 L.T. 261; [1942] 2 All E.R. 396; sub nom. Bourhill v. Young, 86 S.J. 349, H.L. . . 595
Haycraft Gold Reduction and Mining Co., In re [1900] 2 Ch. 230; 69 L.J.Ch. 497; 83 L.T. 166; 16 T.L.R. 350; 7 Mans. 243 684
Haygarth, In re [1913] 2 Ch. 9; 82 L.J.Ch. 328; 108 L.T. 756 1432
Hayward v. Drury Lane Theatre & Moss' Empires [1917] 2 K.B. 899; 87 L.J.K.B. 18; 117 L.T. 523; 33 T.L.R. 557; 61 S.J. 665, C.A. 59
Heather (Inspector of Taxes) v. A. Redfern & Sons (1944) 171 L.T. 127; 26 T.C. 119 160
Heilbut, Symons & Co. v. Buckleton [1913] A.C. 30; 82 L.J.K.B. 245; 107 L.T. 769; 20 Mans. 54, H.L. 616, 617, 618, 619, 623, 624
Heisler v. Anglo-Dal [1954] 1 W.L.R. 1273; 98 S.J. 698; [1954] 2 All E.R. 770; [1954] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 5, C.A. 1398
Henderson v. Arthur [1907] 1 K.B. 10; 76 L.J.K.B. 22; 95 L.T. 772; 23 T.L.R. 60; 51 S.J. 65, C.A. 617
Henderson v. Henderson [1944] A.C. 49; 113 L.J.P. 1; 170 L.T. 84; 60 T.L.R. 113; 88 S.J. 24; [1944] 1 All E.R. 44, H.L. 600, 1391–3

Page

Henderson v. Watmough (Clifford) & Co. (1939) 161 L.T. 238; 88 S.J. 747, C.A. 1300, 1302

Henley & Co., In re (1878) 9 Ch.D. 469; 48 L.J.Ch. 147; 39 L.T. 53; 1 T.C. 209; 26 W.R. 885, C.A. 89

Henry v. Hammond [1913] 2 K.B. 515; 82 L.J.K.B. 575; 108 L.T. 729; 29 T.L.R. 340; 57 S.J. 358; 12 Asp.M.L.C. 332 181

Hersom v. Lines. See Lines v. Hersom.

Hewitt v. Hewitt [1948] P. 159; [1948] L.J.R. 843; 64 T.L.R. 120; 92 S.J. 96; [1948] 1 All E.R. 242, C.A. 945

Hickman & Co. v. Roberts [1913] A.C. 229; 82 L.J.K.B. 678; 108 L.T. 436n.; sub nom. Roberts v. Hickman & Co., 2 Hudson's B.C., 4th ed., 426, H.L. . . 975

Hicks v. Budge. See Budge v. Hicks.

Higginbottom, In re [1892] Ch. 132; 62 L.J.Ch. 74; 67 L.T. 190; 3 R. 28 . . 8

Higgins v. North West Metropolitan Hospital Board and Bach [1954] 1 W.L.R. 411; 98 S.J. 147; [1954] 1 All E.R. 414 . . . . . 1384, 1386

Hill v. Begg [1908] 2 K.B. 802; 77 L.J.K.B. 1074; 99 L.T. 104; 24 T.L.R. 712; 52 S.J. 581; 1 B.W.C.C. 320, C.A. 378

Hill (George) & Co. v. Hill (1886) 55 L.T. 769; 3 T.L.R. 144; 51 J.P. 246; 35 W.R. 137 878

Hillier's Trusts, In re, Hillier v. Attorney-General [1954] 1 W.L.R. 9; 98 S.J. 12; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1547 . . . . . 547, 553, 700

Hillyer v. St. Bartholomew's Hospital (Governors) [1909] 2 K.B. 820; 78 L.J.K.B. 958; 25 T.L.R. 762; 53 S.J. 714; sub nom. Hillyer v. London Corporation, 101 L.T. 368; 73 J.P. 501, C.A. 133, 417, 419, 420

Hilton v. Surrey Steam Laundry [1946] K.B. 65; 115 L.J.K.B. 33; 174 L.T. 31; [1945] 2 All E.R. 425 . . . . . 1445, 1447, 1448

Hinckley and South Leicestershire Permanent Benefit Building Society v. Freeman [1941] Ch. 32; 110 L.J.Ch. 36; 164 L.T. 399; 57 T.L.R. 71; 84 S.J. 620; [1940] 4 All E.R. 212 . . . . . 565, 567, 568

Hines v. Winnick [1947] Ch. 708; [1948] L.J.R. 187; 63 T.L.R. 520; 91 S.J. 580; [1947] 2 All E.R. 517; 64 R.P.C. 113 . . . . . 487, 488, 492

Hinkins v. Hinkins (1953) Times, February 19 927

Hirji Mulji v. Cheong Yue Steamship Co. [1926] A.C. 497; 95 L.J.P.C. 121; 134 L.T. 737; 42 T.L.R. 359; 17 Asp.M.L.C. 8; 31 Com.Cas. 199, P.C. . . 317

Hitchcock v. Way (1837) 6 Ad. & El. 943; 2 Nev. & P.K.B. 72; Will.Woll. & Dav. 491; 6 L.J.K.B. 215; 112 E.R. 360 1131

Hodgson v. British Arc Welding Co. and B. & N. Green & Silley Weir [1946] K.B. 302; 115 L.J.K.B. 400; 174 L.T. 379; 62 T.L.R. 275; 90 S.J. 188; [1946] 1 All E.R. 95 . . . . . 722, 726

Holden (Isaac) & Sons v. Inland Revenue Commissioners (1924) 12 T.C. 768 160, 1204, 1207–10

Holdman v. Hamlyn [1943] 1 K.B. 664; 113 L.J.K.B. 7; 169 L.T. 85; 87 S.J. 273; [1943] 2 All E.R. 137, C.A. 1263

Holden (Issaac) & Sons v. Inland Revenue Commissioners (1924) 12 T.C. 768 . .

Hole v. Cuzen. See Bradley-Hole v. Cusen.

Hollins, In re, Hollins v. Hollins [1918] 1 Ch. 503; 87 L.J.Ch. 326; 118 L.T. 672; 34 T.L.R. 310; 62 S.J. 403, C.A. 243

Holmes v. Director of Public Prosecutions [1946] A.C. 588; 115 L.J.K.B. 417; 175 L.T. 327; 62 T.L.R. 466; 90 S.J. 441; [1946] 2 All E.R. 124, H.L. 1119, 1120, 1121, 1122

Home Remedies, In re [1943] Ch. 1; 112 L.J.Ch. 36; 167 L.T. 362; 59 T.L.R. 31; 86 S.J. 340; [1942] 2 All E.R. 552 684

Hopwood v. Rolls Royce (1947) 176 L.T. 514, C.A. 325, 330

Hornsby v. Maynard [1925] 1 K.B. 514; 94 L.J.K.B. 380; 132 L.T. 575; 41 T.L.R. 102; 69 S.J. 254; 23 L.G.R. 319, D.C. . . . 1040, 1041, 1043, 1044, 1045

Horton v. London Graving Dock Co. See London Graving Dock Co. v. Horton.

Hough v. London Express Newspaper [1940] 2 K.B. 507; 109 L.J.K.B. 524; 163 L.T. 162; 56 T.L.R. 758; 84 S.J. 573; [1940] 3 All E.R. 31, C.A. . . . 277

Houston v. Burns [1918] A.C. 337; 87 L.J.P.C. 99; 118 L.T. 462; 34 T.L.R. 219, H.L. 664

Howard v Gosset (1847) 10 Q.B. 411; 16 L.J.Q.B. 345; 10 L.T.(o.s.) 51; 11 J.P. 457; 6 St.Tr.(N.S.) 319; 11 Jur. 750; 116 E.R. 158, Ex.Ch. 1215

Howard de Walden (Lord) v. Inland Revenue Commissioners [1942] 1 K.B. 389; [1942] 1 All E.R. 287; 111 L.J.K.B. 273; 25 T.C. 121, C.A. 1463

Howe (Earl) v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue [1919] 2 K.B. 336; 88 L.J.K.B. 821; 121 L.T. 161; 35 T.L.R. 461; 63 S.J. 516; 7 T.C. 289, C.A. . . . 1065

Howell v. Young (1826) 5 B. & C. 259; 2 C. & P. 238; 8 Dow. & Ry.K.B. 14; 4 L.J.(o.s.)K.B. 160; 108 E.R. 97 . . . . . 775, 777

Howkins v. Jardine [1951] 1 K.B. 614; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 135; 95 S.J. 75; [1951] 1 All E.R. 320 . . . . . 1321, 1323, 1324, 1325

Howson v. Buxton [1928] 97 L.J.K.B. 749; 139 L.T. 504, C.A. 480

Hoyles, In re, Row v. Jagg [1911] 1 Ch. 179; 80 L.J.Ch. 274; 103 L.T. 817; 27 T.L.R. 131; 55 S.J. 169, C.A. 149

PAGE

Huckle v. London County Council (1910) 26 T.L.R. 580; 27 T.L.R. 112; 4 B.W.C.C. 113, C.A. 841

Hudson (John) & Co. v. Kirkness [1953] 1 W.L.R. 749; 97 S.J. 403; [1953] 2 All E.R. 64; [1953] T.R. 159; 46 R. & I.T. 401; 32 A.T.C. 190 40

Hudson (John) & Co. v. Kirkness [1954] 1 W.L.R. 40; 98 S.J. 10; [1954] 1 All E.R. 29; 47 R. & I.T. 12; T.C. Leaflet No. 1673; sub nom. Kirkness v. Hudson (John) & Co. [1953] T.R. 409; 32 A.T.C. 435, C.A. 317, 1201

Hughes v. British Burmah Petroleum Co. (1932) 17 T.C. 286 . . . . 1060, 1505

Hughes v. Metropolitan Railway Co. (1877) 2 App.Cas. 439; 46 L.J.Q.B. 583; 36 L.T. 932; 42 J.P. 421; 25 W.R. 680, H.L. 872, 879

Hughes v. Sutherland (1881) 7 Q.B.D. 160; 50 L.J.Q.B. 567; 45 L.T. 287; 46 J.P. 6; 29 W.R. 867; 4 Asp.M.L.C. 459, D.C. 1486

Hunt v. Luck [1902] 1 Ch. 428; 71 L.J.Ch. 239; 86 L.T. 68; 18 T.L.R. 265; 46 S.J. 229; 50 W.R. 291, C.A. 1092

Hutchinson v. Jauncey [1950] 1 K.B. 574; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 1) 195; 94 S.J. 48; [1950] 1 All E.R. 165, C.A. 1131

Hutchinson v. London & North Eastern Railway Co. [1942] 1 K.B. 481; 111 L.J. K.B. 369; 166 L.T. 228; 58 T.L.R. 174; [1942] 1 All E.R. 330, C.A. . 325, 330, 331, 587

Hutchinson's Will Trusts, In re, Gibbons v. Nottingham Area No. 1 Hospital Management Committee [1953] Ch. 387; [1953] 2 W.L.R. 872; 97 S.J. 300; [1953] 1 All E.R. 996 240

Hutchison v. Cocksedge & Co. [1952] 1 All E.R. 696n. 259, 1073

Hylton v. Wright. See In re North Devon and West Somerset Relief Fund Trusts.

Hyman v. Hyman [1929] A.C. 601; 98 L.J.P. 81; 141 L.T. 329; 93 J.P. 209; 45 T.L.R. 444; 73 S.J. 317; 27 L.G.R. 379, H.L. 444, 783

Income Tax Commissioners for City of London v. Gibbs [1942] A.C. 402; 111 L.J.K.B. 301; 86 S.J. 147; [1942] 1 All E.R. 415; sub nom. Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Gibbs, 166 L.T. 345; sub nom. Rex v. Income Tax General Commissioners, Ex parte Gibbs, 24 T.C. 221, H.L. 89, 94, 96, 1340, 1342, 1343

Indermaur v. Dames (1866) L.R. 1 C.P. 274; 14 L.T. 484; Har. & Ruth 243; 35 L.J.C.P. 184; 12 Jur.(N.S.) 432; 14 W.R. 586 59

Industrials Finance Syndicate v. Lind. See In re Lind.

Ingall v. Moran [1944] K.B. 160; 60 T.L.R. 120; 113 L.J.K.B. 298; 170 L.T. 57; 88 S.J. 68, C.A. 1445, 1447

Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Barr [1953] T.R. 7; 46 R. & I.T. 217; 32 A.T.C. 93; T.C. Leaflet No. 1634 . . . . . 89, 98, 793

Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Birmingham District Power and Traction Co. Ld. (1928) 141 L.T. 1 . . . . . 1369, 1372, 1373

Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Broadway Cottages Trust, Same v. Sunnylands Trust [1954] 1 W.L.R. 659; 98 S.J. 269; [1954] 1 All E.R. 878; [1954] T.R. 77; 47 R. & I.T. 210; T.C. Leaflet No. 1689 . . . . . 668, 671

Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Broomhouse Brick Co. [1952] T.R. 309; 45 R. & I.T. 665; 34 T.C. 1; 31 A.T.C. 347; 1952 S.L.T. 378 . . 1060, 1505

Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Cock, Russell & Co., 65 T.L.R. 725; 93 S.J. 711; [1949] 2 All E.R. 889; [1949] T.R. 367; 29 T.C. 387 . . 160, 171, 172

Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Dalgety [1930] A.C. 527; 99 L.J.K.B. 342; 143 L.T. 191; 46 T.L.R. 349; 15 T.C. 216, H.L. 1065

Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Desoutter Bros. [1945] 2 All E.R. 532; on appeal 174 L.T. 162; 62 T.L.R. 110; [1946] 1 All E.R. 58; 29 T.C. 155, C.A. 1201

Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Dowdall, O'Mahoney & Co. [1952] A.C. 401; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 560; 96 S.J. 148; [1952] 1 All E.R. 531; [1952] T.R. 85; 45 R. & I.T. 204; 33 T.C. 259; 31 A.T.C. 126, H.L. . . . 44, 51, 1201

Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Gardner, Mountain and D'Ambrumenil [1947] 1 All E.R. 650; 29 T.C. 69 1209

Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Gibbs. See Income Tax Commissioners for City of London v. Gibbs.

Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Imperial Tobacco Co. (of Great Britain and Ireland) [1940] 2 K.B. 287; 56 T.L.R. 870; [1940] 3 All E.R. 248; 29 T.C. 1 1201

Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Mashonaland Railway Co. (1926) 12 T.C. 1159 1030, 1038

Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Newcastle Breweries. See Newcastle Breweries v. Inland Revenue Commissioners.

Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Reid's Trustees [1949] A.C. 361; [1949] L.J.R. 701; 93 S.J. 146; [1949] 1 All E.R. 354; [1949] T.R. 45; 42 R. & I.T. 139; 30 T.C. 431; 1949 S.C. (H.L.) 71; 1949 S.L.T. 217, H.L. 89

Inland Revenue Commissioners v. West, 1950 S.C. 516; 84 Ll.L.Rep. 284; [1950] T.R. 165; 31 T.C. 402; 1950 S.L.T. 337 . . 89, 793, 795, 796, 799, 801, 802

PAGE

Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Wolfson [1949] W.N. 190; 65 T.L.R. 260; 93 S.J. 355; [1949] 1 All E.R. 865; [1949] T.R. 121; 42 R. & I.T. 196; sub nom. Wolfson v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 31 T.C. 141, H.L. . 44, 55
Insall v. Nottingham Corporation [1949] 1 K.B. 261; [1949] L.J.R. 156; 64 T.L.R. 617; 92 S.J. 408; [1948] 2 All E.R. 232, C.A. 825, 1045
Ireland v. Taylor [1949] 1 K.B. 300; [1949] L.J.R. 305; 65 T.L.R. 3; 92 S.J. 408; [1948] 2 All E.R. 450; 152 E.G. 44, C.A. 223
Israelson v. Dawson (Port of Manchester Insurance Co. Garnishees) [1933] 1 K.B. 301; 102 L.J.K.B. 387; 148 L.T. 420, C.A. 144

J. v. J.; sub nom. Jeffcoat v. Jeffcoat [1947] P. 158; [1947] L.J.R. 1468; 177 L.T. 157; 63 T.L.R. 435; 91 S.J. 325; [1947] 2 All E.R. 43 . . 1170, 1176, 1177, 1179
Jacker v. International Cable Co. (1888) 5 T.L.R. 13 1407
Jackson v. J. Dickinson & Co. (Bolton) [1952] W.N. 9; [1952] 1 All E.R. 104, C.A. 467, 469
Jagger v. Jagger [1926] P. 93; 95 L.J.P. 83; 135 L.T. 1; 42 T.L.R. 413; 70 S.J. 503, C.A. 538, 539
James Spencer & Co. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 1950 S.C. 345; 32 T.C. 111 1209
Jamieson v. Jamieson [1952] A.C. 525; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 833; 116 J.P. 226; [1952] 1 All E.R. 875; 1952 S.L.T. 257, H.L. 1170
Jeffcoat v. Jeffcoat. See J. v. J.
Jenkins v. Great Western Railway Co. [1912] 1 K.B. 525; 81 L.J.K.B. 378; 105 L.T. 882, C.A. 1251
Joachimson v. Swiss Bank Corporation [1921] 3 K.B. 110; 90 L.J.K.B. 973; 125 L.T. 338; 37 T.L.R. 534; 65 S.J. 434; 26 Com.Cas. 196, C.A. . . 570, 649
Johnson v. Beecham. See In re Beecham's Settlement.
Johnson v. Croggan & Co. [1954] 1 W.L.R. 195; [1954] 1 All E.R. 121 . 452, 454, 456
Johnson v. Johnson [1900] P. 19; 69 L.J.P. 13; 81 L.T. 791; 16 T.L.R. 26; 64 J.P. 72, D.C. 602, 603
Johnson v. Try (W. S.), 174 L.T. 399; 62 T.L.R. 355; 27 T.C. 167; sub nom. Try v. Johnson [1946] 1 All E.R. 532 . . . . . 1204, 1210
Johnston v. Chestergate Hat Manufacturing Co. [1915] 2 Ch. 338; 84 L.J.Ch. 914; 113 L.T. 1148; 59 S.J. 692 971
Johnson v. Youden [1950] 1 K.B. 544; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 1) 395; 114 J.P. 136; 94 S.J. 115; [1950] 1 All E.R. 300; 48 L.G.R. 276; 155 E.G. 181, D.C. 1366, 1367
Jones, In re. See Ex parte Nichols.
Jones, In re, Public Trustee v. Jones [1945] Ch. 105; 115 L.J.Ch. 33; 173 L.T. 357; 61 T.L.R. 120; 89 S.J. 22 667
Jones v. Manchester Corporation [1952] 2 Q.B. 852; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 1589; 116 J.P. 412; [1952] 2 All E.R. 125, C.A. 946–9
Jones v. Maynard [1951] Ch. 572; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 700; [1951] 1 All E.R. 802 . 626
Jones v. Mersey Docks. See Mersey Docks v. Cameron.
Jones v. Newtown and Llanidloes Union [1920] 3 K.B. 381; 89 L.J.K.B. 1161; 124 L.T. 23; 36 T.L.R. 758; 84 J.P. 237; 18 L.G.R. 481, D.C. . . . 445
Jones v. Smith (1843) 1 Ph. 244; 12 L.J.Ch. 432; 7 Jur. 500, L.C. 1090
Jones v. Tyler (1834) 1 Ad. & El. 522; 3 Nev. & M.K.B. 576; 3 L.J.K.B. 166; 110 E.R. 1307 1102
Jones v. Victoria Graving Dock Co. (1877) 2 Q.B.D. 314; 36 L.T. 347; 25 W.R. 501, C.A. 638
Jones (B.) v. Jones (M. E.) (1929) 46 T.L.R. 33 108
Jubilee (1897) Sites Syndicate, In re [1899] 2 Ch. 204; 68 L.J.Ch. 427; 80 L.T. 869; 15 T.L.R. 391; 43 S.J. 552; 47 W.R. 606; 6 Mans. 331 684
Jude's Musical Compositions, In re [1907] 1 Ch. 651; 76 L.J.Ch. 542; 96 L.T. 766; sub nom. Jude v. Reid Brothers Ld., 23 T.L.R. 461; 51 S.J. 426, C.A. . 1316
Julius v. Bishop of Oxford (1880) 5 App.Cas. 214; 49 L.J.Q.B. 577; 42 L.T. 546; 44 J.P. 600; 28 W.R. 726, H.L. 223

Kahler v. Midland Bank [1950] A.C. 24; [1949] L.J.R. 1687; 65 T.L.R. 663; [1949] 2 All E.R. 621, H.L. 155
Kaski v. Peet. See Konski v. Peet.
Kasler & Cohen v. Slavouski [1928] 1 K.B. 78; 96 L.J.K.B. 850; 137 L.T. 641 1286, 1298
Kat v. Diment [1951] 1 K.B. 34; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 2) 474; 114 J.P. 472; 94 S.J. 596; [1950] 2 All E.R. 657; 67 R.P.C. 158; 49 L.G.R. 450, D.C. 65
Kauri Timber Co. v. New Zealand Commissioner of Taxes [1913] A.C. 771; 29 T.L.R. 671 . . . . . 1512, 1513, 1516
Kay, In re, Mosley v. Kay [1897] 2 Ch. 518; 66 L.J.Ch. 518; 66 L.J.Ch. 759; 13 T.L.R. 582; 46 W.R. 74 425

PAGE

Kelly v. Rogers [1935] 2 K.B. 446; 104 L.J.K.B. 616; 153 L.T. 428; 19 T.C. 692, C.A. 89
Kerr v. Cook and Harland and Wolff unreported (1953) L.J.Newsp. at p. 187 . 841
Kinnane v. Kinnane [1953] 3 W.L.R. 782; 117 J.P. 552; 97 S.J. 764; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1144, D.C. 99, 105, 106, 107
Kirby v. Wilkins [1929] 2 Ch. 444; 142 L.T. 16 5
Kirkness v. Hudson (John) & Co. See Hudson (John) & Co. v. Kirkness.
Kisch v. Hawes Bros. [1935] Ch. 102; 104 L.J.Ch. 86; 152 L.T. 235 . . 855, 857, 859–61
Kite, The [1933] P. 154; 102 L.J.P. 101; 149 L.T. 498; 49 T.L.R. 525; 18 Asp. M.L.C. 413 130
Knight v. Demolition and Construction Co., Ransome v. Same [1953] 1 W.L.R. 981; 97 S.J. 507; [1953] 2 All E.R. 508; 51 L.G.R. 528 563
Knight v. Demolition and Construction Co.; Ransome v. The Same [1954] 1 W.L.R. 563; 98 S.J. 212; [1954] 1 All E.R. 711n.; 52 L.G.R. 281, C.A. 722, 1073
Knight v. Simmonds [1896] 2 Ch. 294; 65 L.J.Ch. 583; 74 L.T. 563; 12 T.L.R. 401; 40 S.J. 531; 44 W.R. 580, C.A. 448
Knowles v. McAdam (1877) 3 Ex.D. 23; 47 L.J.Q.B. 139; 37 L.T. 795; 26 W.R. 114; 1 T.C. 161 1517
Konski v. Peet [1915] 1 Ch. 530; 84 L.J.Ch. 513; 112 L.T. 1107; sub nom. Kaski v. Peet, 59 S.J. 383 69

Latham v. Johnson (R.) & Nephew [1913] 1 K.B. 398; 82 L.J.K.B. 258; 108 L.T. 4; 29 T.L.R. 124; 77 J.P. 137; 57 S.J. 127, C.A. . . 58, 60, 1250, 1252, 1255, 1260, 1261, 1264
Latilla v. Inland Revenue Commissioners [1943] A.C. 377; 59 T.L.R. 163; 112 L.J.K.B. 158; 168 L.T. 411; 87 S.J. 101; [1943] 1 All E.R. 265; 25 T.C. 107 1463
Latimer v. A. E. C. [1953] A.C. 643; [1953] 3 W.L.R. 259; 117 J.P. 387; 97 S.J. 486; [1953] 2 All E.R. 449; 51 L.G.R. 457, H.L. . . 503, 695, 698
Lavender v. Diamints [1949] 1 K.B. 585; [1949] L.J.R. 970; 65 T.L.R. 163; 93 S.J. 147; [1949] 1 All E.R. 532; 47 L.G.R. 231, C.A. 841
Lavy v. London County Council [1895] 2 Q.B. 577; 64 L.J.M.C. 262; 73 L.T. 106; 11 T.L.R. 525; 59 J.P. 630; 39 S.J. 655; 43 W.R. 677; 14 R. 634, C.A. 371, 373, 374, 375
Lawton v. Elmes. See In re Corsellis.
Lazard Bros. & Co. v. Midland Bank [1933] A.C. 289; 102 L.J.K.B. 191; 148 L.T. 242; 49 T.L.R. 94; 76 S.J. 888, H.L. 147, 1407
Lea (R. J.) Ld's Application, In re [1913] 1 Ch. 446, C.A. 555
Lecouturier v. Rey [1910] A.C. 262; 79 L.J.Ch. 394; 102 L.T. 293; 26 T.L.R. 368; 54 S.J. 375, H.L. 156
Lecture League v. London County Council (1913) 108 L.T. 924; 29 T.L.R. 426; 77 J.P. 329; 11 L.G.R. 645; 23 Cox C.C. 390, D.C. 907, 909
Lee v. Lee [1952] 2 Q.B. 489; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 968; [1952] 1 All E.R. 1299, C.A. 626
Lee v. Showmen's Guild of Great Britain [1952] 2 Q.B. 329; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 1115; 96 S.J. 296; [1952] 1 All E.R. 1175, C.A. 1005, 1010
Leonard v. Simpson (1835) 2 Bing.N.C. 176; 1 Hodg. 251; 2 Scott 335; 4 L.J.C.P. 302; 132 E.R. 69 429
Leonard & Ellis' Trade Mark, In re, Leonard & Ellis v. Wells (1884) 26 Ch.D. 288 118
Lewarne v. Ministry of Health. See In re Morgan's Will Trusts.
Lewis v. Denyé [1939] 1 K.B. 540; 108 L.J.K.B. 217; 160 L.T. 224; 55 T.L.R. 391; 83 S.J. 192; [1939] 1 All E.R. 310, C.A. 391
Lewis v. Gunter-Jones [1949] W.N. 119; [1949] L.J.R. 769; 65 T.L.R. 181; 93 S.J. 163, C.A. 1218
Lewis's Declaration of Trust, In re, Lewis v. Lewis, Lewis v. Ryder. See Loudon v. Ryder (No. 2).
Lewisham Borough Council v. Roberts [1949] 2 K.B. 608; 65 T.L.R. 423; 113 J.P. 260; [1949] 1 All E.R. 815; 47 L.G.R. 479; sub nom. Roberts v. Lewisham Borough Council [1949] L.J.R. 1318, C.A. . . . 1156, 1157
Liebrand, Ex parte [1914] W.N. 310 1117
Lincolnshire (Parts of Lindsey) County Council v. Wallace Holiday Camp [1953] 2 Q.B. 178; [1953] 2 W.L.R. 1088; 97 S.J. 354; 3 P & C.R. 414; sub nom. Lincoln County Council (Parts of Lindsey) v. Henshell, 117 J.P. 321; [1953] 1 All E.R. 1143; 51 L.G.R. 371, D.C. 1358, 1360, 1362
Lind, In re, Industrials Finance Syndicate v. Lind [1915] 2 Ch. 345; 84 L.J.Ch. 884; 113 L.T. 956; 59 S.J. 651; [1915] H.B.R. 204, C.A. 180
Lindley v. Horner (G. W.) & Co., 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 1) 296; 114 J.P. 124; 94 S.J. 147; [1950] 1 All E.R. 234; 48 L.G.R. 174, D.C. 353

PAGE

Lindsey County Council v. Marshall [1937] A.C. 97; 105 L.J.K.B. 614; 52 T.L.R. 661; 80 S.J. 702; [1936] 2 All E.R. 1076; sub nom. Marshall v. Lindsey County Council, 155 L.T. 297; 100 J.P. 411; 34 L.G.R. 469, H.L. . . . 130
Lindus & Hortin v. Inland Revenue Commissioners (1933) 17 Tax Cas. 442 . . 663
Lines v. Hersom [1951] 2 K.B. 682; [1951] 2 T.L.R. 481; 115 J.P. 494; [1951] 2 All E.R. 650; sub nom. Hersom v. Lines, 50 L.G.R. 295, D.C. . . 1126
Liverpool Civil Service Association, In re, Ex parte Greenwood (1874) 9 Ch.App. 511; 43 L.J.Ch. 609; 30 L.T. 451; 22 W.R. 636, L.JJ. . . 540, 542, 545
Liverpool Electric Cable Co. Ld.'s Applications, In re (1928) 46 R.P.C. 99, C.A. 557–9, 561, 562
Llandaff and Canton District Market Co. v. Lyndon (1860) 8 C.B.(N.S.) 515; 30 L.J.M.C. 105; 2 L.T. 771; 25 J.P. 295; 6 Jur.(N.S.) 1344; 8 W.R. 693; 141 E.R. 1267 262
Llewellyn v. Turner (1922) 126 L.T. 532; 86 J.P. 59; 66 S.J. 284; 20 L.G.R. 182, D.C. 444
Lloyd v. Fleming (1872) L.R. 7 Q.B. 299; 41 L.J.Q.B. 93; 20 W.R. 296; sub nom. Loyd v. Fleming, 25 L.T. 824; 1 Asp.M.L.C. 192 . . . . . 143, 144
Lloyd v. Guibert (1865) L.R. 1 Q.B. 115; 35 L.J.Q.B. 74; 13 L.T. 602; 6 B. & S. 100; 2 Mar.L.C. 283; 122 E.R. 1134, Ex.Ch. 153
Lloyd Bros. v. Milward (1895) 2 Hudson's Building Contracts (4th ed.) 262, C.A. 1497
Lloyds Bank v. Oliver's Trustee [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1460; 97 S.J. 832; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1443 626
Lockwood v. Lowe [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1123; [1953] 2 All E.R. 801 630
Lockwood v. Lowe [1954] 2 W.L.R. 296; 98 S.J. 127; [1954] 1 All E.R. 472, C.A. 398, 399, 400, 401
Loftus v. Roberts (1902) 18 T.L.R. 532, C.A. 403
London and Globe Finance Corporation, In re [1903] 1 Ch. 728; 72 L.J.Ch. 368; 88 L.T. 194; 19 T.L.R. 314; 51 W.R. 651; 10 Mans. 198 . . . . 65, 66
London and North Eastern Railway Co. v. Berriman [1946] A.C. 278; 115 L.J. K.B. 124; 174 L.T. 151; 62 T.L.R. 170; [1946] 1 All E.R. 255; 38 B.W. C.C. 109, H.L. 587
London Association for Protection of Trade v. Greenland [1916] 2 A.C. 15; 85 L.J. K.B. 698; 114 L.T. 434; 32 T.L.R. 281; 60 S.J. 272, H.L. 1009
London County Council v. Freeman, Hardy and Willis (1913) 77 J.P.J. 245 . . 773
London County Council v. Hancock and James [1907] 2 K.B. 45; 76 L.J.K.B. 526; 96 L.T. 618; 23 T.L.R. 417; 71 J.P. 268; 5 L.G.R. 572, D.C. . . . 373
London County Council v. Illuminated Advertisements Co. [1904] 2 K.B. 886; 73 L.J.K.B. 1034; 91 L.T. 352; 20 T.L.R. 527; 68 J.P. 445; 48 S.J. 493; 53 W.R. 220; 2 L.G.R. 905, D.C. 373, 375
London County Council v. Pearce [1892] 2 Q.B. 109; 66 L.T. 685; 8 T.L.R. 531; 56 J.P. 790; 40 W.R. 543, D.C. 371, 373, 374, 375
London Electricity Joint Committee Co., Ex parte. See R. v. Electricity Commissioners.
London Graving Dock Co. v. Horton [1951] A.C. 737; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 949; [1951] 2 All E.R. 1; sub nom. Horton v. London Graving Dock Co., 95 S.J. 465; [1951] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 389, H.L. 525, 722, 726–8
London Life Association v. St. George's Hospital. See In re Meyers.
Long Eaton Co-operative Society v. Smith [1949] 2 K.B. 144; [1949] L.J.R. 837; 113 J.P. 185; 93 S.J. 197; [1949] 1 All E.R. 633; 48 L.G.R. 1; 153 E.G. 185, C.A. 342, 344
Lorentzen v. Lydden & Co. [1942] 2 K.B. 202; 111 L.J.K.B. 327; 167 L.T. 363; 58 T.L.R. 178 156
Loudon v. Ryder (No. 2) [1953] 1 Ch. 423; [1953] 2 W.L.R. 863; 97 S.J. 299; sub nom. In re Lewis's Declaration of Trust, Lewis v. Lewis, Lewis v. Ryder [1953] 1 All E.R. 1005 488
Love & Stewart v. Rowtor S.S. Co. [1916] 2 A.C. 527; 86 L.J.P.C. 1; 115 L.T. 415; 13 Asp.M.L.C. 500, H.L. 484
Loveday, In the Goods of [1900] P. 154; 69 L.J.P. 48; 82 L.T. 692 . . . 610
Loyd v. Fleming. See Lloyd v. Fleming.
Lucas, In re, Sheard v. Mellor [1948] Ch. 424; [1948] L.J.R. 1914; 64 T.L.R. 343; 92 S.J. 336; [1948] 2 All E.R. 22, C.A. 238, 240, 241
Luckie v. Bushby (1853) 22 L.J.C.P. 220; 13 C.B. 864; 1 C.L.R. 685; 21 L.T. (O.S.) 186; 17 Jur. 625; 1 W.R. 455; 138 E.R. 1443 143
Lynch v. Knight (1861) 9 H.L.C. 577; 5 L.T. 291; 8 Jur.(N.S.) 724; 11 E.R. 854, H.L. 1048
Lynmouth case. See In re North Devon and West Somerset Relief Fund Trusts.

Macadam, In re, Dallow v. Codd [1946] Ch. 73; 115 L.J.Ch. 14; 173 L.T. 395; 62 T.L.R. 48; 89 S.J. 531; [1945] 2 All E.R. 664 528
MacCarthy v. Agard [1933] 2 K.B. 417; 102 L.J.K.B. 753; 149 L.T. 595, C.A. 1457, 1459
McCullock v. Lewis A. May (Produce Distributors) [1947] W.N. 318; 92 S.J. 54; [1947] 2 All E.R. 845; 65 R.P.C. 58 488

PAGE
Macdonald (Erskine) v. Eyles [1921] 1 Ch. 631; 90 L.J.Ch. 248; 124 L.T. 625; 37 T.L.R. 187; 65 S.J. 275 1316
McIntyre v. Hardcastle [1948] 2 K.B. 82; [1948] L.J.R. 1249; 64 T.L.R. 260; 92 S.J. 181; [1948] 1 All E.R. 696; 151 E.G. 236, C.A. 480
McIntyre v. M'Intee, 1915 S.C.(J.) 27 262
Mackay v. Ailsa Shipbuilding Co., 1945 S.C. 414 391
Maclay v. Dixon (1943) 170 L.T. 49; [1944] 1 All E.R. 22, C.A. 825, 828
McLean v. Weaver (1924) 41 T.L.R. 47, C.A. 425
McLeod (or Houston) v. Buchanan, 84 S.J. 452; [1940] 2 All E.R. 179 . 1469, 1471
McManus v. Bark (1870) L.R.Ex. 65; 39 L.J.Ex. 65; 21 L.T. 676 1346
McQuaker v. Goddard [1940] 1 K.B. 687; 109 L.J.K.B. 673; 162 L.T. 232; 56 T.L.R. 409; 84 S.J. 203; [1940] 1 All E.R. 471, C.A. 143
Maddison v. Alderson (1883) 8 App.Cas. 467; 52 L.J.Q.B. 737; 49 L.T. 303; 47 J.P. 821; 31 W.R. 820, H.L. 1131
Madras and Southern Mahratta Railway Co. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue (1926) 12 T.C. 1111 1039
Magdalen College Cambridge Case (1615) 11 Co.Rep. 66 (b); 77 E.R. 1235; sub nom. Warren v. Smith, Magdalen College Case, 1 Roll.Rep. 151 . 89, 93, 96
Magennis (P. J.) Pty. v. Commonwealth of Australia (1949) 80 C.L.R. 382 . . 1416
Magor and St. Mellons Rural District Council v. Newport Borough Council [1952] A.C. 189; [1951] 2 T.L.R. 935; 115 J.P. 613; [1951] 2 All E.R. 839, H.L. . 1423
Maillard v. Page (1870) L.R. 5 Ex. 312; 39 L.J.Ex. 235; 23 L.T. 80 . . . 1346
Mancini v. Director of Public Prosecutions [1942] A.C. 1; 111 L.J.K.B. 84; 165 L.T. 353; 58 T.L.R. 25; [1941] 3 All E.R. 272; 28 Cr.App.R. 65, H.L. 1119–23
Mannesmann Tube Co., In re, Von Siemens v. Mannesmann Tube Co. [1901] 2 Ch. 93; 70 L.J.Ch. 565; 84 L.T. 579; 65 J.P. 377; 8 Mans. 300 . . . 1147
Marjoribanks' Trust Deed, In re, Frankland v. Ministry of Health [1952] Ch. 181; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 224; 96 S.J. 72; [1952] 1 All E.R. 191, C.A. . . 81, 82
Marshall v. Cellactite and British Uralite (1947) 63 T.L.R. 456, C.A. . . 197, 202
Marshall v. Gotham Co. [1952] W.N. 535; [1952] 2 T.L.R. 941; 96 S.J. 849; [1952] 2 All E.R. 1044, C.A. 270
Marshall v. Lindsey County Council. See Lindsey County Council v. Marshall.
Martin v. Hawkins. See In re Wokingham Fire Brigade Trusts.
Marvin, In re, Crawter v. Marvin [1905] 2 Ch. 490; 74 L.J.Ch. 699; 93 L.T. 599; 21 T.L.R. 765; 54 W.R. 74 . . . . . 424, 429
Mason, In re [1929] 1 Ch. 1, C.A. 89
Mason v. Central Land Board [1953] 3 P. & C.R. 391 887
Masters, In re [1953] 1 W.L.R. 81; 97 S.J. 10; [1953] 1 All E.R. 19 . . 527, 528
Maudslay, Sons & Field, In re, Maudslay v. Maudslay, Sons & Field [1900] 1 Ch. 602; 69 L.J.Ch. 347; 82 L.T. 378; 16 T.L.R. 228; 48 W.R. 568; 8 Mans. 38 . . . . . 145, 149, 156
Maxwell v. Keun [1928] 1 K.B. 645; 97 L.J.K.B. 305; 138 L.T. 310; 44 T.L.R. 100; 72 S.J. 48, C.A. 567
Mead v. Chelmsford Rural District Council [1953] 1 Q.B. 32; 3 P. & C.R. 239; sub nom. Mead v. Plumtree [1952] 2 T.L.R. 700; 116 J.P. 589; 97 S.J. 696; [1952] 2 All E.R. 723; 50 L.G.R. 690, D.C. 1360–2
Mead v. Smith. See In re Falkiner.
Mechanical and General Inventions Co. Ld. v. Austin and Austin Motor Co. [1935] A.C. 346; 104 L.J.K.B. 403; 153 L.T. 153, H.L. 1305
Medical Battery Co., In re [1894] 1 Ch. 444; 63 L.J.Ch. 189; 69 L.T. 799; 38 S.J. 81; 42 W.R. 191; 1 Mans. 104; 8 R. 46 . . . . . 681, 684, 685
Mellor v. Australian Broadcasting Commission [1940] A.C. 491; 56 T.L.R. 413; 84 S.J. 356; [1940] 2 All E.R. 20, P.C. 1486
Mellor v. Daintree (1886) 33 Ch.D. 198; 56 L.J.Ch. 33; 55 L.T. 175 . . . 1432
Mellor v. Watkins (1874) L.R. 9 Q.B. 400; 23 W.R. 55 . . . . . 630, 881
Mellors, Basden & Co. v. Coutts & Co. See In re Rothermere.
Merrington v. Ironbridge Metal Works, 117 J.P. 23; [1952] 2 All E.R. 1101 . . 209
Mersey Docks v. Cameron, Jones v. Mersey Docks (1865) 11 H.L.Cas. 443; 20 C.B.(N.S.) 56; 6 New Rep. 378; 35 L.J.M.C. 1; 12 L.T. 643; 29 J.P. 483; 11 Jur.(N.S.) 746; 13 W.R. 1069; 11 E.R. 1405, H.L. 89
Mersey Docks and Harbour Board v. Coggins and Griffiths (Liverpool) [1947] A.C. 1; 115; L.J.K.B. 465; 175 L.T. 270; 62 T.L.R. 533; [1946] 2 All E.R. 345, H.L. 132
Messager v. British Broadcasting Co. [1927] 2 K.B. 543; 97 L.J.K.B. 65; 137 L.T. 810; 43 T.L.R. 818; reversed [1928] 1 K.B. 660, C.A.; [1929] A.C. 151, H.L. 1316
Metropolitan Railway Co. v. Wright (1886) 11 App.Cas. 152; 55 L.J.Q.B. 401; 54 L.T. 658; 34 W.R. 746; 2 T.L.R. 553, H.L. 1306
Meyers, In re, London Life Association v. St. George's Hospital [1951] Ch. 534; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 435; [1951] 1 All E.R. 538 240
Midland Bank Executor and Trustee Co. v. Damer. See In re Schar.
Milestone (J. A.) & Sons v. Yates Castle Brewery [1938] 2 All E.R. 439 . . 180
Miller v. Babu Madho Das [1896] L.R. 23 I.A. 106 1407

PAGE

Miller v. Cannon Hill Estates [1931] 2 K.B. 113; 100 L.J.K.B. 740; 144 L.T. 567; 75 S.J. 155 617
Miller v. William Boothman & Sons [1944] K.B. 337; 113 L.J.K.B. 206; 170 L.T. 187; 60 T.L.R. 218; [1944] 1 All E.R. 333 . . . . . 391, 392
Mills' Estate, In re, Ex parte Works and Public Buildings Commissioners (1886) 34 Ch.D. 24; 56 L.J.Ch. 60; 55 L.T. 465; 3 T.L.R. 61; 51 J.P. 151; 35 W.R. 65, C.A. 1224
Minister of Health v. Bellotti [1944] K.B. 298; 113 L.J.K.B. 436; 170 L.T. 146; 60 T.L.R. 228; [1944] 1 All E.R. 238, C.A. 862, 882, 883, 884
Ministry of Health v. Simpson [1951] A.C. 251; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 2) 1015; [1950] 2 All E.R. 1137; sub nom. In re Diplock, Minister of Health v. Simpson, 94 S.J. 777, H.L. 39
Modern Light Cars Ld. v. Seals [1934] 1 K.B. 32; 102 L.J.K.B. 680; 149 L.T. 285; 49 T.L.R. 503; 77 S.J. 420 1346
Mohanlal Hargovind of Jubbulpore v. Commissioner of Income Tax, Central Provinces and Berar, Nagpur [1949] A.C. 521; 93 S.J. 663; [1949] 2 All E.R. 652; [1949] T.R. 289, P.C. 1512, 1513
Molière Steamship Co. v. Naylor, Benzon & Co. (1897) 13 T.L.R. 187; 2 Com.Cas. 92 . . . . . 650, 654, 655, 657
Monk, In re, Giffen v. Wedd [1927] 2 Ch. 197; 96 L.J.Ch. 296; 137 L.T. 4; 43 T.L.R. 256, C.A. 715
Monk v. Warbey [1935] 1 K.B. 75; 104 L.J.K.B. 153; 152 L.T. 194; 51 T.L.R. 77; 78 S.J. 783, C.A. 358, 947, 951
Morant v. Wheal Grenville Mining Co. (1894) 71 L.T. 758; 11 T.L.R. 67; 39 S.J. 82; 3 T.C. 298, D.C. 1060, 1505
Mordue v. Palmer (1870) L.R. 6 Ch.App. 22; 40 L.J.Ch. 8; 23 L.T. 752; 35 J.P. 196; 19 W.R. 86, L.JJ. 1222, 1223, 1224
Morgan's Will Trusts, In re, Lewarne v. Ministry of Health [1950] Ch. 637; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 1) 1037; 94 S.J. 368; [1950] 1 All E.R. 1097 240
Morleys (Birmingham) v. Slater [1950] 1 K.B. 506; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 1) 483; 94 S.J. 146; [1950] 1 All E.R. 331, C.A. 673
Morris v. Harris [1927] A.C. 252; 96 L.J.Ch. 253; 136 L.T. 587; [1927] B. & C.R. 65, H.L. 735, 736, 757, 759
Morton v. William Dixon, 1909 S.C. 807 . . . . . 259, 507
Morton v. Morton, 111 L.J.P. 33; 166 L.T. 164; 58 T.L.R. 158; 106 J.P. 139; 86 S.J. 64; [1942] 1 All E.R. 273; 40 L.G.R. 106 . 103, 108, 738, 739, 742, 744
Mosley v. Kay. See In re Kay.
Mosley v. Wimpey (George) & Co., 173 L.T. 24; 61 T.L.R. 411; [1945] 1 All E.R. 674; 27 T.C. 315, C.A. 1060, 1505
Mott v. Browning. See In re Chesterman's Trusts.
Mourton v. Poulter [1930] 2 K.B. 183; 99 L.J.K.B. 289; 143 L.T. 20; 35 Com.Cas. 308; sub nom. Moulton v. Poulter, 46 T.L.R. 256; 94 J.P. 190; 74 S.J. 170 593, 594
Moyes v. Caldwell, 1949 S.L.T. (Sh.Ct.) 73 630
Muirhead, In re, Ex parte Muirhead (1876) 2 Ch.D. 22; 45 L.J.Bk. 65; 34 L.T. 303; 24 W.R. 351, C.A. 1197
Munday v. King's College Hospital. See In re Buzzacott.
Municipal and General Securities Co. Ld. v. Lloyds Bank Ld. [1950] Ch. 212; 65 T.L.R. 744; [1949] 2 All E.R. 937 . . . . . 1451, 1454
Munro (J. H.) v. Vancouver Properties Ld. [1940] 3 W.W.R. 26; 3 D.L.R. 766; 55 B.C.R. 292 1309
Munster, In re [1920] 1 Ch. 268; 89 L.J.Ch. 138; 36 T.L.R. 173; 64 S.J. 309 . 141, 157
Murray v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue (1951) 32 T.C. 238 1512
Murray v. Inland Revenue Commissioners [1918] A.C. 541; 119 L.T. 258; 34 T.L.R. 425, H.L. 1423
Murray v. Public Trustee. See In re British School of Egyptian Archaeology.
Murray v. Stewards & Lloyds (unreported) Oct. 12, 1953 . . . . . 450, 451
Murray Bull & Co. v. Murray [1953] 1 Q.B. 211; [1952] 2 T.L.R. 1003; 96 S.J. 852; [1952] 2 All E.R. 1079 770

N.V. Amsterdamsche Lucifersfabrieken v. H. & H. Trading Agencies (1940) 84 S.J. 205; [1940] 1 All E.R. 587, C.A. 809–13
Naismith v. London Film Productions, 83 S.J. 155; [1939] 1 All E.R. 794, C.A. 723, 724
Nash v. Rochford R.D.C. [1917] 1 K.B. 384; 86 L.J.K.B. 370; 116 L.T. 129; 81 J.P. 57; 15 L.G.R. 103, C.A. 1491
Natborny v. Natborny [1933] P. 1; 101 L.J.P. 58; 147 L.T. 2525; 48 T.L.R. 590; 96 J.P. 351; 30 L.G.R. 447; 29 Cox C.C. 509, C.A. 599–602
National Assistance Board v. Wilkinson [1952] 2 Q.B. 648; [1952] 2 T.L.R. 11; 116 J.P. 428; 96 S.J. 414; [1952] 2 All E.R. 255; 50 L.G.R. 454, D.C. 445, 446

PAGE

National Association of Local Government Officers v. Bolton Corporation [1943] A.C. 166; 111 L.J.K.B. 674; 167 L.T. 312; 59 T.L.R. 1; 106 J.P. 255; [1942] 2 All E.R. 425; 40 L.G.R. 273, H.L. 1095
National Coal Board v. England [1954] A.C. 403; [1954] 2 W.L.R. 400; 98 S.J. 176; [1954] 1 All E.R. 546, H.L. 1429
National Provincial Bank v. Bradberry. See In re Bradberry.
National Starch Manufacturing Co. v. Munn's Patent Maizena and Starch Co. [1894] A.C. 275; 63 L.J.P.C. 112; 6 R. 462, P.C. 488
Neale v. Richardson, 158 L.T. 308; 54 T.L.R. 539; 82 S.J. 331; [1938] 1 All E.R. 753, C.A. 986
Nelson v. Cookson [1940] 1 K.B. 100; 161 L.T. 346; 56 T.L.R. 2; 103 J.P. 363; 83 S.J. 871; [1939] 4 All E.R. 30 . . . 412, 419, 420, 421, 422, 1384, 1386, 1388
Nesbitt v. Baugh. See In re Castle.
Nettleton v. Crimmins. See In re Ellis.
Nevill (Lord William) v. Fine Art and General Insurance Co. [1897] A.C. 68 67, 69, 70
Neville v. London Express Newspaper [1919] A.C. 368; 88 L.J.K.B. 282; 120 L.T. 299; 35 T.L.R. 167; 63 S.J. 213, H.L. 1012
New, In re, Leavers, Re, Morley, Re [1901] 2 Ch. 534; sub nom. Re New's Settlement, Langham v. Langham, Re Leavers, Leavers v. Hall, Re Morley, Fraser v. Leavers, 70 L.J.Ch. 710; 85 L.T. 174; 50 W.R. 17; 45 S.J. 706, C.A. 1453, 1455
New York Life Insurance Co. v. Public Trustee [1924] 2 Ch. 101; 93 L.J.Ch. 449; 131 L.T. 438; 40 T.L.R. 430; 68 S.J. 477, C.A. 1115
Newcastle Breweries v. Inland Revenue Commissioners (1927) 96 L.J.K.B. 735; 137 L.T. 426; 43 T.L.R. 476; 12 T.C. 927, H.L., affirming sub nom. Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Newcastle Breweries (1926) 95 L.J.K.B. 936; 135 L.T. 618; 42 T.L.R. 609; 70 S.J. 734, C.A. . . . 40, 44, 49, 50, 54, 55, 1207
Newman v. Jones (1886) 17 Q.B.D. 132; 55 L.J.M.C. 113; 55 L.T. 327; 50 J.P. 373; sub nom. Newman v. Leach, 2 T.L.R. 600, D.C. 353
Newton v. Newton (1885) 11 P.D. 11; 55 L.J.P. 13; 34 W.R. 123 . . . 537
Newton Abbot Development v. Stockman Bros. (1931) 47 T.L.R. 616 . . 974
New York Life Insurance Co. v. Public Trustee [1924] 2 Ch. 101; 93 L.J.Ch. 449; 131 L.T. 438; 40 T.L.R. 430; 68 S.J. 477, C.A. 145, 146, 156
Nicholls v. F. Austin (Leyton) [1946] A.C. 493; 115 L.J.K.B. 329; 175 L.T. 5; 62 T.L.R. 320; 90 S.J. 628; [1946] 2 All E.R. 92; 44 L.G.R. 287, H.L. . 391
Nichols, Ex parte, In re Jones (1883) 22 Ch.D. 782; 52 L.J.Ch. 635; 48 L.T. 492; 31 W.R. 661, C.A. 187
Nicolene v. Simmonds [1953] 1 Q.B. 543; [1953] 2 W.L.R. 717; 97 S.J. 247; [1953] 1 All E.R. 822; [1953] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 189 . . . . 1273, 1277
Noakes v. Noakes and Hill (1877) 4 P.D. 60; 47 L.J.P. 20; 39 L.T. 47; 26 W.R. 284 538
Nokes v. Doncaster Amalgamated Collieries [1940] A.C. 1014; 109 L.J.K.B. 865; 163 L.T. 343; 56 T.L.R. 988; 85 S.J. 45; [1940] 3 All E.R. 549, H.L. 317, 1423
Nordenfelt v. Maxim Nordenfelt Guns and Ammunition Co. [1894] A.C. 535; 63 L.J.Ch. 908; 71 L.T. 489; 10 T.L.R. 636; 11 R. 1, H.L. 818
Nordisk Insulinlaboratorium v. Gorgate Products (sued as C. L. Bencard) [1953] Ch. 430; [1953] 2 W.L.R. 879; 97 S.J. 298; [1953] 1 All E.R. 986, C.A. 1246
Norris v. Syndic Manufacturing Co. [1952] 2 Q.B. 135; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 858; [1952] 1 All E.R. 935, C.A. 454
North, Ex parte. See R. v. Milk Marketing Board.
North Devon and West Somerset Relief Fund Trusts, In re, Hylton v. Wright [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1260; 97 S.J. 728; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1032 10, 18, 19, 20, 547, 553, 707, 709, 712, 715, 720
Northampton Corporation v. Ellen [1904] 1 K.B. 299; 73 L.J.K.B. 329; 90 L.T. 71; 20 T.L.R. 168; 68 J.P. 197; 52 W.R. 305; 2 L.G.R. 473, C.A. 1144, 1147
Northern Aluminium Co. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners (1947) E.P.T. Leaflet No. 32, p. 3 and No. 58 1209
Norton v. Ellam (1837) 6 L.J.Ex. 121; 2 M. & W. 462; Murp. & H. 69; 1 Jur. 433; 150 E.R. 839 648
Norwich Assessment Committee v. Pointer. See Pointer v. Norwich Assessment Committee.
Norwich Town Close Estate Charity, In re (1888) 40 Ch.D. 298; 60 L.T. 202; 5 T.L.R. 197; 37 W.R. 362, C.A. 547
Nuthall v. Entertainments and General Investment Corporation [1947] 2 All E.R. 384 223

Odwin v. Forbes (1817) Buck 57, P.C. 153
Official Receiver (Trustee) (No. 2), Ex parte. See In re Andrew.

Pages

Ogden, In re, Bryden v. Samuel [1888] Ch. 678; 102 L.T.Ch. 206; 149 L.T. 162; 49 T.L.R. 341; 77 S.J. 216 . . . 539, 563, 564, 565, 566, 567, 571
Okma & Co. v. Fleischerke Jernverks Aktieselskap [1914] 1 K.B. 711; 83 L.J.K.B. 881; 110 L.T. 464; 30 T.L.R. 242; 58 S.J. 292, C.A. . . . 146
Olding v. Wild (1866) 14 L.T. 402; 30 J.P. 295 301
Oliver v. Nautilus Steam Shipping Co. [1903] 2 K.B. 639; 72 L.J.K.B. 897, 89 L.T. 318; 19 T.L.R. 607; 47 S.J. 671; 52 W.R. 200; 5 W.C.C. 65; 9 Asp.M.L.C. 436, C.A. 841
Olley v. Marlborough Court [1949] 1 K.B. 482; [1949] L.J.R. 360; 65 T.L.R. 96; 93 S.J. 40; [1949] 1 All E.R. 127, C.A. 1102
Olsen v. Magnesium Castings and Products [1941] 1 All E.R. 586, C.A. . . 841
Olympic, The, and H.M.S. Hawke [1916] P. 214; 85 L.J.P. 117; 28 T.L.R. 519 . 1491
Orsini v. Hunt [1914] 1 Ch. 85; 83 L.J.Ch. 181; 110 L.T. 187; 30 T.L.R. 54; 78 J.P. 51 . . . . . 1005, 1011, 1012

Page v. Burtwell [1906] 2 K.B. 758; 77 L.J.K.B. 1060; 99 L.T. 542; 1 B.W.C.C. 267, C.A. 841
Paine v. Colne Valley Electricity Supply Co. and British Insulated Cables, 160 L.T. 124; 55 T.L.R. 181; 33 S.J. 115; 37 L.G.R. 200; [1938] 4 All E.R. 803 . . 724
Palmer v. Palmer [1923] P. 180; 92 L.J.P. 129; 129 L.T. 664; 39 T.L.R. 609; 67 S.J. 746, C.A. 1392
Paris v. Stepney Borough Council [1951] A.C. 367; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 25; 115 J.P. 22; 94 S.J. 837; [1951] 1 All E.R. 42; 49 L.G.R. 296; 84 Ll.L.Rep. 525, H.L. 502, 503, 507, 1436
Park, In re, Public Trustee v. Armstrong [1932] 1 Ch. 580; 101 L.J.Ch. 205; 147 L.T. 118 663
Park Ward & Co., In re [1926] Ch. 828; 95 L.J.Ch. 464; 136 L.T. 575; 70 S.J. 870; [1926] B. & C.R. 84 . . . . . 540, 542, 544
Parker, Ex parte. See R. v. Metropolitan Police Commissioner.
Parker v. Jones [1910] 2 K.B. 32; 79 L.J.K.B. 921; 102 L.T. 583; 26 T.L.R. 436 . 680
Parkyns v. Preist (1881) 7 Q.B.D. 313; 50 L.J.M.C. 148; 45 J.P. 751; 30 W.R. 13, D.C. 1486
Patrick v. Broadstone Mills (1953) 46 R. & I.T. 559 158
Pavia & Co. S. P. A. v. Thurmann-Nielsen [1951] W.N. 399; [1951] 2 T.L.R. 802; [1951] 2 All E.R. 866; [1951] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 398; affirmed [1952] 2 Q.B. 84; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 386; 96 S.J. 108; [1952] 1 All E.R. 592; [1952] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 153, C.A. . . . 631, 639, 640, 1393, 1398, 1400, 1404
Peake, In re. See Ex parte Harrison.
Pearson, Ex parte. See In re Wiltshire Iron Co.
Pearson v. Holden (1948) 65 R.P.C. 424 . . . . . 912, 913
Pearson v. Lambeth Borough Council [1950] 2 K.B. 548; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 1) 542, 114 J.P. 214; 94 S.J. 269; [1950] 1 All E.R. 682; 48 L.G.R. 587, C.A. 58, 60, 64
Peel's Release, In re [1921] 2 Ch. 218; 90 L.J.Ch. 369; 65 S.J. 580 . . 39, 701
Pellars v. Neptune Marine Insurance Co. (1879) 49 L.J.Q.B. 158; 42 L.T. 86; 5 C.P.D. 34; 28 W.R. 405; 4 Asp.M.L.C. 213, C.A. 143
Pennell v. Franklin. See In re White.
Perfection Soap case. See In re Joseph Crosfield & Sons.
Performing Right Society v. Hammond's Bradford Brewery Co. [1934] Ch. 121; 50 T.L.R. 16; 103 L.J.Ch. 220; 150 L.T. 116, C.A. . . . 1488
Perrins v. Perrins [1951] 2 K.B. 414; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 845; 115 J.P. 346; 95 S.J. 304; [1951] 1 All E.R. 1075; 1 P. & C.R. 457; 49 L.G.R. 593, D.C. . 1360
Perry v. Eames [1891] 1 Ch. 658; 60 L.J.Ch. 345; 64 L.T. 498; 7 T.L.R. 297, 39 W.R. 602 89
Perry v. Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States of America (1929) 45 T.L.R. 468 153
Petrofina S.A. of Brussels v. Compagnia Italiana Transporto Oli Minerali of Genoa (1937) 53 T.L.R. 650; 42 Com.Cas. 286, C.A. 974
Philippart v. William Whiteley, Philippart's Trade Mark "Trabelb," In re [1908] 2 Ch. 274; 77 L.J.Ch. 650; 99 L.T. 291; 24 T.L.R. 707; 25 R.P.C. 565 118
Phillips v. Eyre (1869) L.R. 4 Q.B. 225 153
Pickering v. Stephenson (1872) L.R. 14 Eq. 322; 41 L.J.Ch. 436; 26 L.T. 606; 20 W.R. 654 1009
Pickersgill (William) & Sons v. London & Provincial Marine & General Insurance Co. [1912] 3 K.B. 614; 82 L.J.K.B. 130; 107 L.T. 806; 28 T.L.R. 591; 57 S.J. 11; 12 Asp.M.L.C. 263; 18 Com.Cas. 1 143
Pickett v. Pickett (orse. Moss) [1951] P. 267; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 583; [1951] 1 All E.R. 614 1538
Piercy v. S. Mills & Co. [1920] 1 Ch. 77; 88 L.J.Ch. 509; 122 L.T. 20; 35 T.L.R. 703; 64 S.J. 35 5
Pigott and Great Western Railway Co., In re (1881) 18 Ch.D. 146; 50 L.J.Ch. 679; 44 L.T. 792; 29 W.R. 727 43

PAGE

Pike v. Eyre (1829) 9 B. & C. 909; 4 Man. & Ry.K.B. 661; 8 L.J.(o.s.)K.B. 69; 109 E.R. 338 630
Pirie (Alexander) & Sons Ld.'s Application, In re (1933) 149 L.T. 199; 50 R.P.C. 147, H.L. 555
Platt, In re, Sykes v. Dawson [1916] 2 Ch. 563; 86 L.J.Ch. 114; 115 L.T. 524; 61 S.J. 10 1377
Pointer v. Norwich Assessment Committee [1922] 2 K.B. 471; 128 L.T. 48; sub nom. Norwich Assessment Committee v. Pointer, 91 L.J.K.B. 891; 86 J.P. 149; 67 S.J. 98; 20 L.G.R. 673; 2 B.R.A. 965, C.A. . . 886, 888, 890, 891
Pontifex v. Jolly (1839) 9 C. & P. 202, N.P. 912
Portman Building Society v. Young [1951] W.N. 10; [1951] 2 T.L.R. 369; 95 S.J. 61; [1951] 1 All E.R. 191, C.A. 2
Potter v. Brown (1804) 5 East. 124; 1 Smith K.B. 351; 102 E.R. 1016 . . . 153
Potts' Executors v. Inland Revenue Commissioners [1951] A.C. 443; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 152; [1951] 1 All E.R. 76; [1950] T.R. 379; 44 R. & I.T. 136; T.C. Leaflet No. 1538, H.L. 1186
Pratt v. Pratt [1939] A.C. 417; 55 T.L.R. 910; 108 L.J.P. 97; 161 L.T. 49; 83 S.J. 730; [1939] 3 All E.R. 437, H.L. 1533
Price v. Price [1951] P. 413; 115 J.P. 468n.; 95 S.J. 560; [1951] 2 All E.R. 580n 1391–3
Princess Paley Olga v. Weisz [1929] 1 K.B. 718; 98 L.J.K.B. 465; 141 L.T. 207; 45 T.L.R. 365; 73 S.J. 283, C.A. 147, 152, 1113
Principal Secretary of State for War v. Richardson, In re [1903] 2 I.R. 192 . . 1479
Pritchard's Settled Estate, In re. See In re Gordon and Adams' Contract.
Public Trustee v. Armstrong. See In re Park.
Public Trustee v. Aspinall. See In re Smith.
Public Trustee v. Bell. See In re Batty.
Public Trustee v. Falconer. See In re Thomas.
Public Trustee v. Jones. See In re Jones.
Public Trustee v. South West Middlesex Hospital Management Committee. See In re Glass.

Quelch v. Collett [1948] 1 K.B. 478; [1948] L.J.R. 956; 64 T.L.R. 108; 112 J.P. 167; 92 S.J. 98; [1948] 1 All E.R. 252; 46 L.G.R. 153 1337
Quelin v. Moissson (1828) 1 Knapp 265; 12 E.R. 320, P.C. 153

R. v. Abbot [1897] 2 I.R. 362 1478
R. v. Alexander (1913) 109 L.T. 745; 23 Cox C.C. 604; 9 Cr.App.R. 139; 77 J.P.J. 483, C.C.A. 1122
R. v. Atkinson (1934) 24 Cr.App.R. 123, C.C.A. 217
R. v. Barker [1924] N.Z.L.R. 865 439
R. v. Barlow (1693) 2 Salk. 609; 91 E.R. 516 223
R. v. Baskerville [1916] 2 K.B. 658; 86 L.J.K.B. 28; 115 L.T. 453; 80 J.P. 446; 60 S.J. 696; 12 Cr.App.R. 81; 25 Cox C.C. 524, C.C.A. 217
R. v. Bassey (1931) 47 T.L.R. 222; 75 S.J. 121; 22 Cr.App.R. 160, C.C.A. . . 65
R. v. Bath Licensing Justices, Ex parte Chittenden, 116 J.P. 569; [1952] 2 All E.R. 700 206
R. v. Bennett (1913) 9 Cr.App.R. 225; sub nom. R. v. Newton and Bennett, 109 L.T. 747 65
R. v. Blakemore (1948) 33 Cr.App.R. 49 . . . . . 933, 934
R. v. Bradford (1911) 105 L.T. 752; 28 T.L.R. 26; 76 J.P. 46; 22 Cox C.C. 627; 7 Cr.App.R. 42, C.C.A. 532
R. v. Cameron and Robertson, unreported 439
R. v. Carr (1909) 2 Cr.App.R. 317, C.C.A. 217
R. v. Cheeseman (1862) Le. & Ca. 140; 31 L.J.M.C. 289; 5 L.T. 717; 26 J.P. 163; 8 Jur.(N.S.) 143; 10 W.R. 255; 9 Cox C.C. 100, C.C.R. 251
R. v. Christ [1951] W.N. 337; [1951] 2 T.L.R. 85; 115 J.P. 410; 95 S.J. 531; [1951] 2 All E.R. 254n.; 35 Cr.App.R. 76; 49 L.G.R. 547, C.C.A. 680
R. v. Christian (1913) 78 J.P. 112; 23 Cox C.C. 541 126
R. v. Clouter and Heath (1859) 8 Cox C.C. 237 934
R. v. Commissioners under Boiler Explosions Act, 1882 [1891] 1 Q.B. 703; 7 T.L.R. 371; 60 L.J.Q.B. 544; 64 L.T. 674; 39 W.R. 440, C.A. . . . 1486
R. v. Coney (1882) 8 Q.B.D. 534; 51 L.J.M.C. 66; 46 L.T. 307; 46 J.P. 404; 30 W.R. 678; 15 Cox C.C. 46, C.C.R. 1170, 1175, 1180
R. v. Cook (1790) 3 T.R. 519; 100 E.R. 710 . . . . . 89, 93, 97
R. v. Cope (1921) 38 T.L.R. 243; 86 J.P. 78; 66 S.J. 406; 16 Cr.App.R. 77, C.C.A. 439–42
R. v. Copestake [1927] 1 K.B. 468; 96 L.J.K.B. 65; 136 L.T. 100; 90 J.P. 191; 24 L.G.R. 562, C.A. 1491
R. v. Creamer [1919] 1 K.B. 564; 88 L.J.K.B. 594; 120 L.T. 575; 35 T.L.R. 281; 83 J.P. 120; 26 Cox C.C. 393; 14 Cr.App.R. 19, C.C.A. 896
R. v. Crossan [1939] N.I. 104 1126

PAGE

R. v. Cullum (1873) L.R. 2 C.C.R. 28; 42 L.J.M.C. 64; 28 L.T. 571; 37 J.P. 422; 21 W.R. 687; 12 Cox C.C. 469, C.C.R. 570
R. v. Dean (1924) 18 Cr.App.R. 133, C.C.A. 532
R. v. Dent (1843) 1 Car. & K. 97 1407
R. v. Donovan [1934] 2 K.B. 498; 103 L.J.K.B. 683; 152 L.T. 46; 50 T.L.R. 566; 98 J.P. 409; 78 S.J. 601; 32 L.G.R. 439; 25 Cr.App.R. 1; 30 Cox C.C. 187, C.C.A. 1170, 1175, 1181
R. v. Eagleton (1855) Dears.C.C. 376, 515; 24 L.J.M.C. 158; 26 L.T.(o.s.) 7; 19 J.P. 546; 1 Jur.(N.S.) 940; 4 W.R. 17; 3 C.L.R. 1145; 6 Cox C.C. 559, C.C.R. 250–2, 439, 440
R. v. Eden. See R. v. Melvin.
R. v. Electricity Commissioners, Ex parte London Electricity Joint Committee Co. (1920) [1924] 1 K.B. 171; 93 L.J.K.B. 390; 130 L.T. 164; 39 T.L.R. 715; 88 J.P. 13; 68 S.J. 188; 21 L.G.R. 719, C.A. 733
R. v. Evans [1915] 2 K.B. 762; 84 L.J.K.B. 1603; 113 L.T. 508; 31 T.L.R. 410; 79 J.P. 415; 59 S.J. 496; 25 Cox C.C. 72; 11 Cr.App.R. 178, C.C.A. . . 532
R. v. Farid. See R. v. Mohamed Farid.
R. v. Flintan (1830) 1 B. & Ad. 227; 9 L.T.(o.s.)M.C. 33; 109 E.R. 771 . . . 445
R. v. Gale (1876) 2 Q.B.D. 141; 46 L.J.M.C. 134; 35 L.T. 526; 41 J.P. 119; 13 Cox C.C. 340, C.C.R. 570, 571
R. v. Grondkowski [1946] K.B. 369; 115 L.J.K.B. 289; 175 L.T. 32; 62 T.L.R. 329; 110 J.P. 193; 90 S.J. 297; [1946] 1 All E.R. 559; 44 L.G.R. 158; 31 Cr. App.R. 116, C.C.A. 934
R. v. Hicklin (1868) L.R. 3 Q.B. 360; 37 L.J.M.C. 89; 16 W.R. 801; 11 Cox C.C. 19; sub nom. R. v. Wolverhampton Recorder, In re Scott v. Wolverhampton JJ., 18 L.T. 395; sub nom. Scott v. Wolverhampton JJ., 32 J.P. 533 . 1138, 1139
R. v. Income Tax General Commissioners, Ex parte Gibbs. See Income Tax Commissioners for City of London v. Gibbs.
R. v. Industrial Disputes Tribunal, Ex parte Technaloy [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1418; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1338 353
R. v. International Trustee for the Protection of Bondholders Aktiengesellschaft [1937] A.C. 500; 106 L.J.K.B. 236; 156 L.T. 352; 53 T.L.R. 507; 81 S.J.; 316; [1937] 2 All E.R. 164; 42 Com.Cas. 246, H.L. 154
R. v. Jameson [1896] 2 Q.B. 425; 65 L.J.M.C. 218; 75 L.T. 77; 12 T.L.R. 551; 60 J.P. 662; 18 Cox C.C. 392 150
R. v. Jennings (1913) 7 Cr.App.R. 242, C.C.A. 217
R. v. Johnson [1909] 1 K.B. 439; 78 L.J.K.B. 290; 100 L.T. 464; 25 T.L.R. 229; 73 J.P. 135; 53 S.J. 288; 22 Cox C.C. 43; 2 Cr.App.R. 13, C.C.A. . . . 532
R. v. Kritz [1950] K.B. 82; [1949] L.J.R. 1535; 65 T.L.R. 505; 113 J.P. 449; 93 S.J. 648; [1949] 2 All E.R. 406; 33 Cr.App.R. 169; 48 L.G.R. 88, C.C.A. . 65
R. v. Kuzwayo [1949] 3 S.A.L.R.(A.D.) 761 229
R. v. Langmead (1864) Le. & Ca. 427; 10 L.T. 350; 28 J.P. 343; 9 Cox C.C. 464, C.C.R. 678
R. v. Lee Kun [1916] 1 K.B. 337; 85 L.J.K.B. 515; 114 L.T. 421; 32 T.L.R. 225; 80 J.P. 166; 60 S.J. 158; 11 Cr.App.R. 293; 25 Cox C.C. 304, C.C.A. . . 217
R. v. Leicester Justices (1827) 7 B. & C. 6; 9 Dow. & Ry.K.B. 772; 4 Dow. & Ry. M.C. 518; 108 E.R. 627 223
R. v. Lesbini [1914] 3 K.B. 1116; 84 L.J.K.B. 1102; 112 L.T. 175; 24 Cox C.C. 516; 11 Cr.App.R. 7, C.C.A. 1122
R. v. Lewis, 26 Cr.App.R. 110; 158 L.T. 454; 102 J.P. 35; [1937] 4 All E.R. 360; 36 L.G.R. 15; 31 Cox. C.C. 19, C.C.A. 216, 218
R. v. London County Justices and London County Council [1893] 2 Q.B. 476, 482, C.A. 223
R. v. Loughlin [1951] W.N. 325; 95 S.J. 516; 35 Cr.App.R. 69; 49 L.G.R. 545; C.C.A. 678, 680
R. v. Lovitt [1912] A.C. 212; 81 L.J.P.C. 140; 105 L.T. 650; 28 T.L.R. 41, P.C. 145, 146
R. v. McCarthy [1954] 2 W.L.R. 1044; 98 S.J. 356; [1954] 2 All E.R. 262; 38 Cr. App.R. 74, C.C.A. 1121
R. v. Mackenzie & Higginson (1910) 27 T.L.R. 152; 75 J.P. 159; 6 Cr.App.R. 64, C.C.A. 126
R. v. Manchester Legal Aid Committee, Ex parte Brand (R. A.) & Co. [1952] 2 Q.B. 413; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 476; 96 S.J. 183; [1952] 1 All E.R. 480, D.C. 1354, 1357
R. v. Melvin [1953] 1 Q.B. 481; [1953] 2 W.L.R. 274; 117 J.P. 95; 97 S.J. 99; [1953] 1 All E.R. 294; 37 Cr.App.R. 1, C.C.A. 680
R. v. Metropolitan Police Commissioner, Ex parte Parker [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1150; 117 J.P. 440; 97 S.J. 590; [1953] 2 All E.R. 717, D.C. . . . 731, 733, 736
R. v. Middlesex Quarter Sessions, Ex parte Director of Public Prosecutions [1950] 2 K.B. 589; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 1) 804; 114 J.P. 276; 94 S.J. 353; [1950] 1 All E.R. 916; 34 Cr.App.R. 112; 48 L.G.R. 414, D.C. 533

PAGE

R. v. Milk Marketing Board, Ex parte North (1934) 50 T.L.R. 559; 78 S.J. 536, D.C. 732 732
R. v. Mohamed Farid (1945) 173 L.T. 68; sub nom. R. v. Farid, 30 Cr.App.R. 168, C.C.A. 216, 218
R. v. Ndhlonu [1945] S.A.L.R.(A.D.) 369 229
R. v. Newton and Bennett. See R. v. Bennett.
R. v. Norfolk Justices, Ex parte Director of Public Prosecutions [1950] 2 K.B. 558; 94 S.J. 436; 34 Cr.App.R. 120; 48 L.G.R. 483; sub nom. R. v. South Greenhoe Justices, Ex parte Director of Public Prosecutions, 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 2) 452; 114 J.P. 312; [1950] 2 All E.R. 42, D.C. 532
R. v. Plummer [1902] 2 K.B. 339; 71 L.J.K.B. 805; 86 L.T. 836; 18 T.L.R. 659; 46 S.J. 587; 66 J.P. 647; 51 W.R. 137; 20 Cox C.C. 269, C.C.R. . . 933, 934
R. v. Roberts (1855) Dears. 539; 25 L.J.M.C. 17; 26 L.T.(o.s.) 126; 19 J.P. 789; 1 Jur(N.S.) 1094; 4 W.R. 128; 7 Cox C.C. 39, C.C.R. 439
R. v. Robinson [1915] 2 K.B. 342; 84 L.J.K.B. 1149; 113 L.T. 379; 79 J.P. 303; 31 T.L.R. 313; 59 S.J. 366; 34 Cox C.C. 726; 11 Cr.App.R. 124, C.C.A. . 439, 440
R. v. Rogers [1953] 1 Q.B. 311; [1953] 2 W.L.R. 52; 97 S.J. 30; [1953] 1 All E.R. 206, C.C.A. 464–6
R. v. Rotherham Licensing Justices, Ex parte Chapman, 160 L.T. 558; 55 T.L.R. 718; 103 J.P. 251; 83 S.J. 587; [1939] 2 All E.R. 710; 37 L.G.R. 433, D.C. . 206
R. v. Rudd (1948) 64 T.L.R. 240; 92 S.J. 206; 32 Cr.App.R. 138, C.C.A. . . 217
R. v. Sell (1840) 9 C. & P. 346 934
R. v. South Greenhoe Justices, Ex parte Director of Public Prosecutions. See R. v. Norfolk Justices.
R. v. Torquay Licensing Justices, Ex parte Brockman [1951] 2 K.B. 784; [1951] 2 T.L.R. 652; 115 J.P. 514; [1951] 2 All E.R. 656; 49 L.G.R. 733, D.C. . 206
R. v. Truelove (1880) 5 Q.B.D. 336; 49 L.J.M.C. 57; 42 L.T. 250; 44 J.P. 346; 28 W.R. 413; 14 Cox C.C. 408, D.C. 1002
R. v. Valachia [1945] S.A.L.R.(A.D.) 826 229
R. v. Vallett [1951] W.N. 4; 115 J.P. 103; 95 S.J. 91; [1951] 1 All E.R. 231; 34 Cr.App.R. 251; 49 L.G.R. 152, C.C.A. 532
R. v. Welsh (1869) 11 Cox C.C. 336 1122
R. v. Wilson (1839) 9 C. & P. 27 570
R. v. Wolverhampton Recorder, In re Scott. See R. v. Hicklin.
R. v. Woods (1930) 143 L.T. 311; 46 T.L.R. 401; 29 Cox C.C. 165; 22 Cr.App.R. 41, C.C.A. 251, 439, 440
R. (Urban District Council of Portadown) v. Armagh Chairman and Justices [1931] N.I. 209 . . . . . 262, 263
Raja Vyricherla Narayana Jajapatiraju v. Revenue Divisional Officer, Vizagapatam [1939] A.C. 302; 55 T.L.R. 563; 108 L.J.P.C. 51; 83 S.J. 336; [1939] 2 All E.R. 317, P.C. 1479
Randall v. Lithgow (1884) 12 Q.B.D. 525; 53 L.J.Q.B. 518; 50 L.T. 587; 32 W.R. 794 144
Ranger v. Great Western Railway Co. (1854) 5 H.L.Cas. 72; 24 L.T.(o.s.) 22; 18 Jur. 795; 10 E.R. 824, H.L. 973
Ransome v. Demolition and Construction Co. See Knight v. Same.
Read v. Read [1952] P. 119; [1951] 2 T.L.R. 1086, D.C. 600–2
Rederiaktiebolaget Transatlantic v. La Compagnie Française des Phosphates de L'Oceanie (1926) 136 L.T. 619; 17 Asp.M.L.C. 216; 32 Com.Cas. 126, C.A. . 657
Redfern, In re (1877) 6 Ch.D. 133; 47 L.J.Ch. 17; 25 W.R. 902; sub nom. Redfern v. Hall, 37 L.T. 241 1432
Redman v. Redman [1948] W.N. 94; [1948] 1 All E.R. 333, C.A. 927
Redpath v. Belfast and County Down Railway [1947] N.I. 167 . . . . 803, 805
Redpath v. London and North Eastern Railway Co., 1944 S.C. 154 . . . 587
Rees' Will Trusts, In re, Williams v. Hopkins [1950] Ch. 204; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 1) 23; [1949] 2 All E.R. 1003, C.A. 763, 768
Reeves v. Pope [1914] 2 K.B. 284; 83 L.J.K.B. 771; 110 L.T. 503; 58 S.J. 248, C.A. 1091
Regent's Canal Co. v. Ware (1857); 26 L.J.Ch. 566; 23 Beav. 575; 29 L.T.(o.s.) 274; 3 Jur.(N.S.) 924; 5 W.R. 617; 53 E.R. 226 . . . . . 43, 55
Regor Estates v. Wright [1951] 1 K.B. 689; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 242; 115 J.P. 61; 95 S.J. 106; [1951] 1 All E.R. 219; 49 L.G.R. 241, C.A. 825
Reid v. Stevenston (Stevenson) 1928 S.C. (Ct. of Sess.) 799; 1928 S.L.T. 566; 21 B.W.C.C. 576 841
Répertoire Opera Co., In re (1895) 2 Mans. 314; 39 S.J. 505 . . . 540, 542, 543
Reuter (R. J.) Co. v. Mulhens [1954] Ch. 50 ; [1953] 3 W.L.R. 789; 97 S.J. 762; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1160; 79 R.P.C. 235, C.A. 1246
Richards v. Cox [1943] 1 K.B. 139; 112 L.J.K.B. 135; 168 L.T. 313; 59 T.L.R. 123; 87 S.J. 92; [1942] 2 All E.R. 624, C.A. 947, 955
Richardson, In re, Richardson v. Richardson [1904] 2 Ch. 777; 73 L.J.Ch. 783; 91 L.T. 775; 48 S.J. 688; 53 W.R. 11 . . . . . 955, 957, 958, 962
Richardson v. Bank of England (1838) 4 My. & Cr. 165; 8 L.J.Ch. 1; 2 Jur. 911 . 1311
Richardson v. Fisher (1823) 1 Bing. 145 1492
Rimmer v. Rimmer [1953] 1 Q.B. 63; [1952] 2 T.L.R. 767; [1952] 2 All E.R. 863 . 626

PAGE

River Dee Drainage Board v. Hooson, Ex parte. See In re Ellwood.
Roberts v. Dorman Long & Co. [1953] 1 W.L.R. 942; 97 S.J. 487; [1953] 2 All E.R. 428; 51 L.G.R. 476, C.A. 259, 587, 1436, 1444
Roberts v. Hickman & Co. See Hickman & Co. v. Roberts.
Roberts v. Lewisham Borough Council. See Lewisham Borough Council v. Roberts.
Roberts v. Smith (1859) 4 H. & N. 315; 28 L.J.Ex. 164; 32 L.T.(o.s.) 320; 157 E.R. 861 403
Robertson v. Rosenberg [1951] W.N. 97; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 417; 115 J.P. 128; 95 S.J. 138; 49 L.G.R. 210, D.C. 378, 379
Robin & Rambler Coaches Ld. v. Turner [1947] 2 All E.R. 284 1296
Robinson, In re, Wright v. Tugwell [1923] 2 Ch. 332; 92 L.J.Ch. 340; 129 L.T. 527; 39 T.L.R. 509; 67 S.J. 619 701
Roe v. Minister of Health [1954] 2 Q.B. 66; [1954] 2 W.L.R. 915; 98 S.J. 319; [1954] 2 All E.R. 131, C.A.; affirming [1954] 1 W.L.R. 128; 98 S.J. 30 418, 1384
Roe v. Russell [1928] 2 K.B. 117; 97 L.J.K.B. 290; 138 L.T. 253; 44 T.L.R. 278; 92 J.P. 81; 26 L.G.R. 145, C.A. 630
Rolfe v. Rolfe (1846) 15 Sim. 88; 1 Coop. temp. Cott. 87; 6 L.T.(o.s.) 518; 10 Jur. 61; 60 E.R. 550 818
Rose v. Watson (1864) 10 H.L.Cas. 672; 33 L.J.Ch. 385; 10 L.T. 106; 3 New Rep. 673; 10 Jur.(N.S.) 297; 12 W.R. 585; 11 E.R. 1187, H.L. 787, 791
Rothermere, In re, Mellons, Basden & Co. v. Coutts & Co. [1945] 1 Ch. 72; 115 L.J.Ch. 34; 172 L.T. 98; 61 T.L.R. 69; 88 S.J. 437; [1944] 2 All E.R. 593 . 243
Row v. Jagg. See In re Hoyles.
Rowland v. Divall [1923] 2 K.B. 500; 92 L.J.K.B. 1041; 129 L.T. 757; 67 S.J. 703, C.A. 1286, 1294
Rownson, Drew and Clydesdale v. Inland Revenue Commissioners (1931) 16 T.C. 595 1207
Royal College of Surgeons of England v. National Provincial Bank [1952] A.C. 631; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 978; 96 S.J. 280; [1952] 1 All E.R. 984; 45 R. & I.T. 615, H.L. 547, 550
Royal Exchange Assurance v. The Liquidator. See In re Banque des Marchands de Moscou (Koupetschesky).
Royal Exchange Assurance Corporation v. Walker. See In re Walker's Settlement.
Royal Victoria Hospital v. Wheatley (unreported) 80, 81, 82, 86
Rush v. Matthews [1926] 1 K.B. 492; 95 L.J.K.B. 409; 134 L.T. 571; 42 T.L.R. 287; 70 S.J. 425; 24 L.G.R. 201, C.A. 825, 826
Russell v. Russell [1895] P. 315; 64 L.J.P. 105; 73 L.T. 295; 11 T.L.R. 579; 39 S.J. 722; 44 W.R. 213, C.A. 1392
Russell v. Scott [1948] A.C. 422; [1948] L.J.R. 1265; 64 T.L.R. 297; 92 S.J. 424; [1948] 2 All E.R. 1; [1948] T.R. 205; 41 R. & I.T. 281; 30 T.C. 375, H.L. 1062, 1505
Russian and English Bank v. Baring Brothers & Co. [1936] A.C. 405; 105 L.J.Ch. 174; 154 L.T. 602; 52 T.L.R. 393; [1936] 1 All E.R. 505; [1937] B. & C.R. 28, H.L. 1112
Russian Bank for Foreign Trade, In re, [1933] Ch. 745; 102 L.J.Ch. 309; 149 L.T. 65; 49 T.L.R. 253; 77 S.J. 197; [1933] B. & C.R. 157 . 156, 1108, 1113
Russian Commercial and Industrial Bank v. Comptoir d'Escompte de Mulhouse [1923] 2 K.B. 630; 92 L.J.K.B. 1053; 129 L.T. 706; 39 T.L.R. 561; 68 S.J. 12, C.A.; reversed on appeal [1925] A.C. 112; 40 T.L.R. 837 . . 147
Russian Commercial and Industrial Bank v. Comptoir d'Escompte de Mulhouse [1923] 2 K.B. 674 (Note) 1111
Rustomjce v. The Queen (1876) 1 Q.B.D. 487 89
Ruther v. Ruther [1903] 2 K.B. 270; 72 L.J.K.B. 826; 67 J.P. 359; 47 S.J. 640; 52 W.R. 154 D.C. 602
Rutter v. Palmer [1922] 2 K.B. 87; 91 L.J.K.B. 657; 127 L.T. 419; 38 T.L.R. 555; 66 S.J. 576, C.A. 1167
Ryan v. Fildes [1938] 3 All E.R. 517 . . . . . 947, 949

S.A. Maritime et Commerciale of Geneva v. Anglo-Iranian Oil Co. [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1379; 97 S.J. 797 493
Saccharin Corporation v. Chemische Fabrik von Heyden Aktiengesellshaft [1911] 2 K.B. 516; 80 L.J.K.B. 1117; 104 L.T. 886, C.A. 146
Sadler, Ex parte. See In re Whelan.
St. Aubyn v. Attorney-General [1952] A.C. 15; [1951] 2 All E.R. 473, H.L. . 89
St. Bartholomew's Hospital (Governors) v. Cambden. See In re Blow.
Salmen, In re, Salmen v. Bernstein (1912) 107 L.T. 108; 56 S.J. 632, C.A. 527, 529, 530
Salting, In re, Baillie-Hamilton v. Morgan [1932] 2 Ch. 57; 101 L.J.Ch. 305; 147 L.T. 432; 76 S.J. 344 1456
Salusbury v. Denton (1857) 3 K. & J. 529; 26 L.J.Ch. 851; 30 L.T.(o.s.) 63; 21 J.P. 726; 3 Jur.(N.S.) 740; 5 W.R. 865; 69 E.R. 1219 667

PAGE

Sanders v. Sanders (1881) 19 Ch.D. 373; 51 L.J.Ch. 276; 45 L.T. 637; 30 W.R. 280, C.A. 640
Sanders v. Sanders, unreported (1954) C.A. 927
Scarisbrick, In re, Cockshott v. Public Trustee [1951] Ch. 622; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 989; 95 S.J. 299; [1951] 1 All E.R. 822, C.A. 667
Schaffer v. Ross [1940] 1 K.B. 418; 109 L.J.K.B. 285; 162 L.T. 37; 56 T.L.R. 126; 83 S.J. 960; [1939] 4 All E.R. 363, C.A. 2
Schar, In re, Midland Bank Executor and Trustee Co. v. Damer [1951] Ch. 280; 94 S.J. 804; [1950] 2 All E.R. 1069 767
Schofield v. Bolton Corpn. (1910) 26 T.L.R. 230; 54 S.J. 213, C.A. . 1252, 1261
Scott v. Avery (1856) 5 H.L.C. 811; 25 L.J.Ex. 308; 28 L.T.(o.s.) 207; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 815; 4 W.R. 746; 10 E.R. 1121, H.L. 1005, 1010
Scott v. Scott [1951] P. 193; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 2) 1077; 94 S.J. 762; [1950] 2 All E.R. 1154, C.A. 535–7
Scott v. Wolverhampton JJ. See R. v. Hicklin.
Sedgwick Collins & Co. v. Rossia Insurance Co. of Petrograd [1926] 1 K.B. 1; 41 T.L.R. 663, C.A. 145, 156
Sexton v. Scaffolding (Great Britain) [1953] 1 Q.B. 153; [1952] 2 T.L.R. 986; 96 S.J. 850; [1952] 2 All E.R. 1085; 51 L.G.R. 41, C.A. . 346, 348, 350, 351
Shackleton v. Greenhalgh [1951] 1 K.B. 725; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 361; 95 S.J. 60; [1950] 2 All E.R. 1223, C.A. 630, 634
Shacklock v. Ethorpe, 55 T.L.R. 895; 83 S.J. 670; [1939] 3 All E.R. 372, H.L. 1102, 1104
Sharkey v. Wernher [1954] 3 W.L.R. 367; 98 S.J. 556; [1954] 2 All E.R. 753; 47 R. & I.T. 545; T.C. Leaflet No. 1707; sub nom. Wernher v. Sharkey [1954] T.R. 273; 33 A.T.C. 284, C.A. 1505
Sharp v. Wakefield [1891] A.C. 713; 60 L.J.M.C. 73; 64 L.T. 180; 7 T.L.R. 389; 55 J.P. 197; 39 W.R. 561, C.A. 206
Shave v. Rosner [1954] 2 Q.B. 113; [1954] 2 W.L.R. 1057; [1954] 2 All E.R. 280 1470
Sheard v. Mellor. See In re Lucas.
Shepherd v. Henderson (1881) 7 App.Cas. 49, H.L. 317
Sheppey v. Matthew T. Shaw & Co. [1952] W.N. 249; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 1272; 96 S.J. 326 . . . . . 503, 525
Sidney v. Sidney (1867) 17 L.T.(N.S.) 9 . . . . . 537, 538
Sifton v. Sifton [1938] A.C. 656; 107 L.J.P.C. 97; 159 L.T. 289; 54 T.L.R. 969; 82 S.J. 680; [1938] 3 All E.R. 435 959–61
Simpson v. Maurice's Executors (1929) 45 T.L.R. 581; 14 T.C. 580, C.A. . . 1201
Sinanide v. La Maison Kosmeo [1928] W.N. 164; 139 L.T. 365; 44 T.L.R. 574, C.A. 1491
Singer v. Williams [1921] 1 A.C. 41, 65; 36 T.L.R. 659; 7 T.C. 419, H.L. . . 89
Sion College, In re (1887) 57 L.T. 743; 3 T.L.R. 521, C.A. 1479
Slade, In re, Crewkerne United Breweries v. Slade [1921] 1 Ch. 160; 89 L.J.Ch. 556; 124 L.T. 232; 64 S.J. 668 . . . . . 1236, 1241
Slevin, In re, Sleven v. Hepburn [1891] 2 Ch. 236; 60 L.J.Ch. 439; 64 L.T. 311; 7 T.L.R. 394; 39 W.R. 578, C.A. 552
Smith, In re, Public Trustee v. Aspinall [1928] Ch. 915; 97 L.J.Ch. 441 . . 8
Smith, In re [1948] Ch. 49; [1949] L.J.R. 765; 63 T.L.R. 608; 91 S.J. 664; [1947] 2 All E.R. 708 . . . . . 1430, 1432
Smith v. Baker & Sons [1891] A.C. 325; 60 L.J.Q.B. 683; 65 L.T. 467; 7 T.L.R. 679; 55 J.P. 660; 40 W.R. 392, H.L. . 503, 837, 1346, 1351, 1436
Smith v. Baveystock & Co. [1945] 1 All E.R. 531, C.A. . . 195, 197, 198, 200, 201
Smith v. Hancock [1894] 2 Ch. 377; 63 L.J.Ch. 477; 70 L.T. 578; 10 T.L.R. 433; 58 J.P. 638; 38 S.J. 416; 42 W.R. 465; 7 R. 200, C.A. 818
Smith v. Incorporated Council of Law Reporting for England and Wales [1914] 3 K.B. 674; 83 L.J.K.B. 1721; 111 L.T. 848; 30 T.L.R. 588; 6 T.C. 477 . 1061
Smith v. Morris Motors and Harris [1950] 1 K.B. 194; 65 T.L.R. 642; 113 J.P. 521; 93 S.J. 694; [1949] 2 All E.R. 715; 47 L.G.R. 722, D.C. 454
Smith v. Stuart. See In re Stuart.
Smith v. Webster (1876) 3 Ch.D. 49; 45 L.J.Ch. 528; 35 L.T. 44; 40 J.P. 805; 24 W.R. 894, C.A. 636, 641
Smith (John) & Son v. Moore (Inspector of Taxes) [1921] 2 A.C. 13; 90 L.J. P.C. 149; 125 L.T. 481; 37 T.L.R. 613; 65 Sol.Jo. 492; 12 T.C. 266, H.L. 160, 1505
Smith's Estate, In re [1894] 1 I.R. 60 528
Solicitor of the Duchy of Cornwall v. Batten. See In the Estate of Wallace.
Solomon v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue (1933) 18 T.C. 227, C.A. . . . 1065
South Wales Aluminium Co. v. Neath Assessment Area Assessment Committee [1943] 2 All E.R. 587; 108 J.P. 45; 41 L.G.R. 247, D.C. . . . 373, 375
Spalding & Bros. v. A. W. Gamage [1915] W.N. 151; 84 L.J.Ch. 449; 31 T.L.R. 328; 32 R.P.C. 273, H.L. 488
Spanish Prospecting Co., In re [1911] 1 Ch. 92; 80 L.J.Ch. 210; 103 L.T. 609; 27 T.L.R. 76; 55 S.J. 63; 18 Mans. 91, C.A. 160

PAGE
Spencer's Will, In re (1887) 57 L.T. 519; 3 T.L.R. 822, C.A. 763
Spiller v. Maude (1881) 32 Ch.D. 158n. 701
Spillers' Ld.'s Application, In re (1953) 70 R.P.C. 51, C.A. 118
Squire v. Squire [1949] P. 51; [1948] L.J.R. 1345; 64 T.L.R. 371; 112 J.P. 319; 92 S.J. 323; [1948] 2 All E.R. 51; 46 L.G.R. 289, C.A. 1170
Srimati Bibhabati Devi v. Kumar Ramendra Narayan Roy [1946] A.C. 508; [1947] L.J.R. 26; 176 L.T. 209; 62 T.L.R. 549, P.C. 383
Stanley v. Compton [1951] 1 All E.R. 859, C.A. 680, 684
Stansfield v. Hobson (1853) 22 L.J.Ch. 657; 20 L.T.(o.s.) 301; 3 De G.M. & G. 620; 1 W.R. 216; 43 E.R. 244, L.JJ. 636, 640
Stapley v. Gypsum Mines [1952] 2 Q.B. 575; [1952] 1 All E.R. 1092, C.A. . 197
Stapley v. Gypsum Mines [1953] A.C. 663; [1953] 3 W.L.R. 279; 97 S.J. 486; [1953] 2 All E.R. 478, H.L. 265, 268, 585, 587, 588, 590, 1427
Starkey v. Eyres. See In re Deakin.
Steane's (Bournemouth), In re [1949] W.N. 490; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 1) 71; [1950] 1 All E.R. 21 . . . . . 540, 542–4
Stebbings v. Holst & Co. [1953] 1 W.L.R. 603; 97 S.J. 264; [1953] 1 All E.R. 925 1448
Stevens v. Railway Executive [1952] C.L.Y. 2419 587
Stevenson v. Glasgow Corpn., 1908 S.C. 1034; 45 Sc.W.R. 860; 16 S.W.T. 302 1252, 1261
Stevenson (Hugh) & Sons v. Aktiengesellschaft für Cartonnagen Industrie [1918] A.C. 239; 87 L.J.K.B. 416; 118 L.T. 126; 34 T.L.R. 206; 62 S.J. 290, H.L. 1246
Stimpson v. Standard Telephones and Cables [1940] 1 K.B. 342; 109 L.J.K.B. 315; 56 T.L.R. 90; 83 S.J. 941; 32 B.W.C.C. 253; sub nom. Stimson v. Standard Telephones and Cables, 161 L.T. 387; [1939] 4 All E.R. 225, C.A. 358
Stone (J. & F.) Lighting and Radio Co. v. Levitt [1947] A.C. 209; [1947] L.J.R. 65; 176 L.T. 1; 62 T.L.R. 737; [1946] 2 All E.R. 653, H.L. . 825
Stowell v. Railway Executive [1949] 2 K.B. 519; [1949] L.J.R. 1482; 65 T.L.R. 387; 93 S.J. 540; [1949] 2 All E.R. 193 59
Strathcona (Lord) v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 1929 S.C. 800 . . . 1189
Street v. British Electricity Authority [1952] 2 Q.B. 399; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 799; 96 S.J. 260; [1952] 1 All E.R. 679, C.A. 1015, 1073
Stringer v. Stringer [1952] P. 171; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 415; 116 J.P. 102; 96 S.J. 134; [1952] 1 All E.R. 373, D.C. 98, 104
Stuart, In re, Smith v. Stuart [1897] 2 Ch. 583; 66 L.J.Ch. 780; 77 L.T. 128; 41 S.J. 714; 46 W.R. 41 425
Suche (Joseph) & Co., In re (1875) 1 Ch.D. 48; 45 L.J.Ch. 12; 33 L.T. 774; 24 W.R. 184 1131
Sudeley (Lord) v. Attorney-General [1897] A.C. 11; 13 T.L.R. 38, H.L.; 66 L.J.Q.B. 21; 75 L.T. 398; 61 J.P. 420; 45 W.R. 305 1463
Sullivan v. Sullivan [1947] P. 50; 111 J.P. 27; 91 S.J. 28, D.C. 108
Sun Insurance Office v. Clark (Surveyor of Taxes) [1912] A.C. 443; 81 L.J. K.B. 488; 106 L.T. 438; 28 T.L.R. 303; 56 S.J. 378; 6 T.C. 59, H.L. 160, 171–3
Sussex Peerage Case (1844) 11 Cl. & Fin. 85; 6 St.Tr.(N.S.) 79; 8 Jur. 793; 8 E.R. 1034, H.L. 1407
Sutherland v. Administrator of German Property [1934] 1 K.B. 423; 103 L.J. K.B. 244; 150 L.T. 247; 50 T.L.R. 107, C.A. 145, 156
Sutherland Publishing Co. v. Caxton Publishing Co. [1936] Ch. 323; 105 L.J.Ch. 150; 154 L.T. 367; 52 T.L.R. 230; 80 S.J. 145; [1936] 1 All E.R. 177, C.A. 1085
Swan & Cleland's Graving Dock and Slipway Co. v. Maritime Insurance Co. and Croshaw [1907] 1 K.B. 116; 76 L.J.K.B. 160; 96 L.T. 839; 23 T.L.R. 101; 12 Com.Cas. 73; 10 Asp.M.L.C. 450 . . . . . 143, 144
Swiss Bank Corporation v. Boëhmische Industrial Bank [1923] 1 K.B. 673; 92 L.J.K.B. 600; 128 L.T. 809; 39 T.L.R. 179; 67 Sol.Jo. 423, C.A. . 145, 156

Talbot-Ponsonby's Estate, In re, Talbot-Ponsonby v. Talbot-Ponsonby, 54 T.L.R. 33; 81 S.J. 883; [1937] 4 All E.R. 309 . . . . . 955, 958, 959
Tallent v. Coldwell [1938] Ch. 653; 107 L.J.Ch. 230; 158 L.T. 347; 54 T.L.R. 564; 82 S.J. 294; [1938] 2 All E.R. 107 . . . . . 1085, 1088
Tallerman v. Dowsing Radiant Heat Co. [1900] 1 Ch. 1; 69 L.J.Ch. 46, C.A. . 488
Tamlin v. Hannaford [1950] K.B. 18; 65 T.L.R. 422; 93 S.J. 465; 154 E.G. 52, C.A. 89
Tattersall v. Drysdale [1935] 2 K.B. 174; 104 L.J.K.B. 511; 153 L.T. 75; 51 T.L.R. 405; 79 S.J. 418 . . . . . 947, 951
Taxation (Commissioner of) of the Commonwealth of Australia v. Squatting Investment Co. [1954] A.C. 182; [1954] 2 W.L.R. 186; 98 S.J. 90; [1954] 1 All E.R. 349; [1954] T.R. 37; 33 A.T.C. 38, P.C. 1207
Taylor, In re [1950] 2 All E.R. 446; In the Goods of Edwards-Taylor [1951] P. 24; sub nom. In the Estate of E.T. 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 2) 593 612
Taylor v. Brewer (1813) 1 M. & S. 290; 105 E.R. 108 . . . 402, 403, 405, 407

PAGE

Taylor v. Goodwin (1879) 4 Q.B.D. 228; 48 L.J.M.C. 104; 40 L.T. 458; 43 J.P. 653; 27 W.R. 489, D.C. 1486
Taylor v. Grange (1880) 15 Ch. D. 165; 49 L.J.Ch. 794; 43 L.T. 233, C.A. . . 1491
Taylor v. Great Eastern Railway Co. [1901] 1 K.B. 774; 70 L.J.K.B. 499; 84 L.T. 770; 17 T.L.R. 394; 45 S.J. 381; 49 W.R. 431; 6 Com.Cas. 121 . 1131
Taylor v. Green (R. & H.) and Silley Weir (1950) 84 Ll.L.Rep. 570 . . . 1015
Taylor v. Oakes, Roncoroni & Co. (1922) 127 W.T. 267; 38 T.L.R. 517; 66 S.J. 556; 27 Com.Cas. 261. C.A. 1278
Taylor v. Saycell [1950] W.N. 479; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 2) 842; 114 J.P. 574; 94 S.J. 705; [1950] 2 All E.R. 887 . . . . . 1337, 1339
Taylor v. Sims and Sims, 167 L.T. 414; 58 T.L.R. 339; 86 S.J. 312; [1942] 2 All E.R. 375 . . . . . 721–6, 728
Taylor v. Stibbert (1794) 2 Ves.J. 437; 30 E.R. 713, L.C. 1091
Technaloy, Ex parte. See R. v. Industrial Disputes Tribunal.
Tempest v. Lord Camoys (1882) 21 Ch.D. 571; 51 L.J.Ch. 785; 48 L.T. 13; 31 W.R. 326, C.A. 8
Templeton v. William Parkin & Co. (1929) 140 L.T. 519; 22 B.W.C.C. 110, C.A. 907, 910
Tendring Union v. Woolwich Union [1923] 1 K.B. 121; 92 L.J.K.B. 33; 127 L.T. 551; 36 T.L.R. 512; 86 J.P. 163; 20 L.G.R. 519, D.C. 80. 82, 86
Thames and Mersey Marine Insurance Co. v. Societa di Navigazione a Vapore del Lloyd Austriaco (1914) 1 K.B. 715; 111 L.T. 97; 30 T.L.R. 475; 12 Asp. M.L.C. 491, C.A. 146
Third National Bank of Chicago v. Cosby (1877) 41 Upper Can.Q.B. 402; (1878) 43 Upper Can.Q.B. 58 1407
Thomas, In re, Public Trustee v. Falconer [1946] Ch. 36; 115 L.J.Ch. 145; 173 L.T. 365; 62 T.L.R. 23; 89 S.J. 565; [1945] 2 All E.R. 586 . . . 243
Thomas v. Attorney-General. See In re Welsh Hospital (Netley) Fund.
Thomas v. Jones (1864) 5 B. & S. 916; 5 New Rep. 121; 34 L.J. M.C. 45; 11 L.T. 450; 29 J.P. 55; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 306; 13 W.R. 154; 122 E.R. 1071 . . 301, 302
Thompson v. Earthy [1951] 2 K.B. 596; [1951] 2 T.L.R. 82; 115 J.P. 407; 95 S.J. 531; [1951] 2 All E.R. 235; 49 L.G.R. 647 . . . . . 626, 627
Thompson v. Milk Marketing Board [1952] 2 Q.B. 817; [1952] 2 T.L.R. 231; 116 J.P. 473; [1952] 2 All E.R. 344; 45 R. & I.T. 454, C.A. 1323
Thomson v. South Eastern Railway Co. (1882) 9 Q.B.D. 320 . . . . 911, 913
Thornhill, In re, Thornhill v. Nixon [1904] W.N. 112, C.A. 5, 7, 9
Tilling (Thomas) v. Dick, Kerr & Co. [1905] 1 K.B. 562; 74 L.J.K.B. 359; 92 L.T. 731; 21 T.L.R. 281; 69 J.P. 172; 49 S.J. 299; 53 W.R. 380; 3 L.G.R. 369 420, 422
Timmins v. Timmins [1953] 1 W.L.R. 757; 97 S.J. 419; [1953] 2 All E.R. 187 . 1392
Todd, In re, Shand v. Kidd (1854) 19 Beav. 582; 52 E.R. 476 1407
Tomalin v. Pearson (S.) & Son [1909] 2 K.B. 61; 78 L.J.K.B. 863; 100 L.T. 685; 25 T.L.R. 477; 2 B.W.C.C. 1, C.A. 150
Trade Marks Nos. 224. 722, 230, 405 & 230, 407. See In re H. N. Brock & Co.
Trade Marks Registrar v. W. & G. du Cros [1913] A.C. 624; 83 L.J.Ch. 1; 109 L.T. 687; 29 T.L.R. 772; sub nom. Du Cros' Application, Registrar of Trade Marks v. Du Cros 57 S.J. 728; 30 R.P.C. 660, H.L. . . . 557, 562
Trenchard, In re, Trenchard v. Trenchard [1902] 1 Ch. 378; 71 L.J.Ch. 178; 86 L.T. 196; 50 W.R. 266; 46 S.J. 231 1453
Try v. Johnson. See Johnson v. Try.
Tulip v. Tulip [1951] P. 378; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 1056; 95 S.J. 318; [1951] 2 All E.R. 91, C.A. 103, 104, 443, 444, 738, 740, 742, 743, 744, 745
Turley v. Mackay [1944] Ch. 37; 169 L.T. 90; 59 T.L.R. 273; 87 S.J. 182; [1943] 2 All E.R. 1 791
Turner v. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Pictures [1950] W.N. 83; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 1) 342; 94 S.J. 145; 1 All E.R. 449, H.L. 67, 69, 72, 74
Turnill v. Crawley (1849) 13 Q.B. 197; 18 L.J.Q.B. 155; 12 L.T.(o.s.) 398; 13 J.P. 747; 13 Jur. 878; 116 E.R. 1238 1102
Twentyman v. Simpson. See In re Wilson.
Tyrrell v. Painton [1894] P. 151; 70 L.T. 453; 42 W.R. 343; 6 R. 540, C.A. . 255

University College, Oxford v. Secretary of State for Air [1938] 1 K.B. 648; 54 T.L.R. 258; 107 L.J.K.B. 237; 159 L.T. 31; 82 S.J. 16; [1938] 1 All E.R. 69, D.C. 1479
University of London Medical Sciences Institute Fund, In re, Fowler v. Attorney-General [1909] 2 Ch. 1; 78 L.J.Ch. 562; 100 L.T. 423; 25 T.L.R. 358; 53 S.J. 302, C.A. 17, 707, 716, 717, 720
Unwin v. Hanson [1891] 2 Q.B. 115; 60 L.J.Q.B. 531; 65 L.T. 511; 7 T.L.R. 488; 55 J.P. 662; 39 W.R. 587, C.A. 325
Usher's Wiltshire Brewery v. Bruce (Surveyor of Taxes) [1915] A.C. 433; 84 L.J.K.B. 417; 112 L.T. 651; 31 T.L.R. 104; 6 T.C. 399, H.L. . . . 160

PAGE

Utting (B. G.) & Co. v. Hughes (Inspector of Taxes) [1940] A.C. 463; 109 L.J.K.B. 532; 162 L.T. 339; 56 T.L.R. 495; 84 S.J. 392; [1940] 2 All E.R. 76; 23 T.C. 174, H.L. 160

Vallambrosa Rubber Co. v. Farmer (Surveyor of Taxes) (1910) 5 T.C. 529 . . 1061
Vander Donckt v. Thellusson (1849) 8 C.B. 812; 19 L.J.C.P. 12; 14 L.T.(o.s.) 253, 137 E.R. 727 1406–8
Van Laun, In re. Ex parte Chatterton [1907] 2 K.B. 23; 76 L.J.K.B. 644; 97 L.T. 69; 23 T.L.R. 384; 51 S.J. 344; 14 Mans. 91, C.A. . . 1236, 1242
Venables v. Department of Agriculture for Scotland 1932 S.C. 573 . . . 1478
Venables v. Morris (1797) 7 Term Rep. 342; 101 E.R. 1009 497
Venn v. Tedesco [1926] 2 K.B. 227; 95 L.J.K.B. 866; 135 L.T. 108; 42 T.L.R. 478; 90 J.P. 185; 70 S.J. 709; 24 L.G.R. 496 421
Verey v. Gape. See In re Gape.
Vestey's Settlement, In re [1951] Ch. 209; [1950] 2 All E.R. 891, C.A. . 838
Vexatious Actions Act, 1896, In re. In re Boaler [1915] 1 K.B. 21; 83 L.J.K.B. 1629; 111 L.T. 497; 30 T.L.R. 580; 58 S.J. 634; 24 Cox, C.C. 335; 78 J.P.Jo. 280, C.A. 848
Vigneux v. Canadian Performing Right Society [1945] A.C. 108; 61 T.L.R. 193; 89 S.J. 117; [1945] 1 All E.R. 432 1486
Vincent v. Southern Railway Co. [1927] A.C. 430; 96 L.J.K.B. 507; 136 L.T. 513; 71 S.J. 34, H.L. 197, 201, 454, 587
Voller v. Portsmouth Corporation (1947) 203 L.T.J. 264 136
Von Siemens v. Mannesmann Tube Co. See In re Mannesmann Tube Co.

Walden, (Lord Howarde de). See Howard de Walden.
Walford v. Narin [1948] 2 K.B. 176; [1948] L.J.R. 1540; [1948] 2 All E.R. 85 638
Walker v. Bletchley Flettons [1937] 1 All E.R. 170 . . . . . 391, 454
Walker (A. W.) & Co. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners [1920] 3 K.B. 648; 90 L.J.K.B. 287; 12 T.C. 297 . . . . . 1030, 1037–9
Walker & Slater v. Friary Hotel (Derby). See Gee, Walker & Slater v. Friary Hotel (Derby).
Walker Property Investments (Brighton) v. Walker (1947) 177 L.T. 204, C.A. 617
Walker's Settlement, In re, Royal Exchange Assurance Corporation v. Walker [1935] Ch. 567; 104 L.J.Ch. 274; 153 L.T. 66; 51 T.L.R. 389; 79 S.J. 362, C.A. 28, 31
Wall v. London and Northern Assets Corporation [1898] 2 Ch. 469; 67 L.J.Ch. 596; 79 L.T. 249; 14 T.L.R. 547; 47 W.R. 219, C.A. 31
Wallace, In the Estate of, Solicitor of the Duchy of Cornwall v. Batten [1952] 2 T.L.R. 925 255
Wallace v. Richards (Leicester). See Baker v. Market Harborough Industrial Co-operative Society.
Walsh v. National Coal Board, May 11, 1954 (unreported). 1429
Walsham v. Walsham [1949] P. 350; [1949] L.J.R. 1142; 93 S.J. 288; [1949] 1 All E.R. 774 1170
Ward v. Bates. See In re Brockbank.
Warrington v. Furhor (1807) 2 East. 242; 6 Esp. 89; 103 E.R. 334 . . . 617
Waters v. Eddison Steam Rolling Co. [1914] 3 K.B. 818; 30 T.L.R. 587; 83 L.J.K.B. 1550; 111 L.T. 805; 78 J.P. 327; 12 L.G.R. 1232, D.C. . . . 1488
Watson v. People's Refreshment House Association [1952] 1 K.B. 318; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 361; 96 S.J. 151; [1952] 1 All E.R. 289 1101–3
Watson Brothers v. Lothian (1902) 4 F. 795; 4 T.C. 441 801
Watson Brothers Shipping Co. v. Mysore Manganese Co. (1910) 102 L.T. 149; 26 T.L.R. 221; 54 S.J. 234; 11 Asp. M.L.C. 364; 15 Com.Cas. 159 . 650, 655, 657
Watt v. Hertfordshire County Council [1954] 1 W.L.R. 208; 98 S.J. 63; [1954] 1 All E.R. 141; 52 L.G.R. 46 . . . . . 835, 836
Way v. Latilla 81 S.J. 786; [1937] 3 All E.R. 759 . . . . . 406, 407
Weatherall & Co. v. Stone [1950] W.N. 572; sub nom. Wetherall & Co. v. Stone [1950] 2 All E.R. 1209; 155 E.G. 397, C.A. 480
Webster v. Higgin 92 S.J. 454; [1948] 2 All E.R. 127, C.A. 617
Weld-Blundell v. Stephens [1919] 1 K.B. 520; 88 L.J.K.B. 689; 120 L.T. 494; 35 T.L.R. 245; 63 S.J. 301, C.A. 947, 948
Welsh Hospital (Netley) Fund, In re, Thomas v. Attorney-General [1921] 1 Ch. 655; 90 L.J.Ch. 276; 124 L.T. 787; 65 S.J. 417 . . . . . 10, 17–9, 20, 547, 553, 707, 709, 712, 716, 720
West v. West [1954] P. 444; [1954] 3 W.L.R. 163; 98 S.J. 454; [1954] 2 All E.R. 505 1530
West Ham Corporation v. Markham (1953) 107 J.P. 24 . . . . . 262, 268
West Riding County Council v. Wilson [1941] 2 All E.R. 827 1155
West Tarring (Rector and Churchwardens), In re [1954] 1 W.L.R. 923n . 920, 922

PAGE

Western India Match Co. v. Lock [1946] K.B. 601; 62 T.L.R. 419; [1946] 2 All E.R. 227 421
Wheaton v. Maple & Co. [1893] 3 Ch. 48; 62 L.J.Ch. 963; 69 L.T. 208; 9 T.L.R. 559; 37 S.J. 615; 41 W.R. 677; 2 R. 549, C.A. 89
Whelan, In re, Ex parte Sadler (1878) 48 L.J.Bk. 43; 39 L.T. 361; 27 W.R. 156 . 1197
Whelan v. Dover Harbour Board (1934) 151 L.T. 288; 18 T.C. 555, C.A. . . . 1201
Whiffen v. Hartwright (1848) 11 Beav. 111; 11 L.T. (o.s.) 197; 50 E.R. 759 272, 273
Whimster & Co. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners (1925) 12 T.C. 813 . . . 160, 169–71
Whincup v. Joseph Woodhead & Sons (Engineers) (1950) 115 J.P. 97; [1951] 1 All E.R. 387 841
White, In re, Pennell v. Franklin [1898] 1 Ch. 297; 67 L.J.Ch. 139; 77 L.T. 793; 42 S.J. 200; 46 W.R. 247, affd. [1898] 2 Ch. 217, C.A. 528, 530
Whitelegg, In the Goods of, [1899] P. 267; 68 L.J.P. 97; 81 L.T. 234 . . . 1407
Whitley v. Whitley [1947] W.N. 132; 177 L.T. 360; 63 T.L.R. 289; [1947] 1 All E.R. 667, C.A.; affirming [1946] 2 All E.R. 726 1334
Whittall v. Kirby [1947] K.B. 194; [1947] L.J.R. 231; 175 L.T. 449; 62 T.L.R. 696; 111 J.P. 1; 90 S.J. 571; [1946] 2 All E.R. 552, D.C. . . 1124, 1127, 1136, 1139
Whitehorn Brothers v. Davison [1911] 1 K.B. 463; 80 L.J.K.B. 425; 104 L.T. 234, C.A. 1287, 1295
Wiggins v. Lavy (1928) 44 T.L.R. 721, C.A. 1012
Wilenkin v. The Liquidator. See In re Banque des Marchands de Moscou (Koupetschesky).
Wiles v. Maddison 168 L.T. 280; 107 J.P. 83; [1943] 1 All E.R. 315; 41 L.G.R. 110, D.C. 251
Wilkinson, In re, Ex parte Fowler [1905] 2 K.B. 713; 74 L.J.K.B. 969; 54 W.R. 157; 12 Mans. 377 . . . . . 179, 184, 185
Wilkinson v. Adam (1812–3) 1 V. & B. 422 1432
Willesden Urban District Council v. Morgan [1915] 1 K.B. 349; 84 L.J.K.B. 373; 112 L.T. 423; 31 T.L.R. 93; 79 J.P. 166; 59 S.J. 148; 13 L.G.R. 390; 24 Cox C.C. 546, D.C. 773
Williams v. Hopkins. See In re Rees' Will Trusts.
Williams v. Linnitt [1951] 1 K.B. 565; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 94; [1951] 1 All E.R. 278, C.A. 1101–3
Williams v. Muir [1943] A.C. 468; 112 L.J.P.C. 39; 1943 S.C. (H.L.) 47, H.L. 497, 500
Williams v. Williams [1921] P. 131; 90 L.J.P. 97; 124 L.T. 768; 37 T.L.R. 131; 65 S.J. 156 1392
Williams v. Williams & Nathan [1937] W.N. 208; 81 S.J. 435; [1937] 2 All E.R. 559, C.A. 1212, 1214–9
Williams & Co. Ld.'s Application, In re (1917) 86 L.J.Ch. 273; 116 L.T. 456; 33 T.L.R. 199; 61 S.J. 335; 34 R.P.C. 197, C.A. 118
Willshalgi and Davidge's Case (1586) 1 Leon. 41 1278
Wilmot v. Alton [1897] 1 Q.B. 17; 66 L.J.Q.B. 42; 75 L.T. 447; 13 T.L.R. 58; 45 W.R. 113; 4 Mans. 17, C.A. 179, 186, 187, 188
Wilson, Ex parte. See In re Athlumney.
Wilson, In re, Twentyman v. Simpson [1913] 1 Ch. 314; 82 L.J.Ch. 161; 108 L.T. 321; 57 S.J. 245 . . . . . 19, 20, 700, 709
Wilson v. Duguid (1883) 24 Ch.D. 244; 53 L.J.Ch. 52; 49 L.T. 124; 31 W.R. 945 . 663
Wilson v. Wilson [1903] P. 157; 72 L.J.P. 53; 89 L.T. 77 1407
Wilsons (Dunblane) v. Inland Revenue Commissioners [1952] T.R. 317; 45 R. & I.T. 618; 31 A.T.C. 339; T.C. Leaflet No. 1617; 1952 S.C. 417; 1952 S.L.T. 451 283
Wilsons and Clyde Coal Co. v. English [1938] A.C. 57; 106 L.J.P.C. 117; 157 L.T. 406; 53 T.L.R. 944; 81 S.J. 700; [1937] 3 All E.R 628, H.L. . 723, 724, 725
Wiltshire Iron Co., In re, Ex parte Pearson (1868) 3 Ch.App. 443; 37 L.J.Ch. 554; 18 L.T. 423; 16 W.R. 682, L.JJ. 540, 542–5
Windham & Mead's Case. See Calye's Case.
Wingrove v. Prestige & Co. [1953] 1 W.L.R. 449; 97 S.J. 153; [1953] 1 All E.R. 694; 51 L.G.R. 305 . . . . . 524, 1182, 1183
Winkworth v. Raven [1931] 1 K.B. 652; 100 L.J.K.B. 206; 144 L.T. 594; 47 T.L.R. 254; 75 S.J. 120, D.C. 1102
Winter v. Cardiff Rural District Council [1950] W.N. 193; 114 J.P. 234; [1950] 1 All E.R. 819; 49 L.G.R. 1, H.L. 503, 1436
Winter v. Winter [1944] P. 72; 113 L.J.P. 49; 171 L.T. 111; 60 T.L.R. 426; 88 S.J. 325. C.A. 994, 996, 997
Wokingham Fire Brigade Trusts, In re, Martin v. Hawkins [1951] Ch. 373; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 446; 115 J.P. 159; 95 S.J. 137; [1951] 1 All E.R. 454; 49 L.G.R. 335 547

PAGE

Wolfson v. Inland Revenue Commissioners. See Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Wolfson.
Wood v. Gunston (1655) Style 466 . . . . . 1305, 1306
Wood v. Wood [1947] P. 103; 63 T.L.R. 450; [1948] L.J.R. 784; 111 J.P. 428; [1947] 2 All E.R. 95; 45 L.G.R. 534 1530
Woods v. Durable Suites [1953] 1 W.L.R. 857; 97 S.J. 454; [1953] 2 All E.R. 391; 51 L.G.R. 424, C.A. 197
Woolcombers' case. See Isaac Holden & Sons v. Inland Revenue Commissioners.
Woollen v. Wright (1862) 1 H. & C. 554; 31 L.J.Ex. 513; 10 W.R. 715; 158 E.R. 1005; sub nom. Wright v. Woollen, 7 L.T. 73, Ex.Ch. 1216
Works and Public Buildings Commissioners, Ex parte. See In re Mills' Estate.
Worthington v. Oceana Development Co., 65 T.L.R. 726n.; 93 S.J. 727; [1949] T.R. 371 160
Wragg, In re, Wragg v. Palmer [1919] 2 Ch. 58; 88 L.J.Ch. 269; 121 L.T. 78; 63 S.J. 535 425
Wright v. Cedzich, 43 C.L.R. 493; [1930] V.L.R. 141; 3 A.L.J. 437; [1930] A.L.R. 105 . . . . . 1048, 1049
Wright v. Tugwell. See In re Robinson.

Yorkshire Copper Works Ld.'s Application (1952) 70 R.P.C. 1 . . . 555, 558, 559, 562
Yorkshire Dale Steamship Co. v. Minister of War Transport [1942] A.C. 691; 111 L.J.K.B. 512; 167 L.T. 349; 58 T.L.R. 263; 86 S.J. 359; [1942] 2 All E.R. 6, H.L. 358, 365
Young v. Kershaw (1899) 81 L.T. 531 1491

ERRATA

Page 89. Footnote 14. For Ibid. read [1949] A.C. 361; [1949] 1 All E.R. 354; 30 T.C. 431.
Page 118. Footnote 4. For [1903] 2 Ch. 274 read [1908] 2 Ch. 274.
Page 630. For Lowe v. Russell read Roe v. Russell.
Page 678. Footnote *. For (1861) Le. & Ca. 427 read (1864) Le. & Ca. 427.

STATUTES, ETC., JUDICIALLY CONSIDERED

Public General Statutes

PAGE

1677 Sunday Observance Act (29 Car. 2, c. 7), s. 6 806
1812 Charities Procedure Act (52 Geo. 3, c. 101), s. 3 407
1842 Defence Act (5 & 6 Vict. c. 94) 1477
1843 Theatres Act (6 & 7 Vict. c. 68), s. 15 1468
1846 Fatal Accidents Act (9 & 10 Vict. c. 93) 803
s. 2 1445
1846–1908 Fatal Accidents Acts (8 Edw. 7, c. 7) 1220
1849 Quarter Sessions Act (12 & 13 Vict. c. 45), s. 11 850
1857 Obscene Publications Act (20 & 21 Vict. c. 83), s. 1 999
1863 Trustee Savings Banks Act (26 & 27 Vict. c. 87), s. 26 .. 1093
1864 Fatal Accidents Act (27 & 28 Vict. c. 95), s. 1 1445
1869 Debtors Act (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62), s. 5 612
1881 Army Act (44 & 45 Vict. c. 58), s. 145 471
1882 Married Women's Property Act (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75)—
s. 12 893
s. 17 296
1885 Criminal Law Amendment Act (48 & 49 Vict. c. 69), s. 5 (1) 463
1889 Interpretation Act (52 & 53 Vict. c. 63), s. 1 476
1890 Lunacy Act (53 & 54 Vict. c. 5), s. 11 (1) 1332
Partnership Act (53 & 54 Vict. c. 39), s. 44 1309
1891 Stamp Act (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 14 615
1892 and 1927 Colonial Probates Act (55 & 56 Vict. c. 6 and 17 & 18 Geo. 5, c. 43) .. 1053
1893 Sale of Goods Act (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 4 1330
1894 Finance Act (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30)—
s. 3 1228
s. 7 (1) 242, 1228
(5) 242
1895 Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act (58 & 59 Vict. c. 39), s. 7 599
1898 Criminal Evidence Act (61 & 62 Vict. c. 36), s. 4 (1) .. 893
1899 Finance Act (62 & 63 Vict. c. 9), s. 8 (5) 313
1900 Railway Employment (Prevention of Accidents) Act (63 & 64 Vict. c. 27), s. 1 (1), Sch., para. 12 585
1907 Criminal Appeal Act (7 Edw. 7, c. 23), s. 5 (2) 678

PAGE

1911 Copyright Act (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 46), ss. 1 (2), 2 (1), 5 (2) (3) 1313
Coal Mines Act (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 50)—
ss. 49, 51, 52 (1) 264
s. 74 1426
s. 102 (8) 264
1913 Mental Deficiency Act (3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 28), s. 56 (1) (a) (b) 125
1914 Bankruptcy Act (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 59)— ss. 2 (ii), 4 (1), 5, 5 (2) 393, 1190
ss. 15 (3), 18 (1) 748
s. 33 (1) (a) 1144
ss. 36 (2), 40 (1), (2) 1235
s. 109 (2) 748
1916 Larceny Act (6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50), s. 36 893
1918 Income Tax Act (8 & 9 Geo. 5, c. 40)—
ss. 14, 17 1063
s. 27 (5) 668
s. 37 (1) (b) 438, 659
Sch. V, para. 17 1063
Sch. D, Case I .. 87, 158, 1058, 1503
Case II, r. 11 (2) .. 87
Sch. E, rr. 1, 5 432
1919 Acquisition of Land (Assessment of Compensation) Act (9 & 10 Geo. 5, c. 57), s. 2 1477
1920 Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act (10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. 17)—
s. 7 (a) 1
s. 12 (1) (g) 769
(2) (7) 1039
s. 15 629
1922 Criminal Law Amendment Act (12 & 13 Geo. 5, c. 56), s. 2, proviso 463
1923 Salmon and Freshwater Fisheries Act (13 & 14 Geo. 5, c. 16), ss. 11 (1), 92 (1) 300
1925 Settled Land Act (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 18), ss. 42 (5), 110 855
Trustee Act (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 19)—
s. 32 496
s. 51 (1) 332
s. 57 1450
s. 61 423
Law of Property Act (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 20)—
ss. 1 (6), 42 (6) 786
s. 84 (9) 447
ss. 87 (1), 146 (4) (5) (d) .. 309
s. 199 (1) 1089

PAGE

1925 Land Charges Act (15 Geo. 5, c. 22), ss. 10 (c) (iii) (iv), 20 (6) (8) 786
Administration of Estates Act (15 Geo. 5, c. 23), s. 9 .. 332
Finance Act (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 36), s. 15 (1) (3) 1063
Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 49)—
s. 50 1220
s. 162 854
1927 Finance Act (17 & 18 Geo. 5, c. 10), s. 40 (3) 1063
1929 Companies Act (19 & 20 Geo. 5, c. 23), s. 261 1108
1930 Road Traffic Act (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 43)—
s. 7 (4) 1124
s. 11 ..... 831, 1318
s. 12 1318
s. 35 ..... 1335, 1338
s. 35 (1) 945
London Building Act (21 & 22 Geo. 5, c. lviii), s. 22 371
1933 Children and Young Persons Act (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 12), Sch. I 893
Road and Rail Traffic Act (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 53), s. 9 (1) 1364
1934 County Courts Act (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 53), ss. 43, 53 136
1936 Finance Act (26 Geo. 5 & 1 Edw. 8, c. 34), s. 18 (1) (2) 1265, 1460
Public Health (London) Act (26 Geo. 5 & 1 Edw. 8, c. 50)—
s. 82 (1) (a) 521
s. 154 261
1937 Finance Act (1 Edw. 8 & 1 Geo. 6, c. 54)—
ss. 19 (1), 20 (1) 1029
s. 22 (1) (2) 1368
Sch. IV, para. 4 1029
para. 7 1199
Factories Act (1 Edw. 8 & 1 Geo. 6, c. 67)—
s. 14 451
(1) 389
s. 16 451
s. 25 (3) 324, 1013
s. 26 694
(1) 1013
s. 49 840
s. 60 355
s. 119 451
s. 139 840
1938 Trade Marks Act (1 & 2 Geo. 6, c. 22)—
s. 9 ..... 116, 554
ss. 11 (1), 15, 32 (1) 116
Inheritance (Family Provision) Act (1 & 2 Geo. 6, c. 45) . 778
s. 2 (1) (1A) 760
Hire-Purchase Act (1 & 2 Geo. 6, c. 53), ss. 4, 5 (c) 1345
Food and Drugs Act (1 & 2 Geo. 6, c. 56), s. 9 (2) .. 351
Administration of Justice (Mislaneous Provisions) Act (1 & 2 Geo. 6, c. 63), s. 7 (2) 730

PAGE

1939 Limitation Act (2 & 3 Geo. 6, c. 21)—
s. 2 (1) 775
ss. 4 (3), 18 (4) 635, 644
s. 21 (1) 411, 1382
ss. 23 (1), 24 (1) (2) 635
Emergency Powers (Defence) Act (2 & 3 Geo. 6, c. 62), s. 1 (4) 1093
Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act (2 & 3 Geo. 6, c. 71), s. 3 (1) .. 1039
Trading with the Enemy Act (2 & 3 Geo. 6, c. 89), s. 7 . 1242 1940 Finance Act (3 & 4 Geo. 6, c. 29)—
ss. 44, 45 (1) 1228
s. 55 1185
s. 59 1228
Finance Act (No. 2) Act (3 & 4 Geo. 6, c. 48), s. 14 (1) .. 1029
1943 Catering Wages Act (6 & 7 Geo. 6, c. 24)—
ss. 9 (1), 10 (1) 75
s. 10 (3) 339
1944 Education Act (7 & 8 Geo. 6, c. 31), s. 39 (5) 306
1945 Supplies and Services (Transitional Powers) Act (9 & 10 Geo. 6, c. 10), ss. 5 (2), 10 1093
Wages Councils Act (8 & 9 Geo. 6, c. 17)—
s. 10 905
s. 11 375
ss. 16 (1), 23 (1) 905
Law Reform (Contributory Negligence) Act (8 & 9 Geo. 5, c. 28), s. 1 195 Income Tax Act (8 & 9 Geo. 6, c. 32) 282
s. 17 792
(1) 87
(a), (3), s. 68 40
1946 Acquisition of Land (Authorisation Procedure) Act (9 & 10 Geo. 6, c. 49), s. 1, Sch. I, paras, 15, 16 1149
Coal Industry (Nationalisation) Act (9 & 10 Geo. 6, c. 59), ss. 19, 22 (2), (3), (4) .. 1199
Finance Act (9 & 10 Geo. 6, c. 64), s. 8 (1) 109
National Health Service Act (9 & 10 Geo. 6, c. 81) .. 9, 22, 700
s. 3 (1) (c) 1382
s. 6 (1) 179
ss. 11 (8), 60 (1) 33
s. 79 179
1947 Finance Act (10 & 11 Geo. 6, c. 35), s. 31 (2) 1368
Fire Services Act (10 & 11 Geo. 6, c. 41), s. 4 730
Crown Proceedings Act (10 & 11 Geo. 6, c. 44), s. 27 (1) . 1235
Agriculture Act (10 & 11 Geo. 6, c. 48)—
ss. 9, 10 (3), 11 (1), (2) (d), (e), (f), (3), 37 (1) .. 231
ss. 73, 85, 92, Sch. IX, paras. 13, 15, 20 (2) . 1149

PAGE

1947 Transport Act (10 & 11 Geo. 6, c. 49)—
ss. 8, 29, 30, 31 40
s. 52 1364
Sch. VI 40
Town and Country Planning Act (10 & 11 Geo. 6, c. 51)—
s. 23 1357
Pt. VI 886
1948 Police Pensions Act (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 24), s. 5 (1), (3) 386
National Assistance Act (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 29)—
s. 7 604
ss. 42, 43 443
Companies Act (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 38)—
s. 165 563
s. 227 540
s. 352 755
Factories Act (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 55), s. 12 355
Criminal Justice Act (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 58)—
s. 7 (1) 1335
s. 12 (2) 1335, 1338
s. 29 (3) 531
Agricultural Holdings Act (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 63)—
ss. 1, 3 1321
s. 24 ..... 222, 247
(1), (2) (g) 476
s. 25 247
s. 26 222
ss. 57 (1), 65 231
Gas Act (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 67), s. 17 (3) (b) 313
1949 Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act (12 & 13 Geo. 6, c. 40), s. 8 398
Lands Tribunal Act (12 & 13 Geo. 6, c. 42), s. 1 (4) .. 447
Legal Aid and Advice Act (12 & 13 Geo. 6, c. 51)—
s. 1 (7) (b) 466
s. 2 (2) (c) 275
Sch. III 191

PAGE

1949 Coal Industry (No. 2) Act (12, 13 & 14 Geo. 6, c. 79), s. 1 (2) 1199
Distribution of German Enemy Property Act (12, 13 & 14 Geo. 6, c. 85), s. 1 1242
National Parks and Access to the Countryside Act (12, 13 & 14 Geo. 6, c. 97), s. 31 850
1950 Matrimonial Causes Act (14 Geo. 6, c. 25)—
s. 1 (1) (d) 1329, 1332
s. 2 994
(a) (d) 1329, 1332
s. 4 927
s. 23 ..... 549, 737
Shops Act (14 Geo. 6, c. 28), ss. 47, 59, Sch. V 771
1951 Leasehold Property (Temporary Provisions) Act (14 & 15 Geo. 6, c. 38), s. 2 (1) (a) 1282
1952 Income Tax Act (15 & 16 Geo. 6 & 1 Eliz. 2, c. 10), ss. 144, 223 1340
Finance Act (15 & 16 Geo. 6 & 1 Eliz. 2, c. 33), s. 3 109
Customs and Excise Act (15 & 16 Geo. 6 & 1 Eliz. 2, c. 44), s. 151 203
Magistrates' Courts Act (15 & 16 Geo. 6 & 1 Eliz. 2, c. 55)—
s. 61 1472
ss. 64 (1), 74 471
s. 98 (6) 1078
s. 103 (3) 806
1953 Licensing Act (1 & 2 Eliz. 2, c. 46)—
s. 58 (2) 1325
s. 148 203
s. 152 (1) 806
1954 Law Reform (Enforcement of Contracts) Act (2 & 3 Eliz. 2, c. 34), s. 2 1130
Landlord and Tenant Act (2 & 3 Eliz. 2, c. 56), s. 24 (1) (3) (b) 1520

OTHER STATUTES

PAGE

Ceylon Parliamentary Elections (Amendment) Act, No. 19, 1948, ss. 3, 81, 82, 82A, 82B, 82C, 82D 336
Gold Coast—Asamangkese Division Regulation Ordinance, 1935 (Laws of Gold Coast, 1936, Rev. c. 78) (as amended by Asamangkese Division Regulation (Amendment) Ordinance, No. 5 of 1945 (Gold Coast), s. 2 (b)), s. 6 (2) . 509
Malta (Constitution) Letters Patent, 1947, s. 39 845
Malta Customs Duty (Appropriation) Act, No. XIV of 1950 (Malta) . . . 845
N.S.W.—Closer Settlement (Amendment) Act, 1907, as amended, s. 4 (4) (b) (i) (ii) 1411
Nigeria—Companies Ordinance (Laws of Nigeria, 1948, c. 38), ss. 132 (2), 140 . 681
Exchange Control Ordinance, 1950, s. 22 (1) 1405
Ontario—Copyright Amendment Act (S.C. 1938, c. 27, s. 4), s. 10B (6) (a) 1484

RULES AND ORDERS

Agriculture (Control of Notices to Quit) Regulations, 1948 (S.I. 1948, No. 190), reg. 4 222
Agriculture (Maintenance, Repair and Insurance of Fixed Equipment) Regulations, 1948 (S.I. 1948, No. 184) 231

Page

Bankruptcy Rules, 1952 (S.I. 1952, No. 2113 (L. 14))—
r. 21 1353
rr. 100 (1), 114 (1) 1183
r. 192 748
r. 383 612
Appendix II, Parts I, IV 1183
Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948 (S.I. 1948, No. 1145)—
reg. 2 1071
reg. 4 (ii) 524
reg. 5 . . . . . 524, 1181
reg. 10 (1) (a) 346
reg. 29 (1) (8) 195
reg. 30 (3) 1071
reg. 97 258
Ceylon (Parliamentary Elections) Order-in-Council, 1946, ss. 81, 82 . . . . [illegible]
Coal Mines General Regulations, 1913 (S.R. & O. 1913, No. 748), reg. 8 . . . 264
Coal Mines (Training) General Regulations, 1945 (S.R. & O. 1945, No. 1217) . [illegible]
County Court Rules, 1936—
Ord. 24, r. 4 (2) 136
Ord. 32, r. 2 423
Cutlery Wages Council (Great Britain) Wages Regulation (Holidays) Order, 1952 (S.I. No. 957), Schedule 905
Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, reg. 55AB 250
Distribution of German Enemy Property (No. 1) Order, 1950 (S.I. 1950, No. 1642), art. 18 (1) (3) 1242
Electricity (Factories Act) Special Regulations, 1908 and 1944 (S.R. & O. 1908, No. 1312, as amended by S.R. & O. 1944, No. 739) 355
Electricity Supply Regulations, 1937 reg. 27 (a) 913
Fire Services (Discipline) Regulations, 1948 (S.I. 1948, No. 5454), regs. 1, 2, 4 . [illegible]
Industrial Disputes Order, 1951 (S.I. 1951, No. 1376), arts. 1, 8 . . . . [illegible]
Lands Tribunal Rules, 1949 (S.I. 1949, No. 2265), r. 51 (4) (ii) 882
Legal Aid (General) Regulations, 1950 (S.I. 1950, No. 1359), reg. 17 . . . . [illegible]
Magistrates Courts Rules, 1952 (S.I. 1952, No. 2190), r. 77 . . . . [illegible]
Malaya—Titles to Land (Occupation Period) Ordinance (Malaya, No. 19 of 1949), s. 27 (1) (5) 380
Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1950 (S.I. 1950, No. 1940)—
r. 15 (3) 990
r. 44 (1) 898
Matrimonial Causes (Judgment Summons) Rules, 1952 (S.I. 1952, No. 2209 (L. 21)) [illegible]
Meat (Prices) (Great Britain) Order, 1952 (S.I. 1952, No. 1122), art. 3 . . [illegible]
Milk Distributive Wages Council (England and Wales) Wages Regulation Order, 1952 (S.I. 1952, No. 986), Sch. 376
Police Pensions Regulations, 1949 (S.I. 1949, No. 1241), rr. 43, 44, 45 . . . 386
Prevention of Accidents Rules, 1902 (S.R. & O. 1902, No. 616), r. 9 . . . 583
Protection of Eyes Regulation, 1938 (S.R. & O. 1938, No. 654) . . . . [illegible]
Trading with the Enemy (Custodian) (No. 2) Order, 1945 (S.I. 1945, No. 887), arts. 1, 4, 7 1242
United States of America (Visiting Forces) Order, 1942 (S.R. & O. 1942, No. 966), I, p. 844 471
Wages Regulation (Unlicensed Place of Refreshment) Order, 1949 (S.I. 1949, No. 433) 73
West Africa—Courts Ordinance Laws of the Gold Coast, 1936, Rev., c. 4, Sch. 3, Ord. 49, r. 29 253
R.S.C., Ord. 3, r. 4 1445
Ord. 7, r. 2 (1) (6) 278
Ord. 15, r. 1 466
Ord. 22, rr. 1 (1) (2), 4 (1) 1084
Ord. 22, r. 14 (9) (11) 1220
Ord. 25, r. 2 67
Ord. 30, r. 2 (2) (j) 1069
Ord. 31, r. 18 271
Ord. 44, r. 2, note 1116
Ord. 49, r. 8 688
Ord. 53B, r. 7 (c) 563
Ord. 58, r. 15 (2) 450
Ord. 65, r. 6A 466
Ord. 66, rr. 3, 4 900
Ord. 70, r. 1 278

THE WEEKLY LAW REPORTS
Volume I

Containing those cases of value to practitioners which are not intended to be included in The Law Reports and also practice notes and directions.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

C. A.

1953
Nov. 25.

Evershed M.R., Jenkins and Morris L.JJ.

* NICHOLS AND ANOTHER v. WALTERS.

[1952 N. 2326.]

Landlord and Tenant—Rent restriction—Mortgage—Interest in arrear for more than twenty-one days—Arrears subsequently paid—Whether statutory protection revived—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. 17), s. 7 (a).
Mortgage.

By section 7 of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920: "It shall not be lawful for any mortgagee under a mortgage to which this Act applies, so long as "(a) interest at the rate permitted under this Act is paid and "is not more than twenty-one days in arrear . . . to take any steps "for . . . enforcing his security. . . ."

Where a mortgagor has defaulted for more than twenty-one days in making payment of interest due on a mortgage to which the Act of 1920 applies, his subsequent payment of the arrears does not revive the protection given by section 7 of the Act.

Evans v. Horner [1925] Ch. 177 applied.

Decision of Danckwerts J. affirmed.

APPEAL from Danckwerts J.

In 1951, Miss Walters, the tenant of premises within the Rent Acts known as 302 Westbourne Grove, London, purchased the freehold reversion, part of the purchase money being provided by means of a mortgage to the plaintiffs dated September 28, 1951, for the sum of £2,200, repayable as provided in the charge with interest at 5½ per cent., reducible to 4½ per cent. on punctual payment. After the purchase was completed Miss Walters carried on business on the ground floor and lived in part of the upper floor, the other part of the premises remaining vacant. In June, 1952, the mortgagees served a notice calling in the principal moneys. At that date no interest was in arrears, but in

C. A.
1953
NICHOLS
v.
WALTERS.

September, 1952, Miss Walters failed to pay the interest due from her and allowed it to get considerably more than 21 days in arrear, and she also did not pay a premium due on a life insurance policy.

On December 17, 1952, the plaintiffs issued a summons asking for an order for possession against Miss Walters. The summons came before Master Hawkins on February 3, 1953, and, on Miss Walters undertaking to pay off the arrears "at once," he directed that the summons should stand over with liberty to restore if default was made. Miss Walters said, and her evidence on this point was not challenged, that she paid the arrears on February 7 (a Saturday). The summons was, however, restored on February 10, and the master having made the order asked for by the plaintiffs, Miss Walters appealed to Danckwerts J., who upheld the master's order.

Miss Walters appealed.

The appellant in person.

C. B. Guthrie for the plaintiffs.

In addition to the case cited in the judgment the following cases were referred to in argument (on the point, left open in the judgment), whether section 7 of the Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, applies as between mortgagor and mortgagee to a dwelling-house once within the Rent Acts whilst the house is occupied by the freeholder: Portman Building Society v. Young [1]; Schaffer v. Ross.[2]

EVERSHED M.R. We are indebted to Miss Walters for putting her case clearly to us, but, in my judgment, there is no ground upon which we can disturb the order made by Danckwerts J.

[His Lordship stated the facts and continued:] The first part of Miss Walters's argument is that she is protected, as against the mortgagees, by the Rent Restriction Acts, and, in particular, by section 7 of the Act of 1920, which provides: "It "shall not be lawful for any mortgagee under a mortgage to which "this Act applies, so long as—(a) interest at the rate permitted "under this Act is paid and is not more than twenty-one days in "arrear; and (b) the covenants by the mortgagor (other than the "covenant for the repayment of the principal money secured) "are performed and observed; and (c) the mortgagor keeps the "property in a proper state of repair . . . to call in his mortgage "or to take any steps for exercising any right of foreclosure or "sale, or for otherwise enforcing his security. . . ."

A mortgage to which this Act applies is defined in section 12 of the same Act. Subsection (4) states: "Subject to the provi-"sions of this Act, this Act shall apply to every mortgage where

[1] [1951] W.N. 10; [1951] 2 T.L.R. 369; [1951] 1 All E.R. 191.

[2] [1940] 1 K.B. 418; 56 T.L.R. 126; [1939] 4 All E.R. 363.

"the mortgaged property consists of or comprises one or more "dwelling-houses to which this Act applies, or any interest "therein," with certain exceptions which it is not necessary for me to read. Subsection (2) reads: "This Act shall apply to a "house or a part of a house let as a separate dwelling, where" and then follow the financial limits imposed by the Act, on which nothing now turns. Finally, Miss Walters draws attention to subsection (6), which provides: "Where this Act has become "applicable to any dwelling-house or any mortgage thereon, it "shall continue to apply thereto whether or not the dwelling-house "continues to be one to which this Act applies." I find these provisions somewhat obscure, and I have seen elsewhere,[1] too, that the adjective "enigmatic" has been applied to subsection (6).

At the date of the mortgage of September, 1951, the premises in Westbourne Grove were not, and have not since been, let to anyone, either in whole or in part. Miss Walters carries on a business on the ground floor and lives in part of the upper floor. It is said by the mortgagees that section 7 is inapplicable as between mortgagee and mortgagor where the mortgaged premises are in the hands of their freehold owner. I think that that question is open to doubt, and I prefer to express no opinion about it.

I will assume that Miss Walters is correct when she states that the mortgage was a mortgage to which the Act of 1920 applies. On that footing, the notice calling in the mortgage in June, 1952, was unlawful; that is, invalid and bad; but Miss Walters did not pay the interest due in September, 1952. She allowed it to get considerably more than twenty-one days in arrear; and she also did not pay an insurance premium which she was bound to pay.

[His Lordship referred to the summons of December 17, 1952, and to the master's direction that the summons should be stood over. His Lordship continued:] According to Miss Walters (and I accept her evidence in the absence of any refutation or challenge) she paid the arrears on February 7. Mr. Guthrie said that that was not paying "at once" [in accordance with the undertaking given to the master], but I should have thought, for practical purposes, that it was. However, the summons was restored on February 10. Miss Walters says that it ought not to have been restored, because the arrears had then been paid, and that, therefore, there was no right of action left in the mortgagees. I think, however, that Miss Walters was not entitled, because she had paid the arrears, thereupon to have the summons dismissed; in fact, the court never lost seisin of the matter. It was considered carefully by the master in February, and was three times before the judge, and it is now, in November, before this court.

Subject to one point, therefore, it seems to me, as a matter of law—whether or not it may be hard on Miss Walters is not

[1] McKenna v. Gray [1939] Ir.Jur. Rep. 57, per Murnaghan J.

C. A.
1953
NICHOLS v. WALTERS.
Evershed M.R.

relevant—that the plaintiffs were entitled to ask for an order enforcing their security, and that is what they obtained.

The only question is whether, having paid off the arrears of interest in February, Miss Walters can still claim the benefit of section 7 of the Act of 1920. I think that the answer to that question is provided by Evans v. Horner,[2] decided by Russell J., who concluded that[3]: "Section 7 (a) means that so long as "interest is paid not later than twenty-one days after it is due, "the mortgagee cannot call in his mortgage or take any steps "for exercising any right of foreclosure." Russell J. had earlier said[3]: "In my opinion the section only suspends the rights of "the mortgagee during one continuous period, which lasts so long "as conditions (a), (b) and (c) are complied with, and that when "once those conditions are broken a subsequent compliance with "them does not revive the protection given by the section." That decision has never been questioned in this country during the quarter of a century which has passed since it was delivered, and I should, in any case, be slow to differ upon a matter of this kind from that very learned judge.

In the circumstances, therefore, I think that the answer inevitably is that Miss Walters, having allowed the interest to get more than twenty-one days in arrear (whatever may have been the reason) she ceased to be able to invoke section 7. When that stage is reached I think that everything else follows, and this appeal must fail.

I said during the argument that I felt some sympathy for Miss Walters, and, indeed, I do; but I think also that even if she was able now to postpone an order for possession, it would not in the end make any difference. Ultimately, I have no doubt, from what Miss Walters told me, that an order would have to be made. I should not wish, from anything which I have said, to be treated as criticizing the mortgagees or to suggest that they have not behaved properly in this matter.

In my judgment the appeal fails.

JENKINS L.J. I agree.

MORRIS L.J. I agree.

Appeal dismissed.
Leave to appeal to the House of Lords refused.

Solicitors: Farrar Porter & Co.

E. D.

[2] [1925] Ch. 177.

[3] Ibid. 178.

[CHANCERY DIVISION.]

* In re GEORGE WHICHELOW LD. BRADSHAW v. ORPEN.

1953
Nov. 24.

Upjohn J.

[1953 G. No. 2722.]

Trust and Trustee—Company—Shares vested in trustees—Interlocutory motion by beneficiaries to direct trustees' method of voting—No order of court to presume beneficiaries past age of child-bearing.
Company. Presumption—Age of child-bearing.

Three blocks of shares in a company were left by a testatrix in trust for each of her three daughters respectively for life, with remainder to their children who should attain 21.

After disputes had arisen regarding the conduct of the company's affairs and the fitness for office of certain directors, a general meeting was called for November 26, 1953, and notices were given of six resolutions to be moved for the appointment to or removal from the board of named persons. The three daughters and their eight children sent a notice to the trustees directing them either to appoint the eldest of the daughters as their proxy, or to vote in a certain way on the resolutions. The trustees declined to take these directions, and stated that they would use their votes in accordance with their discretion.

The beneficiaries then issued a writ against the trustees, and by interlocutory proceedings moved for orders that the trustees should comply with the directions given to them, and should be restrained from voting otherwise. The first three plaintiffs, the tenants for life, were respectively aged 61, 58 and 52; and the plaintiffs contended that the class of beneficiaries was thus closed, so that they had the right to direct the way in which the votes of the trustees should be used:—

Held, refusing interlocutory relief, that the plaintiffs could not be regarded as being all the persons beneficially entitled, because it could not be said in law that the first three plaintiffs were past the age of child-bearing.

In re Thornhill [1904] W.N. 112 distinguished; observation in Butt v. Kelson [1952] Ch. 197, at p. 207, not applied.

INTERLOCUTORY MOTION.

The facts are stated in the judgment.

Raymond Jennings Q.C. and K. J. Elphinstone for the plaintiffs.

W. T. Elverston for the defendants.

The following cases were cited in argument, in addition to those referred to in the judgment: Piercy v. S. Mills & Co. Ld.[1] and Kirby v. Wilkins.[2]

UPJOHN J. This is a motion by the plaintiffs asking for an order that the defendants who are shareholders in a company,

[1] [1920] 1 Ch. 77; 35 T.L.R. 703. [2] [1929] 2 Ch. 444.

1953

GEORGE WHICHELOW LD., In re.

Upjohn J.

known as George Whichelow Ld., do either appoint the first plaintiff a proxy to vote in respect of those shareholdings, or do themselves vote in respect of those shareholdings in a certain manner at a meeting of the company which is going to be held on November 26 next; that is, next Thursday. The defendants hold the shares as trustees of a will dated July 31, 1922, of Annie Matilda Whichelow.

I am informed that the trusts of that will are complicated, but it is agreed (and I assume for the purposes of this motion) that the trusts can simply be stated in these terms; that the testatrix left a block of shares on trust for each of her three daughters for life with remainder to the issue respectively of those daughters. She had three daughters, the first three plaintiffs, and the remaining plaintiffs are their children.

Coming to details, some 10,093 ordinary shares in the company are held upon trust for Mrs. Bradshaw for life with remainder to her children who attain 21; 8,646 ordinary shares are held upon similar trusts for Mrs. Dale and her children, and 8,043 ordinary shares upon similar trusts for Mrs. Scott and her children. All the plaintiffs have attained the age of 21 and the ages of the first three plaintiffs are respectively 61, 58 and 52.

These trust shares, which aggregate 26,782, are part of the issued ordinary share capital in the company. The capital structure of that company is as follows: There are issued 60,000 7 per cent. cumulative preference shares of 10s. each and 67,000 ordinary shares of £1 each; but each share, whether preference or ordinary, is entitled to one vote at general meetings of the company. Therefore the total voting power in the company is 127,000 votes, and the defendants have voting rights of 26,782 votes. That is a substantial but by no means controlling voting power in this company.

The facts which give rise to this motion are briefly as follows.—A brother of the first three plaintiffs, one Joseph Whichelow, was managing director of the company down to July 17, 1953. He was a joint managing director with Mr. Philip Preston, the latter also being chairman of the company. The other directors were a Mr. George Preston, a Mr. Lyons and Mr. Orpen, the first defendant.

On July 17, Mr. Whichelow was dismissed from his position as managing director in circumstances which I need not describe in detail. It is sufficient to say that he was indebted to the company in respect of sums which he had drawn from the company, not to expend on the company's business but on his own. It is also fair to say that those sums were repaid to the company on July 24 or 25. As a result of that, however, disputes and difficulties arose between the directors of the company and the plaintiffs. I need not go into those in any detail—indeed, it is undesirable that I should—because they will be matters to be discussed fully at the general meeting which will be held on Thursday next.

For that general meeting certain resolutions have been proposed, and the question is how the voting power of the trust shares should be exercised. The resolutions which are relevant are set out in a notice convening the meeting which was sent out on October 30. The first five were given by Mr. Whichelow: (1) that Mr. George Preston be removed from the office of director; (2) that Mr. Orpen be removed from the office of director; (3) that Mr. Philip Preston be removed from the office of director; (4) that the first plaintiff be appointed a director; and (5) a Mr. Stockall also be appointed a director. Then the sixth resolution, which was given by Mr. Lyons, is that Mr. Whichelow be removed from the office of director. The plaintiffs and the defendants cannot agree on the manner in which the voting power of the trust shares should be exercised upon those six resolutions.

In that state of affairs, all the plaintiffs have sent a notice to the defendant trustees requesting them either to appoint the first plaintiff a proxy, or directing them how to vote on those six resolutions. The trustees are not prepared, unless they are so ordered by this court, to vote in that manner. They have indicated in the evidence the manner in which they, if left unfettered by any order, would exercise their voting power.

The question I have to determine is really one of law. What the plaintiffs say is this: "We are all the persons entitled to the "beneficial interest in these trust shares. We are, therefore, "entitled to direct the trustees how they are to vote at the forth-"coming meeting of the company"; and they rely upon a passage in the judgment of Romer L.J., who delivered the first judgment of the Court of Appeal in Butt v. Kelson.[1] The Lord Justice said this: "What I think is the true way of looking at the matter is "that which was presented to this court by Sir Lynn Ungoed-"Thomas, that is that the beneficiaries are entitled to be treated "as though they were the registered shareholders in respect of "trust shares, with the advantages and disadvantages (for "example, restrictions imposed by the articles) which are involved "in that position, and that they can compel the trustee directors "if necessary to use their votes as the beneficiaries, or as the "court, if the beneficiaries themselves are not in agreement, think "proper, even to the extent of altering the articles of association "if the trust shares carry votes sufficient for that purpose."

The plaintiffs further say that they are all the persons entitled to these shares. Although there is the theoretical possibility of further issue being born, that they say is plainly impossible in the case of the first two plaintiffs, who are aged 61 and 58; and with regard to the third plaintiff, who is 52, her last born child was born over 21 years ago. She is divorced from her husband; and they say, with some force, that the circumstances are really indistinguishable from those in In re Thornhill,[2] where the Court of Appeal gave leave for money to be paid out of court, on the

[1] [1952] Ch. 197, 207; [1952] 1 All E.R. 151.

[2] [1904] W.N. 112.

1953

GEORGE WHICHELOW LD., In re.

Upjohn J.

assumption that the mother was past the age of child-bearing. Further, they say that in In re Smith,[3] where all the persons entitled as objects of a discretion directed the trustees how to pay the income, the mother was treated as past the age of child-bearing, and the court made an order on the footing that they were the persons absolutely entitled. Therefore, the plaintiffs say they are entitled to give these directions to the trustees, who must carry out those directions.

On the other hand, Mr. Elverston, for the trustees, says that the trust is still plainly subsisting—that indeed is obvious; there are three life tenants and a number of remaindermen—and the trustees do not desire to surrender their discretion to the court; they are anxious to exercise that discretion themselves; and he submits that, in those circumstances, the court cannot control the bona fide exercise of the trustees' discretion. Pausing there, let me say at once, that on the evidence which I have read it seems to me perfectly clear that the trustees are acting in a manner which is entirely bona fide, in circumstances which they find extremely difficult; and I have no doubt that they have given their very best attention to the difficult question of how best to vote in the circumstances which have arisen. Mr. Elverston relies on a passage in Underhill on Trusts, 10th ed., at p. 427, where the author says: "Even where it is not absolutely certain "that no more beneficiaries can come into existence, but it is "morally so (e.g., where the ultimate remainder is in trust for "the children of a woman who is past the age of child-bearing), "the court will, on summons, give the trustees liberty to act "according to the directions of the beneficiaries in esse so long as "the contingent rights of living persons are not prejudiced, "although it is understood that the court will not in such cases "imperatively order the trustees to do so."

He also referred to In re Brockbank,[4] In re Higginbottom,[5] and Tempest v. Lord Camoys, where Sir George Jessel M.R. lays down the general principle in these terms[6]: "It is very important "that the law of the court on this subject should be understood. "It is settled law that when a testator has given a pure discretion "to trustees as to the exercise of a power, the court does not "enforce the exercise of the power against the wish of the trustees, "but it does prevent them from exercising it improperly." That, he says, is the principle to be applied in this case.

I think that the case of Butt v. Kelson[7] is difficult to reconcile with those cases, and I am not prepared to grant any relief upon an interlocutory motion. Furthermore, in my judgment, the right way of looking at the position is that here are trustees, against whom nothing can be said, who are anxious to exercise their discretion. They have not had a direction from all persons beneficially entitled, because it cannot be said in law that the first three

[3] [1928] Ch. 915.
[4] [1948] Ch. 206; [1948] 1 All E.R. 287.
[5] [1892] 3 Ch. 132.
[6] (1882) 21 Ch.D. 571, 578.
[7] [1952] Ch. 197.

plaintiffs are past the age of child-bearing. In re Thornhill [8] was, in my judgment, a different case, for there, in the exercise of a well-known and beneficial jurisdiction, leave was given to pay money out of court on the footing that a woman was past the age of child-bearing, but there was in that case no dispute whatever as to the rights of the parties.

The matter before me must, I think, be dealt with as one of strict law, and in law one cannot say that all the beneficiaries are before the court. Accordingly, in my judgment, the principle stated by Romer L.J. in the passage which I have already read does not apply to this case, and on this ground also I refuse the relief asked.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors: Stilgoes; Bischoff & Co., for FitzHugh, Woolley & Burnand, Brighton.

F. R. D.

[8] [1904] W.N. 112.

[CHANCERY DIVISION.]

* In re HILLIER'S TRUSTS. HILLIER AND ANOTHER v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL AND ANOTHER.

1953
Nov. 6, 10.
Upjohn J.

[1952 H. No. 2182.]

Charity—Hospital—Appeal for funds for erection and maintenance of voluntary hospital—Scheme impracticable after National Health Service Act, 1946 (9 & 10 Geo. 6, c. 81)—Resulting trust for donors. National Health Service — Hospital — Gift — Appeal to public. Trust and trustee—Resulting trust—Charity—Failure of object. Bona vacantia.

In 1938 and 1939 an appeal was launched for the improvement of hospital services in South Bucks and East Berks, and in particular for the erection and maintenance of a new hospital at Slough.

The appeal was launched by a "council" who issued a brochure calling for subscriptions and donations. This pointed out the serious lack of hospital accommodation in the area, and emphasized at length and in the strongest terms the superior advantages of "the "truly British characteristic of making provision, without force" of voluntary, as opposed to State, hospitals. The brochure was accompanied by forms to be filled in by donors and subscribers, of which "document 1" provided for subscriptions in three forms, viz.: "council's discretion: [for a] Windsor hospital; Slough Hospital." Another form, "document 2," provided for seven years' covenants to subscribe towards the augmentation of the income or capital of (a) such hospitals as the council might nominate; (b) the Windsor hospital; (c) the Slough hospital, and (d) a hospital nominated by the covenantor.

1953

HILLIER'S TRUSTS, In re.

Substantial sums were received under the terms of these documents, and were also raised locally by concerts, church collections, whist drives, etc.

It never became possible to build the proposed hospital at Slough; first, because of war conditions, and secondly because the provisions of the National Health Service Act, 1946, precluded the erection of new voluntary hospitals. A summons was taken out by the Slough trustees for directions as to what should be done with the property in their hands; and in particular for the determination of the questions whether (a) any charitable trust formerly affecting the same had failed, and if so (b) whether there was a resulting trust in favour of the donors and subscribers:—

Held, (1) that the sums given under documents (1) and (2) to be expended at the trustees' discretion were subject to a general charitable intent, so that the trustees could apply them at their discretion among the existing hospitals in the area;

(2) that, in regard to the sums expressly allocated to the Slough hospital (a) the erection of a voluntary hospital had become impossible; (b) on the true construction of the appeal and of documents 1 and 2, the gifts were to be devoted to the purposes of a voluntary hospital only, so that the object had become impracticable, and (c) that there was a resulting trust in favour of the donors and subscribers;

In re Welsh Hospital (Netley) Fund [1921] 1 Ch. 655, and In re North Devon and West Somerset Relief Fund Trusts [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1260; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1032 distinguished;

(3) that the sums collected by concerts, whist drives, etc., were obtained under such circumstances that the contributors never expected to receive their money back, so that no resulting trust arose.

Quaere whether those gifts became bona vacantia.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS.

The facts are set out in the judgment.

J. L. Arnold for the plaintiff trustee.

Denys Buckley for the Attorney-General.

Peter Foster for the Official Solicitor (representing donors and subscribers).

The cases cited in argument are referred to in the judgment.

UPJOHN J. In 1938 and 1939 an appeal was launched for contributions for the improvement of hospital services in the South Buckinghamshire and East Berkshire area, and in particular for the provision of a hospital at Slough. The appeal met with general support, and the contributions received by way of donations and under seven years' covenants, amounted altogether, with income tax recovered, to about £40,000, apart from sums specially earmarked for King Edward VII Hospital at Windsor.

I have to decide upon what trusts this sum and the investments representing the same are now held, having regard to the changed circumstances since 1938.

The facts are set out in an affidavit by Sir Arthur Noel Mobbs, who played a leading part in the collection of the subscriptions. In 1938 a council, under the title of the "South Bucks "and East Berks Voluntary Hospital Council," was formed, of which Sir Arthur Noel Mobbs was chairman. The objects of this body, which I will call "the old council," were to develop to the greatest possible extent the efficiency of hospital services in South Bucks and East Berks, and the immediate purpose was to raise funds for two objects. The first was the extension of the accommodation of the Windsor hospital, and the second was the building and equipment of a new hospital at Slough. In the same year a committee of the old council was formed under the title of "The Slough Hospital Committee," with the special object of furthering the purpose of the erection of a new hospital at Slough. On October 28, 1938, Mr. Edward Thomas Bowyer, Mr. William Augustus Hillier and Sir Arthur Noel Mobbs were appointed trustees and they have been generally referred to as "The Slough Hospital Trustees." Mr. Bowyer died before the issue of the summons and Mr. Hillier has died since the issue of the summons, leaving Sir Arthur Noel Mobbs as the sole trustee.

In 1939 the old council issued a brochure which appealed for donations and subscriptions for the purposes which I have mentioned. It was headed "Windsor, Slough and Associated "Hospitals," and contained an extract from what Lord Horder had said at Liverpool in November, 1938, namely: "I believe that "the voluntary hospital is as essential to this country's well-"being today as ever it was. It still stands as a fortress of "teaching, of research, and of efficient treatment; and as a centre "where the spirit of medicine can live in freedom, owing no "allegiance to political doctrine nor State expediency," and it later said: "We commend these words to the residents of South "Bucks and East Berks."

The next page was headed, "The South Bucks & East Berks "Voluntary Hospitals Council." The second paragraph was: "Our voluntary hospital system is the envy of the world. The "truly British characteristic of making provision, without force, "for those in need of medical care is worthy of preservation. "Without adequate finance the work of the honorary surgeons "and physicians cannot go on. It is hoped that all will play "their part in helping us to attain the objects that are detailed "in the following pages. This booklet is intended to explain "the work of the council and to make residents in this district "individually conscious of the value of the voluntary hospitals."

On the next page there was set out the membership of the council, and there followed these words: "With your assistance "the hospitals council hope to accomplish the following." Then there is the paragraph which is headed: "King Edward VII "Hospital, Windsor," and a number of improvements that it is desired to effect to that hospital are set out.

Then there was a paragraph headed: "The Slough Hospital," which said: "The rapid industrial growth of Slough has thrown 1953

HILLIER'S TRUSTS, In re.

Upjohn J.

" a heavy extra burden upon King Edward VII Hospital. The " population has doubled in recent years and is still rapidly " growing. To relieve the established hospital and to provide " this industrial area with a hospital near at hand it has been " decided to erect a new building at Slough on a site already " purchased. The hospital, which will have sixty beds at its " commencement, will be worked in close co-operation with King " Edward VII Hospital, and will supply a further urgently " necessary addition to the hospital services of the whole area. " £45,000 is the estimated cost of the new hospital, and it will " cost approximately £13,000 per annum to maintain. The " smaller hospitals in the area also require your help. £47,000 " has already been promised. Please help us with your gift."

Later, there was a quotation from the Rt. Hon. John Burns, who had been President of the Board of Trade: " The voluntary " hospitals had saved in the course of a single generation a " population equal to that of London or Australia."

On a later page there was a further comment upon the worthiness (if I may so describe it) of the voluntary hospital movement. Then these words were used: " You can help the " council by: A donation to the extension fund of King Edward " VII Hospital, Windsor, or the building of the Slough Hospital. " An annual subscription towards the maintenance of hospital " services in the area." It continued: " You can earmark your " help for either of the hospitals, although you may send it to " the council." Finally, there was an extract from the Sankey Report on the future of voluntary hospitals.

There was a pocket in the brochure containing forms for the use of those intending to subscribe to the movement. These forms were addressed to the " South Bucks and East Berks " Voluntary Hospitals Council." The first said: " I have " pleasure in enclosing remittance value (blank) in respect of " contribution as below: Capital Donation," and then there are three alternatives, namely, " Council's discretion; Windsor " Hospital; Slough Hospital." Then there was a column for a maintenance donation with the same three alternatives, and another column for an annual subscription with the same three alternatives. A space is left for the name and address, and there was a note: " This form should accompany the donation and " be sent to " the address of the South Bucks and East Berks Voluntary Hospitals Council. I will call that document " document 1."

There were other documents enclosed. There was, for example, a form with regard to the endowment or maintenance of beds and cots, and there again an alternative was given between giving a sum to the Windsor hospital or to the Slough hospital. I shall treat them as one with document 1.

In addition, many persons subscribed to the movement by means of a seven years' covenant. That covenant was in these terms: " South Bucks & East Berks Voluntary Hospitals Council.

"Deed of Covenant." Then it said: "I/We (blank) of (blank) "do hereby covenant to pay to the Secretary for the time being "of The South Bucks and East Berks Voluntary Hospitals "Council . . . yearly during the period of 7 years from the "(blank) day of (blank) 19 (blank) or during my/our life (which-"ever period shall be the shorter) such a sum as will after "deduction of income tax at the standard rate for the time being "in force leave in the hands of the said Secretary a net yearly "sum of (blank) such sums to be paid on the (blank) day of "(blank) in every year commencing in the year 19 (blank) and "to be paid out of my/our general fund of taxed income and to "be deemed to accrue from day to day. All such sums shall "be received and applied in such proportions as the council "shall direct on my/our behalf for the augmentation of the "income of the following."

Pausing there, I was informed during the argument that these covenants were also used for capital gifts under seven years' covenants, and presumably intending donors altered the words "augmentation of the income" to "augmentation of the "capital." Then certain alternatives were set out, and against those alternatives there was a note that the person entering into the covenant is asked to delete those alternatives which it is not desired should benefit. The alternatives were four in number, namely, "(a) Such hospital or hospitals in South Bucks and/or "East Berks as the council may from time to time nominate on "my/our behalf. (b) King Edward VII Hospital at Windsor. "(c) The Slough Hospital at Slough. (d) The (blank) Hospital "at (blank)." I will call that "document 2."

In addition to those methods to which I have referred of raising money, there were other familiar methods employed in order to obtain finance. There were appeals through the press, and personal applications for donations and subscriptions. Moneys were also collected by local clubs and committees, and by whist drives, dances, flag days, collecting boxes and similar means.

As stated in the brochure which I have read, in 1939 a site of some 10½ acres was purchased in Stoke Road, Slough, at a cost of £6,000, and it was conveyed to the Slough Hospital Trustees, it then being thought that that site would be appropriate for the erection of the intended Slough Hospital.

In 1940 a new council was formed. It was called the "Bucks and East Berks Divisional Hospitals Council," and the funds which had been received by the old council were transferred to the divisional council, and the activities of the old council were merged in the divisional council.

The case has been argued before me on the footing that that was mere administrative machinery, and that nothing turns on the change of body or the transfer of the funds from the old council to the divisional council. The old council and the divisional council I will refer to together as the council. It received a large number of subscriptions which had not been expressly allocated to the hospital at Windsor, the hospital at Slough or any other given hospital, but which had been left to be applied at the discretion of the council, that being one of the modes pointed out both in documents 1 and 2.

1953

HILLIER'S TRUSTS, In re.

Upjohn J.

In 1942, in fact, those unallocated contributions were transferred to the Slough Hospital Trustees. In 1946—there being no trust deed in existence—a trust deed was drawn up whereby the then trustees (that is to say, Mr. Bowyer, Mr. Hillier and Sir Arthur Noel Mobbs) declared themselves trustees of the funds set out in the schedule to the trust deed. I will not, however, refer to that trust deed, because it does not define any trust. Its object was really to define the property which was then held by the trustees.

After the war it was realised that the property which had been purchased in Slough was too small for the proposed hospital. It was, moreover, urgently required by the Bucks County Council as a site for the erection of a school in Slough. It was sold at quite a considerable profit, for it realised some £7,750. Shortly after that the trustees purchased another property, intending, as I understand it, that it should be used as a site for a hospital. [His Lordship stated certain facts regarding the property and continued:] It is now, however, held as an income producing investment.

I have before me a schedule of the sums collected by the various means that I have indicated. I do not propose to go through it in detail, but I shall mention one or two items. Schedule A shows the amount collected under the seven years' covenants. Some £15,000 of capital has been collected under those covenants and specifically allocated to the Slough hospital by the covenantors. Some £1,500 or a little less was collected and was not allocated, but was left to be applied at the discretion of the council. Then there is a long schedule showing the amounts subscribed by other means. It is sufficient to say that those expressly allocated to the Slough hospital by the donors amount to some £14,000. Those not allocated, but given to be applied at the discretion of the council, amount to something under £4,000. The schedule contains not merely gifts made under document 1, but other gifts made through the medium of whist drives, dances, and so on. I will give only one or two examples of the latter. There is, for instance, the Jewels Concert Party. Then there seems to be a Jewish orchestral concert, the Old Crown Hotel Dart Club, a dance at the George Hotel. There was a collection on Good Friday, and apparently the proceeds of the collection were sent in by the Bishop of Buckingham. The examples could be multiplied extensively. That is the manner in which the sums were collected, and they have been substantially invested in the land that I have mentioned, although there are also considerable gilt-edged investments.

I am concerned with two questions. The first is, has it become impossible or impracticable to carry out the purpose, which is admittedly charitable, of building a hospital at Slough, and if so, secondly, upon what trusts are the investments representing the subscriptions now held? Before, however, dealing with those questions in detail, it may be convenient to deal with one matter quite shortly, namely, the amounts that were subscribed either under documents 1 or 2 where the council was given by the donor a discretion as to the application of the gift amongst hospitals in the South Bucks and East Berks area. In my judgment, no difficulty arises on that matter; for assuming, without for the moment deciding, that the project of erecting a hospital at Slough has become impracticable, there remain of course other hospitals in the area which may be benefitted from the donation within the terms of the discretion given by the donor to the council. In other words, when the whole object of the donation is clearly a charitable one, the failure of one object amongst a number does not bring the charitable gift to an end. The other objects remain capable of being attained. That cannot possibly be affected by the fact that, as I mentioned, in 1942 the council handed over all the unallocated funds to the Slough Hospital trustees, because assuming that it has become impracticable to build a hospital, it means merely that that allocation has failed in its purpose, and that therefore the council must make some other allocation of those funds. Therefore I need say no more about the funds which are not expressly allocated. They are plainly held upon valid charitable trusts, and can be applied at the discretion of the council amongst the existing hospitals in South Bucks or East Berks.

Nor does any question arise with regard to the sums which were specially directed to be given to the Windsor Hospital. Those funds have already been handed over to the appropriate management committee.

I am therefore concerned, and concerned only, with those sums which were specifically directed to be given to the Slough Hospital by documents 1 or 2, or collected for that purpose in the other modes that I have mentioned.

The facts as to the practicability of erecting and maintaining a hospital at Slough are to be found in Sir Arthur Noel Mobbs' affidavit. [His Lordship reviewed the evidence and continued:]

I accept as proved (1) that it would now be quite impracticable for a voluntary body of persons to undertake the erection and maintenance of a voluntary hospital at Slough, and (2) that not only is it possible, but it is contemplated that a new hospital will be erected in the Slough area by the Ministry of Health, and that work is, of course, as much a charitable work as is the erection of a voluntary hospital, because the provision of a hospital does not cease to be charitable merely because it is provided by the State.

That, however, does not determine the question. The question, which is one of construction of documents 1 and 2, is 1953

HILLIER'S TRUSTS, In re.

Upjohn J.

whether the donors intended their gifts to be applied in the erection of what was essentially to be a voluntary hospital, or a hospital however erected and maintained. Both documents talk merely of the "Slough Hospital," and as a matter of construction, I should see nothing to exclude the application of gifts given in those terms to a hospital to be erected by the Ministry of Health, but I must look at these documents as a whole, and I must read them in the light of the appeal to which I have already referred. I note in particular that both documents 1 and 2 are headed "The South Bucks and East Berks Voluntary Hospitals "Council." The covenant in the case of the seven years' covenants is indeed with that council, but that, of course, is not conclusive of the matter, because the council, after all, is only in the position of a trustee. Nevertheless, it is, I think, some indication of what the parties intended. But when I read these covenants in the light of the appeal, it seems to me reasonably clear that donors who signed documents 1 or 2 were quite plainly contemplating that their donations would be used, and used only, for the provision, erection and maintenance of a voluntary hospital. The whole tenor of the appeal was directed to the necessity for voluntary hospitals, and in particular for a voluntary hospital at Slough, and in my judgment the whole object of the appeal was to gain funds for a voluntary hospital. Accordingly, in my judgment upon the true construction of documents 1 and 2 the donors intended that their donations should be applied in the erection and maintenance of what was essentially to be a voluntary hospital, and not a hospital to be erected and maintained by the State, which of course at the time when these donations were given was not in the contemplation of any party. I therefore reach the conclusion that the object or the purpose for which these donations were made has become impracticable.

That gives rise to the second question. The purpose having become impracticable, I have to decide upon what trusts are these sums and the investments now representing them held.

I will deal in the first place with sums contributed through the medium of documents 1 and 2. The question is, is there a resulting trust for the donors, the purpose of the donation having failed, or can a general charitable intention be inferred so that, although it has become impracticable to build a voluntary hospital at Slough, nevertheless the donors intended that there was to be a general charitable intention in favour of hospitals existing in the area of South Bucks and East Berks?

Apart altogether from authority, I should have thought that the answer was reasonably clear. When a donor is given the option of applying a donation at the discretion of the council amongst hospitals in the area, or directing that it shall go to the Windsor Hospital or to the Slough Hospital or, in the case of document 2, to some other hospital in the area, and when, exercising the option given to him by these documents, he is careful enough to exercise it in favour of the Slough Hospital, I should have thought as a matter of principle and, as I say, apart altogether from authority, that the purpose for which he has indicated that his money is to go (that is to say, the Slough Hospital) having failed, it was impossible to infer any general charitable intention to benefit hospitals generally in that area; for he has, by deleting the paragraph giving the council that discretion, negatived any such intention upon his part. Therefore, I should have thought that that gift having failed to take effect at all, there was a resulting trust for the donor.

The case is not unlike that of the University of London Medical Sciences Institute Fund,[1] although that case is not in any sense a decision governing the question of construction that I have to consider. In that case the testator bequeathed a legacy of £25,000 to the Institute of Medical Sciences Fund of the University of London. That scheme was abandoned, and the question in that case was whether upon the true construction of the will there was a general charitable intention. Joyce J. said[2]: "As to the return of subscriptions or donations no serious question was or could be raised. But with reference to the legacy given by Mr. Beit's will it has been suggested on behalf of the Attorney-General that the money had been definitely devoted to a charitable purpose, and ought, therefore, to be applied cy-près, the object to which it was originally devoted having failed. I cannot accede to that suggestion. There is not one word in the will upon which to found the theory of the testator having any general charitable intent, or any intention to contribute to any general or other purpose of charity save only the particular scheme of the projected institute."

Speaking for myself, as a matter of construction of these documents I should come clearly to the conclusion that there was a resulting trust for the donors, but it is said that there are two authorities binding upon me, which compel me to come to a different conclusion.

The first of those authorities is In re Welsh Hospital (Netley) Fund.[3] The headnote is as follows: "On the outbreak of the war a hospital was erected at Netley, and equipped and run during the war, for the benefit of sick and wounded Welsh soldiers by means of large voluntary subscriptions raised in Wales. In 1919 the hospital was closed, the staff disbanded, and the property sold to the War Office, and after winding up the affairs of the hospital there was a surplus of some £9,000:— Held, on the evidence, that there was not a resulting trust of the surplus for the subscribers to the hospital, but a general charitable intention for sick and wounded Welshmen which enabled the Court to apply the fund cy-près. In re British Red Cross Balkan Fund distinguished."[4] P. O. Lawrence J. set

[1] [1909] 2 Ch. 1; 25 T.L.R. 358.
[2] Ibid. 4.
[3] [1921] 1 Ch. 655.
[4] [1914] 2 Ch. 419; 30 T.L.R. 662.

1953

HILLIER'S TRUSTS, In re.

Upjohn J.

out the terms of the appeal, for in that case as in the next case to which I must refer the question really was one of construction of the appeal, because it was only in relation to the appeal that the intention of the donors in those cases could be ascertained. He then said[5]: "The fund was created by contributions from "various sources and in varying amounts, partly by donations "from private individuals of more or less substantial amounts, "and partly by the proceeds resulting from concerts and other "entertainments given and from collections in streets and at "churches made in most of the towns and villages of Wales. So "far as regards the contributors to entertainments, street collec-"tions, etc., I have no hesitation in holding that they must be "taken to have parted with their money out and out. It is "inconceivable that any person paying for a concert ticket or "placing a coin in a collecting box presented to him in the street "should have intended that any part of the money so contri-"buted should be returned to him when the immediate object "for which the concert was given or the collection made had "come to an end. To draw such an inference would be absurd "on the face of it. So far as regards individual subscribers "of substantial amounts, the proper inference to be drawn is not "quite so plain. In my opinion, however, these subscribers must "be taken to have known that they were contributing to a "general fund which was being raised in the manner I have "described, and that their contributions would be aggregated "with the proceeds of entertainments, street collections, etc., "and would not in any way be ear-marked. They must, I think, "also be taken to have known that the total funds collected "from every source would be applied for the purpose of the "charity without discriminating between the moneys derived "from any particular source. In these circumstances I am of "opinion that the true inference to be drawn is that these "subscribers intended to part with their contributions out and "out, and that they did not intend that the surplus, if any, of "their contributions should be returned to them when the "immediate object of the charity should have come to an end. "In the result I hold that although all the contributions were in "the first instance made for the particular purpose of building, "equipping and maintaining the Welsh Hospital at Netley, the "main underlying object of the contributors was to provide "money for the comfort of sick and wounded Welshmen, and "that all the subscribers intended to devote their contributions "not only to the particular object, but generally to the benefit of "their sick and wounded countrymen."

Before dealing with that case, it will be convenient to refer to the second authority, the very recent case of In re North Devon and West Somerset Relief Fund Trusts.[6] The headnote reads: "Floods due to torrential rain in North Devon and West Somerset

[5] [1921] 1 Ch. 655, 660.

[6] [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1260; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1032.

"caused loss of life and great damage to property in the area. A "relief fund was opened by an appeal in the following terms: 'We "'invite not only the people of the West country, but everyone "'who has known and loved Lynmouth, and the quiet villages of "'North Devon and West Somerset, which have suffered so "'grievously in this disaster, to contribute to a fund for the "'relief of all who have suffered. . . . Many holiday makers . . . "'have suffered grievously. These need help every bit as much "'as our own people and for that reason we do ask the whole "'country to support this fund. . . .' A large sum was collected, "and it was expected that a considerable surplus would remain "after all proper claims under the appeal had been met:—Held, "(1) that the trusts of the fund were valid charitable trusts; "(2) that the appeal disclosed a general charitable intention and "that the surplus assets could be applied cy-près. In re Welsh "Hospital (Netley) Fund[7] followed."

I am concerned in this case only with the second point that was decided. After referring to the well-known judgment of Parker J. in In re Wilson,[8] Wynn-Parry J. said[9]: "It is to be "observed that in that case the court had to construe a will, the "instrument by which a single donor had made the disposition "which gave rise to the question. A number of authorities were "cited to me, most of which arose substantially in that way. I "have to consider a very different type of case, one in which I "have to discover the intentions of many hundreds—it may be "thousands—of donors, and the only document that I have to "assist me is not a document brought into existence by any one "of those donors, but by those who invited them to become "donors." Then he referred to the case of In re Welsh Hospital (Netley) Fund[10] and quoted the passage which I have already read.

He later said[11]: "It is impossible, on careful consideration, "to draw a distinction of any substance between the facts of "that case and those of the present case. It appears to me not "in the least decisive that there is a reference in the appeal to "persons other than local residents who suffered distress by the "disaster. The main underlying object of that appeal was to "benefit the people of the district in question. The appeal "proceeds in this case, as it did in the case of the Welsh hospital, "by emphasizing what in the Welsh case was called the "immediate object, but which might quite easily in either case "have been treated, on a strict construction of the appeal, as "the only object. In the case before him, P. O. Lawrence J. "found no difficulty in drawing the conclusion, for the reasons "which he gave, that there was a more extended object than "might be said at first sight to appear on the face of the appeal; "and when I apply his reasoning to the appeal in question in

[7] [1921] 1 Ch. 655.
[8] [1913] 1 Ch. 314.
[9] [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1260, 1265.
[10] [1921] 1 Ch. 655.
[11] [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1260, 1267.

1953

HILLIER'S TRUSTS, In re.

Upjohn J.

"this case, I feel driven to exactly the same conclusion, namely "that there was here a general charitable intent. All the reasons "which influenced the mind of P. O. Lawrence J. to the con-"clusion to which he came are present in this case. I find it "impossible, therefore, to distinguish that case from this. In "those circumstances, it is unnecessary for me to travel through "the rest of the authorities.

"I need only say that I find nothing in the judgment of "P. O. Lawrence J. which is in any way inconsistent with the "passage from the judgment of Parker J. in In re Wilson [12] "which I have read. It is true that the latter case was not "apparently cited to P. O. Lawrence J., but no doubt he was "well aware of its existence. Indeed, the judgment of Parker J. "in In re Wilson [12] did no more than state the effect of the "authorities as it then existed; nor do I find anything in the "later cases which carries the matter further. So far as I am "aware, no adverse comment has ever been passed on the "decision or judgment in In re Welsh Hospital (Netley) Fund.[13] "I regard it as authority binding on me in this case and covering "this case."

If I thought that the Netley case [13] or the North Devon case [14] covered this case I would loyally follow them, but in my judgment they do not. The problem that I have to consider is very different from the problem that was before P. O. Lawrence J. and Wynn-Parry J. They had to consider the true construction of broadly phrased appeals. They felt able to come to the conclusion that, upon the true construction of the documents that were respectively before them, it was right to find that there was a general charitable intention which would take effect after the primary object had been fulfilled. In coming to that conclusion P. O. Lawrence J. felt that he had some assistance from a consideration of the fact that contributors must know that in carrying out the object their moneys would become mingled with moneys from other sources which had been given out and out by contributors. That fact assisted him apparently in coming to the conclusion, on the true construction of the appeal before him, that the real or the main underlying object of the contributors was to provide money for the comfort of sick and wounded Welshmen.

As I have said, I have a very different problem to consider. I have in documents 1 and 2 not appeals by the appeal committee or council, although I must of course read them in the light of the appeal in response to which those documents were executed; but primarily the question is, what is the intention of each donor? That is to be ascertained from the document which he has signed. With regard to that, for the reasons that I have already given, I can find no general charitable intention in the documents. Therefore I do not derive assistance from the two cases to which [12] [1913] 1 Ch. 314.

[13] [1921] 1 Ch. 655.
[14] [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1260.

I have just referred where different documents altogether were being considered.

There is another matter which appears to me to distinguish this case from the cases that I have just mentioned. In this case there has been an initial failure of the charitable trust because it has now proved to be impracticable to build a voluntary hospital at Slough. In the cases before P. O. Lawrence J. and Wynn-Parry J. the primary object had been fully carried out. In the one case apparently, a profit was made on the sale of property and in the later case the response to the appeal was such that the committee which was administering the fund had more money than they could properly dispose of. Those seem to me to be very different cases. As I understand the reasoning of P. O. Lawrence J., if a donor was asked at the time of making his gift: "Supposing "that the charitable purpose is fully carried out and supposing "that unexpectedly there is a surplus when that primary purpose "has been achieved, what do you want done with your money? "You must remember that it will be mixed with other funds "given by donors out and out whom we cannot possibly trace," it may be proper in such circumstances as a matter of law to impute to the donor an intention that it should be devoted to other charitable purposes; or, at all events, the mixture of moneys may assist in coming to a conclusion upon the construction of the appeals that that is what the donor must have intended when dealing with a surplus after the charitable purpose for which he sent his contribution has been wholly achieved. But supposing that a donor is asked at the time of making his gift: "What do you want done if this charitable purpose cannot be "carried into effect at all?", it becomes, in my judgment, quite impossible to assume that the answer, having regard to the terms of documents 1 and 2, must be: "Give the money for some other "charitable purpose." It appears to me to be an irrelevant consideration to tell him at the time: "Remember that some of "the other contributions that we shall receive will come from "donors whom we cannot trace because it will come through "collecting boxes, dances, whist drives, and so on," for the trustees have in their hands untouched by the charitable purpose, for that has never come into effect, the sums originally subscribed or investments representing the same. Therefore the conclusion that I reach is that upon the true construction of documents 1 and 2, there is in the events which have happened a resulting trust for the donors, and I must declare accordingly.

That leaves two further classes which I must briefly mention. Some contributors may not have contributed upon the terms of documents 1 and 2 but by letter. It is, of course, a question on each letter or document which came from a donor as to whether the donor was giving his donation for a specific purpose or whether he indicated a general charitable intention. I cannot say more about that class.

Then there remain the funds raised through whist drives and 1953

HILLIER'S TRUSTS, In re.

Upjohn J.

the like where it is impossible to trace the donors. With regard to that class I respectfully agree with the observations of P. O. Lawrence J., that it is inconceivable that any person paying for a concert ticket or placing a coin in a collecting box that was presented to him, should have intended that any part of the money so contributed should be returned to him if there was a surplus when the immediate object for which the concert was given, or the collection was made, had been achieved. That must, I think, be so even where the object was never achieved, for the simple reason that the circumstances in which the money was given, negative the idea that the donor ever intended that he should receive any of that money back. That, however, in my judgment, does not conclude the matter. The donor has no further interest in the money because he has given it out and out; but where there is an initial failure of the charitable purpose, it seems to be an open matter as to whether the true result is that there is a general charitable intention, or the gifts become bona vacantia. That question has not been argued before me and indeed the Crown has not been joined with regard to it. It may be that the Crown will not desire to argue the point but I do not desire to pre-judge that question in any way. All that I can do is to declare that the original donors of that class no longer have any interest in the money subscribed or contributed by them or the investments now representing the same.

Declaration accordingly.

Solicitors: Kenneth Brown, Baker, Baker; Treasury Solicitor; Official Solicitor.

F. R. D.

[CHANCERY DIVISION.]

1953
Oct. 16, 22.

Vaisey J.

* In re HAYES' WILL TRUSTS. DOBIE AND OTHERS v. BOARD OF GOVERNORS OF NATIONAL HOSPITAL AND OTHERS.

[1950 H. 804.]

National Health Service—Hospital—Gift—Will—Trust funds to be divided equally between named hospitals—Whether "in existence"—Power of exclusion if "it shall be impracticable or inequitable "that such institution . . . should so share in consequence of . . . "having . . . become amalgamated with some other institution or "institutions"—Effect of National Health Service Act, 1946 (9 & 10 Geo. 6, c. 81).

Trust and Trustee. "Impracticable"—"Inequitable"—"Amalgamation." Company—Amalgamation—Meaning.

In 1938 a testator by his will bequeathed to trustees a sum on trust to invest and in their absolute discretion to pay the whole or any part of it for the maintenance and support of his wife, and subject thereto, the legacy and income not required for those purposes was to fall into his residuary estate. By clause 10 he provided that his residuary trust funds were to be divided equally between such of twenty-nine named charitable institutions, which included some hospitals as should be "in existence" at his death, but so that any sum or property falling into those funds after his death should be equally divided between such of the institutions as should be in existence when it fell in. By clause 11 he provided: ". . . my trustees may if they . . . think fit exclude any one or "more of such institutions from sharing in the residuary trust "funds or in any sum or property falling into the residuary trust "funds . . . after my death if in the opinion of my trustees it "shall be impracticable or inequitable that such institution or "institutions should so share in consequence of . . . having before "my death or before such sum or property falls in as aforesaid ". . . become amalgamated with some other institution or institu-"tions. . . ." The testator died in 1940. On July 5, 1948, the National Health Service Act, 1946, came into force and in 1949 the widow died:—

Held, (1) that the twenty-nine institutions were "in existence" within the meaning of clause 10 of the will at the dates of the testator's and the widow's death; (2) that the testator when he made the will could not have had in mind the National Health Service Act, 1946; (3) that there had not been under the National Health Service Act, 1946, or any other enactment any "amalgamation" of such a character as to make it "impracticable" or "inequitable" that any of the hospitals should share in those funds; (4) that the trustees had no power to exclude any of the hospitals from sharing in the residuary trust funds and that clause 11 of the will was inoperative in so far as it purported so to enable them.

Observations of Romer L.J. and of Lord Hanworth M.R. in In re Walker's Settlement [1935] Ch. 567; 51 T.L.R. 389 applied.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS.

This summons was taken out by the trustees of the will, dated September 28, 1938, of a testator who thereby created a trust fund ultimately divisible between 29 named institutions. He purported to give the trustees power, if they thought fit, to exclude any one or more of the institutions from sharing in the fund if, in the trustees' opinion, it should be impracticable or inequitable that it or they should so share on the ground of having become amalgamated with some other institution or institutions. On November 13, 1940, the testator died. On July 5, 1946, the National Health Service Act, 1946, came into force and, on March 10, 1949, the testator's widow died.

On February 24, 1950, the trustees of the will took out this summons, before the hearing of which two of the three of them died, and to which there were 20 defendants. By the summons the trustees asked, inter alia, whether all or any of the institutions were in existence at the date of the widow's death; if they were, whether all or any of them had become "amalgamated with some other institution or institutions" within the meaning of the will and, if any of them had, whether the trustees would have under the will a discretionary power to exclude it from sharing, or whether that power was not exercisable by reason of any provision in the National Health Service Act, 1946.

1953

HAYES' WILL TRUSTS, In re. DOBIE v. BOARD OF GOVERNORS OF NATIONAL HOSPITAL.

H. A. H. Christie Q.C. and A. H. Droop for the surviving trustee.

Peter Foster for the Board of Governors of the National Hospital and those of the London Hospital, the North-West Metropolitan Region Hospital Board, the Welsh Regional Hospital Board, the Paddington Group Hospital Management Committee and the Clwyd and Deeside Hospital Management Committee.

E. M. Winterbotham for the Board of Governors of the Hospital for Sick Children.

Sir Lynn Ungoed-Thomas Q.C. and H. E. Francis for the Board of Governors of the Royal Cancer Hospital, the North-East Metropolitan Regional Hospital Board, the Royal Cancer Hospital (Free), and the Hospital Management Committee Queen Elizabeth Hospital.

J. A. Brightman for the trustees of the Lord Mayor Treloar Cripples' Hospital and College.

J. G. Strangman Q.C. and D. H. McMullen for Dr. Barnardo's Homes National Incorporated Association.

V. M. C. Pennington for the National Hospital Queen Square for the Relief and Cure of Diseases of the Nervous System including Paralysis and Epilepsy, the Governors of the London Hospital, and Queen Elizabeth Hospital for Children.

F. B. Marsh for the Lord Mayor Treloar Orthopaedic Management Committee.

Denys Buckley for the Attorney-General.

The following case, in addition to those referred to in the judgment, was cited in argument: In re Buzzacott.[1]

VAISEY J. This summons raises questions on the true construction of the will of the late George Whitley Hayes, dated September 28, 1938. I think the date important, and I emphasize it.

The testator died on November 13, 1940, and on February 25, 1941, his will was proved in the Chester District Registry. The estate was very large, the net value being approximately £207,000. The testator appointed as his trustees Douglas Dobie, a solicitor of Chester, his (the testator's) nephew, William Warburton Hayes, and his cousin, John Higson Hayes; and they are in the will described as "my trustees." I thought at one time that the question might arise whether the power conferred by the testator on his trustees was of such a nature that it could be confined to the three original trustees and would not devolve into the trusteeship; but I am satisfied that there is nothing in that point, and I mention it merely to dispose of it.

[1] [1953] 1 Ch. 28; [1952] T.L.R. (Pt. 2) 884; [1952] 2 All E.R. 1011.

Only one trustee is now alive, namely, Mr. John Higson Hayes; he is the sole surviving plaintiff in these proceedings. Mr. Dobie, the solicitor, died on February 10, 1953, then aged 91 years, and Mr. William Warburton Hayes died a month afterwards, on March 11, 1953.

I have already dealt with two of the questions raised by the summons, the nature of which I will explain in a moment. The will provides: "Clause 5. I bequeath to my trustees the sum of "£80,000, free of duty, upon trust that they shall invest the same "in any of the investments authorized by law for the investment "of trust funds with liberty to vary the investments thereof from "time to time and shall stand possessed of the said sum of eighty "thousand pounds and the investments for the time being repre-"senting the same (hereinafter called 'the wife's trust legacy') "upon the trusts following that is to say upon trust that my "trustees shall during the life of my wife and so long as she "remains my widow at their absolute discretion pay or apply "the whole or any part of the income of the wife's trust legacy "or if they shall from time to time think fit any part of the "capital thereof to or for the maintenance and personal support "or benefit of my wife. . . ."

I may observe here that the wife survived the testator; she died on March 19, 1949, being his widow—she did not marry again.

The will continues: "and subject to the foregoing trust the "wife's trust legacy or such part thereof as shall not be applied "under the foregoing trust and so much of the income thereof as "in the opinion of my trustees shall not be required for the "purposes aforesaid shall sink into and form part of my residuary "estate. . . ."

Clause 10 provides: "I devise and bequeath all my real and "personal estate not hereby otherwise disposed of unto my "trustees upon trust that my trustees shall . . . sell call in and "convert into money the same or such parts thereof as shall not "consist of money and shall with and out of the moneys produced "by such sale calling in and conversion and with and out of my "ready money pay my funeral and testamentary expenses and "debts and pay or retain the legacies bequeathed by this my "will . . . and shall stand possessed of the residue of the said "moneys and of any part of my estate retained unconverted and "of the investments for the time being representing the same "(hereinafter called 'the residuary trust funds') In trust to "divide and distribute the same equally between and among such "of the charitable or other institutions hereinafter named as shall "be in existence at my death but so that any sum or property "which under the terms of this my will or any codicil hereto falls "into the residuary trust funds after my death shall be divided "equally between such of the said institutions as shall be in "existence at the date when the same falls in as aforesaid "namely . . . ."

1953

HAYES' WILL TRUSTS, In re. DOBIE v. BOARD OF GOVERNORS OF NATIONAL HOSPITAL.

Vaisey J.

Then the testator names 29 charitable institutions. There can, I think, be no doubt that every one of them was a charitable institution, although the testator describes them as "charitable or "other institutions."

The wife being dead, the question is raised whether these 29 institutions were in existence at the testator's death and the widow's death; I have answered that question in the affirmative, so far as it is necessary to answer it, and I direct that the share bequeathed to some of them, as to which there is some doubt, ought to be paid over by the trustees.

I do not think that it matters much, but, during the life of the widow, parts of the income of the legacy were divided up among the 29 institutions; the trustees do not seem to have had much doubt what their position was so long as the widow was alive.

Now we come to the curious feature in this case. Having divided his estate among these 29 institutions, and having declared that the receipts of the treasurers or other proper officers of the said institutions should be sufficient discharges to his trustees, the testator inserted (in advance of certain administrative directions as to which no difficulty arises, and which are contained in clauses 12 and 17 of the will) clause 11, which has seemed to me—and I think admittedly is, extremely ambiguous.

It is very difficult indeed, in fact almost impossible, to ascertain what the testator had in his mind when he wrote it. Whether it was his composition or that of somebody who was advising him, and what he was thinking about when he composed it, I really do not know; but I think it clear that, as the testator made his will in 1938, he cannot have had in his mind the National Health Service Act, 1946. The arguments in the case have turned almost exclusively on the effect of the Act; but the operations carried out by that Act were not apparently regarded as imminent in 1938, and, in fact, I doubt whether they were discussed at all. Sir Lynn Ungoed-Thomas reminded me that the National Health Service Act, 1946, was largely prompted by, and originated from, what is known as the Beveridge Report, which resulted from an inquiry which took place at any rate after the year 1938: it took place during the war.

With that in mind, I find it quite clear that the testator cannot possibly have been thinking of that Act as an Act; and, indeed, it seems rather unlikely that he was thinking of it as a project, an impending proposal, or anything like that. Remembering the date of the will, and also that of the testator's death (which was long before the National Health Service Act, 1946, was in draft or contemplated) I must see what the testator said as an addendum to the perfectly clear words in this clause as to the distribution of the estate among these 29 charitable institutions.

Clause 11 provides: "And I expressly declare that my trustees "may if they in their uncontrolled discretion think fit exclude any "one or more of such institutions from sharing in the residuary "trust funds or in any sum or property falling into the "residuary trust funds under the terms of this my will or any "codicil hereto after my death"—that is to say, from sharing after his death—"if in the opinion of my trustees it shall be "impracticable or inequitable that such institution or institutions "should so share in consequence of such institution or institu-"tions having before my death or before such sum or property "falls in as aforesaid as the case may be become amalgamated "with some other institution or institutions with power for my "trustees at their absolute discretion in case of any such amal-"gamation to pay or hand over the share of the residuary trust "funds or of such sum or property falling in as aforesaid by this "my will given to any institution to the institution or institutions "with which the same shall have become amalgamated. And I "declare that the receipt of the treasurer or other proper officer "of any such institution shall be a good and sufficient discharge "to my trustees." I think that the words "of any such "institution" must mean some institution with which the first-named institution shall be amalgamated.

Those words seem to me to be not very far short of unintelligible. The trustees have to form an "opinion" that the sharing of a particular institution in the testator's residue is either impracticable or inequitable.

What does "impracticable" mean? It means that something "cannot be done." I looked at the large dictionary, which did not throw very much light on it. I looked at the well-known Chambers' Twentieth-Century Dictionary—which defines "impracticable" as: "not able to be done; unmanageable; "stubborn." "Unmanageable" and "stubborn" do not come in here, so we are left with "not able to be done." Then, what does "inequitable" mean? Again I refer to the small dictionary, and the only definition given for that word in the small dictionary is: "Unfair; unjust."

In this court the word "equitable" is of the very highest importance and carries the very highest implication; the word "inequitable," which is the contrary of it, indicates something against which this court, by its ancient constitution and, I hope, by its application of legal principles, is bound to strive day in and day out. If something is said to be unfair or unjust, it is something against which this court sets its face, and this court will never allow it to be said that that which is inequitable can or should be allowed to be done.

The trustees here have to form an opinion that something is "impracticable"—that is to say, cannot be done—or is "inequitable" in the sense of being unfair or unjust; and I am bound to say that it is rather difficult to see how they can ever form such an opinion; because, after all, they cannot simply say, "We think that this is impracticable," and disregard the court, saying that they have arrived at that agreement and that it is not for the court to cross-examine them on it. It is difficult, also, to see how they can form the opinion that anything is unjust or unfair, and that it is not for the court to ask them why. There must, I think, be some ground or reason in the matter, and the preliminary step is that the trustees should form an opinion that the sharing of a particular charitable institution would be either impossible, or unjust and unfair; that is to say, the trustees have to hold the opinion that it would be impracticable or inequitable that the institution should share. What matters, however, is not just the impracticability or "iniquity" (for that is the original meaning, although it has a different meaning now). The sharing must be "impracticable" or "inequitable" in the sense applicable where an institution has become, before the death or before the property falls in, amalgamated with another institution or institutions. The trustees must say that the institution has become amalgamated, and that the result is that it is either impracticable or inequitable that it should share in the testator's estate.

1953

HAYES' WILL TRUSTS, In re. DOBIE v. BOARD OF GOVERNORS OF NATIONAL HOSPITAL.

Vaisey J.

The whole of the argument has really centred round the National Health Service Act, 1946, and it is said that the change in the status of the hospitals which are now among these 29 charities has been so changed by way of amalgamation, that it is no longer possible and no longer fair that the named hospitals should share in the testator's estate. Very little argument was addressed to me on practicability, but a great deal on the question of want of equity.

It has been held in certain cases to which I need not refer—one was a decision of my own—that a hospital affected by the Act is still a charity, and is still capable of being benefited as a charity; and I really cannot see how, disregarding all the other difficulties of this clause, it could possibly be inequitable—that is to say, unfair or unjust—for an executor to persist in the carrying out of statutory obligations. Occasionally—perhaps all too rarely—wealthy testators have bequeathed their fortunes to the relief of the National Debt; and I really cannot see how anybody could say that such a gift would be inequitable. I should have thought that it was praiseworthy and perfectly fair and just, according to the ordinary usage of the English language; and to say that it is unfair and unjust that a nationalized hospital, to put the matter shortly, is just as much a charity and an object of bounty as it was before it was nationalized, is, in my opinion, quite wrong, and indeed that has been so held.

Of course, had the testator said, "in the event of an "institution having before my death been taken over by the "state, or become nationalized," or something of that kind, a very different position would have arisen; but I really cannot see how a man accustomed to the use of the English language, and applying his mind to this as a matter of serious consideration, could possibly say that any kind of amalgamation effected by the National Health Service Act, 1946, can possibly have made it either "impracticable" or "inequitable" that a nationalized hospital should share in the testator's bounty.

I really find it very difficult to picture what the testator had in his mind with regard to this. Take the National Health Service Act, 1946, right out of the picture, because the testator cannot have been thinking of it; the question remains: What was he thinking of? There is a very curious thing at the end of clause 11; the final alternative which is given by the clause is that the trustees may pay or hand over the share given to the institution, not to the institution in which the same shall have become merged, or anything of that kind, but to the institution or institutions "with which the same shall have become amalgamated." It has occurred to me that possibly the testator may have had something in his mind in reference to such a gift, for instance, as the gift to the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds; he may have thought that that would have got mixed up with Anti-Vivisection societies or something of that kind, and he may have been saying, "I do not want anything of that kind to happen"—that may be the sort of thing to which this clause is referring. I think that it is really a complete puzzle. I do not pause to describe the kind of amalgamation that the National Health Service Act has brought about, but I ask whether anybody can say that the amalgamations, and not what follows them but the amalgamations themselves, have had as their consequence the rendering impracticable or inequitable the share of a hospital of this kind. I really cannot see it; and, of course, the principle applies that, inasmuch as the gift under clause 10 is as clear as crystal, clause 11, which is intended to cut it down, stultifies certain parts of it. It gives to certain persons the power of excluding a named charity from the testator's bounty. I think that, unless I can be reasonably certain what this means, I ought to leave the preceding gift unqualified. In my view, there never has been such an amalgamation as produces the consequences of "impracticability" or "iniquity." That, I think, is an end of the case.

I now turn to a very curious situation which arises. These trustees were, one would have thought, entrusted with a most embarrassing, invidious and difficult task, but they are not only submitting to carrying it out if the court thinks fit, but are very vigorously and pertinaciously pressing me to say that this power is or was vested in them and is now vested in the sole survivor. They explain that they are anxious to have what I have described as this embarrassing, invidious and difficult task laid upon them, because they say: "If we have such a power we would wish to exercise that power of exclusion in respect of any of the institutions which have been taken over by the State"; and they say that they take up that position because they are satisfied that the testator would have wished them to do so.

First, I really do not know how they can at this time be "satisfied" except by some process of clairvoyance, or something of that kind, that the testator would have wished them to do so. He cannot, in his lifetime, have said in effect: "If there should

1953

HAYES' WILL TRUSTS, In re. DOBIE v. BOARD OF GOVERNORS OF NATIONAL HOSPITAL.

Vaisey J.

"be a National Health Service, don't let anyone touching my "estate become implicated in it." Yet these trustees are saying that they are "satisfied," not "inclined to think" but "satisfied," that he would have wished them to do it.

First, I do not think that at all a proper consideration (except, possibly, as one of a number of considerations) to influence the trustees if they have that power. Realising that, one year later they file another affidavit, in which they say, with reference to the first affidavit: "We were at the date of that affidavit "and are of opinion"—this is quite different—"that it will "be inequitable that any institution which at the death of "the testator's widow had become amalgamated with another "or others in circumstances in which, on and from the amalga-"mation, the amalgamated institution became maintainable by "the State should share in the legacy of £80,000 which the "testator bequeathed to be divided equally between institutions "which at the date of his said will and death relied on voluntary "contributions for their support."

Then they say: "We are, however, advised that whether the "effect of the National Health Service Act, 1946, on all or any "of the institutions referred to in paragraph 1 of the originating "summons herein is such as to make the discretionary power of "exclusion conferred by clause 11 exercisable as regards such "institutions or any of them is a question of law depending on "the construction of the testator's will and the effect of the "provisions of the said Act upon such institutions respectively."

Thus, a year later, they realize that they have given a very strange reason for wanting to exercise this power, namely—"as" they are satisfied that the testator would have wished it. They now put it on a different ground, namely, that they do not like the idea of money going to the nationalized hospitals, and that they want to exclude them as far as they can.

It was suggested to me (and I must say that I was somewhat influenced by it) that having regard to the reasons which they have given—the disclosure which they have made as to their mental state—and considering how very important is this fiduciary power, if power it is, they or the survivor ought to be in some way controlled; that he should not simply be allowed to say: "I know that the testator would have wished it, and I approve, "also, so I cut all these hospitals out." As, in my judgment, they have no such power, and as the clause is inoperative, I need not say any more about that. But I have throughout been a little surprised that the trustees should have actively pressed to be entrusted with this difficult task, and I am very glad to feel myself, not entitled, but obliged, to relieve them of any embarrassment in that regard.

We have had, of course, to consider the meaning of the word "amalgamation"; the meaning of that word has been considered in In re Walker's Settlement.[1] From that case, however, I really only get the assistance of a quotation by Romer L.J. of the definition in Buckley on the Companies Acts, 11th ed., at p. 487. Romer L.J. said: "It is a definition which, so far as "it is a definition, I should like to adopt as my own; it is there "stated as follows: 'The word "amalgamation" has no definite "'legal meaning. It contemplates a state of things under which "'two companies are so joined as to form a third entity, or "'one company is absorbed into and blended with another "'company.'"

That is further emphasized by a quotation by Lord Hanworth M.R. of a statement in Wall v. London and Northern Assets Corporation[3] by Chitty L.J., who said: "I agree that the term "has no fixed meaning in point of law. You have to see how "the term is used in the particular document that has to be "construed."

Applying that, therefore, you have to see how the word "amalgamation" was used in this particular document, and as I have pointed out, it has to be an amalgamation of such a character as to have the consequence of raising a case of impracticability and "iniquity." In my judgment here, in this context, I am not satisfied that there has been any amalgamation of that character either under the National Health Service Act, 1946, or any other statute.

There was brought to my attention a decision of Danckwerts J. in In re Bawden's Settlement; Besant v. Board of Governors of London Hospital,[4] where he had to consider this question of amalgamation. In that case Danckwerts J. had to consider the words: "In case at any time hereafter any of the charities and institutions ". . . shall attempt to alienate charge or anticipate its share or "proportion of the annual income of the trust fund or shall cease "to exist or shall become amalgamated with or absorbed in any "other charity or institution," then certain consequences may follow. The amalgamation had to be any kind of amalgamation which would have satisfied those words. The reference to "absorption" is also helpful, but is, unfortunately, not very easy to read into clause 11 in the present case, owing to the concluding words which refer to an amalgamated institution, namely: "the institution with which the same shall have become "amalgamated," and not: "into which the same shall have "become merged."

I have read the judgment of Danckwerts J. in that case, and I have also the actual order which was made; and if I had had to construe words so unqualified as those in In re Bawden's Settlement,[4] I should, undoubtedly, without hesitation have

[1] [1935] Ch. 567, 583; 51 T.L.R. 389.

[3] [1898] 2 Ch. 469, 481; 14 T.L.R. 547, 548.

[4] Reported in note at end of this report.

1953

HAYES' WILL TRUSTS, In re. DOBIE v. BOARD OF GOVERNORS OF NATIONAL HOSPITAL.

Vaisey J.

followed that decision. These words, however, are very different, and I do not think that that decision has helped me at all.

Apart from the National Health Service Act, 1946, there is a private Act called the Queen Elizabeth Hospital for Children Act, 1942. Under that Act certain hospitals were amalgamated, but my conclusion is that neither under the National Health Service Act, 1946, nor under that private Act has there been, or was there at the date of the death of the testator's widow, which I suppose is the relevant date, any amalgamation in the sense envisaged in clause 11 in the case of any of the institutions mentioned in clause 10.

Taking the two questions together, the first of which asks me to say whether "the institutions aforesaid or any of them were "or was on the death of the testator's widow in existence within "the meaning of clause 10," I have already held that they were all in existence. Then it goes on: "whether on the death of the "testator's widow all or any and if so which of them had become "amalgamated with some other institution or institutions within "the meaning of clause 11." There I declare that none of the institutions has become amalgamated with any other institution within the meaning of clause 11 of the will.

The result is, I think, that the question which asks whether, if there was an amalgamation, the trustees had a discretionary power, does not arise; but I think that I had better say: "and accordingly there is not under the said clause any discretion-"ary power in the surviving plaintiff or any of the trustees to "exclude such institution from sharing in the said legacy."

As I have said, I think this case puzzling. I think that it is a matter of speculation, but it certainly looks as though, had this will been put before me with the date struck out, I should have been rather disposed to think that it had some reference to the National Health Service Act, 1946. That, however, is impossible. I do not think that that Act really has anything to do with it.

I shall answer the two questions left in the way which I have indicated.

Declarations accordingly.

Solicitors: Rider, Heaton, Meredith & Mills for Brown, Dobie & Rogers, Chester; Linklaters & Paines; Waterhouse & Co.; Farrer & Co.; Trower, Still & Keeling; Boyce, Evans & Sheppard; Hanbury, Whitting & Ingle; Treasury Solicitor.

K. R. A. H.

NOTE.

In re BAWDEN'S SETTLEMENT.
BESANT AND OTHERS v. BOARD OF GOVERNORS OF LONDON HOSPITAL AND OTHERS.

1953
Jan. 23.

Danckwerts J.

[1949 B. 3164.]

National Health Service—Hospital—Gift—Settlement—Trusts in favour of hospitals—Power to trustees if hospital "amalgamated with or "absorbed in any other charity or institution" to pay its share to or for the benefit of that charity or institution or for "other "objects or purposes of charity or benevolence or amelioration of "human suffering or advancement of knowledge"—National Health Service Act, 1946 (9 & 10 Geo. 6, c. 81), ss. 11 (8), 60 (1).

Charity—Benevolent purposes. Perpetuities, rule against—Charity—Defeasance clause — Non-charitable object. "Amalgamation." Company—Amalgamation—Meaning.

A settlement dated December 21, 1905, provided by clause 4 that the trustees should pay the annual income of the trust fund therein comprised to or between the charities and institutions mentioned, and in the shares and proportions indicated, in the schedule thereto. Clause 8 provided inter alia that if any of those charities or institutions should become amalgamated with or absorbed in any other charities or institutions the trustees might in their discretion pay or apply the appropriate share or proportion of the annual income of the trust fund to or for the benefit of the charity or institution with or in which it should have become amalgamated or absorbed, or might apply it to or for such other objects or purposes of charity or benevolence or amelioration of human suffering or advancement of knowledge as they should in their opinion consider to be in accordance with the original desire and intention of the testator.

On July 5, 1948, the National Health Service Act, 1946, came into force.

Of the charities and institutions mentioned in the schedule to the settlement, the London Hospital and Queen Mary's Maternity Home were, by an order of May 7, 1948, made pursuant to section 11 (8) of the Act, together designated a teaching hospital, and the Poplar Hospital for Accidents become one of a group of three hospitals grouped together as "No. 8. Bow."

By this summons, which was taken out on June 14, 1949, the trustees of the settlement asked whether, on the true construction of the settlement and of the National Health Service Act, 1946, and in the events which had happened, the share of the annual income of the trust fund which before July 5, 1948, was payable to or for the benefit of the London Hospital had been since that date and was at the date of this summons (a) payable to the Board of Governors of the London Hospital (b) payable or applicable according to the trusts declared in clause 8 of the settlement to or between the charities, institutions objects or purposes in that clause referred to or (c) held on a resulting trust for the settlor's estate on the footing that the trusts declared in clause 8 were void or (d) held on any other and what trusts. They asked like questions with regard to the Royal Cancer Hospital (Free) and the Poplar Hospital for Accidents.

1953

BAWDEN'S SETTLEMENT, In re. BESANT v. BOARD OF GOVERNORS OF LONDON HOSPITAL.

H. E. Francis for the plaintiffs, the trustees of the settlement.

V. M. C. Pennington for the Board of Governors of the London Hospital and the Governors of the London Hospital (Incorporated).

Sir Lynn Ungoed-Thomas Q.C. and J. A. Armstrong for the Board of Governors of the Royal Cancer Hospital and the Governors of the Royal Cancer Hospital (Free).

Raymond Walton for the Bow Hospital Management Committee of St. Andrew's Hospital, Bow, and the North East Metropolitan Regional Hospital Board.

D. H. McMullen for Dr. Barnardo's Homes National Incorporated Association.

J. A. Wolfe for the settlor's personal representatives.

N. S. Warren for the Attorney-General.

DANCKWERTS J. The questions which I have to decide in this case arise with regard to the trusts of a settlement dated December 21, 1905, of a fund amounting to some £100,000, and at the present time of a value of over £114,000. The document in question (the settlement) was obviously one over which a great deal of care must have been taken, but unfortunately the result is not entirely happy. It was a settlement made by a Mr. Edward George Bawden, and there are three trustees named in the deed. The personal representatives by representation of Mr. Bawden are parties to this summons, and claim that in the result that happens there is a resulting trust in their favour.

The deed begins with certain recitals expressing apparently the intention of the settlor: "Whereas the settlor for the purposes of "charity and benevolence and the advancement of knowledge especially "in aid of human suffering is desirous of creating a trust fund the "annual income whereof is to be applied for the benefit of such "charities and institutions—" It is a curious feature of this deed that the words "charities and institutions" are used in a number of places as though they were two different things. Whether that was really intended or not, I do not know, and fortunately, at any rate for the purposes of this case, it does not matter. The recital continues: "—and "in such proportions and manner as hereinafter appears and with "that intent has transferred into the names of the present trustees "the investments specified in the first schedule hereto." The second recital reads: "And whereas for the purpose of the distribution of "the annual income of the trust fund intended to be hereby constituted "but for no other purpose the settlor is desirous that the said capital "sum of one hundred thousand pounds shall subject as hereinafter "mentioned be considered as appropriated to or for the benefit of the "respective charities and institutions mentioned in the second "schedule hereto in the respective proportions specified in the same "schedule—" I pause again to observe that that seems to indicate a desire that unless something happens to upset that result, the proportions of the income of the sum are to be appropriated to the different bodies mentioned in the schedule. The recital continues: "—it "being the desire and intention of the settlor that each of the said "respective charities and institutions shall so long as it shall continue "an existing charity or institution and shall not attempt to alienate "charge or anticipate its proportion of the income of the trust fund "receive such proportion of the total annual income of the said "trust fund from time to time distributable between the said respective "charities and institutions as the capital sum appropriated to such "charity or institution as mentioned in the said second schedule hereto "bears to the said total capital sum of one hundred thousand pounds."

Then after certain administrative provisions with which I need not concern myself, the important clauses in the body of the deed, the operative parts, are clauses 4 and 8, and I do not think I shall have to read any other clauses. Clause 4 is in these terms: "The trustees shall "subject as hereinafter mentioned pay or distribute the annual income "of the trust fund to or between the several charities and institutions "mentioned in the second schedule hereto in the shares and proportions "which the capital sums appropriated to such charities and institu-"tions respectively as mentioned in the said schedule respectively bear "to the total capital sum of one hundred thousand pounds at such "times in the year as to the trustees shall appear most suitable and "convenient but so that such payment or distribution shall not in the "case of any charity or institution be made less often than half-yearly. "And all payments made by the trustees to or for the benefit of any "charity or institution shall be made to the treasurer for the time "being of such charity or institution or such person as shall from "time to time be nominated in writing to receive the same by the "governing body of such charity or institution as defined in cl. 1 of "the third schedule hereto." Then it provides that the receipt of the treasurer or person nominated is to be a good receipt. Then there is a proviso that the trustees are not bound to pay out in excess of income at the rate of 4 per cent. on the proportions of the shares in question. Then there are certain provisions as to what is to happen to the surplus, which I do not think I need read.

I turn now to clause 8, and I think it is plain that though it may, of course, be referring to other clauses, in clause 4 the words "subject as "hereinafter mentioned" do refer to clause 8. Clause 8 is in the following words: "In case at any time hereafter any of the charities and insti-"tutions mentioned in the second schedule hereto or any other charity "or institution which shall under the provisions herein contained "hereafter become entitled to participate under the trust hereby consti-"tuted shall attempt to alienate charge or anticipate its share or pro-"portion of the annual income of the trust fund or shall cease to exist "or shall become amalgamated with or absorbed in any other charity "or institution (whether mentioned in the second schedule hereto or "not) the trustees may in their discretion either pay or apply the "share or proportion of the annual income of the trust fund which "under the provisions hereof was for the time being payable to or for "the benefit of the charity or institution so ceasing to exist or becoming "amalgamated or absorbed as aforesaid as follows (that is to say) in "the case of a charity or institution becoming amalgamated or absorbed "as aforesaid to or for the benefit of the charity or institution with or "in which the same shall have become amalgamated or been absorbed "or as well in the case of any charity or institution so becoming "amalgamated or absorbed as in the case of any charity or institution "attempting to alienate charge or anticipate its share or proportion "of the annual income of the trust fund or ceasing to exist as aforesaid "to or between or for the benefit of such one or more of the other "charities and institutions mentioned in the said second schedule hereto "or any other charity or institution or charities or institutions for the "time being entitled to participate under the trust hereby constituted "and in such shares and proportions as the trustees shall think proper "or may apply such share or proportion of annual income to or "for such other objects or purposes of charity or benevolence or "amelioration of human suffering or advancement of knowledge as the "trustees shall in their opinion consider to be most in accordance with "the original desire and intention of the settlor."

There are a large number of bodies whose names appear in the second schedule, and it appears that they are all of them charitable in nature, notwithstanding that the deed refers constantly to them as charities or institutions. There are certain hospitals included in the list, and in particular there is the London Hospital, Whitechapel, E.,

1953

BAWDEN'S SETTLEMENT, In re. BESANT v. BOARD OF GOVERNORS OF LONDON HOSPITAL.

Danckwerts J.

the Poplar Hospital for Accidents, 303, East India Dock Road, E., and the Cancer Hospital (Free), Fulham Road, Brompton, S.W.

The questions which I have to decide arise because of the effect of the National Health Service Act, 1946, which came into operation on the appointed day for the purposes of that Act, which was July 5, 1948. Certain things were done by that Act or pursuant to its provisions which affected these three hospitals, or may have affected them. In the case of the Cancer Hospital, an order was made which merely continued the Cancer Hospital as a teaching hospital, but not in association with any other previous hospital, and consequently it is clear that in the case of the Cancer Hospital no question of amalgamation really arises. That was admitted in the course of the case, and consequently, although a question was raised in the summons with regard to the Cancer Hospital, it is not necessary for me to consider the matter any further. Two questions do arise in regard to the London Hospital and in regard to the Poplar Hospital for Accidents.

I will take first of all the London Hospital, which, under the terms of the National Health Service Act, 1946, was made a teaching hospital, and consequently was dealt with in a different way from those hospitals whose property vested in the Minister and which were not treated in the same way as teaching hospitals. For the purposes which I have to consider, primarily, at any rate, the relevant provisions of the Act are to be found in section 11 (8). That subsection provides as follows: "The Minister may, after consultation with the university "concerned, by order designate as a teaching hospital any hospital or "group of hospitals which appears to him to provide for any university "facilities for undergraduate or post-graduate clinical teaching, and "the Minister shall, in the case of any hospital or group so designated, "by order constitute, in accordance with Part III of the Third Schedule "to this Act, a Board of Governors for the purpose of exercising "functions with respect to the administration of that hospital or "group; and any group of hospitals so designated shall, as from the "appointed day or the date of the designation (whichever last occurs), "be deemed for the purposes of this Act to be a single hospital."

By an order dated May 7, 1948 (No. 979 of 1948), and made pursuant to the provisions of that subsection which I have just read, it was provided: "Each of the hospitals or groups of hospitals set out "in the second column of the Schedule hereto is hereby designated "as a teaching hospital and shall be known by the name inserted in "the first column of the Schedule opposite thereto." Referring to the schedule I find that the second group (or whatever you may call it) is described as "The London Hospital," and the hospital or group of hospitals which are designated as a teaching hospital in the right-hand column are these: "The London Hospital, E.1 (including the "Croft Home, Reigate, the Marie Celeste Annexe, Reigate, the Zachary "Merton Annexe, Banstead, the London Hospital Annexe, Brentwood, "and the Herman de Stern Convalescent Home, Felixstowe)." They are all in one paragraph, and as a matter of fact all those subsidiary ones were really small branches of the London Hospital before these recent events. Then, secondly, I have Queen Mary's Maternity Home, Hampstead, N.W.3. It seems to me the result of that order is that the London Hospital and Queen Mary's Maternity Home are designated as one teaching hospital—"a teaching hospital," as the order says—and accordingly that they form one hospital between them, and, indeed, as expressed in section 11 (8) of the National Health Service Act, 1946, there has been an amalgamation in the case of the London Hospital with Queen Mary's Maternity Home. Therefore, it seems to me that one of the events mentioned in cl. 8 of the deed has come into operation in the case of the London Hospital.

In the case of the Poplar Hospital for Accidents the matter is somewhat different, because it is not a teaching hospital under the new scheme, and different provisions of section 11 of the Act apply in consequence. For instance, subsection (3) provides: "Every Regional "Hospital Board shall, within such period as the Minister may by "direction specify, submit to the Minister a scheme for the appoint-"ment of them by committees, to be called Hospital Management "Committees, for the purpose of exercising functions with respect "to the management and control of individual hospitals or groups "of hospitals, other than teaching hospitals, providing hospital and "specialists services in the area of the Board. (4) The Minister "may approve, with or without modifications, which may include "additions or exceptions, any scheme submitted to him by a Regional "Hospital Board under the last foregoing subsection, and it shall be "the duty of the Board to give effect to the scheme as approved "by the Minister. (5) A Regional Hospital Board may at any time, "and if directed by the Minister shall within such period as may "be specified in the direction, submit a new scheme providing for the "modification of the scheme in force under this section, and the last "foregoing subsection shall apply to any such new scheme. (6) A "Hospital Management Committee shall be constituted in accordance "with Part II of the Third Schedule to this Act."

It is to be observed, and it is very striking, that there is nothing whatever in those subsections corresponding to the provisions to be found in subsection (8), that any group so constituted under a scheme shall "be deemed for the purposes of this Act to be a single hospital"; indeed, there is not a word of any kind on that point at all. In the present case a hospital management committee has been constituted in respect of a number of hospitals, a scheme has been put forward which has received the approval of the Minister of Health, and, therefore, comes into effect. The scheme in question provides for a management committee of a certain character, and it deals with certain hospitals in a schedule. Nothing is very explicit really in this scheme. On the point I have to consider, all it says in the schedule under the heading "Number and Name of Group" is "Bow." Whether it is Bow Group or Bow Hospital that it is to be called, I do not know. Then the next column is headed "Name of Hospital," and I find St. Andrew's, secondly St. Clements, and thirdly Poplar, which is undoubtedly the old Poplar Hospital for Accidents. They, therefore, are grouped together under the number and name, "No. 8 Bow," and the same appears in the letter of the Minister of Health approving the scheme.

Consequently, I find that there is a group consisting of three hospitals, of which the Poplar Hospital is one, but I am unable to see that there is any amalgamation in the same sense that there has been in the case of the London Hospital and in the sense which I think should be applied (albeit with no technical meaning) in the settlement of 1905 that I have to consider. Certainly Poplar Hospital is grouped with two other hospitals for the purposes of management and administration by the committee, but that, it seems to me, is the extent of the nexus between the two, and I do not find, therefore, that there has been an amalgamation in respect of the Poplar Hospital for the purposes of the settlement of 1905. Consequently, so far as the Poplar Hospital is concerned, it is unnecessary to consider the matter any further.

In the case of the London Hospital there are questions to consider. What is the result, and is their share taken away, or may it be taken away, under the discretionary power by the trustees, and is such a trust, if it is intended to operate, valid and effectual?

I propose to dispose first of all of one argument which was put up (not indeed on behalf of the London Hospital actually, but by Mr.

1953

BAWDEN'S SETTLEMENT, In re. BESANT v. BOARD OF GOVERNORS OF LONDON HOSPITAL.

Danckwerts J.

Walton on behalf of the Poplar Hospital, but I think I should deal with it none the less), namely, that the provisions of section 60 of the National Health Service Act, 1946, overrode any provisions of the trust which would divert the funds in the events which have happened and would require the funds in question to be paid to the Hospital Management Committee.

Section 60 (1), provides: "Where property, other than property "transferred to the Minister or to the Board of Governors of a teaching "hospital or to a Hospital Management Committee under section 6 or "section 7 of this Act, is held on trust immediately before the appointed day." Pausing there for a moment, the property subject to the trusts of the settlement would come within that description of property which is not transferred to the Minister, because under the somewhat peculiar provisions in respect of an endowment fund in section 7 (10), of the National Health Service Act, if the property in question is not held "by trustees solely for the purposes of that hospital" it is not vested in the Minister, and, therefore, comes within this provision which I am considering. Of course, in the case of the trust deed the property is held on trust for a whole number of charities including this hospital, and, therefore, it is plainly not intended to come within section 7 (10), and so it is dealt with by section 60, if it is within that section. Continuing with the section: "and the terms of the trust "instrument authorise or require the trustees, whether immediately or "in the future, to apply any part of the capital or income of the "trust property for the purposes of any hospital to which section 6 "of this Act applies, the trust instrument shall be construed as "authorising or, as the case may be, requiring the trustees to apply "the trust property, to the like extent, and at the like times, for the "purpose of making payments, whether of capital or income—(a) in "the case of a hospital designated as a teaching hospital or included "in a group of hospitals so designated, to the Board of Governors "of that teaching hospital; (b) in the case of any other hospital, to "the Regional Hospital Board for the area in which the hospital is "situated or to the Hospital Management Committee for the hospital "or for the group of hospitals in which it is comprised. (2) Any "sums paid as aforesaid to any such Board or Committee shall, so "far as practicable, be applied by them for the purposes specified in "the trust instrument." That last part, of course, states merely what is to be done if the first subsection applies.

It has been argued that the result of this section is to prevent any gift over from the hospital for which the property was held and was to be applied from taking effect, and, therefore, that the provisions of the trusts in the settlement of 1905 are overridden by the provisions of this section. It would be a very strong thing, I may observe in the first place, for an Act of Parliament to provide that a condition of defeasance on certain events shall not take effect, and if an Act of Parliament is so intended to operate, one would expect, and indeed require, to find express words having that result; but I do not think that it is the intention of this section to do anything of that kind at all. The object of the section is simply to provide that the funds applicable to a hospital shall continue to be so applicable after the operation of the National Health Service Act, 1946, and provides for the body which takes the place of the former hospital (in whichever class it may fall) continuing the services in question. Consequently, it seems to me it has no operation where, upon the event of the hospital, for instance, becoming amalgamated the trust no longer required the property to be applied and no longer authorized the property to be applied for the purposes of that hospital at all. It seems to me, in consequence, that section 60 has no operation whatever in the circumstances of this particular case with regard to the London Hospital.

I have now dealt with the Act and I return to the provisions of the settlement of 1905. It is to be observed that in the event of amalgamation, amongst other things, certain trusts are to come into operation. The trustees are given a discretion, in other words, the discretionary trust was created in the trustees which enables them to apply the income of the share which the charity formerly obtained before amalgamation either to the same charity in its amalgamated situation or to some other charity which is within the purposes of the settlement, or it may be applied—this is, of course, the fatal provision—not only for the purposes of charity, benevolence, the amelioration of human suffering and the advancement of knowledge, but for such other objects or purposes of charity as the trustees think fit. It is, therefore, a trust which is not only for charitable purposes, but quite definitely (in view of the number of decisions of the court culminating in Minister of Health v. Simpson[5]) for non-charitable purposes, and consequently the trustees have liberty to apply it either to charity or not to charity, and in those circumstances there is a trust which is not effective under the rules of our law. It may be it is void for uncertainty, but it seems to me also, in the events that have happened in this case, it is void under the rule against perpetuities.

Before dealing with that more in detail I will refer to an argument that was put forward that the matter was saved by the final words of clause 8, namely: "as the trustees shall in their opinion consider to be "most in accordance with the original desire and intention of the "settlor." The trustees, in my opinion, can discover what the original desire and intention of the settlor was only by looking at the recitals to the settlement. We find at the very beginning that the settlor enumerates the purposes which he has in mind, namely, "charity and "benevolence and the advancement of knowledge especially in aid of "human suffering." So he has enumerated three purposes, any one of which is the purpose which he wishes to advance, and one of those purposes is "benevolence." As I say, in view of the decisions of the court, benevolence is not a charitable purpose. So that reference back under the final provision of clause 8 carries the matter no further at all.

There have been some cases (some on one side of the line, some on the other) where there may be a gift to a charitable purpose which is limited in time and is only to continue for so long, or there may be a perpetual charitable purpose which is cut short by a defeasance provision contained in the trusts. It seems to me that notwithstanding the words, "subject as hereinafter mentioned," in clause 4, the trusts which are contained in clause 4 of the settlement are unlimited in time so far as that clause is concerned, and clause 8, as it seems to me, contains what is quite plainly a defeasance clause, cutting short the trusts which would under the provisions of clause 4 continue indefinitely. Therefore, there is a trust which may come into being in favour of a non-charitable purpose, amongst others, which need not come into being within the time allowed by the rule against perpetuities. Therefore it seems to me that the trust is void under the rule against perpetuities, as was held to be the case in In re Peel's Release.[6] The result of the defeasance clause being inoperative by virtue of the rule against perpetuities is that the original trust remains unimpaired, which was the case in In re Peel's Release.[6]

Consequently, in the present case the original trust in respect of the income and the share payable to the London Hospital remains unaffected under the provision of clause 8, and continues in favour of the [5] [1951] A.C. 251: 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 2) 1015; [1950] 2 All E.R. 1137.

[6] [1921] 2 Ch. 218.

1953

BAWDEN'S SETTLEMENT, In re. BESANT v. BOARD OF GOVERNORS OF LONDON HOSPITAL.

purpose for which it was intended, and, therefore, operates in favour of the purpose of the body at present carrying on the medical teaching work at the London Hospital.

Solicitors: Bircham & Co.; Hanbury, Whitting & Ingle; Farrer & Co.; E. F. Turner & Sons; Boyce, Evans & Sheppard; Farman, Daniell & Co.; Treasury Solicitor.

K. R. A. H.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

C. A.

1953 Nov. 30; Dec. 1, 2.

Singleton, Birkett and Hodson L.JJ.

* JOHN HUDSON & CO. LD. v. KIRKNESS (INSPECTOR OF TAXES).

Revenue—Income tax—Balancing charge—"Sale"—Railway wagons vested in Transport Commission—Compensation—Whether transaction a sale—Liability to balancing charge—Income Tax Act, 1945 (8 & 9 Geo. 6, c. 32), ss. 17 (1) (a), (3), 68—Transport Act, 1947 (10 & 11 Geo. 6, c. 49), ss. 8, 29, 30, 31; Sch. VI.

Transport — Nationalization — Compensation. "Sale." Compulsory purchase—Meaning.

The vesting of a company's railway wagons in the Transport Commission under section 29 of the Transport Act, 1947, with compensation fixed in the form of transport stock under the relevant sections of that Act, does not constitute a sale for the purposes of section 17 of the Income Tax Act, 1945, so as to render the company liable to a balancing charge under that section; nor is the transaction a compulsory sale, by analogy with compulsory acquisitions of land, since the provisions of the Transport Act distinguish between the procedure for such acquisitions and that for the transfer of wagons. Nothing in the taxing Acts displaces the ordinary meaning of "sold" at common law which is to be attributed to its use in section 17 (1) (a) of the Income Tax Act, 1945.

Newcastle Breweries Ld. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners (1927) 43 T.L.R. 476; 12 T.C. 927 distinguished.

Decision of Upjohn J. [1953] 1 W.L.R. 749; [1953] 2 All E.R. 64 affirmed.

APPEAL from Upjohn J.

The taxpayers, John Hudson & Co. Ld., appealed to the commissioners for the special purposes of the Income Tax Acts against an assessment made on them for the year 1948/49 under Case I of Sch. D to the Income Tax Act, 1918, in the sum of £29,021. The assessment was made in order to give effect to a balancing charge on the company under section 17 of the Income Tax Act, 1945,[1]

[1] Income Tax Act, 1945, s. 17: "(1) Subject to the provisions of this "section, where, on or after the "appointed day [April 6, 1946], any "of the following events occurs in the "case of any machinery or plant in "respect of which an initial allowance "or a deduction under Rule 6 of the "Rules applicable to Cases I and II "of Schedule D has been made or "allowed for any year of assessment "to a person carrying on a trade, that "is to say, either—(a) the machinery "or plant is sold, whether while still "in use or not; or (b) the machinery "or plant, whether still in use or not, "ceases to belong to the person carry-"ing on the trade by reason of the the Crown alleging that such a charge arose by virtue of the receipt by the taxpayers of compensation under section 30 of the Transport Act, 1947, in respect of a number of railway wagons belonging to the taxpayers which vested in the Transport Commission under section 29 [2] of that Act.

The question was whether or not the transfer of the wagons under section 29 of the Transport Act, 1947, was a sale for the purpose of making the above-mentioned balancing charge.

The following facts are taken from the case stated: The company, which was incorporated on April 6, 1920, for the purpose of carrying on the business of coal merchants, owned railway wagons, which were used for the transport of coal in which the company and its subsidiary companies were dealing.

On September 3, 1939, the Minister of Transport gave notice under the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, requisitioning the wagons of the company and its subsidiary companies.

"coming to an end of a foreign "concession; or (c) the machinery or "plant is destroyed; or (d) the "machinery or plant is put out of "use as being worn out or obsolete "or otherwise useless or no longer "required, and the event in question "occurs before the trade is per-"manently discontinued, an allow-"ance or charge (in this Part of this "Act referred to as 'a balancing "'allowance' or 'a balancing "'charge') shall, in the circumstances "mentioned in this section, be made "to, or, as the case may be, on, that "person for the year of assessment in "his basis period for which that event "occurs. . . . (3) If the sale, in-"surance, salvage or compensation "moneys exceed the amount, if any, "of the said expenditure still un-"allowed as at the time of the event, "a balancing charge shall be made, "and the amount on which it is made "shall be an amount equal to the "excess or, where the said amount "still unallowed is nil, to the said "moneys."

[2] Transport Act, 1947, s. 29: "Where, immediately before the date "of transfer, any privately owned "railway wagon is under requisition "by virtue of an exercise of the "powers in that behalf conferred by "Regulation 53 of the Defence "(General) Regulations, 1939—(a) the "property in that wagon shall vest in "the Commission on the date of "transfer, free from any mortgage "or other like incumbrance, and the "requisition shall then cease; and "(b) the Crown shall not be liable for "any compensation under the Com-"pensation (Defence) Act, 1939, or "otherwise in respect of any damage "to the wagon occurring during the "period of requisition."

S. 30: "(1) Where under the last "preceding section the property in "any wagon vests in the Commission, "the Commission shall, subject to the "provisions of the three next succeed-"ing subsections, pay as compensation "in respect thereof an amount deter-"mined, by reference to the type of "wagon and the year in which the "wagon was first built, in accordance "with the Table set out in the Sixth "Schedule to this Act. . . . (6) No "compensation, other than that pay-"able under this section, shall be "payable in respect of the vesting, "under the last preceding section, of "the property in any wagon in the "Commission."

S. 31: "(1) Subject to the pro-"visions of this section, the compen-"sation payable by the Commission in "respect of a privately-owned wagon "vesting in them on the date of "transfer shall be paid to the person "who, immediately before the date "of transfer, was the owner of the "wagon."

S. 32: "(1) The amount payable "by way of compensation in respect "of a wagon the property in which "vests in the Commission on the date "of transfer shall be satisfied in the "manner provided by Part VI of "this Act by the issue to the person "entitled thereto of British transport "stock."

C. A.
1953
JOHN HUDSON & CO. LD. v. KIRKNESS.

On January 1, 1948, the property in the requisitioned wagons was transferred to and vested in the British Transport Commission under section 29 of the Transport Act, 1947. Section 32 of that statute provided that the amount payable under section 29 by way of compensation should be satisfied by the issue to the person entitled thereto of British Transport stock.

The company in due course received compensation for its wagons, the property in which was vested in the commission. The amount of the compensation was substantially higher than the written down value of the wagons for income tax purposes as appearing in the company's books. This written down value was substantially lower than the original cost of the wagons. The balancing charge of £29,021, given effect to in the assessment to income tax for 1948/49 under appeal, represented (with the exception of £963 referable to other matters and not in dispute) the excess of the original cost over the said written down value. The provisions under which the balancing charge was made on the company were those of section 17 of the Income Tax Act, 1945, and the wagons in the present case fell within the description of the machinery or plant in the opening words of the section.

It was contended on behalf of the company (1) that, for a transaction to constitute a sale, there must be mutual assent between the parties (reference being made to Benjamin on Sale, 8th ed., p. 2); (2) that the law with regard to exchange was the same as that with regard to sale, mutual assent being equally required (reference being made to Halsbury's Laws of England, 2nd ed., vol. 25, para. 367, and vol. 29, para. 1); (3) that the compulsory vesting of the wagons in the commission was not a sale within the meaning of para. (a) of section 17 (1) of the Income Tax Act, 1945, nor (by reference to the fact that the company received its compensation in transport stock) an exchange within the said meaning, as extended by section 58 (3) of that statute; and (4) that the transaction did not fall within any of the events specified in section 17, and that, therefore, no balancing charge could be raised in respect thereof.

It was contended on behalf of the Crown (1) that sale was the transfer of the ownership of a thing from one person to another for a money price (reference being made to Halsbury's Laws of England, 2nd ed., vol. 29, para. 1); (2) that such a transfer took place on the compulsory vesting of the property in the company's wagons in the commission under section 29 of the Transport Act, 1947; (3) that the mere fact that the vesting of the property in the wagons was compulsory in no way negatived a sale; and (4) that consequently the transfer was a sale within the meaning of section 17 (1) (a) of the Income Tax Act, 1945, and was an "event" within that subsection, which, on the facts of the case, required a balancing charge to be made on the company under subsection (3) of section 17.

The Special Commissioners were of the following opinion: "What took place was in our opinion 'a transfer of the ownership "'of a thing from one person to another for a money price' "(Halsbury's Laws of England, vol. 29, p. 5, para. 1), and we "hold that it was a sale. We do not doubt that the wrongful "confiscation of a chattel, although accompanied by a subsequent "payment of a sum called 'compensation' would not constitute "a sale. In this case, however, section 29 of the Transport Act, "1947, vested the property in the company's wagons, which were "already lawfully in the possession of the Minister of Transport "under S.R. & O. No. 1085 of 1939, in the commission, and the "same enactment, by section 30, provided compensation, to be "computed under the provisions of the Sixth Schedule, which we "hold was a money price. We think also that, if assent is "necessary to the conclusion of a valid sale, it must be assumed "to be present when a statute, such as the Transport Act, 1947, "becomes law, since the company as a person living within the "jurisdiction of the British Crown must assent to all such laws "as are duly enacted, including the enactments contained in "sections 29 and 30 aforesaid. We are to some extent fortified "in this opinion by reference to section 8 of the Transport Act, "1947, which deals with the 'compulsory purchase of land,' as in "our opinion the assent necessary in the vendor to give a valid "title in land to the commission as purchaser is therein assumed "to be compatible with a 'compulsory' sale of real property. . . ."

The company appealed, by case stated, from that decision, and Upjohn J., on April 29, 1953,[3] held that the transfer of the railway wagons to the commission under section 29 of the Transport Act, 1947, with compensation under section 30 (1) (in the form of British transport stock, as provided by section 32) was not a "sale" either for the purposes of section 17 of the Income Tax Act of 1945 or at common law, and that, accordingly, the company was not liable to a balancing charge. He also held that on a proper construction of the relevant sections of the Transport Act, 1947, read in the light of section 8 of that Act (which conferred on the commission powers to purchase land compulsorily), the transaction in question could not properly be described as a compulsory purchase and a compulsory sale. He dismissed the appeal.

The Crown appealed.

Cyril King Q.C. and Sir Reginald P. Hills for the Crown.
John Senter Q.C. and Anthony Barber for the company.

The following cases were cited in the argument: Regent's Canal Co. v. Ware[4]; In re Eccleshill Local Board[5]; In re Pigott and Great Western Railway Co.[6]; Great Western Railway Co. v.

[3] [1953] 1 W.L.R. 749; [1953] 2 All E.R. 64.
[4] (1857) 26 L.J.Ch. 566.
[5] (1879) 13 Ch.D. 365.
[6] (1881) 18 Ch.D. 146.

C. A.
1953
JOHN HUDSON & CO. LD. v. KIRKNESS.

Inland Revenue Commissioners[7]; John Foster & Sons v. Inland Revenue Commissioners[8]; Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Newcastle Breweries Ld.[9]; Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Wolfson[10]; Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Dowdall, O'Mahoney & Co. Ld.[11]; Bramford's Road Transport Ld. v. Evans (Inspector of Taxes).[12]

SINGLETON L.J. The Transport Act, 1947, by section 1, set up a public authority to be called the British Transport Commission, referred to in the Act as "the commission." Part II of the Act provided for the acquisition by the commisssion of railway and canal undertakings and of certain railway wagons. The acquisition of railway wagons is dealt with in sections 29 to 32 of the Act. [His Lordship read sections 29 (a) and (b), 30 (1), 31 (1) and 32 (1) and continued:] The amount which was to be paid for railway wagons which were acquired by the commission under those sections was subject to subsections (2), (3) and (4) of section 30, which I have not thought it necessary to read.

The amount specified in the Sixth Schedule to the Act, which is headed "Compensation for Acquisition of Privately-"owned wagons," and shows the amount payable for the different types of railway wagons, varies according to the year in which the wagon was built without reference to its condition, and the payment was to be made in British transport stock.

The company, John Hudson & Co. Ld., had 663 wagons to which section 29 of the Transport Act applied, and on January 1, 1948, the property in those wagons was transferred to and vested in the commission under that section. [His Lordship read from case stated the paragraph referring to the amount of compensation and the assessment of the balancing charge, read section 17 (1) (a) and (3) of the Income Tax Act, 1945, and continued:] The object of section 17 is this: if plant and machinery have been depreciated in the company's books and income tax allowances have been made, and the plant or machinery is subsequently sold at a higher price than its depreciated price, then the excess of the one over the other is subject to a balancing charge on which income tax may be levied. If the price for which the plant or machinery is disposed of is less than its written down price, there is to be a balancing allowance. Although, so far as I know, no case of a balancing allowance has reached this court as yet, there have been one or two cases in which a balancing charge has been made.

[7] [1894] 1 Q.B. 507; 10 T.L.R. 128.

[8] [1894] 1 Q.B. 516; 10 T.L.R. 152.

[9] (1925) 42 T.L.R. 185, 609; sub nom. Newcastle Breweries Ld. v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (1927) 43 T.L.R. 476; 12 T.C. 927.

[10] (1949) 65 T.L.R. 260; [1949] 1 All E.R. 865; sub nom. Wolfson v. Inland Revenue Comrs. 31 T.C. 141.

[11] [1952] A.C. 401, 426; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 560; [1952] 1 All E.R. 531.

[12] [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1385; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1308.

It is claimed by the Crown that a balancing charge of £29,021 falls to be made on the company on the basis that the wagons which were acquired by the commission under section 29 of the Transport Act, 1947, were sold to the commission within the meaning of the word in section 17 (1) (a) of the Income Tax Act of 1945. The real question for decision is whether, by reason of sections 29 to 32 of the Transport Act, 1947, there was a sale to the Transport Commission of the wagons in question.

The Special Commissioners held that the assessment on the company was properly made. [His Lordship read from their opinion, and in particular the passage: "We think also that, "if assent is necessary to the conclusion of a valid sale, it "must be assumed to be present when a statute, such as the "Transport Act, 1947, becomes law, since the company as a "person living within the jurisdiction of the British Crown "must assent to all such laws as are duly enacted, including the "enactments contained in sections 29 and 30 aforesaid." His Lordship continued:] That was not sought to be supported by counsel for the Crown in this appeal.

The company appealed, and Upjohn J. allowed their appeal, holding that there was no sale. The inspector of taxes appeals to this court.

It is desirable that I should say a little more as to the Transport Act, 1947. The first thing to notice is that the word "sale" is not used in relation to the acquisition by the commission of property of one kind or another. Sections 12 to 16 provide for the acquisition by the commission of railway and canal undertakings. I read subsection (1) of section 12: "Subject to the "provisions of this Act, the whole of the undertakings of the "bodies of persons specified in the Third Schedule to this Act, "being the bodies who fall within the class described in the next "succeeding section, shall, on the first day of January, nineteen "hundred and forty-eight (hereafter in this Part of this Act, "and in the other provisions of this Act so far as they refer to "the acquisition by the commission of the said undertakings, "referred to as 'the date of transfer'), vest by virtue of this "Act in the commission." It is in section 12 that one gets the date of transfer, January 1, 1948, which is the date for all purposes of the Act.

Section 16 provides for compensation for the acquisition of the railway and canal undertakings which are acquired "by "reference to the values of the securities specified in the Fourth "Schedule," which, by section 16 (2), "shall be an amount "equal to the aggregate value (computed in accordance with the "provisions of the next succeeding section) of all the securities, "if any, of that body existing immediately before the date of "transfer"; and under section 16 (3): "The compensation so "payable shall be satisfied . . . by the issue . . . of British "transport stock" in accordance with the provisions of the Fifth Schedule.

C. A.
1953
JOHN HUDSON & CO. LD. v. KIRKNESS.
Singleton L.J.

I have referred to the part of the Act with which we are immediately concerned—sections 29 to 32—and I go on to Part III of the Act, which is concerned with the acquisition of certain road transport undertakings, namely, section 39 onwards. Section 49 deals with the assessment of compensation in respect of road transport undertakings which are acquired, and the mode of compensation there is on quite a different footing from that contained in Part II as to railway and canal undertakings, and as to wagons. For instance, in compensation under Part III of the Act there has to be a consideration of a number of different circumstances, one of which, in section 47 (2), involves consideration of the amount which the property would fetch if sold in the open market.

The real contest throughout this case has been whether or not there was a sale of the wagons to the commission; in other words, whether the plant was sold. But the argument has developed a little, and I think that the questions for the consideration of the court may be stated in this way. First, was there a sale in the ordinary understanding of the word? Secondly, is there anything in the provisions of the Transport Act which ought to lead one to say that that which took place must, for the purposes of section 17 (1) of the Income Tax Act, 1945, be regarded as a sale? Thirdly, was there a compulsory sale? It is not admitted by the company that a compulsory sale would have the effect for which the Crown contends; and it is disputed that there was a compulsory sale. The fourth question which has been put for our consideration arises on sections 34 and 35 of the Finance Act, 1948, from which it is claimed, on behalf of the Crown that, by analogy, one ought to say there was a sale, even if that did not appear elsewhere.

First, was there a sale in the ordinary understanding of the word? The word "sold" assumes a seller and a buyer. Unless there is some reason for giving a special meaning to the word, it must be given its ordinary meaning. Did Hudsons sell their wagons to the commission? I am quite sure what the answer of Hudsons would be, but that is not much help. What would anyone accustomed to the use of the words "sale" or "sold" answer? It seems to me that everyone must say "Hudsons did "not sell." Did the commission buy from Hudsons? Equally, on the ordinary meaning of the word, I should find it difficult to say that the commission bought or purchased the wagons. In other words, there was not in this case a seller or a buyer, and that leads me to think that there was not a sale of the wagons in the sense in which the word is ordinarily understood. The wagons were acquired, as the Act says, and on January 1, 1948, the property in those wagons vested in the commission. I refer to a passage in Benjamin on Sale, 2nd ed., p. 1, which I think may be regarded as an authority on this subject: "By the "common law a sale of personal property was usually termed "a 'bargain and sale of goods.' It may be defined to be a "transfer of the absolute or general property in a thing for a "price in money. Hence it follows that, to constitute a valid "sale, there must be concurrence of the following elements, viz: "(1) parties competent to contract; (2) mutual assent; (3) a "thing, the absolute or general property in which is transferred "from the seller to the buyer; and (4) a price in money paid or "promised." Mr. Senter, who relied on that passage, pointed out to the court that in the circumstances of this case there was no mutual assent; nor, as he submitted, was there a price in money paid or promised; and on that he based his argument that here there was no sale—no sale according to the ordinary use of that word, nor according to the definition of "sale" as accepted in the courts of this country generation after generation. I think that that is right.

The next point for consideration is whether there is anything in the provisions of the Transport Act which ought to lead this court to say that that which took place ought to be regarded as a sale within section 17 (1) of the Income Tax Act, 1945. Again, if I may say so with respect to the very full and complete argument which has been addressed to the court, I cannot see that there is anything in the Transport Act which should lead this court to take a view of the word "sold" in section 17 (1) (a) of the Income Tax Act, 1945, other than that which it normally bears. An examination of the whole of the Transport Act, and in particular of sections 29 to 32, shows this. By section 29, "Where, immediately before the date of transfer, any privately "owned railway wagon is under requisition," the property in that wagon shall vest in the commission on the day of transfer. It is a statutory vesting, a change of ownership brought about by statute. There is nothing in that section which has the appearance of bargain and sale, or of sale. Section 30 is: "Where under the last preceding section the property in any "wagon vests in the commission, the commission shall, subject "to the provisions of the three next succeeding subsections, pay "as compensation in respect thereof an amount determined, by "reference to the type of wagon and the year in which the wagon "was first built, in accordance with the table set out in the "Sixth Schedule to this Act." The value, in accordance with the method of arriving at it which is set out in the Sixth Schedule, is something which has to be paid, but, Mr. Senter submitted, it is not a price. I am not sure that that part of Mr. Senter's argument has quite as much force as his earlier submission that this is not a sale in any sense of the word. Then there is the provision that the mode of satisfaction of the compensation is to be by British transport stock. I do not find in these provisions anything which leads me to think that one ought to give the word "sold" in section 17 (1) (a) of the Income Tax Act, 1945, any meaning different from that which it normally has. So, on the second point, it seems to me that the argument of the Crown fails, too.

C. A.
1953
JOHN HUDSON & CO. LD. v. KIRKNESS.
Singleton L.J.

The next point raised by Mr. King was that if there was not a sale in the ordinary sense there was a compulsory sale; that all the elements of a compulsory sale were present; and that this court ought to hold that consequently there was a sale for the purposes of section 17 (1) of the Income Tax Act, 1945. In support of that submission, a number of authorities were cited to the court on the compulsory acquisition of property, showing that when one had reached a stage at which value had been fixed in the way provided by the statute, the position of vendor and purchaser was created, so that the rights of the parties could be determined on a vendor and purchaser summons.

I do not propose to refer to those authorities. I do not think that they apply to the circumstances of this case. If one has a compulsory acquisition of land, it may be that one reaches something in the nature of a compulsory contract. Thereupon, if the parties' rights have to be determined, that may be done on a vendor and purchaser summons. That is not this case. I draw attention in the first place to section 8 of the Transport Act, 1947. That is the section which authorizes the commission compulsorily to purchase land for its own purposes. It appears to me that the section draws a clear distinction between compulsory purchase and that which is done by the commission when it acquires railway undertakings or canal undertakings or railway wagons, or road haulage undertakings under later sections. Section 8 says: "The Minister may authorize the "commission to purchase compulsorily any land which they "require for any purpose connected with the discharge of their "functions, and the Acquisition of Land (Authorization Pro-"cedure) Act, 1946 (except section 2 thereof) shall apply as if "the commission were a local authority within the meaning of "that Act and as if this Act had been in force immediately "before the commencement of that Act."

Section 8 thus gives the commission power to acquire land compulsorily. If they do that, they have to comply with the provisions of the Lands Clauses Acts embraced in the Acquisition of Land (Authorization Procedure) Act, 1946. They have to give the necessary notices. The owner of the land may then have an opportunity of agreeing what compensation shall be paid, if his land is to be acquired for the purposes of the public; otherwise, the value is fixed by arbitration. That is the procedure under section 8. It is wholly different from the provisions in section 29, under which the ownership in the company's wagons vested in the commission on January 1, 1948; and the provisions as to payment of compensation are wholly different. I do not regard the vesting of the wagons in the commission as a compulsory sale or in the nature of a compulsory sale. It was an acquisition authorized by statute and paid for by way of compensation in the manner provided by the statute.

Mr. King referred to Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Newcastle Breweries Ld.,[1] in which the Newcastle Breweries Ld. carried on the business of brewers and wine and spirit merchants, and in the course of that business kept large stocks of rum which had to be reduced and blended before sale. The blended product was sold either wholesale or retail in relatively small quantities. In January, 1918, the Admiralty, acting under the Defence of the Realm Regulations, took over about one-third of the stocks in question then owned by the respondent company. Payment of £10,315 was offered by the Admiralty, based on the actual cost of the rum and allowing a profit of about 1s. per proof gallon, and that amount was accepted on account by the respondent company, without prejudice to its claim for a larger amount. Thereafter there was much litigation. The company proceeded by petition of right, but in the events which happened that was useless; and ultimately they had to claim before a tribunal which assessed the amount due to the brewery company as £5,309 10s. 0d., and that amount was paid to the brewery company some years after the rum had been taken. Thereupon, it was claimed by the Inspector of Taxes that the £5,309 10s. 0d., the second payment, which was a payment by way of compensation in one sense, ought to be included in the company's accounts for the year 1918/19. But the company contended that the sum was not a receipt of the company's trade or a profit arising from its trade or business, and that the rum taken over by the Admiralty in the foregoing circumstances was not, and could not be said to have been, sold by the respondent company in the course of its trade or business or at all.

Rowlatt J. held, and the Court of Appeal held, and the House of Lords held, that the sum was a sum properly taken into consideration in the company's earnings for the year in which the rum had been taken. Rowlatt J. said[2]: "The brewery company "had a large quantity of rum, not yet refined or reduced or "prepared for sale, which was requisitioned by the Admiralty." And later[3]: "Now the Admiralty took these goods at the "beginning of the company's year which ended in 1918, and "towards the end of the year, or in the summer, they paid "£10,000, which they said was the cost, and some other allow-"ances, plus one shilling a gallon profit. What was done upon "that is perfectly clear to my mind. Neither party gave up "anything. The Admiralty said that was what they thought "the sum was, and they were not prepared to pay any more, "and the brewery company said it was not enough, but they "took that sum; the Admiralty raised no objection. The "brewery company said: 'We do not take it in satisfaction; we "'will reserve our rights to make any further claim which we "'may be advised to make,' and the Admiralty said, 'Very "'well; we have no objection. You are at liberty to make any

[1] 12 T.C. 927.
[2] Ibid. 934.
[3] Ibid. 935.

BIBL. LONDIN

C. A.
1953
JOHN HUDSON & CO. LD. v. KIRKNESS.
Singleton L.J.

"'further claim.' That is what took place. Now if they had "gone under the regulation they would have got, to put it "shortly, the cost to them plus the pre-war profit, as a price. "That would have been a price. However, what they said "was that this part of the regulation is invalid, and they went "by petition of right to Salter J. and obtained a judgment from "him which said that the price was not to be so determined or "so limited; their right was to have the market value, to be "assessed by the county court judge. Now, if they had got "that, they again would have got a price. But at that period "the Indemnity Act came into effect, which avoided the judg-"ment of Salter J., as well as other judgments in pari materia "or within the ambit of the Act; and instead of that, it gave "people in the position of the brewery company a right to go "before a commission presided over by Sir Francis Kyffin "Taylor." The judge added that they went before the tribunal, and he said, in a passage relied on by Mr. King [4]: "Now what "is that except a compulsory sale of the rum? It seems to me, "when you really look at the substance of the thing, it is in a "very small compass. That is all it is, a compulsory sale of "the rum."

As I have said, that judgment was upheld in the other courts, and Viscount Cave L.C. said [5]: "Two points are made on behalf "of the appellants. First, it is said that the £5,300 is not a "profit from the appellants' business at all, but is a sum payable "by way of compensation for the compulsory taking by the Crown "of a part of the appellants' capital. I cannot agree with that "contention." So the gist of the decision was that, though the rum was acquired by the Admiralty, it was equivalent to a contract of sale; that there was certainly a profit earned by the company in respect of £5,309; and that that must be taken into the company's accounts. From that, Mr. King submits that where one has, as in this case, a compulsory acquisition, the vesting of the property of the company in the commission on January 1, 1948, and payment made therefor, that ought likewise to be treated as a sale. I think that the two things are wholly different, and the difference is, indeed, made clear by reference to the compulsory powers of purchase of land given in section 8 of the Act of 1947. In my view, that which took place cannot be held, and ought not to be held, to be a compulsory sale.

The next point arises on sections 34 and 35 of the Finance Act, 1948. There is this side-note to section 34: "Remission "of balancing charges and other provisions, in case of certain "undertakings absorbed under nationalization schemes." The section does not apply in this case directly; that is shown by subsection (1) (b). It does, or might, apply to the provisions as to the taking over of an undertaking under section 12 of the [4] Ibid. 937. [5] Ibid. 953.

Transport Act; it does not apply to section 29. It provides: "The provisions of this section shall have effect where—(a) "under any statutory provisions to which this section applies, "property is transferred to a commission, authority, board, body "or person; and (b) under the statutory provisions in question, "the liability of the transferor arising from any balancing charge "falling to be made on the occasion of the transfer becomes a "liability of the transferee. (2) The transfer shall be treated "for income tax purposes as a sale of property to which para-"graph (a) of subsection (1) of section 59 of the Income Tax "Act, 1945, applies and as if the parties to the sale had given "notice of election under subsection (4) of that section."

The submission of Mr. King on that section is that it shows that in other cases the draftsman of the Finance Act, 1948, had probably assumed that there would be, or might be, balancing charges, and if that was his view it provided some guidance or some help towards a true interpretation of the Transport Act, 1947; and he submitted that the position was carried further by section 35 which, like section 34, ends in this way: "This "section shall be deemed always to have had effect," so that both sections have retrospective effect. Section 35 (1) is: "The "question whether any and if so what balancing allowance or "balancing charge falls to be made to or on the National Coal "Board on the occasion of the transfer to the British Transport "Commission under section 29 of the Transport Act, 1947, of "any railway wagons which the said board acquired under the "Coal Industry Nationalization Act, 1946, shall be determined "as if section 29 of the Finance Act, 1947, and the Seventh "Schedule to that Act, had not been passed." That shows, said Mr. King, that at the time of the passing of the Act of 1948 the question had arisen whether there should be made, or whether there fell to be made, a balancing charge or allowance as between the National Coal Board and the British Transport Commission. Of course, balancing charges and balancing allowances had been first mentioned in the Income Tax Act, 1945, and I have no doubt that by the time the Finance Act, 1948, was passed someone had seen that section 17 of the Act of 1945 might lead to a harvest one way or the other. I have no doubt that someone in the National Coal Board and someone in the British Transport Commission had discussed it; but that by no means shows that a balancing charge falls to be made.

Mr. Senter submitted that nothing in those two sections of the Finance Act, 1948, helped towards a true interpretation of the provisions of the Transport Act, 1947, and it seems to me that that submission is right.

I would humbly repeat that which Lord Radcliffe said in Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Dowdall, O'Mahoney & Co. Ld., in one line[6]: "The beliefs or assumptions of those who

[6] [1952] A.C. 401, 426; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 560; [1952] 1 All E.R. 531.

C. A.
1953
JOHN HUDSON & CO. LD. v. KIRKNESS.
Singleton L.J.

"frame Acts of Parliament cannot make the law." I believe it to be the duty of this court to determine the effect of the Transport Act from the wording of that Act itself. I do not find myself greatly helped by references to sections 34 or 35 of the Finance Act, 1948, nor from references to the changes made by the Income Tax Act, 1952, s. 292, nor by the Finance Act, 1952, Sixth Schedule.

On the view which I take of the provisions of the Transport Act, 1947, namely, that there was in the circumstances of this case no sale, it seems to me that the judgment of Upjohn J. is right and that this appeal should be dismissed.

BIRKETT L.J. I am of the same opinion, and it would really have been enough for me to say that I agree with my Lord's judgment, but, having formed a clear view of the critical points in issue, perhaps I may add a word or two from my own point of view.

The only question in this case in this court—though it was otherwise elsewhere—related to the meaning of the words in section 17 (1) (a) of the Income Tax Act, 1945, and the construction of certain sections in the Transport Act, 1947. The Income Tax Act, 1945, in section 17, laid down the events on which a balancing allowance or a balancing charge would fall to be made, and those events were stated in this form: [His Lordship read section 17 (1) and continued:] There were four clear, distinct events, and on the happening of any one of them certain consequences respecting a balancing charge or a balancing allowance followed. In the present case the company had been assessed to a balancing charge of £29,021 in respect of certain wagons which had belonged to them, and which, by the provisions of the Transport Act, 1947, had been in fact vested in the Minister.

The only other part of section 17 which I think has a bearing is this: after setting out the events clearly, it continues: "(2) "Where there are no sale, insurance, salvage or compensation "moneys"—that clearly has reference to the events set out in subsection (1) (a), (b), (c) and (d)—and goes on to deal with the balancing allowance; and the words are similarly used in subsection (3): "If the sale, insurance, salvage or compensation "moneys exceed the amount, if any, of the said expenditure still "unallowed as at the time of the event," then the balancing charge comes into being. And my last quotation is from section 68 of that Act, the definition section, because there it is said that "'sale, insurance, salvage or compensation moneys' "mean, in relation to an event which gives rise or might give "rise to a balancing allowance or a balancing charge to or on "any person, or is material in determining whether any, and, "if so, what, annual allowance is to be made to a person under "Part III of this Act—(a) where the event is a sale of any "property, the net proceeds to that person of the sale; (b) where "the event is the coming to an end of an interest in property "on or by reason of the coming to an end of a foreign concession, "any compensation payable to that person in respect of that "property; (c) where the event is the demolition or destruction "of any property, the net amount received by him for the "remains of the property, together with any insurance moneys "received by him in respect of the demolition or destruction and "any other compensation of any description received by him "in respect thereof, in so far as that compensation consists of "capital sums; and (d) where the event is that a building or "structure ceases altogether to be used or that machinery or "plant is put out of use, any compensation of any description "received by him in respect of that event, in so far as that "compensation consists of capital sums."

That is the machinery of section 17, and I think that it is important, because all that we are really concerned with here is to say whether the event which took place under the provisions of the Transport Act, 1947, was a sale as distinct from any of the other events in subsection (1). Of course, it is easy enough to say: "Well, it is a simple question: were the wagons sold or "were they not? Was this a sale or not?" We have heard a most interesting and learned argument on that simple matter, and it would be idle to pretend that the solution of the problem is a simple matter at all; it is not. I think that it is a complicated and difficult matter.

Originally the company took various objections to the assessment made on them, and appealed to the Special Commissioners, who decided against the company. Many of the matters which they decided are no longer relevant to this appeal; and the only matter left is: were the wagons sold? The Special Commissioners on that issue found in favour of the Crown. Though the reasons which they gave for their decision are not accepted wholly by the Crown in this court, their decision that it was a sale is sought to be affirmed by the Crown here. The company thereupon appealed to Upjohn J. We have had the advantage of reading his very clear exposition of the matter. He reversed the findings of the Special Commissioners and said that this was not a sale. As I understand it, in this appeal no question of figures arises. If this was a sale, the assessment stands; if it is not held to be a sale, the assessment does not stand.

[His Lordship referred to sections 29, 30, 31, 32 of, and the Sixth Schedule to, the Transport Act, 1947, and continued:] So that was the scheme in the Act of 1947: "These wagons which "admittedly are your property, though they have been "requisitioned by us for use, shall now vest in the Transport "Commission, and you shall receive," says the Act, "by way "of compensation those sums which we have arbitrarily fixed" (I use the word "arbitrarily" in no sinister sense at all) "and "you shall be paid that sum and no other."

C. A.

1953

JOHN HUDSON & CO. LD. v. KIRKNESS.

Birkett L.J.

If the test be, as I think it is, and as my Lord stated: is that a sale within the ordinary connotation of the word "sale"?—the first answer would appear to be clearly "No." The vendor had no choice whether he would sell or not; that is admitted. He had no choice about the price or sum or compensation which he was to receive; that was fixed by the Schedule. He had no choice whatever as to the form in which he would get his payment. He was to have it by way of British transport stock; and from that point of view it would have seemed, using the language in its ordinary sense, that a compulsory acquisition, compulsory transfer, or some such phrase, was more appropriate to that particular transaction or event than the word "sale." But Mr. King and Sir Reginald Hills addressed to us a very forcible argument on this matter, saying: "Although the outward "form of it may not appear to be a sale in the ordinary sense "of that term, as it is customarily used, nevertheless, for the "purposes of the Income Tax Act, 1945, it is a sale," and they relied on the words in Halsbury's Laws of England, 2nd ed., vol. 29, p. 5, the author of which, we were told, was the late Scott L.J. The words are: "Sale is the transfer of the owner-"ship of a thing from one person to another for a money price." The sidenote to that paragraph reads: "Sale and exchange or "barter distinguished."

Both Mr. King and Sir Reginald Hills relied on that, and said: "If that is right, we come fairly and squarely within it, "because there is a transfer of the ownership of a wagon from "one person to another for the money price set out in the Sixth "Schedule to the Transport Act, 1947." It is true that the article in Halsbury's Laws of England proceeds to consider in very much more detail what a contract of sale may be, but great insistence was laid on that definition as being conclusive. Both Mr. King and Sir Reginald Hills pressed this matter very forcibly indeed, particularly Sir Reginald, who said in terms: "Of course, "there is also the definition stated by the late Mr. Benjamin, "but you should not really follow that; you should follow this "plain, simple declaration." The late Mr. Benjamin admittedly was a very great lawyer, and on the subject of the sale of goods a very great authority; and the definition which has been cited first by Upjohn J. and then by my Lord here today is Mr. Benjamin's own; it comes from the edition which he himself prepared for publication; and I think that very great respect ought to be paid to the definition, which has been incorporated in every subsequent edition of Benjamin on Sale. In that definition Mr. Benjamin lays great stress on the question of mutual assent.

The argument which was addressed to us on this point, particularly by Mr. King, was that mutual assent really does not matter; and he cited Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Newcastle Breweries Ld.[7] It is plain that in the judgments in that case the Lords Justices in the Court of Appeal and the Lords of Appeal in the House of Lords referred to this matter in this way: Lord Phillimore in the House of Lords said [8]: "The "rum was purchased for trade purposes, and the particular sale "was none the less a trade sale because the trade was forced "upon the appellant company." Viscount Cave L.C. said [9]: "If the raw rum had been voluntarily sold to other traders, the "price must clearly have come into the computation of the "appellants' profits, and the circumstances that the sale was "compulsory and was to the Crown makes no difference in "principle." And there are other observations to the like effect. What that case was really seeking to establish was that a compulsory sale—as that was held to be—made no difference to the point then in issue, which was: "Had profits been made? "If so, into what year of assessment did they fall?"; and the House decided that profits had been made, and they said that the fact that it was a compulsory sale made no difference. That case was pressed on us very strongly, as were cases under the Lands Clauses (Consolidation) Act of 1845, particularly Regent's Canal Co. v. Ware [10] and Great Western Railway Co. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners. [11]

[7] 12 T.C. 927.

With great respect to Mr. King's argument, I do not propose to discuss the matter at length, but I cannot think that those cases and the analogy sought to be drawn have any true application to the facts with which we are concerned. Under the Lands Clauses (Consolidation) Act, 1845, most elaborate machinery is set up for the taking of land, machinery concerning the question of arbitration as to the price, machinery dealing with agreement as to the price, machinery dealing with the verdict of a jury in default of agreement, and so on; and I can very well understand that in the machinery of that Act one does clearly reach a point where one can say: "The position of vendor and purchaser is "here created," and if it be a matter of specific performance, that can be done. But I cannot think that those cases and the principles applicable to them are really of very much assistance on the question of the taking of these wagons. I do not propose, therefore, to discuss them. The question to be determined comes back to the one simple matter: was this a sale?

There is one further matter which I should like to mention. In Wolfson v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, [12] Lord Simonds said, on the question of construction in that case [13]: "It was "urged that the construction that I favour leaves an easy loop-"hole through which the evasive taxpayer may find escape. "That may be so; but I will repeat what has been said before. "It is not the function of a court of law to give to words a "strained and unnatural meaning because only thus will a taxing

[8] Ibid. 954.
[9] Ibid. 953.
[10] 26 L.J.Ch. 566.
[11] [1894] 1 Q.B. 507; 10 T.L.R. 128.
[12] 31 T.C. 141.
[13] Ibid. 169.

C. A.
1953
JOHN HUDSON & CO. LD. v. KIRKNESS.
Birkett L.J.

"section apply to a transaction which, had the legislature thought "of it, would have been covered by appropriate words. It is "the duty of the court to give to the words of this subsection "their reasonable meaning." It is argued here by Mr. Senter that when one takes the event in this case, the taking of the wagons, and the awarding of compensation under the Sixth Schedule, it is giving a strained and unnatural meaning to the word "sold" in section 17 (1) (a) to call that event a "sale"; and he referred to two statutes, one of which I will cite, the Income Tax Act, 1952, s. 292: "(1) Subject to the provisions "of this section, where any of the following events occurs in the "case of any machinery or plant in respect of which an initial "allowance or an annual allowance has been made for any year "of assessment to a person carrying on a trade, that is to say, "either" where the machinery or plant ceases to belong to the person carrying on the trade, where there is a sale of the machinery or plant, or in any other circumstances of any description. Mr. Senter's purpose in citing that section was to reinforce the words of Lord Simonds in the case which I have just cited, and to say: "The legislature could, in section 17, have devised "and inserted words which would have covered this transaction "completely, as they do in section 292 of the Act of 1952, but "you must not, in construing section 17 (1) (a) of the Act of "1945, construe it by putting in words which the legislature "themselves did not do."

On the first point in this case—was there here a sale of the wagons?—I am of the same opinion as my Lord and Upjohn J., that there was no sale within the meaning of section 17 (1) (a). I do not propose, therefore, to go into a great many of the matters which were submitted as supporting arguments to that main point. For example, Mr. Senter said, with a great deal of force, that one must have a price, and there was no price here in any true sense of the word at all, because the term "price" must connote some agreement or some assessment according to the value. I am bound to say that at one stage in the argument I thought that the assessment of value, crude though it might be, was still an assessment of value in the Sixth Schedule, because there one is taking wagons according to their year, according to their tonnage, and according to their structure, and placing a fixed value or sum on them. But it is plain that, so far as the wagons were concerned, it did not matter one iota what their condition was; they might have been in the last stages of decay; but if it could be said that that was the year of the building and the tonnage, then automatically the sum laid down in the columns of the Sixth Schedule was to be applied. And many arguments on both sides dealing with assent, the construction of the word "price," and of the word "compensation" were used before us. It is enough for me to say that I agree with what my Lord said about them, and I content myself by saying that I do not think that the event of the taking over of these wagons, in the circumstances that we know, was within the words "the "machinery or plant is sold."

Finally, on sections 34 and 35 of the Finance Act, 1948. I understood that the argument, particularly from Sir Reginald Hills, was that if one looked through the Acts one would find there a consistent scheme, and that this transaction or event quite properly could be comprehended under the term "sale," and that only if the standard set out by Benjamin was adopted did one fall into error: "Follow the Acts, follow the consistent scheme, "and all will be well." Under section 34 of the Finance Act, 1948, which by subsection (6) was to be deemed always to have had effect: "The provisions of this section shall have effect where "—(a) under any statutory provisions to which this section "applies, property is transferred to a commission"—covering this case—"(b) under the statutory provisions in question, the "liability of the transferor arising from any balancing charge "falling to be made on the occasion of the transfer becomes a "liability of the transferee. (2) The transfer shall be treated for "income tax purposes as a sale of property to which paragraph "(a) of subsection (1) of section 59 of the Income Tax Act, 1945, "applies and as if the parties to the sale had given notice of "election under subsection (4) of that section."

I will not trouble now to read the relevant parts of section 59; but it is plain that the purpose which is in subsection (2) of section 34 could perfectly well have been achieved without any mention of the word "sale" at all. To argue that, because in the Act of 1948 one finds the words "treated for income tax "purposes as a sale" within the meaning of section 59, one ought to say that therefore under the Income Tax Act, 1945, this was a sale, is a step which I myself find it extremely difficult to take. Similarly, with regard to section 35, it may very well be that that section impliedly says that there is to be a balancing charge on an occasion of this sort, but I do not think that that of itself lends very much assistance to the determination of the simple question in this case: were the events as we now know them, which took place by virtue of sections 29, 30, 31 and 32, and the Sixth Schedule of the Act of 1947, a sale for the purposes of section 17? With great respect to the arguments which have been addressed to us by the Crown, I am of opinion that they were not, and that the judgment of Upjohn J. ought to be affirmed.

HODSON L.J. I agree, and have nothing to add.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Solicitor, Inland Revenue; Willis & Willis, for Taynton & Son, Gloucester.

M. M. H.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

C. A.

1953
Nov. 12, 13.

Somervell, Denning and Romer L.JJ.

* DUNSTER v. ABBOTT.

[1952 D. No. 1220.]

Invitor and Invitee—Canvasser—Invitee or licensee—Duty of occupier to licensee—Averment of concealed or unusual danger—Darkness—Light switched off by occupier.
Licensor and Licensee. Trespass.

The plaintiff, a canvasser, called on the defendant, a builder, in order to sell him advertising space on the covers of telephone directories. He had no appointment with the defendant but earlier in the day had been informed by the defendant's wife that her husband would be home in the evening. The defendant was not interested in the offer made by the plaintiff, and saw him out on to the pathway which led from the house and across a bridge over a ditch to the public road.

It was a dark and rainy night but the pathway was to some extent illuminated by an electric lamp attached to the defendant's garage. This lamp was not switched off until such time as the defendant estimated that the plaintiff had reached the roadway. In fact, the plaintiff had only reached the bridge, and misjudging his position he turned to the right and fell into the ditch, sustaining injury. He sued the defendant for damages:—

Held, that the plaintiff, being on the defendant's premises on his own business and not on any business in which the defendant was interested, was a licensee and therefore must take the premises as he found them, apart from any concealed source of danger; but that on the facts it was immaterial whether he was an invitee or a licensee, because the static condition of the defendant's premises was not such as to constitute any unusual or concealed danger, and the defendant was not in breach of any duty.

Decision of Ormerod J. reversed.

Dicta of Asquith L.J. in Pearson v. Lambeth Borough Council [1950] 2 K.B. 353; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 1) 561; [1950] 1 All E.R. 682, and of Hamilton L.J. in Latham v. Johnson (R.) & Nephew Ld. [1913] 1 K.B. 398, 411; 29 T.L.R. 124, applied.

Per Denning L.J. A canvasser who comes without your consent is a trespasser. Once he has your consent he is a licensee. Not until you do business with him is he an invitee. What is the position when you discuss business with him, and it comes to nothing? No confident answer can be given to that question. Such is the morass into which the law has floundered in trying to distinguish between invitees and licensees.

APPEAL from Ormerod J.

The defendant, Stephen Abbott, a builder, occupied one of a row of houses along the road from Canterbury to Whitstable. The houses are separated from the road by a ditch, the property of the local council, and access to the defendant's house was by a concrete bridge, having a six-inch concrete wall, which continued up the drive or pathway to the house. The defendant's premises also included a garage, office and builder's yard. The plaintiff, Thomas Dunster, an advertising canvasser in the employment of the Bristol Printing and Publishing Co., who happened to be staying in the neighbourhood, conceived the idea that the defendant might care to take advertising space on the outside of covers of telephone directories. He therefore, on the afternoon in question, called at the defendant's premises. The defendant was not there, but the plaintiff was informed by the defendant's wife that her husband was expected back at about 6 p.m. The plaintiff returned at that hour and proceeded, although it was then dark, safely up the drive to the house, the defendant, in anticipation of the visit, having left switched on an outside electric lamp which to some extent illuminated the path. The plaintiff saw the defendant, but the latter was not interested in the proposed advertising and accompanied the plaintiff to the door and out on to the drive. According to what he said was his usual practice, the defendant did not switch off the light until such time as he estimated would enable the plaintiff to reach the road. In fact the plaintiff had only reached the concrete surface which began with the bridge, but thinking he had reached the pavement of the road he turned to the right, tripped over the concrete ledge of the bridge and fell into the ditch, sustaining injury. He sued the defendant for damages. Ormerod J. held that the plaintiff was an invitee and awarded him damages, subject to a deduction in respect of what he found was the plaintiff's own negligence.

The defendant appealed, contending that the plaintiff was only a licensee, that as such he must take the premises as he found them, and that there was no trap or unusual danger against which the defendant had to warn the plaintiff.

The plaintiff cross-appealed on the question of contributory negligence.

Montague Berryman Q.C. and Martin Jukes for the defendant.
Gerald Gardiner Q.C. and Howard Sabin for the plaintiff.

The following cases, in addition to those cited in the judgments, were referred to: Coleshill v. Manchester Corporation [1]; Indermaur v. Dames [2]; Hayward v. Drury Lane Theatre Ld. and Moss' Empires, Ld. [3]; Stowell v. Railway Executive [4]; Hawkins v. Coulsdon and Purley U.D.C. [5]

SOMERVELL L.J., having stated the facts, continued: There was a debate below and before us whether the plaintiff was an invitee or a licensee. The judge, I think, did not consider that it made much difference. He found in favour of the plaintiff, subject to a deduction from the damages for the plaintiff's own

[1] [1928] 1 K.B. 776, 779; 44 T.L.R. 258.
[2] (1866) L.R. 1 C.P. 274, 287.
[3] [1917] 2 K.B. 899, 903; 33 T.L.R. 557.
[4] [1949] 2 K.B. 519, 523; [1949] 2 All E.R. 193; 65 T.L.R. 387.
[5] [1953] 1 W.L.R. 882; [1953] 2 All E.R. 364.

C. A.
1953
DUNSTER
v.
ABBOTT.
Somervell L.J.

negligence, and there is an appeal and cross-appeal. As it was argued on both sides I will say a word or two about it. The judge came to the conclusion that the plaintiff was an invitee. Mr. Gardiner says, with force, that one ought not to distinguish between the house and the business premises as they were connected. Although we did not hear Mr. Berryman in reply, I will assume for the purposes of what I am going to say, without deciding it, that that distinction in the circumstances of this case does not avail the defendant. On that basis Mr. Gardiner submitted that anyone who comes to business premises with the hope that business in which he is interested will result, should be regarded as an invitee. I think that that is defining the character much too widely. In Pearson v. Lambeth Borough Council[1] Asquith L.J. said: "It is more exact to say that an "invitee is a person who comes on the occupier's premises with "his consent on business in which the occupier and he have a "common interest." I do not think that when the plaintiff came on the defendant's premises that night he and the defendant had a common interest. He hoped, no doubt, wrongly as it turned out, that a common interest might result, but they had not at that time a common interest.

It is said that there is very little authority on this point and in particular no cases dealing with commercial travellers. It may be that if a case arose about commercial travellers, evidence might be given about the practice and custom in the particular trade, which might or might not bring them within Asquith L.J.'s words. But I am dealing with this particular case. Here was a man who was hoping that he might find that the defendant was interested in this advertisement. I think that he was a licensee. If he was a licensee—to take words from a judgment of Hamilton L.J. in Latham v. Johnson (R.) & Nephew Ld.,[2] "The "rule as to licensees, too, is that they must take the premises as "they find them apart from concealed sources of danger; where "dangers are obvious they run the risk of them. In darkness "where they cannot see whether there is danger or not, if they "will walk they walk at their peril."

I do not think that this case raises what may be a difficult question about the effect of darkness on unusual dangers because I do not think that this was an unusual danger at all. I think that this is an ordinary means of access to a house over a ditch which is an extremely common feature of roads in the country; that there was no unusual or concealed source of danger in respect of which the occupier was under any duty to give warning. Indeed, Mr. Gardiner during argument, having developed his proposition that the plaintiff was an invitee, in my opinion rather threw it over because he based his main argument on the proposition that as the plaintiff had come with the defendant's knowledge and without objection on to his premises, the defendant was guilty of ordinary negligence in a failure to take reasonable care in relation to his exit from those premises. It was analogous on Mr. Gardiner's argument to a case where a man comes to see X at his house and as he is leaving X negligently runs into him as he is driving his motor-car. On that basis I do not think it would matter whether he was an invitee or a licensee.

[1] [1950] 2 K.B. 353, 366; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 1) 561; [1950] 1 All E.R. 682.

[2] [1913] 1 K.B. 399, 411; 29 T.L.R. 124.

The judge having held that the plaintiff was an invitee, and that the bridge amounted to a dangerous situation of unusual danger—that is where, with respect, I differ from him—also said: "He did not in the circumstances take reasonable care, by "leaving the light on for a sufficiently long time, to prevent the "plaintiff from falling into danger."

There was some discussion before us whether the lamp on the garage actually did, on that dark night, give any effective light when the plaintiff had reached the gate. Mr. Gardiner drew a picture (though there was not any evidence to the effect that those were the circumstances) of the sudden difficulty of vision which comes over a man who, having been standing in a bright light, finds himself in darkness. The plaintiff's own evidence was that this light was a very dim affair, and I think that that was probably right by the time a person reached the gate. As against that, the defendant said that it helped people. I have no doubt that on any view it helped people because it gave them a sense of direction as to where the house and garage were. The question therefore, I think, is whether the plaintiff can bring himself within the ordinary negligence principles having regard to the circumstances. In my view of this bridge and ditch I do not think that he can do so. I do not myself think that the defendant is under any obligation to turn the light on. But having turned it on, it seems to me he performed such duty as he owed by leaving it on for what he thought a reasonable time, and, indeed, as the plaintiff himself says, he had almost reached the entrance.

One is, naturally, sorry for the plaintiff. He is a man of 61 and, apart from the shock, he suffered considerable injury; but it does seem to me that this was an accident which he brought entirely on himself. He said that he never took a torch with him. I should have thought that in these days anyone who goes about on a dark unlighted road in a country district without a torch is asking for trouble, or, at any rate, that if a person finds himself in that position he must proceed with very great care, or he may find that something which was no danger by daylight and quite usual may result in an accident to him. For these reasons I would allow the appeal.

DENNING L.J. A canvasser who comes without your consent is a trespasser. Once he has your consent, he is a licensee. Not until you do business with him is he an invitee. Even when you have done business with him it seems rather strange that

C. A.
1953
DUNSTER
v.
ABBOTT.
Denning L.J.

your duty to him should be different when he comes up to the door than when he goes away. Does he really change his colour in the middle of the conversation? And what is the position when you discuss business with him and it comes to nothing? No confident answer can be given to these questions. Such is the morass into which the law has floundered in trying to distinguish between licensees and invitees.

In the present case the canvasser came to the door, the householder asked him in, the canvasser stated his business; the householder was not interested, and the canvasser left. Upon those facts I am clearly of opinion that the canvasser was not an invitee but only a licensee, because he was there on his own business and not on any matter in which the householder had an interest. We all know that a guest whom the householder invites to dinner is only a licensee, even though the householder has an ulterior business motive in asking him. It would be strange if a householder owed a higher duty to a canvasser who comes unasked than he does to a guest who comes on his express invitation.

In this case, however, it does not matter whether the plaintiff was an invitee or a licensee. That distinction is only material in regard to the static condition of the premises. It is concerned with dangers which have been present for some time in the physical structure of the premises. It has no relevance in regard to current operations, that is, to things being done on the premises, to dangers which are brought about by the contemporaneous activities of the occupier or his servants or of anyone else. The instance was put by my Lord in argument of the driving of a vehicle, but many others can be imagined. In regard to current operations, the duty of the occupier—or of the person conducting the operations—is simply to use reasonable care in all the circumstances. This duty is owed alike to all persons lawfully on the premises who may be affected by his activities: and it is the same whether the person injured is an invitee or a licensee, a volunteer or a guest. Negligence causing damage gives a cause of action, and it is not proper nowadays in this regard to draw any distinction between negligent acts of commission and negligent omissions.

Bearing this distinction in mind, it is tolerably plain that the static condition of these premises was not a danger to anyone who used reasonable care for his own safety. The bridge over the ditch was not an unusual danger, nor was it a concealed danger, either by day or night. No matter whether the plaintiff was an invitee or licensee, the householder was in no breach of duty in regard to it.

The case for the plaintiff depends, therefore, entirely on the action of the householder in putting out the light. That was a contemporaneous activity—a current operation—on his part in respect of which his duty to the plaintiff was simply to use reasonable care. The judge seems to have thought that the householder was negligent in turning the light off too soon: but I cannot agree with this view. The householder said that he left the light on for the usual time to enable people to get on to the public footpath. The plaintiff said that he walked slowly down the drive. The trouble seems to have been that the plaintiff made a mistake himself. Even before the light went off, he thought he had reached the public footpath whereas he was still on the bridge. He turned to the right and at that moment the light went off. The light, however, at that distance was not sufficient for him to see by, and I doubt whether it made any difference whether it was on or off. I do not think that the evidence is sufficient to warrant a finding of negligence by the householder. I agree that the appeal should be allowed.

ROMER L.J. I also agree and have very little to add. The case presented to us in this court was that this unfortunate plaintiff fell into the ditch because the defendant turned off the light which was attached to the garage. He did turn it off, but in my opinion that had little, if anything, to do with the accident. I say that because in effect the plaintiff said so himself. It was suggested to him in cross-examination that the light behind him was really no good to him and he said: "Very little, and it was "out just before I got there," that is, to the bridge. Then he was asked again: "The light was not any good at all?" and he said, "Not much." The truth of it was, I am sure, that it was the merest glimmer of light which was available to him when he got to the place where the accident happened and when he said it went out. Mr. Gardiner said that we ought to have more regard on this matter to the evidence of the defendant, who said that he provided that light for the purpose of guiding people safely, but after all I think that in a case of this sort the plaintiff would know more about what light there was on this particular evening, when it was raining, than the defendant himself. The plaintiff's view was that the light was very little good to him.

I am sure that what caused the accident was the plaintiff's assumption, after he had finished walking along the gravel path and felt the gravel no longer under his feet but a firm foundation, that that was the pavement: whereupon he turned to the right thinking to go along the road in that direction. Unfortunately for him what he felt was the concrete of the bridge, and this led him to turn to the right and caused him to fall into the ditch. For that assumption I can find nothing for which to blame the defendant. He was not responsible for it and neither the bridge itself nor the switching off of the light, nor any act of omission or commission by the defendant, led to the plaintiff making the unfortunate assumption which he did and falling into the ditch. Accordingly I agree with what my brethren have said, that the plaintiff had nobody but himself to blame for this unfortunate occurrence.

C. A.
1953
DUNSTER v. ABBOTT.
Romer L.J.

On the question of whether he was a licensee or an invitee I agree that he was a licensee on the same grounds as my brethren have expressed. He is not within the definition of an invitee which Asquith L.J. laid down in Pearson v. Lambeth Borough Council[3] because the business on which the plaintiff called was not a business in which he and the defendant had a common interest. I accordingly agree that this appeal must be allowed.

Appeal allowed; cross-appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Hair & Co.; Miss Betty Harris.

A. W. G.

[3] [1950] 2 K.B. 353.

[COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL.]

C. C. A.
1953
Mar. 31.
Lord Goddard C.J., Byrne and Parker JJ.

* REGINA v. WINES.

Criminal Law—Fraud—Accounts—Falsification—Intent to show false profit to avoid dismissal—Intent to induce a course of conduct on part of employers—Whether intent to defraud.
Fraud—Intent to defraud.

The appellant, a departmental manager of a store, was charged with falsification of accounts. The appellant said in evidence that he had falsified the accounts to show a greater profit from his department than had actually been made because he was afraid that if he showed the real profit he would be dismissed:—

Held, that that amounted to an intent to defraud.

Definition by Buckley J. in In re London and Globe Finance Corporation Ld. [1903] 1 Ch. 728, 732; 19 T.L.R. 314 of intent to defraud applied.

APPEAL against conviction.

The appellant was the manager of the wireless department of a co-operative society shop at Oxford. He was indicted on seven counts of larceny as a servant of television sets and other articles and one count of conspiring with another man, who pleaded guilty, to steal those goods, and also on five counts of falsification of accounts. At the trial his defence and his own evidence were to the effect that he had bought the goods. He admitted that he had falsified the accounts but said in evidence that his reason for doing so was to make it appear that the gross profit of his department—in fact 16 per cent.—was 24 per cent., because he was afraid that if he only showed 16 per cent. profit he would be dismissed and lose his employment and his wages. The case for the prosecution was that he had falsified the accounts in order to cover up the thefts, and the recorder gave the jury the following direction: "If, therefore, you are satisfied as Wines himself "admitted, first, that he is a servant, which has been proved, "secondly, that he made a false entry in the document, which "is admitted, and thirdly, that the object of it was either, as the "prosecution ask you to infer, to conceal the depredations which "had been made in the stock, or, as Wines himself says, in order "to keep a job which he would have lost if he had not made these "false entries, if that was the intention, then that is an intent "to defraud and the charge is made out."

The jury, without saying whether they accepted the appellant's evidence about his object in falsifying the accounts, or that of the prosecution, convicted him on all the counts and he received concurrent sentences of four years' imprisonment on each count. He appealed against his conviction on the ground that there had been a misdirection on the charges of falsification of accounts which had affected the minds of the jury with regard to the other offences.

Leo Clark for the appellant.
R. G. Micklethwait for the Crown.

The following cases were referred to in argument: Rex v. Drewett [1]; In re London and Globe Finance Corporation Ld. [2]; Rex v. Bassey [3]; Rex v. Bennett and Newton [4]; Rex v. Kritz [5] and Kat v. Diment. [6]

LORD GODDARD C.J. stated the facts and continued: There is no ground for disturbing the verdict as to larceny; in fact the case was proved as clearly as any case could be proved. Nor is there any ground for disturbing the conviction on the count for conspiracy, and the only difficulty which has arisen in this case is in connexion with the conviction for falsification of accounts and whether the direction which the recorder gave to the jury was right.

The offence of falsification of accounts is committed if the falsification is done, not by accident or for some given reason, but with intent to defraud; and the recorder in effect directed the jury that it did not matter whether they accepted the version of the prosecution or the version of the defence as to why the appellant had falsified the accounts because, whichever version was true, it amounted to an intent to defraud. He told the jury: "Which-"ever version you take, that amounts to an intent to defraud."

Mr. Clark has argued most clearly that that was a misdirection. If it was a misdirection, we should have to quash the convictions on the counts for falsification, although these thefts were of such a nature that it would not make any difference to the sentence because the recorder passed a sentence on each count to run concurrently. It is therefore an academic point, but one of some importance, whether this was a correct direction on a point of

[1] (1904) 21 T.L.R. 164.
[2] [1903] 1 Ch. 728; 19 T.L.R. 314.
[3] (1931) 47 T.L.R. 222.
[4] (1913) 9 Cr.App.R. 169; sub nom. Rex v. Newton and Bennett, 109 L.T. 747.
[5] [1950] K.B. 82; 65 T.L.R. 505; [1949] 2 All E.R. 406.
[6] [1951] 1 K.B. 34; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 2) 474; [1950] 2 All E.R. 657.

C. C. A.
1953
REG.
v.
WINES.

law. The court has come to the conclusion that the recorder's direction in these circumstances can be upheld and is correct. Buckley J., in his well-known definition of the difference between an intent to deceive and an intent to defraud, said in In re London and Globe Finance Corporation Ld.[1]: "In both sections 83 and 84 "of the Larceny Act of 1861, and section 166 of the Companies "Act, 1862, the offence is that of making or publishing a false "statement or account, or a false or fraudulent entry with intent "to deceive or defraud." Under the Companies Acts it does not matter whether the intention is to deceive or defraud, but in dealing with accounts it does matter because it is not criminal if the intent is merely to deceive; there must be an intent to defraud. "To deceive is, I apprehend, to induce a man to believe "that a thing is true which is false, and which the person "practising the deceit knows or believes to be false. To defraud "is to deprive by deceit:"—one observes that he does not stop there—"it is by deceit to induce a man to act to his injury. More "tersely it may be put, that to deceive is by falsehood to induce "a state of mind; to defraud is by deceit to induce a course of "action." That is the locus classicus on the subject and it has been often cited with approval. What has to be considered in cases such as this is whether the deceit which has been practised had merely induced, or was intended merely to induce, a state of mind, or whether it induced a course of action.

The appellant himself said what he intended to achieve by this falsification, namely, to remain in the service of the society, or, in other words, to avoid being dismissed by them, because he feared that they would dismiss him if he did not show a proper return. If he had been dismissed because he did not show a satisfactory return, he would have lost his wages, and, therefore, assuming that his object really was what he said it was, the society by his falsification would have been induced to retain him in their service and to pay him his wages, and he would have been getting wages from the society by means of a false representation, that is to say, by falsifying these accounts.

For these reasons we think that the recorder was justified, in view of what the appellant himself said, in directing the jury that whether they thought the object of the falsification was to conceal the thefts—and I should think there was very little doubt that really that was what was in his mind—or whether they thought it was merely to induce the society to keep him in their employ and pay him his wages, it did in the circumstances amount to an intent to defraud. The direction was right and, therefore, the appeal is dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Registrar, Court of Criminal Appeal; H. J. Astley, Oxford.

J. F. L.

[1] [1903] 1 Ch. 728, 732.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

*MORRIS AND ANOTHER v. SANDERS UNIVERSAL PRODUCTS.

C. A.

1953
Dec. 4.

Jenkins and Morris L.JJ.

[1952 M. 2831.]

Libel and Slander—Libel—Statement that defendants had "dismissed" plaintiffs—Whether defamatory.

Practice—Preliminary point—Libel action—Whether statement capable of defamatory meaning not properly taken as preliminary point of law— R.S.C., Ord. 25, r. 2.

"Dismissed."

The two plaintiffs had been employed as sales managers by the defendants until June 20, 1952, when their employment terminated. Shortly afterwards the defendants sent circular letters to certain of their customers in the several areas in which the plaintiffs respectively had been employed, stating in each case that "We have "dismissed" the plaintiff who worked in that area. In this action the plaintiffs each claimed damages for libel, alleging that the words of the circular letters meant that the plaintiffs had respectively been dismissed from their employment against their will, in circumstances which were discreditable. The defendants obtained an order under R.S.C., Ord. 25, r. 2, to have the issue tried as a preliminary point of law whether the words complained of had in their ordinary significance any defamatory meaning. Lord Goddard C.J. held that the point of law failed. On appeal:—

Held, first, that the function of the court in a case of this kind was to endeavour to decide what meaning the language used could reasonably be held to convey to the persons to whom the communication was addressed. Looking at the circular letters from that point of view, notwithstanding the various inoffensive meanings which the words "We have dismissed" the plaintiff might be capable of bearing, it was not possible for the court to say that the words complained of were not capable of a defamatory meaning or that a jury might not reasonably hold them to be defamatory. The case must accordingly go forward to trial for determination whether the words in fact bore a defamatory meaning.

Capital and Counties Bank Ld. v. Henty (1882) 7 App.Cas. 741. Lord William Nevill v. Fine Art and General Insurance Co. Ld. [1897] A.C. 68, and Turner v. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer [1950] W.N. 83; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 1) 342; [1950] 1 All E.R. 449 considered.

Held, secondly, that the procedure laid down in R.S.C., Ord. 25, r. 2, was unsuitable for the purpose for which it was used in this case.

Decision of Lord Goddard C.J. affirmed.

Appeal from Lord Goddard C.J.

The plaintiffs, Albert Edward Morris and Jack Blunk, in this action claimed damages for certain defamatory statements alleged to be contained in circular letters issued by the defendants, Sanders Universal Products, who were sued as a firm.

The following statement of facts is taken from the judgment of Jenkins L.J. The plaintiffs were former employees of the defendants. The statement of claim (which, for the present purpose, had to be regarded as proved) stated as follows: "Paragraph 1, "The defendants are distributors and retailers of carbon papers, "inked ribbons and similar articles, and until on or about "June 20, 1952, employed each of the plaintiffs as a sales "manager each at a weekly salary of £18 10s. 0d. with com-"mission." In paragraph 2 it was alleged that on or about June 20, 1952, "each of the plaintiffs agreed orally with the "defendants to determine their respective employments by the "defendants, by the plaintiffs tendering their resignations and "the defendants accepting the same." It was alleged in paragraph 3 that at all material times the defendants well knew that it was the intention of the plaintiffs to set up in business together as therein mentioned. Paragraph 4 dealt with the alleged libel in these terms: "On and after June 20, 1952, the defendants "falsely and maliciously wrote and published in a circular letter "of and concerning the first plaintiff and of and concerning him "in the way of his said business the words following, that is to "say: 'Sanders Universal Products. Sanders Carbon Papers, "'Inked Ribbons, Stencils and Duplicating Inks. Dear Sirs, We "'wish to bring to your notice the fact that we have dismissed "'Mr. Morris (meaning the first plaintiff) from our employ, he "'having been our representative in your area, and finally, that "'he has no connection whatsoever with our company. Yours "'faithfully, Sanders Universal Products'." Then followed particulars of the circulation of that document. "The said words "were published by posting the circular letter to" some three or four named people "and to many score others, potential "customers of the first plaintiff in the said business, and whether "or not such publishees were in fact, as alleged in the said circular "letter, situate in the area for which the first plaintiff had been "the defendants' representative." Then paragraph 5 stated: "By the said words the defendants meant and were understood to "mean that they had dismissed the first plaintiff from their "employment against his will, and that the first plaintiff had been "guilty of some conduct entitling the defendants to terminate his "employment without notice or salary in lieu, or that the circum-"stances of the termination of the first plaintiff's employment "were such as to be discreditable to the first plaintiff." Then followed an allegation in paragraph 6 of the same facts mutatis mutandis with respect to the second plaintiff, and paragraph 7 applied what was said in paragraph 5 to his case.

C. A.
1953
MORRIS AND ANOTHER v. SANDERS UNIVERSAL PRODUCTS.

There was an application for particulars under paragraphs 5 and 7 of the statement of claim "of the facts and matters upon "which the plaintiffs rely in support of their allegations that the "words set out in paragraph 4 of the statement of claim were "used in the sense or had the meanings alleged in paragraphs 5 "and 7 thereof." The particulars given were these: "Under "paragraph 5. Under this paragraph the first plaintiff will rely "upon a secondary meaning of the word 'dismissed' and will "contend that such a secondary meaning is 'to dismiss from " ' an employment against the will of the employee, or to dismiss " ' an employee who has been guilty of some conduct entitling " ' the employer to terminate his employment without notice or " ' salary in lieu, or to dismiss an employee in circumstances such " ' as to be discreditable to the employee ' and, further, that in " the particular facts and circumstances set forth in paragraph 1 " and the first sentence of the particulars to paragraph 4 of the " statement of claim the words complained of were calculated " to convey and did convey such meaning with regard to the dis- " missal of the first plaintiff." The same particulars were relied on under paragraph 7 with respect to the second plaintiff.

On July 27, 1953, the defendants obtained an order under Ord. 25, r. 2, for the trial of a preliminary point of law. The order was " that there shall be tried as a preliminary point of law " the issue whether the words complained of in the statement of " claim have in their ordinary signification any defamatory mean- " ing or are capable of bearing the alleged defamatory meaning " other than their ordinary meaning having regard to the facts " and matters relied upon herein."

Lord Goddard C.J. held that the point of law failed.

The defendants appealed.

Guy Aldous for the defendants.

John F. Marnan for the plaintiffs.

The following cases were cited in argument: Capital & Counties Bank Ld. v. Henty [1]; Lord William Nevill v. Fine Art & General Insurance Co. Ld. [2]; Beswick v. Smith [3]; Konski v. Peet [4]; and Turner v. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Pictures Ld. [5]

JENKINS L.J. This is an appeal from an order of Lord Goddard C.J. dated October 29, 1953, deciding against the defendants in the action a matter raised as a preliminary point of law under the R.S.C., Ord. 25, r. 2. The action is an action for libel, and the preliminary question raised is not one on which recourse is usually had to that rule.

[His Lordship stated the facts and continued:] The matter came before Lord Goddard C.J. who expressed the opinion that the words " dismissed from our employ " in a letter of this sort were capable of a defamatory meaning: whether they were defamatory or not was not for him to decide, but for a jury. From that decision, the defendants, represented by Mr. Aldous, now appeal.

Mr. Aldous puts his case in this way: He says, in effect, that the particulars given of the facts and circumstances relied on by the plaintiffs as giving the words complained of any meaning other than their usual meaning really add nothing to what is

[1] (1882) 7 App.Cas. 741.
[2] [1897] A.C. 68.
[3] (1907) 24 T.L.R. 169.
[4] [1915] 1 Ch. 530.
[5] [1950] W.N. 83; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 1) 342; [1950] 1 All E.R. 449.

C. A.
1953
MORRIS AND ANOTHER v. SANDERS UNIVERSAL PRODUCTS.
Jenkins L.J.

alleged in the statement of claim. So far, I am disposed to agree with him. He says further that, taking simply, as it stands, the letter containing the alleged libel and construing the language used according to its ordinary signification, it is incapable of a defamatory meaning. In support of his argument, he has referred us to a number of cases. The first is Lord William Nevill v. Fine Art and General Insurance Co. Ld.[1] The facts in that case, very briefly, were that the appellant acted for some time as agent to an insurance company at his own offices. After some correspondence about a change of terms upon which the parties could not agree, the company's secretary sent to persons who insured through the appellant a circular stating that the agency of the appellant at his office had "been closed by the directors." The question was whether the statement that the agency at the appellant's offices had been closed by the directors was capable of a defamatory meaning. We were referred by Mr. Aldous to Lord Halsbury L.C.'s speech.[1] His Lordship there adverted to the well-known case of Capital and Counties Bank Ld. v. Henty[2] and cited a passage from the judgment of Brett L.J. in the Court of Appeal[3] in that case; he said this: "It seems to me unreasonable that, "when there are a number of good interpretations, the only bad "one should be seized upon to give a defamatory sense to the "document. Therefore I am of opinion that this document could "not reasonably be taken in a defamatory sense by those to whom "it was published according to the primary meaning of the "language used in it." After citing that passage, Lord Halsbury L.C. continued[4]: "And in this House Lord Watson affirmed the "same proposition in language to which I think my noble and "learned friend, Lord Shand, has already called attention. It "would not be enough, therefore, in this case to say that some "persons might have understood these words as conveying some "reflection upon the honour or business capacity of Lord William "Nevill. It stands, therefore, as it appears to me, a long way "distant from what was done in Henty's case,[5] where a com-"munication was made to the persons who had to make payments "to the brewer in the particular case, and they were informed "that the cheques of such and such a bank were not to be received "in future. That undoubtedly, as Lord Watson points out, "might possibly by some persons have been understood to convey "some reflection upon the solvency of the particular bank upon "which the cheques were drawn, but because some persons may "choose, not by reason of the language itself, but by reason of "some fact to which it refers, to draw an unfavourable inference, "it does not follow that therefore such matter is libellous."

Mr. Aldous also referred to the case of Capital and Counties Bank Ld. v. Henty,[5] in the House of Lords, and in particular to

[1] [1897] A.C. 68, 73.
[2] (1882) 7 App.Cas. 741.
[3] (1880) 5 C.P.D. 514; 541.
[4] [1897] A.C. 68, 73.
[5] 7 App.Cas. 741.

Lord Watson's speech, from which I think it suffices to quote this[6]: "If I were satisfied that an inference injurious to the "credit of the bank would naturally and necessarily suggest itself "to the mind of any person of average intelligence on reading the "circular, I should hold that it had a libellous tendency, although "the language used is not in itself libellous. But, besides the "one injurious inference suggested by the appellants, there are "many other inferences of an innocent character, which naturally "might, and probably would, suggest themselves to any reader "of the circular who was not induced to put a malignant con-"struction upon it by some cause such as is not proved to have "existed in the case of any one of the persons to whom it was "sent." Lord Bramwell said[7]: "I say, then, that the words are "harmless in themselves, and that they do not import or justify "the inference of the plaintiffs' insolvency. If I am wrong in "this, and if the words do impute or justify the inference of "insolvency as a possible cause of the defendants' refusal to take "cheques on the plaintiffs, I say that that is only one of several "things which they import, or of which they justify the infer-"ence; that no action lies in such a case; that if it would lie "against any one not interested to do and say what the defendants "did and said, it does not lie against them who were so interested "and did and said no more than they had a right to do."

Finally, Mr. Aldous referred to Beswick v. Smith.[8] There the alleged libel was this, written by former employers: "H. "Beswick is no longer in our employ. Please give him no order "or pay him any money on our account." Lord Halsbury said this[9]: "The words complained of, if taken in their natural "meaning, would not convey to the mind of a person of ordinary "intelligence the impression that any imputation was being made "against the plaintiff. He did not deny that there might be a "publication under such circumstances as to make that which "was prima facie not libellous convey in fact a defamatory impu-"tation. But that was not the case here. It was quite possible, "and it seemed to him to be quite natural, that some of the "defendant's customers might, in the absence of notice, have "sent money or orders to the plaintiff. The ordinary and reason-"able inference to be drawn from the notice which was sent "was, perhaps, that the employment had terminated because "the parties had quarrelled, but certainly not that the defendant "was imputing anything criminal to the plaintiff. Such an "inference seemed to him to be the invention of an imagination "already tainted with the idea that there was something wrong "in the termination of the employment. He thought that the "appeal should be allowed, and judgment entered for the "defendant."

On those authorities, or using those authorities to support his

[6] Ibid. 788.
[7] Ibid. 793.
[8] (1907) 24 T.L.R. 169.
[9] Ibid. 170.

C. A.
1953
MORRIS AND ANOTHER v. SANDERS UNIVERSAL PRODUCTS.
Jenkins L.J.

argument, Mr. Aldous says that the most that can be said against the letter complained of in the present action is that somebody reading it might conceivably draw the inference that Mr. Morris in the one case or Mr. Blunk in the other case had been dismissed for discreditable conduct of some sort; but he says that that is no more than one of a number of possible inferences that a reasonable reader of this letter might draw. Therefore, he says, it would be wrong for the court, having regard to those authorities, to pick from several equally possible meanings the one injurious meaning and say on the strength of it that these words are capable of constituting a libel.

I confess that, on reading these authorities, I find it difficult exactly to appreciate the position in which they leave the matter, for many statements are capable of more than one meaning, and if these authorities are to be understood as ruling that an alleged libel is only to be held capable of a defamatory meaning in a case in which it cannot have any other meaning than a defamatory one, it seems to me that the task of a judge in deciding whether the case was one to be left to the jury would often be very difficult, because, in so many cases, the question what the words complained of might be held to mean by a reasonable person is likely to be a nicely balanced one. But I find assistance in this difficulty from the case of Turner v. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Pictures Ld.,[10] to which we were referred by Mr. Marnan for the plaintiffs, and in particular from the passage cited by Mr. Marnan in the speech of Lord Porter, where his Lordship said this[11]: "Some argument was presented to your Lordships as to "the attitude which the judge should adopt where, in his view, "the only inference which can be drawn from the words com-"plained of is that they lie on the borderline, and it is impossible "to say whether, when properly considered, they are capable of "a libellous meaning or not. It is, of course, the duty of a "judge in the first instance to put an accurate interpretation on "the words used, and, having done so, to make up his mind "whether they are capable of a defamatory meaning or not. "Theoretically, if he is left in doubt, he should rule them "incapable of a defamatory meaning, but this, I think, is a "theoretical and not a practical difficulty. It is the judge's duty "to make up his mind and, save in very exceptional cases, he "can decide on which side of the line the words complained of "are to be placed. If he comes to the conclusion that a reason-"able jury would be justified in finding that they had a libellous "tendency, he must leave it to them even though the words "might also bear an innocent interpretation; or, to put it from "the point of view of an appellate court, the question of libel or "no libel should have been left to the jury if it cannot be said

[10] [1950] W.N. 83; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 1) 342; [1950] 1 All E.R. 449.

[11] 66 T.L.R. 347; [1950] 1 All E.R. 454.

"that twelve men could not reasonably have come to the conclusion that the words were defamatory. This, I think, is "what Lord Blackburn means in his observations in Capital and "Counties Bank Ld. v. Henty,[12] when he says, quoting Brett "L.J.[13]: 'It is unreasonable that when there are a number of "'good interpretations the only bad one should be seized upon "'to give a defamatory sense to the document' and is in "accordance with the test put by Lord Selborne L.C., when he "says[14]: 'The test, according to the authorities, is whether, "'under the circumstances in which the writing was made public, "'reasonable men to whom the publication was made, would "'be likely to understand it in a libellous sense.' In the present "case both the court of first instance and the Court of Appeal, "though for different reasons, found the letter capable of a "defamatory meaning, and I proceed to consider the second "question whether there is any evidence of malice on the part "of the respondents on this footing."

The matter, therefore, depends on the question whether a reasonable jury would be justified in finding that the words complained of had a libellous tendency, or, in other words, whether it can or cannot be said that twelve men could reasonably come to the conclusion that the words complained of were defamatory.

Mr. Aldous has suggested to us a variety of different meanings for the word "dismissed," and he says that it does not by any means necessarily have a derogatory connotation; but, in my view, the function of the judge on a matter such as this is to endeavour to decide what meaning the language used could reasonably be held to convey to the persons to whom the communication was addressed. Looking at this letter from that point of view, notwithstanding the various inoffensive meanings which the words "We have dismissed Mr. Morris," or "We "have dismissed Mr. Blunk" might be said to be capable of bearing, I find myself unable to hold that the words complained of are not capable of a defamatory meaning, or that it is not possible that a reasonable jury might hold them to be defamatory. This court at this stage has nothing whatever to do with the question whether they are defamatory or not. That will be a question for the jury when the case comes to be tried.

Accordingly, I would dismiss this appeal; but I cannot part with this case without saying that, in my judgment, the procedure under Ord. 25, r. 2, is a most unsuitable procedure for the purpose for which it has been used in this case. If recourse is to be had to that rule on the question whether the words complained of in a libel action are capable of a defamatory meaning, it seems to me the practice may grow up of splitting libel actions into two stages, the first being concerned with the aspect of the [12] 7 App.Cas. 741, 786.

[13] 5 C.P.D. 514, 541.
[14] 7 App.Cas. 741, 745.

C. A.
1953
MORRIS AND ANOTHER v. SANDERS UNIVERSAL PRODUCTS.

case with which we have been occupied today, and the second being the trial of the case itself in the event of the defendants failing to put a summary end to the proceedings on the preliminary issue with which we are now dealing. It seems to me that this would be a most undesirable practice and that a question such as that now raised is not a proper subject for an application under the procedure prescribed by Ord. 25, r. 2.

MORRIS L.J. I am in entire agreement with the judgment which my Lord has just delivered. The matter is, I think, clearly stated in Gatley on Libel and Slander, 4th ed., p. 126, in the sentence: "In determining whether the words are capable "of a defamatory meaning the judge will construe the words "according to the fair and natural meaning which would be given "them by reasonable persons of ordinary intelligence, and will "not consider what persons setting themselves to work to deduce "some unusual meaning might succeed in extracting from "them." Like Jenkins L.J., I also think that great assistance is derived from the passage in the speech of Lord Porter in Turner v. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Pictures Ld.,[15] to which my Lord referred. It seems to me that, in approaching the case at this stage and in deciding therefore whether the words are capable of a defamatory meaning and whether the action should go forward for trial, we are entitled to have regard to facts and events which are of general and ordinary knowledge and to the general and ordinary understanding of words which are in common use. I agree with my Lord that the contest is whether a jury could reasonably come to the conclusion that the words are defamatory. I have no doubt, speaking for myself, that the words are capable of a defamatory meaning, and as that is all that we are asked at this stage to consider, the result is that the case goes forward for determination whether the words bear a defamatory meaning or any defamatory meaning alleged.

I therefore agree that this appeal fails; and I would also add that I am in further agreement with what my Lord has said with regard to procedure and with what was said by my Lord the Lord Chief Justice.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Stilgoes; Franks, Charlesly and Leighton.

B. A. B.

[15] [1950] 1 All E.R. 449, 454.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

* PARKINSON v. H. AND J. PLUMPTON (A FIRM).

1953
Dec. 10.

Lord Goddard C.J.

[1952 P. No. 3098.]

Master and Servant—Catering Wages Act—Statutory minimum remuneration—Garage with café attached—Joint engagement of man and wife as manager and manageress of garage and café respectively—Joint weekly wage—Full board but no lodging—Not within Catering Wages Act, 1943 (6 & 7 Geo. 6, c. 24), ss. 9 (1), 10 (1)—Wages Regulation (Unlicensed Place of Refreshment) Order, 1949 (1949 S.I. No. 433)—Wages Regulation (Unlicensed Place of Refreshment) Order, 1947 (1947, S.R. & O. No. 1375).
Catering Wages. "Lodging."

A man and his wife were engaged by the proprietors of a garage with a café attached as manager and manageress of the garage and café respectively, and received a joint weekly wage of £4 10s. for their services. They were required to live in an unfurnished room at the café and were provided with full board. In the wife's action claiming as arrears of wages a sum which she alleged represented the difference between the statutory minimum remuneration required to be paid by the Catering Wages Act, 1943, and the Wages Regulation (Unlicensed Place of Refreshment) Order, 1949, and the wage which she in fact received:—

Held, that joint engagements such as that of the plaintiff and her husband were not within the ambit of the Act because, under the terms of such an engagement it was impossible to apportion the joint wage—which on its own amounted to not less than the statutory minimum remuneration—between the plaintiff and her husband. Even had the Act applied, the regulation of 1949 did not provide a minimum wage for employees provided with full board but no lodging, and the unfurnished room supplied for the plaintiff's use did not constitute "lodging" within the meaning of the regulation.

ACTION.

The defendants, who were at all material times in partnership, owned several garages with cafés attached in various parts of Lancashire. They sought a married couple to manage one of these, the Hillock Garage and café, and engaged the plaintiff, Mrs. Doris Parkinson, and her husband at a weekly wage of £4 10s. a week plus a commission of 20 per cent. of the net profits. No particular duties were specified except that the plaintiff was to manage the café and her husband was to be manager of the garage. The plaintiff and her husband were required to live in an unfurnished room at the café and they were both to have full board.

In February, 1949, they took up their duties and the plaintiff brought her own furniture into the room at the café. After December, 1949, the plaintiff, without the defendants' knowledge or consent, left the café at about 7 p.m. and went to her own house for the night. Her employment ended in May, 1950, when the business was sold.

1953

PARKINSON
v.
H. AND J.
PLUMPTON.

The plaintiff claimed from the defendants the sum of £238 5s. 10d. which she alleged was arrears of remuneration owing to her. This amount represented the difference between what she alleged to be the statutory minimum remuneration laid down by the Catering Wages Act, 1943,[1] and the Wages Regulation (Unlicensed Place of Refreshment) Order, 1949, and the weekly wage she in fact received. The defendants denied that there were any arrears.

The proceedings were instituted on the plaintiff's behalf by reason of section 13 (4) of the Act of 1943 by the officer acting for the purposes of that Act.

S. B. R. Cooke for the plaintiff.
W. E. Behrens for the defendants.

LORD GODDARD C.J. This is an exceedingly difficult case and, although I have made up my mind upon it, it is not a case in which I pretend I feel great confidence. However, I am not the court of last resort and I am sure that it will go further unless the parties have the good sense to settle it before expense is incurred. There are great difficulties and an apparently unprecedented state of affairs which I am sure was not contemplated by the draftsman of the Catering Wages Act, 1943, or the draftsman of the regulations.

[His lordship stated the facts as set out above and continued:] Of course, difficulties and complications arise by these various statutes which interfere with the freedom of contract and impose, or purport to impose, terms on the contracts which people in all good faith may make. In this case I am quite satisfied that the defendants did not know of the Catering Wages Act, although they ought to have done if they were running snack bars, nor do I think that the plaintiffs knew anything about the Catering Wages Act, although they ought to have done if they were going to be employed in snack bars and cafés.

A point was taken here, with regard to the Wages Regulation (Unlicensed Place of Refreshment) Order, 1947 [which was revoked on April 1, 1949, by the Order of 1949], that until the regulations of 1949 came into force, the schedules did not apply if sleeping accommodation was provided. I cannot find that an

[1] Catering Wages Act, 1943, s. 9 (1): "If a contract between a worker "to whom a wages regulation order "applies and his employer provides "for the payment of less remunera- "tion than the statutory minimum "remuneration, clear of all deduc- "tions, it shall have effect as if for "that less remuneration there were "substituted the statutory minimum "remuneration clear of all deduc- "tions. . . ."

S. 10 (1): "For the purpose of "determining whether the remunera- "tion paid or agreed to be paid to a "worker to whom a wages regulation "order applies is less than the statu- "tory minimum remuneration clear of "all deductions, the net remunera- "tion obtained or to be obtained by "him in cash from his employer after "allowing for his necessary expendi- "ture, if any, in connexion with the "employment shall, subject to the "provisions of this section, be deemed "to be the remuneration paid or to "be paid to him. . . ."

unfurnished room satisfies the description of sleeping accommodation in the schedule. One must give an ordinary commonsense interpretation to it. Merely because a room can be used as a bedroom I do not think that it can be construed as being sleeping accommodation when one considers that the presence of sleeping accommodation is to prevent the application of the schedules altogether. I think that sleeping accommodation must be a room where there is accommodation for sleeping; in other words, a room furnished at any rate with a bed, although I am not sure that, under such vague drafting, sleeping accommodation is anything more than a bed. There was no bed provided by the defendants and Mr. Plumpton, who gave his evidence very fairly, did not attempt to say that he offered to furnish a room or rooms for them. I think that if he had the plaintiff would probably still have said that she wanted to bring her own furniture. The fact that she did bring her own furniture and did not bring it on account of any refusal of Mr. Plumpton's offer, would prevent me holding that sleeping accommodation had been provided by Mr. Plumpton. I think that sleeping accommodation obviously means that the person is to be provided with a bedroom and it is designed, I think, to cover what I will call living-in assistants to a shop or place of that sort, and does not refer to unfurnished rooms.

[His lordship stated the facts and reviewed the evidence and continued:] Now comes the very difficult question whether there has been an under-payment contrary to the conditions of the Act. It is on this point that I feel very great doubt and difficulty. I have decided that I cannot put my finger on any provision of the Act which shows that this Act has been broken, because I do not think that this question of joint engagement was ever contemplated. [His lordship read section 9 (1) of the Catering Wages Act, 1943, and continued:] The contract provides for the remuneration of two people, a joint remuneration of £4 10s. It is admitted that if that £4 10s. is the plaintiff's remuneration it would fulfil the requirements of the statute. But when an employer engages two people jointly and agrees to pay a joint sum of money, it seems to me that he agrees to pay two people, and in law it is a joint claim; as used to be said in the old real property days, joint ownership was per me per tu. I think that it is very difficult to find any provision in the Act which states that where there is a joint employment the money is to be divided equally or anything of that sort. I am quite satisfied on this evidence that if the plaintiff had sued for £4 10s. she could have recovered that money, although no doubt the defendant might have had a right to have the husband added. This position has never, I think, been contemplated by the Act. The £4 10s. was a joint sum paid jointly, and, as I put it in the argument, it would be an extraordinary thing if, assuming that the plaintiff when employed alone is entitled to £4 a week, she could claim £4 extra when engaged with her husband at a weekly wage of £12 on the v.

1953

PARKINSON
H. AND J.
PLUMPTON.

Lord Goddard
C.J.

ground that the agreement did not make provision that £8 was to be her husband's wage and £4 her own.

Although the £4 10s. was not apportioned between husband and wife there was a joint wage which was enough to cover the minimum wage in the statute and which the parties were willing to accept—I know that is not a conclusive matter—together with the proportion of profits. I am not going to assume that there were any profits because, if there had been, they certainly ought to have been paid.

Mr. Cooke, in a very forceful argument, contended that I ought to come to a contrary conclusion because of the provisions of section 10 (1) of the Act. [His lordship read the section and continued:] Mr. Cooke contended that that section concluded the matter in his favour. In this case the husband used to render a weekly account of the takings at the garage and café and he would deduct £4 10s. from the garage takings. I do not think that this section is more than a method of calculating remuneration. The payment in cash is put in to show what is the cash result. The cash result in this case was undoubtedly £4 10s. a week, less health insurance. I think that the words "obtained by him in cash" are meant to emphasize that one must see that the money result is not the result of the money minus something else.

The other difficulty which arises in the case is one which could be very easily put right, but one which I think is an extremely formidable difficulty. It is this. The scale of remuneration is now governed by the Wages Regulation (Unlicensed Place of Refreshment) Order, 1949, S.I. No. 433. That provides, subject to the provisions of certain paragraphs, that "the weekly minimum "remuneration for the workers to whom this schedule applies "(other than occasional workers) shall be . . . (ii) for female "workers (other than manageresses), in accordance with the pro-"visions of paragraph 3." I quite realize that it was intended to cover all wage earners because that is the subject of the Act. The question is whether the draftsman has succeeded or whether he has omitted something which may be per incuriam. Paragraph 3 sets out the grade or description of workers for a week of forty-seven hours. The scale is set out in column 2, "where the employer "supplies the worker with full board and lodging for seven days a "week." Full board and lodging are both defined. "'Full "'board'" means "not less than four meals a day of good "and sufficient quality and quantity. 'Lodging' means 'clean "'and adequate accommodation for eating, sleeping, washing and "'leisure.'" Therefore, washing obviously means furnished lodging: it does not mean a bare room. The contract here was to supply full board. As the defendants did not provide lodging, column 2 does not apply.

Column 4 is headed: "Where the employer supplies the "worker with neither meals nor lodgings." "Meals" means "a "meal of good and sufficient quality and quantity." Therefore one is thrown back on column 3. "Where the employer supplies

1953

PARKINSON v H. AND J. PLUMPTON.

Lord Goddard C.J.

"the worker with neither full board nor lodging, but supplies her "with meals of good and sufficient quality and quantity whilst on "duty." That is obviously meant, I think, to cover the living-out servant who comes in, perhaps, in the morning and wants a meal some time when she is on duty. Some days she may have two meals, some days three meals, some days only one. That is a case where the contract is to supply a person with a meal while on duty, but here the contract was to provide full board and, as this column only applies to cases where the employer does not contract to give full board or lodging, I do not see how I can apply it. I think that it is a casus omissus. I think that the draftsman has forgotten to provide for cases such as this where board is provided but not lodging within the meaning of this schedule. I suppose that it was thought that full board would only be supplied where lodging was supplied, but, as I say, lodging seems to me to be put out of account here. These people were there full time, and so therefore there is this unfortunate hiatus.

Although one always wishes to construe a thing so as to give it a sensible construction and to prevent failure, I do not know of any canon of construction which enables one to construe the words, "Where the employer supplies the worker with neither "full board nor lodging," so as to substitute for them, "Where "the employer supplies full board but no lodging." It would be rewriting the legislation, and I am not a Minister, and cannot do it. For that reason I must enter judgment for the defendant firm.

Judgment for the defendants.

Solicitors: The Solicitor, Ministry of Labour and National Service; Gregory, Rowcliffe & Co.

S. C.

[CHANCERY DIVISION.]

*MINISTER OF HEALTH v. GENERAL COMMITTEE OF THE ROYAL MIDLAND COUNTIES HOME FOR INCURABLES AT LEAMINGTON SPA.

1953 Nov. 24, 25, 26; Dec. 9

Vaisey J.

[1953 H. 3762.]

National Health—Hospital—Meaning—Home for incurables—No curative treatment provided—Whether home transferred to Ministry of Health—National Health Service Act, 1946 (9 & 10 Geo. 6, c. 81), ss. 6 (1), 79.

"Hospital." "Treatment."

An arbitrator decided that a certain home for the admission of persons suffering from incurable or chronic diseases, at which no curative treatment but only palliative medical treatment was provided, was not a "hospital" within the meaning of the National Health Service Act, 1946; and did not vest in the Minister on July 5, 1948, by virtue of section 6 (1) of that Act. The arbitrator stated his award in the form of a special case:—

1953

MINISTER OF HEALTH v. GENERAL COMMITTEE OF THE ROYAL MIDLAND COUNTIES HOME FOR INCURABLES.

Held, affirming the award, that the home was not a "hospital" within the meaning of the Act and was unaffected by its provisions, and that the interests in or attaching to the premises held by the trustees of the home immediately before July 5, 1948, were not transferred to or vested in the Minister of Health since no curative treatment was provided, and the palliative treatment was subsidiary to the main purpose of the home, which was to provide the patients with care and attention in pleasant surroundings with the necessary nursing under adequate medical supervision.

Tendring Union v. Woolwich Union [1923] 1 K.B. 121; 36 T.L.R. 512 considered: Royal Victoria Hospital v. Wheatley (unrep.) distinguished.

SPECIAL CASE stated by an arbitrator.

The Royal Midland Counties Home for Incurables at Leamington Spa (hereinafter called the "home") was established in 1874 and became a charity regulated by a trust deed dated June 27, 1884. By rule 2 of the rules in force in July, 1948, the object of the home was "to give relief by admission to the home or by "pensions as hereinafter provided to persons of good character "of limited or reduced income, who are suffering from incurable "or chronic diseases or incapacity owing to injury or wounds. "No person suffering from insanity, imbecility, epilepsy, cancer "or pulmonary tuberculosis, past or present, shall be eligible "as an in-patient, and no case shall be admitted unless it requires "medical supervision and nursing. Persons suffering from "epilepsy and cancer shall be eligible for pensions." The home was administered by the committee who decided, with the assistance of reports from the visiting physician, all questions relating to the admission or discharge of patients. [Further details of the internal management of the home are set out in the judgment.]

The arbitrator (after stating the facts and saying that the question for decision was—whether or not the home was on July 5, 1948, being the "appointed day" for the purpose of the National Health Service Act, 1946, transferred to and vested in the Minister of Health by virtue of section 6 (1) of that Act [1]) said: "I find as a fact that immediately before the

[1] National Health Service Act, 1946, s. 6 (1): "Subject to the pro-"visions of this Act, there shall, on "the appointed day, be transferred to "and vest in the Minister by virtue "of this Act all interests in or "attaching to premises forming part "of a voluntary hospital or used for "the purposes of a voluntary hospital, ". . . being interests held immedi-"ately before the appointed day by "the governing body of the hospital "or by trustees solely for the pur-"poses of that hospital, . . ."

S. 79 (1): "In this Act unless the "context otherwise requires, . . . "'hospital' means any institution "for the reception and treatment of "persons suffering from illness or "mental defectiveness, any maternity "home, and any institution for the "reception and treatment of persons "during convalescence or persons "requiring medical rehabilitation, "and includes clinics, dispensaries "and out-patient departments main-"tained in connexion with any such "institution or home as aforesaid, and "'hospital accommodation' shall be "construed accordingly; 'illness'

"appointed day the main purpose of the home was to provide "the patients with the care and attention they required in "pleasant surroundings with the necessary nursing under ade-"quate medical supervision. The provision of palliative medical "treatment, treatment for inter-current complaints and physio-"therapy were of course objects of the home, but I hold that "they were subsidiary to its main purpose and could not be "regarded as either independent or co-ordinate purposes."

After referring to In re Marjoribanks' Trust Deed [2] and In re Couchman [3] the arbitrator considered Royal Victoria Hospital v. Wheatley [4] and said with regard to that case: "It was held that "under the provisions of the National Health Service (Scotland) "Act, 1947, which are indistinguishable from the English Act, "the Royal Victoria Hospital was a voluntary hospital, the "premises of which vested in the Secretary of State. The Royal "Victoria Hospital was established by Royal Charter for 'the "'reception and treatment of indigent and other persons in "'Dundee . . . who are suffering from incurable disease and are "'thereby rendered incapable of performing ordinary duties. . . .' "Insanity was included but not cancer or tuberculosis. The "evidence showed that a large proportion of the patients were "suffering from inoperable cancer and that only patients with a "short expectation of life, not more than a year, were admitted. "The Lord President referred expressly to such afflictions as "advanced inoperable cancer and thought it would be a startling "flaw in the scheme of the Act if Parliament had omitted to "make provision for so obvious and clamant a need as the care "of the victims of incurable disease during the closing stages of "their illness. The pursuers admitted that on the definition "section alone they could not contend that the Act did not apply "and the Lord President continued: 'This concession could not "'be withheld. Reading only the relevant parts of these pro-"'visions there is transferred to the Secretary of State every "'institution for the reception and treatment of persons suffering "'from . . . any disability requiring . . . nursing.'' On the terms "'of the pursuers' charter and in view of the evidence, it is too "'plain for argument that the Royal Victoria Hospital is such an "'institution.' The rest of the case turned on a point on section "9 (1) of the Scottish Act, on which Mr. Russell, I think wisely, "did not rely so I need not pursue it. The Lord President did "however say that 'a hospital . . . devoted to alleviating the "'suffering and relieving the symptoms of the incurably ill is "'incapable of being described as having any other main purpose "'than "therapeutic," as that expression is used in section 9.'

"includes mental illness and any "injury or disability requiring "medical or dental treatment or "nursing."

[2] [1952] Ch. 181; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 224; sub nom. Re Marjoribanks' Indenture [1952] 1 All E.R. 191.

[3] [1952] Ch. 391; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 437; sub nom. Re Couchman's Will Trusts [1952] 1 All E.R. 439.

[4] Unreported.

1953

MINISTER OF HEALTH v. GENERAL COMMITTEE OF THE ROYAL MIDLAND COUNTIES HOME FOR INCURABLES.

"If I thought the two cases were really comparable I should feel "that I ought to give great weight to the Lord President's obser-"vations, but I think they were really directed to an institution "which was radically different from the home, and are not applic-"able to the situation with which I have to deal. Even if the "Scottish case were binding on the English courts and therefore "on me I should regard it as distinguishable."

After considering the meaning of the words "hospital" and "treatment" and referring to Tendring Union v. Woolwich Union[5] the arbitrators held that the home was not a hospital transferred to and vested in the Minister of Health as a nationalized institution on July 5, 1948. He then said "The question "for the decision of the court is whether on the true construction "of the National Health Service Act, 1946, and on the facts as "above stated the home was, immediately before the appointed "day, a 'voluntary hospital' for the purpose of section 6 (1) of "the said Act. If the court should decide that the home was a "voluntary hospital then I award the interests in or attaching to "the premises held by trustees for the home immediately before "the 5th July, 1948, were transferred to or vested in the Minister "on the appointed day by virtue of section 6 (1) of the said Act "and, subject to any order which the court may think fit to "make, I reserve the question of costs."

Geoffrey Cross Q.C. and Denys Buckley for the Minister of Health.

Charles Russell Q.C. and H. E. Francis for the Committee.

Cases referred to in argument: Tendring Union v. Woolwich Union[6]; In re Marjoribanks' Trust Deed[7]; In re Couchman[8]; Royal Victoria Hospital v. Wheatley.[9]

Cur adv. vult.

Dec. 9. VAISEY J. This case raises a question which is easier to state than to solve, namely, whether the Royal Midland Counties Home for Incurables at Leamington Spa (which I will call "the Home") is a hospital within the meaning of the National Health Service Act, 1946 (which I will call "the Act"), and was, as such, transferred to and vested in the Minister of Health as a nationalized institution on July 5, 1948, by virtue of section 6 (1) of the Act.

That question was, in the first instance, referred to arbitration in accordance with the provisions of the Act and certain regulations made thereunder, and was answered in the negative by the arbitrator in his award, stated in the form of a special case bearing date July 29, 1953. This is, in effect, an appeal from his determination.

[5] [1923] 1 K.B. 121; 36 T.L.R. 512.
[6] [1923] 1 K.B. 121.
[7] [1952] Ch. 181.
[8] [1952] Ch. 391.
[9] Unreported.

The history of the home, its constitution and present and past activities are set out with great particularity in the award and the documents incorporated therein. For the purposes of this judgment I need only, for the moment, say that the home was established in the year 1874; that it is a charity, regulated by a trust deed dated June 27, 1884; and that my decision must largely depend on the rules which were in force on July 5, 1948, that being the appointed day under the Act.

From these rules it appears that the object of the institution was to give relief, by admission to the home and the grant of pensions, to persons of good character and of limited or reduced income who were suffering from incurable or chronic diseases or incapacity through injury or wounds, but so that no person should be eligible for admission if suffering from insanity, epilepsy, cancer or pulmonary tuberculosis, and that no case was to be admitted unless it required medical supervision and nursing. The omission of cancer is, I think, important.

The home was controlled and administered by a general committee, acting largely through a sub-committee called "the House Committee," and it decided, with the assistance of reports from the visiting physician, Dr. Clayton, all questions relating to the admission or discharge of patients. The medical staff of the home consisted of the said visiting physician and a visiting surgeon, Mr. Dingley, both local practitioners, who visited the home on alternate days and were liable to be called in at any time in case of emergency. There was no resident medical officer.

There were three classes of patients, (i) paying patients, (ii) free patients—both of these classes residing on the premises—and (iii) pensioners residing elsewhere. The average number of resident patients during 1947 was 117, of which about one-third were "free" and the remainder "paying," but the latter in fact paid only a fraction of the actual cost of the accommodation. Pensions were limited to £20 per annum, and the number of pensioners on July 5, 1948, was 38. Both free patients and pensioners were elected by votes of subscribers; paying patients, if accepted, were admitted in rotation. There was always a waiting list of all three classes. Each patient, on applying for admission, had to supply a medical certificate that he was suffering from a specified disease, was regarded as incurable, and was otherwise eligible under the rules. His application was then passed on to one of the visiting medical officers and, if suitable, he was accepted by the committee to wait for a vacancy.

In 1948 there were 48 full-time and 29 part-time members of the nursing staff, which appears to be a slightly lower proportion of nurses to patients than in a general hospital, and a smaller number of these were State-registered nurses than in a general hospital. The senior members of the nursing staff appear to have been older than is usual in a general hospital, and, to quote the words of the arbitrator, the nursing required was "more routine "and of a slower tempo."

1953

MINISTER OF HEALTH v. GENERAL COMMITTEE OF THE ROYAL MIDLAND COUNTIES HOME FOR INCURABLES.

Vaisey J.

It appears that the policy of the committee was to admit those who were likely to settle down for life and make the premises their permanent home, and only those applicants were accepted whose disease had reached such a stage that no real improvement was to be expected. On the other hand, patients who were likely to die very shortly were not accepted. The average length of time between the admission and the death of a patient would seem to have been about ten years, for the diseases from which the patients suffered were chronic diseases, and not those likely to be the immediate cause of death, which usually came from some other intervening cause or fortuitous disease such as pneumonia, the average death-rate being shown by the records to have been only 10 per cent. per annum. The diseases from which the patients suffered were in the main, either crippling diseases of the joints, such as osteo-arthritis, or diseases of the nervous system, such as Parkinson's disease. Of the 112 patients actually in the home on July 5, 1948, 80 were women and 32 men, and of these 18 were bedridden, most of the others getting about in wheel-chairs or on crutches or with sticks; and no fewer than half of the patients regularly went away on holidays for periods up to a month.

The secretary of the home, when asked "what sort of "treatment" prospective patients would be likely to get, deposed that he was accustomed to say that "no treatment "whatsoever was to be expected there," and this is important in view of the definition of a "hospital" in the Act as hereinafter mentioned. No doubt a great deal of palliative treatment was given at the home and what the secretary was referring to, or thinking of, as not given there, was curative treatment. Treatment for the symptoms of the disease and to relieve pain was undoubtedly available, but the arbitrator held, and I think with justification, that patients were admitted on the footing that, while they would get the care and attention and nursing which they required, they would not get any specific treatment for their complaint, which in every case had to be regarded as one not susceptible to, or capable of, cure. No doubt the medical officers did from time to time prescribe drugs such as sedatives, sleeping-tablets, aperients, and so forth, and notably hyoscine, which was used to reduce the tremors characteristic of Parkinson's disease. Cases of influenza or pneumonia would undoubtedly be treated by ordinary medical methods, but such complaints were not the relevant complaints, that is, were not those in respect of which the patients were admitted, but incidental or inter-current complaints. Considerable use was made of physiotherapy, and many of the patients received massage or radiant-heat treatment, or were given walking exercises. Such treatment was undoubtedly palliative and symptomatic rather than curative in character.

The arbitrator was satisfied, and I also am convinced, that the atmosphere of the home was much less formal and more homelike than that of any hospital. The patients were given a very wide measure of freedom; the rules as to visiting hours were not enforced and, indeed, visitors were encouraged to come at any reasonable time. I think that at and immediately before July 5, 1948, the main purpose of the home was to provide the inmates or residents there with whatever care and attention they required in pleasant surroundings with necessary nursing and adequate medical supervision, and with palliative medical treatment, treatment for inter-current complaints, and physiotherapy, as subsidiary to the main purpose of the home and not properly to be regarded as independent or concurrent purposes.

In my judgment this problem may be summarized thus: Was the institution in truth what it is designated to be, namely, a home, as contradistinguished from a hospital; or was it in truth a hospital although styled a home? The matter does not, of course, depend on mere nomenclature, but on the actual facts of the case, and on the proper method of applying to those facts the provisions of the Act, and in particular the definitions contained in it. Those definitions, however, are in my view rather difficult to interpret, but they must have been framed with considerable care, because there were already some statutory definitions of the word "hospital" which might have been, but were not, adopted for the purposes of the Act. For example, the Road Traffic Act, 1930, s. 36 (2), says that the expression "hospital" means "an institution . . . which provides medical or "surgical treatment for in-patients"; in the Public Health Act, 1936, s. 343, "hospital" is said to include "any premises for "the reception of the sick"; while the Public Health (London) Act, 1936, s. 304, defines "hospital" as meaning "any "premises . . . for the reception of invalids." If any of these comparatively simple definitions had been used in the Act, the position might have been clearer than it is.

I will now turn to the Act and consider the definitions which are relevant, namely, the definitions of "hospital" and "ill-"ness." Section 79 (1) of the Act says—omitting irrelevant words—that "'hospital' means"—not merely includes—"any "institution for the reception and treatment of persons suffering "from illness or mental defectiveness," and "'illness' "includes"—not means—"mental illness and any injury or "disability requiring medical or dental treatment or nursing."

It is obvious that the home is an institution for the reception of persons suffering from illness, but can it be said that it is also an institution for the "treatment" of such persons? Again, does the definition of "illness" (which, unless the context otherwise requires, introduces nursing into the definition) enlarge the meaning of the word "treatment" in the definition of "hospital" so as to include mere nursing? While I think that the question might almost be reduced to the simple one of

1953

MINISTER OF HEALTH v. GENERAL COMMITTEE OF THE ROYAL MIDLAND COUNTIES HOME FOR INCURABLES.

Vaisey J.

whether this is a case of a "home" in contradistinction to a "hospital," it may well happen that an institution described, not as a "hospital' but as a "home," is in fact a hospital, just as an institution described as a "hospital" may not be a hospital in any sense, statutory or other. (I need only quote the well-known example of Christ's Hospital).

I think that a resident in this home would not, in ordinary parlance, be described as being "in a hospital." On the other hand, the inmate of the Dundee hospital in the Scottish case referred to by the arbitrator and hereinafter mentioned would most certainly be described as "in hospital" and would not be described as being "in a home."

The present case is, I think, rather a borderline case, but, inasmuch as the Act is, in a sense, confiscatory in its operation, interfering with vested interests and rights, I think that I ought not to dispossess the general committee in favour of the Minister of Health unless the latter can convince me that the home necessarily comes within the definition. "Treatment" is probably the key word, and it is to be observed that the definition does not refer to care or attention or nursing of sick persons but only to their treatment, and treatment certainly, to my mind, suggests something more than mere palliation and implies a process directed to the achievement of a complete (or at least a partial) cure. I think that the secretary was right when he said that the residents in the home could not expect treatment, in either a technical or a colloquial sense of the word. They came to live in comfort rather than to be cured, or even to secure improvement in their health.

The Dundee case (Royal Victoria Hospital v. Wheatley [1]) is superficially very like the present case. It is unreported, but transcripts of the opinions or speeches of Lord Blades and the Lord President are incorporated in the award, and I have perused them with attention. The difference between the facts there and here may be summarised by saying that while the home at Leamington is essentially a place in which its inmates come to live, the hospital at Dundee is one where they come to die. The home deals with cases in which there is a comparatively long expectation of life; the hospital very largely with cases in which death is more or less imminent, and particularly cases of cancer. I have already taken notice of the fact that the Leamington institution is called a home, while the Dundee institution is called a hospital, a fact which, while far from being conclusive, is at least significant.

I need not refer to any of the other authorities mentioned in the award; none of them seems to me to govern this case, or, indeed, to afford me any real assistance in deciding it, except perhaps Tendring Union v. Woolwich Union,[2] in which the distinction between "home" and "hospital" was drawn in a manner which appeals to me as quite appropriate.

[1] Unreported.

[2] [1923] 1 K.B. 121.

I may be allowed to say that the arbitrator's award sets out the material facts and relevant circumstances of the case in what seems to me to be a most convenient form, and his conclusions are, in my judgment, well-founded in every respect.

I hold and will declare that the home is not a hospital within the meaning of the Act and is unaffected by the provisions of the Act, and that the interests in or attaching to the premises held by trustees for the home immediately before July 5, 1948, were neither transferred to nor vested in the Minister of Health on that day. [After giving a direction as to the payment of costs his Lordship continued:]

I understand that the home has been taken over and dealt with on the assumption that it is, or was, a hospital, and that steps will be necessary for restoring the respondent committee to possession and control of the premises. The parties can, I am sure, be trusted to act with consideration and in a sensible manner. I will give them liberty to apply in case any difficulty arises. If there is an appeal from this order, matters should be left as they are until a final decision has been reached.

Declaration accordingly.

Solicitors: Solicitor, Ministry of Health; Farrer & Co., for Field & Sons, Leamington Spa.

J. L. D.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

C. A.

1953 Nov. 23, 24, 25; Dec. 9.

Singleton, Birkett and Hodson L.JJ.

* BOARLAND (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. MADRAS ELECTRIC SUPPLY CORPORATION (IN LIQUIDATION).

Revenue—Income tax—Succession to trade—Crown—Sale of electricity undertaking to Crown—"Person succeeds to any trade . . ."—Whether "person" includes the Crown—Balancing charge—Income Tax Act, 1918 (8 & 9 Geo. 5, c. 40), Sch. D, Rules applicable to Cases I and II, r. 11 (2) (as substituted by Finance Act, 1926, s. 32 (1)—Income Tax Act, 1945 (8 & 9 Geo. 6, c. 32), s. 17 (1).
Crown—Prerogative—Taxation—Freedom from. "Person."

The word "person" in the phrase "if . . . any person succeeds "to any trade" in rule 11 (2) of the Rules applicable to Cases I and II of Sch. D of the Income Tax Act, 1918, must be construed in its ordinary meaning as a word of widest import, and as such it is apt to include the Crown.

The undertaking of an electricity supply company in India was purchased by the Madras Government, acting as a branch of the Crown, on August 29, 1947. The company received an assessment to income tax for the year 1947–48 on its profits from April 5 to August 29, 1947, under rule 11 (2), which included an estimated balancing charge of £850,000. The assessment was discharged by the Commissioners for the Special Purposes of the Income Tax Acts on the ground that the word "person" in rule 11 (2) did not include the Crown and that the rule did not therefore apply. On appeal by the Crown by case stated by the Commissioners, Upjohn J. reversed their decision. The company appealed to the Court of Appeal:—

C. A.

1953

BOARLAND (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. MADRAS ELECTRIC SUPPLY CORPORATION (IN LIQUIDATION).

Held, dismissing the appeal, that rule 11 (2) was applicable to the case of a succession to a trade by the Crown, since there was no ground for placing any limitation on the natural and ordinary meaning of the word "person" which in its ordinary meaning was a word of widest import and apt to include the Crown in the absence of express provision to the contrary.

Decision of Upjohn J. [1953] 1 W.L.R. 920; [1953] 2 All E.R. 467 affirmed.

APPEAL from Upjohn J.[1] reversing a decision of the Commissioners for the Special Purposes of the Income Tax Acts on a special case stated by them.

The facts set out in the case (which are more fully detailed in the judgment of Singleton L.J.) were briefly as follows:

The respondent company was incorporated on January 27, 1906, under the Companies Acts, 1862–1900, with the object of carrying on in India and elsewhere the business of an electric light and power company. The company did so under three licences granted by the Government of Madras, each of which provided that on August 29, 1947, the local authorities, failing whom the local government, should have the option of purchasing the electricity undertaking.

The option was duly exercised by the local government, and on August 29, 1947, the company sold and the local government purchased the undertaking for 215 lakhs of rupees, the sterling equivalent actually received being £1,611,437. The company went into voluntary liquidation on September 20, 1950. From the date of the sale the company ceased to trade, and its former undertaking continued to be carried on without interruption under the management of a department of the Government of Madras. Substantially all the company's former staff continued to work in the undertaking. The company received an assessment to income tax under Case I of Sch. D for the year 1947/48 which included an estimated balancing charge of some £850,000.

The Commissioners found as a fact that the trade or undertaking in Madras was not discontinued on August 20, 1947, but continued to be carried on without interruption under a department of the Madras Government. They held, however, that rule 11 (2)[2] of the Rules applicable to Cases I and II of Sch. D of

[1] [1953] 1 W.L.R. 920; [1953] 2 All E.R. 467.

[2] Rules applicable to Cases I and II of Sch. D of the Income Tax Act, 1918, r. 9: "(1) If a person charged "under this schedule ceases within "the year of assessment to carry on "the trade . . . in respect of which "the assessment is made, and is "succeeded therein by another person, "the surveyor shall . . . certify to "the general commissioners for the "division in which the assessment is "made the particulars thereof. . . .

the Income Tax Act, 1918, did not apply to the Crown, and they discharged the assessment. On appeal, their decision was reversed by Upjohn J. from whose decision the company now appealed.

J. Millard Tucker Q.C. and John Clements for the company.

Sir Lionel Heald Q.C., Att.-Gen., J. H. Stamp and Sir Reginald Hills for the Crown.

The following cases were referred to in argument: Income Tax Commissioners for City of London v. Gibbs [3]; Magdalen College, Cambridge Case [4]; Tamlin v. Hannaford [5]; Rex v. Cook [6]; Mersey Docks and Harbour Board v. Cameron [7]; Coomber v. Berkshire JJ. [8]; Attorney-General v. Hancock [9]; Bombay Province v. Bombay Municipal Corporation [10]; Bank voor Handel en Scheepvaart N.V. v. Slatford (No. 2) [11]; Rustomjee v. The Queen [12]; Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Francis West [13]; Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Reid [14]; In re Mason [15]; In re Henley & Co. [16]; St. Aubyn v. Attorney-General [17]; Singer v. Williams [18]; Kelly v. Rogers [19]; Perry v. Eames [20]; Wheaton v. Maple & Co. [21]; Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Barr. [22]

Reference was also made to the following text books: Halsbury's Laws of England, 2nd ed., vol. 6, p. 383, para. 429; Blackstone's Commentaries, p. 153; Hearn, Government of England, p. 18; Dicey's Law of the Constitution, 9th ed., p. 39.

Cur. adv. vult.

"(2) On receipt of the certificate the "commissioners shall cause notice to "be given to the respective persons "of a meeting of the commissioners "to consider it, and after examination "of the said persons, if they attend, "or on other satisfactory proof of the "facts, the commissioners shall adjust "the assessment by charging the "successor with a fair proportion "thereof from the time of his succeeding to the trade . . . and relieving "the person originally charged from "a like amount."

R. 11: "(2) If at any time . . . "any person succeeds to any trade ". . . which until that time was "carried on by another person . . . "the tax payable for all years of "assessment by the person succeeding "as aforesaid shall be computed as if "he had set up or commenced the "trade . . . and the tax payable "for all years of assessment by "the person who until that time "carried on the trade . . . shall be "computed as if it had then been "discontinued."

[3] [1942] A.C. 402; [1942] 1 All E.R. 415; 24 T.C. 221.
[4] (1615) 11 Co.Rep. 66 (b).
[5] [1950] K.B. 18; 65 T.L.R. 422; [1949] 2 All E.R. 327.
[6] (1790) 3 Term Rep. 519.
[7] (1865) 11 H.L.Cas. 443.
[8] (1883) 9 App.Cas. 61; 2 T.C. 1.
[9] [1940] 1 K.B. 427; 56 T.L.R. 286; [1940] 1 All E.R. 32.
[10] [1947] A.C. 58; 62 T.L.R. 643.
[11] [1953] 1 Q.B. 279; [1952] 2 T.L.R. 861; [1952] 2 All E.R. 956.
[12] (1876) 1 Q.B.D. 487.
[13] (1950) 31 T.C. 402.
[14] Ibid.
[15] [1929] 1 Ch. 1.
[16] (1878) 9 Ch.D. 469; 1 T.C. 209.
[17] [1952] A.C. 15; [1951] 2 All E.R. 473.
[18] [1921] 1 A.C. 41, 65; 36 T.L.R. 659; 7 T.C. 419.
[19] [1935] 2 K.B. 446; 19 T.C. 692.
[20] [1891] 1 Ch. 658; 7 T.L.R. 297.
[21] [1893] 3 Ch. 48; 9 T.L.R. 559.
[22] (1953) 32 A.T.C. 93.

C. A.

1953

BOARLAND (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. MADRAS ELECTRIC SUPPLY CORPORATION (IN LIQUIDATION).

Dec. 9. The following judgments were read:

SINGLETON L.J. The Madras Electric Supply Corporation Ld., later referred to as the company, was incorporated under the Companies Acts, 1862–1900, on January 27, 1906, with the object of carrying on in India the business of an electric light and power undertaking in all its branches. The undertaking was carried on under three licences granted by the Government of Madras. Under the first two licences the local authority, with the sanction of the local government, had an option to purchase such portion of the undertaking as was in the area for which it was constituted, and a similar option was given to the local government if the local authority did not elect to purchase. Under the third licence the Governor-General in Council had the option to purchase. The option was exercisable in each case on August 29, 1947. The company carried on its business until that date. Notices to exercise the options were duly given.

On August 27, 1947, an agreement was entered into between the Government of Madras and the company, the effect of which is stated in paragraph 11 of the case: "... it was declared and "agreed (inter alia) as follows:—Clause 1: that the Government "of Madras and the company agreed to entrust the valuers with "the work of valuation of the physical assets to be purchased "by the government and to be sold by the company: Clause 2: "that the valuation to be made by the valuers should be in con-"formity with the first proviso to section 7 (1) of the Indian "Electricity Act, 1910. For the removal of doubts, it was "declared that the company should not be eligible for any "solatium to be added to such valuation in accordance with the "second proviso to the said section 7 (1) for determining the "purchase price: ... Clause 7: that the company should 'hand' "over the undertaking to the government and the government "should take over the undertaking from the company at the "commencement of August 29, 1947."

There followed a supplemental agreement of August 29, 1947, by which it was witnessed:—(1) that the company had on the date of execution thereof handed over physical possession of the lands, buildings, works, materials and plant suitable to and used by the company for the purpose of the undertaking; (2) that the company acknowledged receipt of certain moneys (being a payment on account of the purchase price, provided for in the principal agreement of August 27, 1947); (3) that the company undertook to execute and register in favour of the Government of Madras a proper deed of conveyance and assignment of the lands, buildings, fixed machinery and plant.

In due course the valuation forming the measure of the purchase price was agreed at Rs. 215 lakhs, excluding the sum to be paid to the company for service lines paid for by consumers (the valuation of which was reserved for arbitration). The sterling equivalent of this sum of rupees was £1,612,500, and the amount actually received by the company (due to exchange rates) was £1,611,437. On September 29, 1950, the company went into voluntary liquidation.

On the date of the sale, August 29, 1947, the company ceased to trade. Its former undertaking continued to be carried on without interruption in Madras under the management of a department of the Madras Government. Substantially all the company's former staff continued to work in the undertaking. On March 30, 1951, the company made a formal conveyance and assignment of lands, buildings, fixed machinery and plant to the Government of Madras.

It is claimed by the Crown that the circumstances give rise to an assessment to Income Tax in the sum of £850,000 in respect of balancing charges under Part II of the Income Tax Act, 1945.

The claim is made in this way: Rule 11 (2) of the rules applicable to Cases I and II of Sch. D provides that if any person succeeds to the trade which until that time was carried on by another person, the tax payable for all the years of assessment by the person succeeding shall be computed as if he had set up or commenced the trade at that time, and the tax payable for all the years of assessment by the person who until that time carried on the trade shall be computed as if it had then been discontinued. It is said that on August 29, 1947, the Government of Madras succeeded to the business which the company had carried on until that time.

The next step leads to a consideration of section 17 (1) of the Income Tax Act, 1945, which provides that:

"(1) Subject to the provisions of this section, where, on or "after the appointed day, any of the following events occurs "in the case of any machinery or plant in respect of which an "initial allowance or a deduction under rule 6 of the Rules "applicable to Cases I and II of Sch. D has been made or "allowed for any year of assessment to a person carrying on a "trade, that is to say, either—(a) the machinery or plant is "sold, whether while still in use or not; . . . and the event in "question occurs before the trade is permanently discontinued, "an allowance or charge (in this Part of this Act referred to as "'a balancing allowance' or 'a balancing charge') shall, in the "circumstances mentioned in this section, be made to, or, as the "case may be, on, that person for the year of assessment in his "basis period for which that event occurs."

The reason for the introduction of this section is, I think, fairly clear. Under rule 6 of the Rules applicable to Cases I and II of Sch. D a trader is allowed a deduction each year on account of wear and tear of machinery. He may sometimes be allowed less than he ought to be allowed: in other cases he may be allowed more than is warranted. If he continues in trade the matter may adjust itself in course of time. On the other hand, if he sells the plant or machinery before the trade is permanently

C. A.
1953
BOARLAND (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. MADRAS ELECTRIC SUPPLY CORPORATION (IN LIQUIDATION).
Singleton L.J.

discontinued there may arise a balancing allowance to him or a balancing charge against him, and the section is intended to provide for adjustment accordingly. We are not concerned with figures. It is sufficient to say that the claim of the Crown is that something in the neighbourhood of £850,000 falls to be included as a balancing charge in the Company's assessment to tax.

It was common ground between the parties:—(1) that by reason of section 17 (1) of the Income Tax Act, 1945, the balancing charges forming the subject of the assessment under appeal fell to be made upon the company (if at all) for the year of assessment in the company's basis period for which the sale of its plant and machinery occurred; (2) that for the purposes of the said Act such sale occurred on August 29, 1947; (3) that by reason of section 57 (2) of the said Act the company's basis period for the year of assessment 1947/48 was the period on the profits or gains of which income tax for that year fell to be computed under Case I of Sch. D in respect of its trade.

The contention put forward on behalf of the company is that rule 11 (2) does not apply to the facts of this case and that no balancing charge can be made on the company. This is based mainly, if not wholly, on the submission that the sale of plant, etc., was a sale to the Crown, and it is claimed that the Crown is not a person within the meaning of that word in rule 11 (2). This contention was accepted by the Special Commissioners, from whom Upjohn J. allowed the appeal of the Crown. The company appeals to this court.

Mr. Millard Tucker drew our attention to section 175 (2) of the Government of India Act, 1935, under which it is provided that: "all property acquired for the purposes of the federation "or of a province shall vest in His Majesty for those purposes." He appeared to seek to draw a distinction between this case and other cases in which the state acquires property for the benefit of subjects. I do not see that any such distinction can be drawn. The undertaking was undoubtedly acquired for the public good and it vested in His Majesty for the purpose for which it was acquired. The options to purchase were exercised by the Government of Madras. The two agreements of August 27 and August 29, 1947, were made between the Government of Madras and the company—and the conveyance was to the Government.

Counsel submitted that the Crown acquired the undertaking of the company and that rule 11 (2) has no application to such a case. He put his submission in this way. "The Queen is the "Monarch legislating with the other estates. The Finance Acts "are all addressed to subjects; charging orders cannot include "the Crown itself. Therefore the word 'person' in a charging "order, or section, will not include the Crown. The Crown does "not impose a tax upon itself." He drew our attention to the preamble to the Finance Act, 1947: "Most Gracious Sovereign, "We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the "Commons . . . in Parliament assembled, . . . have freely and "voluntarily resolved to give and grant unto Your Majesty the "several duties hereinafter mentioned; and do therefore most "humbly beseech Your Majesty that it may be enacted, and be "it enacted by the King's most Excellent Majesty, by and "with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Tem-"poral, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and "by the authority of the same, as follows—". Mr. Millard Tucker added that Sch. D was a charging schedule and the rules under it were charging rules, and it would not be right to read "person" in rule 11 (2) in two different ways: in other words, it could not include the Crown.

The old form of preamble is preserved. It is, however, recognised that the freedom of the Monarch from taxation arises by virtue of the prerogative. In Rex v. Cook,[1] Lord Kenyon C.J. said: "Now although there is no special exemption of the "King in this Act of Parliament, yet I am of opinion that he is "exempted by virtue of his prerogative, in the same manner as "he is virtually exempted from 43 of Eliz. and every other Act "imposing a duty or tax on the subjects." In Coomber v. Berkshire Justices,[2] Lord Blackburn cited those words of Lord Kenyon and referred to "the exemption, by virtue of the "prerogative, of property actually occupied or enjoyed for the "Crown."

Now the Crown is a person: see the Magdalen College case,[3] where it is said: "And, first, it was resolved, (a) that the general "words of the Act extend to the Queen, for the words are, 'To "'any person or persons, body politic or corporate;' and without "question the Queen was a person, as it is said in 10 Henry 7, "page 18*a*." Indeed it has not been disputed that the Monarch is a person, but it is said that he (or she) is not a person within the meaning of that word in the Income Tax Act, 1918, or at least for the purposes of Sch. D. It appears to me that this reasoning fails to draw a distinction between the word "person" and a "taxable person." I cannot see why we should not give the ordinary meaning to the word "person" when considering the provisions of rule 11 (2). Of course, the Crown is not chargeable under Sch. D: that follows from the exemption arising from the prerogative. I draw attention to the words of Wrottesley J. in Attorney-General v. Hancock[4] where he said[5]: "Section 1 of the Courts (Emergency Powers) Act, 1914, begins "with the words: 'From and after the passing of this Act no "'person shall. . . .' Pausing there, Mr. Murphy said, and "everybody, I think, must agree with him, that the word "'person' clearly can include the Crown, and it is for that "reason that it has been necessary from time to time for the "courts to remind themselves of the rule with which I am "dealing."

[1] (1790) 3 Term Rep. 519, 522.
[2] (1883) 9 App.Cas. 61.
[3] (1615) 11 Co.Rep. 66 (b), 70 (a).
[4] [1940] 1 K.B. 427.
[5] Ibid. 435.

C. A.

1953

BOARLAND (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. MADRAS ELECTRIC SUPPLY CORPORATION (IN LIQUIDATION).

Singleton L.J.

It would be strange indeed if the provisions of rule 11 (2) were not to apply if the purchaser of a business—the one who succeeded to the trade—was the Crown or a department of state; it is difficult to think of any reason for any such distinction. And when one comes to apply section 17 (1) of the Income Tax Act, 1945, it is worth noticing that there may be a balancing allowance or a balancing charge: it matters not who the purchaser is so long as the event in question happens before the trade is permanently discontinued.

Mr. Millard Tucker cited the words of Lord Macmillan in Income Tax Commissioners for the City of London v. Gibbs [6]: "The important thing to ascertain is the meaning of the word "'person' in the vocabulary of the Income Tax Acts. The word "constantly occurs throughout the Acts, and I think that it is "most generally used to denote what may be termed an entity of "assessment, i.e., the possessor or recipient of an income which "the Acts require to be separately assessed for tax purposes." No question such as that arising in the present case was under consideration, and I do not think that the citation really carries us any further unless the submission is that the word "person" throughout means taxable person—and Mr. Tucker did not make that a part of his case.

The submission of the Attorney-General for the Crown was that the word "person" must be given its ordinary meaning apart from some compelling reason to the contrary, and that "person" includes the Crown and servants of the Crown. He argued that there is no difference for the purpose of rule 11 (2) whether the successor is the Crown, or the Transport Commission, or the Post Office, or another company or an individual, and, relying upon the authorities I have mentioned, he submitted that the word "person" includes the Crown though the Crown is immune from taxation by reason of the prerogative. Mr. Stamp, who followed, spoke of the Income Tax Acts as regulating the position between the Crown (a person) and other persons. The Crown, he said, is bound by the Income Tax Acts, but by virtue of its prerogative does not pay tax. He drew our attention to the use of the word "person" in the Act of 1918 as meaning a person other than a person taxable, e.g., section 116, section 132 (2), section 133 (1) (b), section 166 (10) and section 190—and there are others.

It appears to me that the contention put forward on behalf of the company fails. I can find nothing to justify the giving of a limited meaning to the word "person" in rule 11 (2). It must, I think, be read in the ordinary way. I agree with the conclusion of Upjohn J. and I would dismiss the appeal of the company.

I do not think that it is necessary for me to add anything to that which was said by Upjohn J. in relation to two cases recently before the Court of Session, except that Mr. Millard Tucker desired to keep open the position arising upon them.

[6] [1942] A.C. 402, 419.

BIRKETT L.J. I agree with the judgment of my Lord which has just been delivered. I have also had the opportunity of reading and considering the judgment which is about to be delivered by Hodson L.J., and with that judgment I also agree. In those circumstances I do not desire to add a judgment of my own.

HODSON L.J. The main question in this appeal is whether in rule 11 (2) of the Rules applicable to Cases I and II of Sch. D to the Income Tax Act, 1918 (as substituted by the Finance Act, 1926, section 32 (1)), the word "person" includes the Crown. If the word "person" includes the Crown the appellant company, it is conceded, is liable to certain balancing charges since the Crown has succeeded to its trade within the meaning of the rule. The balancing charge is borne by the company and the identity of the successor has no effect financially or otherwise.

Upjohn J. held that as a matter of construction there was no ground for placing any limitation on the ordinary natural meaning of the word, and that in rule 11 (2) the word "person" includes the Crown, persons resident abroad, charity trustees and others who for different reasons may be found to be exempt from tax. I agree with his judgment and with the reasons given in support of it.

The appellant company bases its argument on the admitted fact that the purchaser of its undertaking was the Crown, and refers in particular to the Government of India Act, 1935, s. 175 (2), which came into force (other than Part II) by Order in Council on April 1, 1937. The wording of this subsection has been slightly varied by another Order in Council, but the material words remain: "All property . . . shall vest in his Majesty for "those purposes." The argument accordingly is restricted to this narrow proposition, that the successor to the company being His Majesty in person, the word "person" in the charging sections of the Income Tax Acts cannot be construed as including His Majesty. It is said that it is not necessary to examine the nature of the Royal Prerogative which includes exemption from taxation, but that the company is entitled to say that the word "person" in rule 11 (2) cannot, as a matter of construction, include the Crown in its personal capacity.

The court was reminded of the constitutional position set out by Professor Hearn in his Government of England at page 18: "The law places no restriction upon the extent of the Royal "Power but rigorously defines the manner in which the several "branches of that power may be exercised. In every part of "public affairs the expression of the Royal will is conclusive; "but in each case the Royal will must be stated through the "appropriate channel." Thus in theory in the making of a statute "The King is pars agens, the rest" (Lords and Commons)

C. A.

1953

BOARLAND (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. MADRAS ELECTRIC SUPPLY CORPORATION (IN LIQUIDATION).

Hodson L.J.

"are but consentientes," per St. John arg. in Hampden Ship Money case.[7]

Emphasis was placed on the preamble to the taxing Acts, which is set out in full in the judgment of Upjohn J. as showing that having regard to the language of this preamble the Crown as grantee of the taxes cannot be a person for tax purposes and that, in the charging provisions of the Income Tax Act, 1918, charging tax upon "persons" cannot sensibly include the Crown. On the other hand it is to be observed that in numerous places in the Income Tax Act, 1918, the word "person" is used to include others than taxable "persons," or, to borrow the language of Lord Macmillan in Income Tax Commissioners for the City of London v. Gibbs,[8] "entities of assessment." This is the sense in which, as Lord Macmillan said, the word "person" is most generally used throughout the Income Tax Acts.

Some dozen examples were given in argument on behalf of the Crown of places in the Acts where the word "person" does not denote an "entity of assessment," and as a pure question of construction I see no reason why the word "person" in a charging section also should not include the Crown. No question of taxing the Crown arises, so that there is no invasion of the Crown's prerogative by construing the word "person" in its natural and ordinary meaning. That the word "person" in an Act of Parliament is apt to include the Crown there is no doubt. The Crown is a corporation sole, and therefore a person: see section 19 of the Interpretation Act, 1889. The authorities are all one way; the earliest cited being the Magdalen College case,[9] where the Year Book, 10 Hen. 7, 189, is in turn cited for the sentence "Rex est persona mixta." One of the latest cases cited was Attorney-General v. Hancock,[10] where Wrottesley J. stated: "the word 'person' can clearly include the Crown."

The company perforce contended that the authorities drew a distinction between the Crown in its personal capacity and the Crown in its capacity as part of the constitution. In order to mark the distinction reference was made to 39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 88, s. 6, which provided that Crown lands when bought by private funds of the King are liable to parliamentary and parochial rates; and reference was made to the Crown Private Estates Act, 1862. I can, however, find no justification for the distinction sought to be drawn between the Crown in its personal capacity and the Crown in the constitutional sense, which the company seeks to draw. The Crown usually can act only through its servants, and this consideration must apply to His Majesty as referred to in the Government of India Act, 1935, to which I have already referred.

Thus there is here no practical distinction between the Crown and Crown servants. There are a number of authorities where the claim for exemption from taxation of Crown servants has [7] (1637) 3 St.J. 826, 863.

[8] [1942] A.C. 402.
[9] (1615) 11 Co.Rep. 66 (b).
[10] [1940] 1 K.B. 427.

been considered. This claim has always been based on the Royal Prerogative that the King is exempted from taxation by virtue of his prerogative.

In Rex v. Cook,[11] it was decided that the posthorse duty imposed by 25 Geo. 3, c. 51, was not to be paid for horses employed for forwarding public expresses on the service of Government. It was decided that the King was exempt from tax by virtue of his prerogative. The Attorney-General pertinently observed that if the contention of the company were correct the proper question for argument in Rex v. Cook [11] would appear to have been, not "was there an exemption on the ground of pre-"rogative?" but "were the horses 'royal horses'?". Rex v. Cook [11] was considered in the House of Lords in Coomber v. Berkshire Justices,[12] in which Lord Blackburn, in connection with taxation, spoke of "an implied exemption on the ground of "prerogative."

These principles were applied by the Court of Appeal in Bank voor Handel en Scheepvaart N.V. v. Slatford.[13] The actual decision there was that the office of Custodian of Enemy Property was not such as of itself to confer upon its holder the immunity from tax belonging to the Crown, but there was an elaborate discussion on Crown immunity in the judgments, which proceeded on the basis that the custodian was a person within the orbit of the charge created by Sch. D to the Income Tax Act, 1918. The question was answered adversely to the claim for immunity. Evershed M.R. expressed himself as follows: "The commonly "used formula that the Income Tax Act does not bind the Crown "conceals the true principle, which is that, in the absence of "express provision to the contrary, the Crown and the rights of "the Crown are ot thereby prejudiced." There is no prejudice to the Crown in the present case in construing the word "person" in rule 11 (2) so as to include the Crown, and, as I have already indicated, I cannot distinguish the present case from Slatford's case [13] by drawing a distinction between the King in person and servants of the Crown.

The reasoning of all the judgments in Slatford's case [13] appears to me to be inconsistent with the claim put forward by the company that the Crown is immune, not because of the prerogative, but because it is not, as a matter of construction, covered by the word "person" in the charging sections of the Income Tax Acts. The common law rule as to the prerogative must be applied, but the Act must first be construed in the ordinary way. When the Act has been construed, the Crown is entitled to set up its right against the construction if prejudiced thereby, and the construction will, when necessary, yield to the prerogative. There is nothing in rule 11 (2) which interferes with the rights of the Crown, so that there is no conflict between the [11] (1790) 3 Term Rep. 519.

[12] (1883) 9 App.Cas. 61, 71.
[13] [1953] 1 Q.B. 248, 291.

C. A.
1953
BOARLAND (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. MADRAS ELECTRIC SUPPLY CORPORATION (IN LIQUIDATION).
Hodson L.J.

statute and the prerogative. On the contrary, the Crown is relying on the section, as it is entitled to do.

In my opinion the word "person" is a general word which is apt to include the Crown and it is, as the Attorney-General contended, a question of construction of the Act as a whole whether, in a particular case, the Crown is entitled to claim exemption by prerogative.

As to the subsidiary point taken by the company in reliance on the decision of the Court of Session in Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Barr,[14] the report of that case appears to show that the concluding words of section 17 (1) of the Income Tax Act, 1945, were overlooked by the court. Counsel for the company recognised this and found difficulty in supporting this decision by independent reasoning. We were informed that Barr's case[14] is now under appeal to the House of Lords. In the circumstances I am content to say that as at present advised I can find nothing useful to add to what Upjohn J. has said upon the subsidiary point. I agree, therefore, that the appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.
Leave to appeal to House of Lords.

Solicitors: Sanderson Lee & Co.; Solicitor of Inland Revenue.

P. B. D.

[14] (1953) 32 A.T.C. 93.

[PROBATE, ETC., DIVISION.]

1953
Nov. 17.
Lord Merriman P., and Collingwood J.

* STARKIE v. STARKIE (No. 2).

Husband and Wife—Maintenance—Justices—Wilful neglect to maintain—Separation by consent—No neglect to maintain wife—Finding of neglect to maintain child—Power to make order in favour of wife—Discretion as to amount in such circumstances.

Husband and Wife—Justices—Appeal to Divisional Court—Reasons—Justices' liability for costs.

A husband left his wife and their infant child with the wife's consent, and she agreed to the separation without any stipulation, express or implied, that he should maintain her while they lived apart. There was no suggestion that the wife had disentitled herself to an order by matrimonial misconduct such as adultery or desertion. The justices made an order on the ground of wilful neglect to maintain both wife and child, whereby the husband was to pay 20s. a week for the wife, and 30s. a week for the child:—

Held, (1) In view of the consensual nature of the separation, and the absence of any stipulation as to maintenance, there was no neglect to maintain the wife.

Baker v. Baker [1950] W.N. 29; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 1) 81, and Stringer v. Stringer [1952] P. 171; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 415; [1952] 1 All E.R. 373 followed.

(2) The wife's failure to establish neglect to maintain herself did not bar her from proving neglect to maintain the child, and upon the evidence there had been such neglect, and such neglect was wilful.

(3) That since in cases under the Married Women (Separation and Maintenance) Acts, 1895–1949, where the wife is the complainant, any order which is made is an order in favour of the wife, the wife was entitled in view of the finding of neglect to maintain the child to any of the orders permissible under the Act of 1895, including an order for custody, and also an order for the maintenance of herself. But the court in assessing in its discretion the amount of any order in favour of the wife would consider her conduct; and in the circumstances of the present case, where the wife had failed to establish the complaints concerning herself, the proper order would be a nominal one, which might be varied later.

Kinnane v. Kinane [1953] 3 W.L.R. 782; [1953] 2 All E.R. 144 applied.

APPEAL from Cockermouth justices.

The parties were married on August 16, 1952, and there was one child, born before the marriage in February, 1952. It was accepted by the Divisional Court that the child was a "child of the marriage" within the meaning of the statute, although there had been some dispute about paternity which had been resolved in favour of the wife. The parties separated on August 31, 1952, in circumstances which were assumed by the Divisional Court to be without the wife's consent. She issued a summons on September 22, 1952, but the hearing was adjourned and the summons finally withdrawn in July, 1953, the parties resuming cohabitation on July 11, 1953. There was evidence that the husband had made payments to the wife during the first separation.

There was a further separation on July 20, 1953. The husband in his evidence before the justices said that they had agreed to separate, and the Divisional Court held that there was abundant evidence to justify a finding that the wife consented to this separation. On July 24, 1953, the wife issued a summons by which she complained that the husband had deserted her on July 20, 1953, and that he had wilfully neglected to provide reasonable maintenance for her and the child from that date. On August 10, 1953, the justices dismissed the complaint of desertion but made an order on the ground of wilful neglect to maintain whereby the husband was to pay £1 a week for the wife, and 30s. a week for the child, the custody of whom was given to the wife.

The husband appealed against this decision on the grounds that there was no evidence upon which the justices could find wilful neglect to maintain, that their decision was against the weight of the evidence, and that they were wrong in law. There was no cross-appeal in respect of the dismissal of the complaint of desertion. The appeal came before the Divisional Court on October 30, 1953, when the matter was referred back to the justices for a proper statement of the reasons upon which their

1953

STARKIE
v.
STARKIE
(No. 2).

decision had been based; and certain specific questions were asked of the justices to which answers were requested.[1]

The following statement of the questions put, and the answers received, is taken from the judgment of Lord Merriman P.: "(a) In respect of the first parting from about August 31, 1952, to "July 11, 1953, did the justices accept the evidence of the "husband in cross-examination by the wife's solicitor that he "agreed to pay maintenance, and, if so, at what rate per week "(i) the wife was working or (ii) not working, respectively." The question was framed with reference to a particular piece of evidence that so much should be paid if the wife was working and another sum if she was not working. The answer to that was: "The justices accepted the evidence of the husband in cross-"examination by the wife's solicitor that he agreed to pay main-"tenance, but did not accept his evidence that any particular rate "per week was agreed, because there was no evidence to support "this statement, and the justices did not believe it in view of the "fact that payments were, in fact, irregular, and the husband "apparently went off to sea without a care as to his respon-"sibilities." That question and answer concerned only the first parting, ended by a short resumption of cohabitation on July 11, 1953.

The next question was: "(b) Did the justices accept the "evidence of both the husband and the wife that the husband paid "maintenance at the rate of £4 10s. per week between the "resumption of cohabitation on July 11, 1953, and July 20, 1953, "the date of the final parting?" To that they said that they accepted the evidence of both that the payment of £4 10s. was made, but that they considered that this was an isolated payment, as supported by the wife's evidence, and not a regular weekly payment.

The justices were also asked: "(c) On what grounds was the "wife's complaint of desertion in respect of the present separation "dismissed?" The question was divided into two main sub-questions: "(1) What did the justices find was the nature of this "parting, and on what evidence did they base their finding?" The answer was "The justices considered that the wife left home "rather on a consensual basis than because of the threats and "conduct of her husband, and that there was for that reason no "constructive desertion," and in answer to the sub-question, "The justices considered that the wife's evidence showed that "that parting was on a friendly basis. The husband also stated "that they agreed to separate. The justices accepted this "evidence, and, therefore, found that the husband had not con-"structively deserted his wife." Sub-question (2) was "If the "justices found that the parting was consensual did they find "that there was any agreement (i) expressed, or (ii) implied, that "the husband should pay maintenance for the support of the wife

[1] [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1396.

"and/or the child," and sub-question (3) "If so, how much?" A note which applied to the whole question followed, namely, that a full statement of the grounds for the answer was required. The answer to that was that the justices found that there was no agreement, expressed or implied, that the husband should pay maintenance for the support of the wife and/or the child. They considered that there was no evidence before them which could support a finding that there was such an agreement, and they then referred back to the previous part of the answer.

The next question was: "(d) After the parting on July 20, "1953, did the husband pay the wife any maintenance in respect "of herself and/or the child, and, if so, how much respectively?" The answer was "The justices considered that there was no "evidence from either side that after the parting on July 20, "1953, the husband paid the wife any maintenance, either in respect of herself or of the child."

The final question was this: "(e) On what ground was the "wife's complaint on July 24, 1953, that on and after July 20, "1953, the husband had been guilty of wilful neglect to provide "reasonable maintenance for her and her infant child held to be "proved?" and the note to a former question, that a full statement of the ground was required, was repeated. The answer was that on July 20, 1953, any such payment as had been made by the husband did not constitute reasonable maintenance. This, they, considered, was supported by the fact that the wife had been compelled to apply to the National Assistance Board.

Buckley Sneade for the husband appellant.
D. R. Ellison (H. S. Law with him) for the wife respondent.

The question was considered in argument whether a wife, by any contractual act on her part, could absolve the husband by agreement from his liability to maintain his infant children, and it was submitted on behalf of the wife that it would be contrary to public policy to recognize such a right (Bennett v. Bennett [2] was referred to).

The other cases cited in argument are referred to in the judgments.

LORD MERRIMAN P. This is a husband's appeal from the justices for the Cockermouth petty sessional division of Cumberland, who, on August 10, 1953, made an order in favour of the wife for 20s. for her own maintenance, and 30s. in respect of the infant child, of whom she was awarded the custody. They made this order on the ground that wilful neglect to provide reasonable maintenance for the wife, and reasonable maintenance for her infant child whom the husband was legally liable to maintain, had been proved. At the same time they dismissed a complaint of desertion which was also before them.

[2] [1951] 2 K.B. 572; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 873; [1951] 1 All E.R. 1088.

1953

STARKIE
v.
STARKIE
(No. 2).

Lord
Merriman P.

When the case came before this court on October 30, 1953,[1] we were seriously dissatisfied with the reason for the decision, which was simply, in effect, that the justices had found wilful neglect proved because the husband had wilfully neglected to provide maintenance, which is, of course, no sort of reason at all; and having regard to the fact that they dismissed the charge of desertion while at the same time finding that the wife was entitled nevertheless to maintenance, we sent a series of detailed questions for the justices to answer, so that we might see what facts they had found before disposing of the appeal, and the basis upon which their decision had been made.

I need not emphasize the point that very often, although not necessarily always, the complaints of desertion and of wilful neglect to maintain the wife stand or fall together, so that there was on the face of the decision possibly, but not necessarily, a conflict between the two findings, namely, that desertion was not made out but that wilful neglect was.

We have now received the answers to our questions, which were framed in the light of possible views of the evidence as it was recorded and presented to us. For the moment I say no more than that it seems to me that there is evidence to support the various findings, and we have rejected the application of counsel for the husband to put in affidavit evidence that certain weekly sums of money, which were admittedly paid by the husband to the wife at one period, were actually being paid by him to her at the time in respect of which the complaint of wilful neglect was made.

It is important to point out that this particular parting, out of which the complaint arose, occurred on or about July 20, 1953. But that was not the first parting. They had parted in August, 1952, and there had been a resumption of cohabitation earlier in July, 1953. I am prepared to assume, as was the wife's case, that that first parting was without her consent, and I read the evidence that she had been paid £2 10s. 6d. as referring to the period of that parting. It is that particular interpretation which is now sought to be challenged, and, in face of an express finding that no payment whatever was made by the husband to the wife in respect of the present parting, beginning on July 20, 1953, we are invited to say that the husband was in fact paying £2 10s. 6d. during that parting, from which, combined with the fact that the total amount of maintenance that the justices have ordered is £2 10s., we are asked to say that there could not, in any view, be wilful neglect to provide reasonable maintenance.

Because of what appears on the face of the note regarding the essential difference between the two partings, we began by asking this question about the first parting. [His Lordship then recited the questions put to the justices, and the answers received as set out above, and continued:]

[1] [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1396.

I take that answer to the final question to mean not that the justices had forgotten that there was a period during which £2 10s. 6d. had admittedly been paid, and admittedly one payment, which they described as an isolated payment, of £4 10s. at about this time, but that they did not consider that, as at July 20, 1953, before which those payments had been made, or at or about which date the last of them was made, they constituted reasonable maintenance; secondly, that after July 20, 1953, there was no evidence that any payment at all had been made; and then, in conclusion, for these reasons the justices considered that on and after July 20, 1953, the husband had been guilty of wilful neglect to provide reasonable maintenance for the wife and her infant child.

This court has more than once recently laid stress upon the point that where the wife is the complainant under the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) code (and I emphasize now, to avoid any confusion, that I do realize that there are special circumstances in which the husband may be the complainant, but I am speaking for the rest of this judgment of cases in which the wife is the complainant) the order which is made is an order in favour of the wife; it is her order; and in these cases concerning wilful neglect to provide reasonable maintenance, the wife must establish wilful neglect in order to support the findings of the justices, in the first respect, to provide reasonable maintenance for her, and, in the second respect, to provide reasonable maintenance for the child, who must be her child, must be an infant child, and a child whom the husband is legally liable to maintain. But in respect of the child as in respect of the wife, it must be possible for her to establish that the husband has been guilty of wilful neglect to provide reasonable maintenance.

In my opinion it is still the law, although the contrary has been argued in this case, that in either case wilful neglect imports an element of misconduct. Tulip v. Tulip,[2] a decision of the Court of Appeal, was cited in support of the contrary view, but that case strongly affirmed a number of decisions of this court, and particularly the decision in Morton v. Morton,[3] in which the element of misconduct in the phrase "wilful neglect to provide reasonable maintenance" was emphasized.

Starting with the proposition that the wife is the complainant in respect of wilful neglect to provide maintenance, not only for herself but for her infant child, it is, I think, important to bear in mind that by section 6 of the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, however badly the husband has behaved in respect of the infant child, there may be a complete and absolute bar to the wife obtaining an order if she has committed adultery which has not been connived at nor condoned by the husband, nor conduced to by his misconduct or wilful neglect. As it is not suggested in this case that the wife has disentitled

[2] [1951] P. 378; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 1056; [1951] 2 All E.R. 91.

[3] (1942) 58 T.L.R. 158; [1942] 1 All E.R. 273.

1953

STARKIE v. STARKIE (No. 2).

Lord Merriman P.

herself by any other matrimonial misconduct, such as desertion, it would be academic to discuss the question whether a wife who had put herself completely out of court for any maintenance for herself because she had deserted her husband might also, in certain circumstances, have disentitled herself from complaining of wilful neglect to provide reasonable maintenance for the infant child whom she had carried away with her in the process of deserting her husband. That matter can be discussed when it arises. Any failure on this wife's part to prove her own claim for maintenance does not depend upon any misconduct upon her part, whether adultery or otherwise. For the same reason I do not think it necessary to pursue the interesting topic which has been debated, whether by any contractual act on her part she can not only make it difficult to assert that the husband has been guilty of neglect to maintain her but also to assert the same about the child. I can imagine circumstances in which the self-same contract might conceivably be available as evidence in favour of the husband (not conclusive evidence: Tulip v. Tulip[4] makes that clear), that he had no more been guilty of wilful neglect to maintain the child than he had of wilful neglect to maintain the wife. But, again, I do not think it necessary to pursue that topic.

The wife's difficulty in this case—to take it once more by stages—is that as regards her own maintenance she has been held, on evidence which I think abundantly justifies the finding, to have consented to this particular separation, and has been found to have agreed to that separation without any stipulation, expressed or implied, that the husband should maintain her while they are thus living separate and apart. As at present established, the law in such circumstances is conveniently contained in a short passage from a judgment of this court in Baker v. Baker.[5] The passage was quoted in the Court of Appeal in Chapman v. Chapman,[6] which was followed in Stringer v. Stringer,[7] another decision of this court. I will quote the passage[8] which was approved in Chapman v. Chapman[9] in the Court of Appeal: "There is no law involved in this case; it is merely an "application of the principle that, if a wife is living separate and "apart from her husband, it is not enough for her to give "evidence that her husband had money and that she needed "maintenance. The question is: What was the nature of the "parting? If the wife can prove desertion, she is, of course, "entitled to a maintenance order on that ground. If the "separation was consensual, then, if she can prove—and Mr. "Crispin accepted that the onus was on the wife—that this was "on the basis, expressed or implied, that the husband undertook "to be responsible for her maintenance, she is entitled either to

[4] [1951] P. 378.

[5] [1950] W.N. 29; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 1) 81.

[6] Unreported, April 4, 1951.

[7] [1952] P. 171, 179; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 415; [1952] 1 All E.R. 373.

[8] 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 1) 82, 83.

[9] Unreported, April 4, 1951.

"the agreed amount (if there was an agreed amount), or to a "reasonable amount under the section, although she is living "apart from her husband. But unless she can show, where the "separation was consensual, that the husband had accepted "liability, expressed or implied, to maintain her, she has no case "at all."

That is precisely what has been found in this case. The separation was consensual, and there was no agreement, expressed or implied, to maintain her. In my opinion, therefore, the finding of wilful neglect to provide reasonable maintenance for the wife cannot stand. But that is not the end of the case. We pointed out recently in Kinnane v. Kinnane [10] that the wife would be entitled, if she established a complaint of wilful neglect to provide reasonable maintenance for her infant child whom the husband was legally liable to maintain, to any of the orders permissible under the Act, and included, of course, in such orders, would be one giving her the custody of the child. We also pointed out that the establishment of that complaint might entitle her to an order for maintenance, and maintenance not limited only to any sum which was awarded in respect of the child of whom she was given the custody; but at the same time we pointed out that if she failed to establish wilful neglect to maintain herself, the discretion of the justices as to the amount to be awarded must be exercised in recognition of the fact that she had failed to establish that complaint.

This case falls to be decided on this simple question, remembering that we are not talking about a wife being barred by some statutory disability but merely by her own consensual act in agreeing to a separation without an obligation on the part of the husband to maintain her: Does the failure of her complaint necessarily carry with it, in those circumstances, exoneration of the husband from responsibility in respect of the child? Having regard to some of the arguments which were addressed to us, I think that it is important to distinguish, with reference to the husband's responsibility, two things: (1) the condition precedent that he is legally liable to maintain the child, and (2) the offence that he has wilfully neglected to provide reasonable maintenance for the child. The two things are not the same. Maybe, speaking generally, there is very little practical difference, but they are not the same thing. In this case there is no doubt about the husband's legal liability to maintain the child. I know that there has been a dispute about the paternity, but that, to put it at its lowest, certainly has not been resolved in the husband's favour, and there is nothing whatever to show that his legal liability to maintain his infant child does not subsist. I point out, however, that if his legal liability to maintain the child necessarily imports wilful neglect if he does not do so, all that it would have been necessary for the section to state, as contrasted with wilful neglect to provide maintenance for the wife,

[10] [1953] 3 W.L.R. 782; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1144.

1953

STARKIE
v.
STARKIE
(No. 2).

Lord
Merriman P.

is that the husband has not maintained any given child, and leave out all reference to wilful neglect.

In this case the justices have found that from the moment of this parting the husband never paid a penny in respect of this child. I cannot see that he has ever given any sort of excuse or explanation for that, except the suggestion that the child was not his, which has not been determined in his favour. In my opinion, therefore, the fact that the wife cannot make out a case of wilful neglect to provide reasonable maintenance for herself does not bar her from proving that there has been wilful neglect to provide reasonable maintenance for the child, and I think that the justices were quite entitled to find that complaint proved; and I think that is the right conclusion in this case in spite of the very unsatisfactory way in which the matter was originally presented to us by the justices.

There remains the question whether the whole order can stand. That is to say, on the basis that the wife has proved one out of her three complaints, can she have an order of 20s. for herself as well as the 30s. in respect of the child of whom she is given custody? The order for 20s. was challenged, but although, as we said in Kinnane v. Kinnane,[10] it is possible for the justices to make an order for the maintenance of the wife on the basis that she has proved the complaint of wilful neglect to maintain the child, I do not think that, on the question of quantum, this order can stand, because the justices have awarded the maximum sum which is now possible under the amended statute in respect of the maintenance for the child. I think that it is wrong, therefore, that in addition to that sum, £1 should be ordered in favour of the wife, who has failed in the two complaints in which she is principally concerned. In my opinion the proper way to resolve the situation is to allow the order for the wife's maintenance to stand for the nominal sum of, say, 1s. a week, which will recognize the fact that she is the complainant, that she is entitled to an order, and that if at any time variation is necessary she will not be barred by the fact that no foundation for variation is laid.

COLLINGWOOD J. I agree. The justices have found that on and after July 20, 1953, the husband was guilty of wilful neglect to provide reasonable maintenance for his wife and infant child, the child being some eighteen months old at the time of the hearing. Upon that they have made an order in the wife's favour for £2 10s. a week, being £1 in respect of the wife's maintenance and £1 10s. in respect of the child, and have given the custody of the child to the wife.

In answer to question (d) of the questions which were submitted to the justices by this court in view of the form which their reasons took, the justices say "The justices considered "that there was no evidence from either side that after the

[10] [1953] 3 W.L.R. 782.

"parting on July 20, 1953, the husband paid the wife any main-"tenance either in respect of herself or of the child." I agree with my Lord that it is impossible to go behind this finding at this stage. We were invited to do so upon the strength of an answer given by the wife, according to the note, but in view of the way in which these answers have been elicited, and not overlooking the fact that in his evidence in the court below the husband gave no evidence on the matter at all, it is impossible, in my view, to go behind that finding.

By their answer to question (c) the justices say: "The "justices considered that the wife left home rather on a con-"sensual basis than because of the words and conduct of her "husband, and that there was for that reason no constructive "desertion," and they amplify that in sub-paragraph (i) of their answer by saying: "The justices considered that the wife's "evidence showed that the parting was on a friendly basis. The "husband also stated they agreed to separate. The justices "accepted this evidence, and therefore found that the husband "had not constructively deserted the wife." That being so, and there being evidence to support that finding, clearly the wife was not entitled to maintenance from her husband save in the event of there being an agreement, expressed or implied, that the husband would maintain her. That is clear from Baker v. Baker.[11]

By their answer to question (c) (2), the justices found that there was no agreement, expressed or implied, that the husband should pay maintenance for the support of the wife or the child. They considered that there was no evidence before them which could support the finding that there was such an agreement. Again there was evidence to support that finding, and, in my opinion, that would have been the end of the wife's case of wilful neglect to provide reasonable maintenance for her had there been no question of the maintenance of a child involved at all. I put it in that form because it is important to remember what was pointed out by Lord Merriman P. in Kinnane v. Kinnane[12]: "I reject the argument that an order cannot be made in favour "of the wife for maintenance of the wife unless it is founded "on wilful refusal to provide reasonable maintenance for her, or, "put the other way, that if the only legitimate finding is that "there has been wilful neglect to provide reasonable maintenance "for the infant children whom the husband is legally liable to "maintain, no order for maintenance of the wife can be made. I "do not think that that is the law. It may be that the amount "which justices of this court, for that matter, may think reason-"able in favour of a wife may depend upon whether the neglect "has been of the wife or of the children or both, but, in my "opinion, the right to make an order is established when once "the justices are satisfied that any one of the complaints set "out in section 4 of the Act of 1895 is proved."

[11] 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 1) 81.

[12] [1953] 3 W.L.R. 782, 785.

1953

STARKIE v. STARKIE (No. 2).

Collingwood J.

In this case, there is an infant child some eighteen months old, whom there is no question the husband is legally liable to maintain. Furthermore, no payments have been made by the husband in respect of that child. I agree that in order to prove wilful neglect to maintain it is not sufficient merely to show that the liability to maintain has not actually been carried out. It is clear from the decisions of Jones (B.) v. Jones (M. E.)[13] and a number of cases up to Morton v. Morton[14] that wilful neglect imports some element of matrimonial misconduct. Here, the justices have found that he has wilfully neglected to maintain the child, and, indeed, the wife. No payment has been made by the husband, and no sort of attempt has been made by him to justify that. It is true that there was some reference to a doubt as to paternity, but that was raised, according to him, by the wife herself, whether as a taunt to him or not is not quite clear; but he never put that allegation forward, as I read the evidence, as in any way exonerating him from liability to maintain the child. In my opinion, therefore, there was material upon which the justices could find that he had been guilty of wilful neglect in that regard.

The only question that remains is that of quantum. The order was made for £2 10s. The statutory maximum for the order in respect of the child's maintenance is now 30s., and, therefore, I agree that this order should be reduced in the way in which my Lord has suggested.

LORD MERRIMAN P. (upon argument as to costs): We pointed out on the previous occasion[15] that we would give the justices an opportunity to be heard about costs in view of the waste of public money, owing to their default, both parties being legally aided. They have, however, written to say that they did not intend to defy the court; and that they did not realize, owing to a misconception of the rules, that they had to give detailed reasons for their decision. I merely point out that although, perhaps, justices and their clerks are not to be expected to read month by month the Law Reports, a very pointed reference to Sullivan v. Sullivan[16] about the duty of justices and their clerks is contained in the last two editions of Stone's Justices Manual. However, we do not think it necessary to say any more on the topic, although it is really owing to the difficulties created by the default that recourse to a second hearing before us has been occasioned. We do not think it necessary to make any other order as to costs than that both sides shall tax under their certificates.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Beachcroft & Co. for Curwen & Co., Workington; Speechly, Mumford & Craig for Paisley, Falcon & Highet, Workington.

J. B. G.

[13] (1929) 46 T.L.R. 33.
[14] 58 T.L.R. 158.
[15] [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1396.
[16] [1947] P. 50.

* EASTBOURNE CORPORATION v. COMMISSIONERS OF CUSTOMS AND EXCISE.

1953
Dec. 8, 9, 10, 11.

Danckwerts J.

[1952 E. 1439.]

Revenue—Entertainments duty—Corporation concerts—Concerts including variety performers—Whether exempt from duty—Finance Act, 1946 (9 & 10 Geo. 6, c. 64), s. 8 (1)—Finance Act, 1952 (15 & 16 Geo. 6 & 1 Eliz. 2, c. 33), s. 3.
"Recitation." "Music hall or other variety entertainment."

A corporation, under its statutory powers, produced five performances, of which one consisted of violin, piano and other instrumental solos and songs, and the other four contained, in addition, comic items and songs by well-known variety entertainers:—

Held that, having regard to the appearance of well-known variety entertainers and to the nature of their "turns," the latter four performances contained elements which could not be brought within the statutory exemptions from duty of the Finance Act, 1946, s. 8 (1) and the Finance Act, 1952, s. 3, and became variety entertainments; and that the remaining concert was exempt from duty, as it contained no variety turn and was entirely a musical entertainment.

WITNESS ACTION.

On June 26, 1952, the Eastbourne Corporation, in pursuance of their statutory powers as the local education authority, entered into a written agreement with a producer for the production of a series of concerts at the Winter Garden Floral Hall, Eastbourne.

During the summer of 1952 five concerts were produced on the following dates, respectively—July 20, July 21, July 28, August 28 and October 30. Among the items performed at those entertainments were the following:—

July 20: violin and piano solos; also comic dialogues, songs and instrumental numbers by Richard Murdoch and Kenneth Horne:

July 21: organ solos, and songs by various performers, including comic items by Tommy Fields:

July 28: organ solos, xylophone solos, violin solos and songs, including a comic monologue by Robb Wilton:

August 28: piano solos, songs, violin solos and piano-accordion solos:

October 30: organ solos, harmonica solos, violin solos; and songs, which included songs by Gracie Fields.

The corporation applied to the Commissioners of Customs and Excise for exemption from entertainments duty in respect of these entertainments, but the Commissioners took the view that they were variety entertainments and liable to entertainments duty. They, however, deferred consideration of the application pending the hearing of these proceedings, which were commenced as a test case and in which the corporation claimed declarations that each of the entertainments consisted of one or more of the items referred to in section 8 (1) of the Finance Act, 1946,[1] and was provided by a society, institution or committee not conducted or established for profit; that the aims, objects and activities of the society, institution or committee were partly educational and that the said entertainments were not music hall or other variety entertainments within the meaning of section 3 of the Finance Act, 1952.[1]

1953

EASTBOURNE CORPORATION v. COMMISSIONERS OF CUSTOMS AND EXCISE.

J. Millard Tucker Q.C. and John Clements for the corporation.

Sir Reginald Manningham-Buller Q.C., S.-G., Viscount Hailsham Q.C. and J. P. Ashworth for the Crown.

Case referred to in argument: Barnes v. Jarvis.[2]

DANCKWERTS J. This is an action brought by the corporation of Eastbourne against the Commissioners of Customs and Excise. At the opening of the hearing, I was told that it was in the nature of a friendly action, and that it was a test case. So far as it is in the nature of a friendly action, the course of the case is somewhat disturbed by a slight dispute as to the character of the relief claimed and the substance of the case which has been agreed between the parties. However, the atmosphere may perhaps be said to have improved. So far as it is a test case, that fact usually makes very little difference in this court, which is accustomed to decide the issues on the facts arising in a particular case, and does not apply its decision to other facts and cases which are not before it for determination.

The subject of the action, so far as the plaintiffs are concerned, relates to five concerts which were put on by the Eastbourne corporation in a place called the Winter Garden, which is the property of the corporation. The concerts were put on without

[1] Finance Act, 1946, s. 8 (1): "Entertainments duty within the "meaning of section 1 of the Finance "(New Duties) Act, 1916, shall not "be charged on payments for admis-"sion to any entertainment which "consists of one or more of the fol-"lowing items, that is to say—(a) a "stage play; (b) a ballet (whether "a stage play or not); (c) a perform-"ance of music (whether vocal or "instrumental); (d) the exhibition of "a cinematograph film; (e) a lecture; "(f) a recitation; (g) an exhibition "of artistic work; (h) an industrial "exhibition; (i) an Eisteddfod, "where the commissioners are satis-"fied that the entertainment is pro-"vided by a society, institution or "committee which is not conducted "or established for profit and that "the aims, objects and activities of "the society, institution or committee "are partly educational."

Finance Act, 1952, s. 3 (1): "An "entertainment consisting of one or "more of the items specified in "section 8 (1) of the Finance Act, "1946 (which subsection exempts an "entertainment consisting of one or "more of certain specified items which "is provided by a body not conducted "or established for profit whose aims, "objects and activities are partly "educational), shall be treated as not "falling within the said subsection "(1) if it is a music-hall or other "variety entertainment."

"(2) This section shall apply, and "be deemed to have applied, as "respects payments for admission to "entertainments held on or after "March 12, 1952, other than pay-"ments made before that day."

[2] [1953] 1 W.L.R. 649; [1953] 1 All E.R. 1061.

any stage scenery on an open stage, without any drop curtain, I think it is called, but merely with side curtains which were drawn across the stage at the beginning and at the end, and in the course of the first part of the entertainment; and the point of the case is that a claim for entertainments duty has been made by the Commissioners of Customs and Excise, the corporation seeking to establish that they are entitled to exemption from that duty under the appropriate provisions of the Act.

I will first refer to the relevant statutes. The duty in question was imposed by the Finance (New Duties) Act, 1916, which provides by section 1: "There shall be charged, levied and paid "on all payments for admission to any entertainment as defined "by this Act an Excise duty (in this Act referred to as 'enter-"'tainments duty')" at certain rates. "Entertainment" is defined in subsection (6) of that section in these words: "The "expression 'entertainment' includes any exhibition, perform-"ance, amusement, game or sport to which persons are "admitted for payment; and the expression 'admission to an "'entertainment' includes admission to any place in which the "entertainment is held." It is perhaps worth while also to refer to a subsection which has since been repealed but which is not without interest. That is subsection (5) of the same section: "Entertainments duty shall not be charged on payments for "admission to any entertainment where the commissioners are "satisfied . . . (b) that the entertainment is of a wholly educa-"tional character (any question on that point to be determined "in case of difference by the Board of Education); . . . (d) that "the entertainment is provided for . . . partly scientific purposes "by a society, institution or committee not conducted or estab-"lished for profit, or is provided by any such society or institu-"tion, which has been founded with the object of reviving "national pastimes, in furtherance of that object."

The next statute in time to which I should refer is the Finance Act of 1935, s. 1 (3) (as amended by the Finance Act, 1946) which provides for duty at reduced rates in certain cases. "The said "duty shall be charged at the reduced rates set out in the First "Schedule to this Act in a case where all the performers whose "words or actions constitute the entertainment are actually "present and performing, and the entertainment consists solely "of one or more of the following items, namely, a stage play, a "ballet (whether a stage play or not), a performance of music "(whether vocal or instrumental), an Eisteddfod, a lecture, a "recitation, a music hall or other variety entertainment, a circus, "a travelling show, a menagerie or any game or sport other than "the racing or trial of speed of animals, vehicles, motor vessels "or aircraft"; then "stage play" is defined in a manner with which I need not trouble.

The Finance Act, 1946, introduced a provision which is of immediate concern in this action, section 8: "Entertainments "duty on certain entertainments provided by bodies which are

1953

EASTBOURNE CORPORATION v. COMMISSIONERS OF CUSTOMS AND EXCISE.

Danckwerts J.

"not profit making." [His Lordship read section 8 (1) and continued:] There are two comments to be made in regard to that Act before I pass on. First of all, from the nature of the performances with which I am concerned, it is plain that there are only two provisions in subsection (1) which are capable of applying to the performances in question: "(c) a performance "of music (whether vocal or instrumental)" and "(f) a recita- "tion." Secondly, one has to observe that the test of the nature of the society, institution or committee which is essential for the purposes of exemption from duty is left to the decision of the commissioners; and the objection has been taken (and in the circumstances it seems to be a sound objection) that it is not open to me to decide whether or not the Eastbourne Corporation is a society, institution or committee of the kind which is there mentioned. There may be other proceedings in which that point may be brought to the decision of the court, and the decision arrived at by the commissioners may possibly be questioned in that way. But so far as relief in this action is concerned, it is clear to me that I am severely handicapped by these provisions which fetter my jurisdiction, at any rate for present purposes.

The present form of action, therefore, is not particularly convenient for dealing with the questions which the parties wish to have decided; and for that reason I was not much attracted by a suggestion which arises out of the defence, that the number of cases which I shall have to consider in the ambit of the questions to be decided should be enlarged by reference to a number of other entertainments.

Another thing to observe in regard to this section is this. Apparently the legislature has changed its mind as to the way in which the claim for exemption shall be dealt with, because, whereas under the Act of 1916 the exemption depended on the educational nature, to some extent, at any rate, of the entertainment which was presented, under the provisions of this Act of 1946 the educational character is removed from the entertainment itself and is transferred to the character of the body which is putting on the entertainment. In other words, it is not for me to consider (and, indeed, it is immaterial) how great or how little is the educational value of the entertainment which is provided.

The remaining Act to which I have to refer is the Finance Act, 1952. Section 2 is material for consideration, though not for the purpose of the point which I have to decide directly, in that it provides for three scales of entertainments duty, the lowest of which is obviously intended to apply to performances which are performed by living and acting performers in view of the audience. The next higher scale is one which applies to games and sports and such matters, and the highest scale, the third, applies to cinematograph and reproduced musical performances.

Section 2 (2) provides that the first scale—that is the lowest—". . . shall be applicable in the case of any entertainment where "all the performers whose words or actions constitute the enter-"tainment are actually present and performing and the entertain-"ment consists solely of one or more of the following items, "namely—(a) a stage play, (b) a ballet (whether a stage play or "not), (c) a performance of music, (d) an eisteddfod, (e) a lecture, "(f) a recitation, (g) a music-hall or other variety entertainment, "(h) a puppet or marionette show, (i) a circus, a travelling show "or a menagerie." So it is to be observed there that a music hall or other variety entertainment which may not qualify as including solo items which fall within (c) and (f)—that is to say, "a perform-"ance of music" or "a recitation"—may qualify for duty at the lowest rate.

With those observations, let me turn to the important section, which is section 3. [His Lordship read section 3 and continued:] That completes the statutory provisions with which I am concerned, and therefore it is plain that, in order to come within the provisions relating to exemption in these statutes, first of all the individual items contained in the programme of the entertainment must fall within one or other of the items specified in section 8 (1) of the Act of 1946 and further, taken together, must not amount to either "a music hall or other variety entertainment," whatever that may mean.

This case, so far as the statement of claim is concerned, relates to five concerts—to give them the term used by the plaintiffs—taking place on five different days in 1952; that is to say, July 20, July 21, July 28, August 28 and October 30. The common feature of all those entertainments was that they consisted of a number of items, the greater part of which, at any rate, were of a musical nature, either vocal or otherwise; but in a certain number of cases an item was included which was not of a musical character. In those cases (and also in the case of one concert which was entirely, it would seem, of a musical character) one or more items consisting of a performance by a greater or less well-known variety performer was included.

The concert of July 20, 1952, which was a Sunday, contained a number of musical items, and an item or two items which were only at least partly musical given by well-known variety stars principally known, I should say, in respect of broadcasting, Mr. Richard Murdoch and Mr. Kenneth Horne; whose performance, it appears, consisted at least in part of what is called patter, and no doubt was of an extremely amusing character.

In the second concert of July 21, 1952, which was a Monday, there were again turns or performances of a musical character, but a compère known as "Flotsam," who is very well known in the broadcasting world, introduced the various items; and there was a very amusing performer included, one Tommy Fields, who was described in the programme as "The world famous light enter-"tainer," and he is very well known, it would appear, in the variety world.

1953

EASTBOURNE CORPORATION v. COMMISSIONERS OF CUSTOMS AND EXCISE.

Danckwerts J.

On July 28, in addition to the musical items, there came a very well known variety entertainer who has been described as "The "spirit of the old music hall," Mr. Robb Wilton ("Mr. Muddle-"combe, J.P."), who gave a monologue and told stories of an amusing character.

I will deal first with those three concerts because, as it seems to me, they have similar elements contained in them. Putting on one side the musical items in each of those entertainments one finds that there is a turn in each case given by one or more performers, whose turn includes, in addition in two cases to a certain amount of singing, a considerable amount of either monologue or dialogue, which is not of a musical nature; and it appears, therefore, that if those items are to qualify for the purpose of section 8 (1) of the Act of 1946, it is necessary to find that they, to that extent at any rate, amounted to a "recitation." The word "recitation," according to the dictionary, it would appear, has a meaning of this kind: "The act of reciting; that which is recited," and then under "recite," "To repeat, deliver or rehearse, as "something prepared, written down, committed to memory, or "the like." Those definitions I have taken from Webster's Collegiate Dictionary, but I think they are very similar to those which are to be found in other dictionaries.

It is contended that the performances in question which I have just mentioned, fall within the terms of those definitions, because the performers concerned carefully prepared their various apparently impromptu observations, and learned them by heart before they gave the performance; and therefore it is said that they were reciting something which they had already learned. That would be, no doubt, from the point of view of the plaintiffs, of course, a convenient and easy way of reaching the result. Unfortunately, dictionary definitions do not always present the living picture of the act or matter which they are describing; and it is therefore, I think, necessary to use what Lord Goddard C.J. has called "common sense" in regard to these matters: Barnes v. Jarvis.[1] It was not a case on the same statute, and the words used were on a somewhat different occasion; but the observations of the court give some assistance to me at any rate in the present case.

In my view, if one applies common sense to the word "recitation" in the context in these particular Acts, one cannot come to the conclusion that the statute and the legislature had in mind something of the nature of the monologue given by that very excellent comedian Mr. Robb Wilton, or, indeed, the sparkling entertainment given by Messrs. Richard Murdoch and Kenneth Horne, or, indeed, the bright entertainment provided by Mr. Tommy Fields. It is not necessary for me to consider whether "Flotsam" was guilty of a recitation or not, because I do not think that is really material for the purpose of this case. I have, therefore come to the conclusion that in each of the three concerts of July 20, July 21 and July 28, 1952, there was an element which cannot be brought within any of the heads contained in section 8 (1) of the Finance Act, 1946. That, of course, is enough to dispose of those three concerts; but for reasons which I will discuss in a few minutes, I think that they also fail to qualify for exemption from duty on another ground.

[1] [1953] 1 W.L.R. 649.

The fourth concert or the fourth entertainment was that of August 28, 1952; and that appears to have been wholly musical in its composition. There was no variety turn that really matters of any sort introduced, and the witnesses for the commissioners did indeed say that, in their opinion, it was a light musical concert, and was not a variety entertainment. It seems to me that that was clearly the case, and indeed that case was not pressed against the plaintiffs by the commissioners. Accordingly, in my view, it is plain that that entertainment consisted entirely of performances of music, either vocal or instrumental, and was not a "music hall "or other variety entertainment."

I now come to the entertainment which to me is the most difficult of all to decide on, and that is the entertainment of October 30, 1952, which appears to have been one of a series of entertainments included in what Mr. Harold Fielding, the producer, called "Gracie Fields' Concert Tour." It consisted of an overture and incidental music played by Ron Millington at the grand organ, "Singing Songs from the Shows," by a singer called John McHugh, "Canada's Harmonica Virtuoso, Tommy Reilly"; another performer called Stephane Grappelly from "The Hot Club "of France"; and finally, in two parts, a performance by Miss Gracie Fields, who, I was told, sang as many as 26 songs; she did interpose, I think, a short speech describing her pleasure at having returned to Eastbourne, and made some jokes or other observations in between her songs. But it was clear that the songs which she sang, although they were not all of a humorous nature, were very much the same as those which she had sung on other occasions upon the variety stage. Now I do not think that the interposition of a speech by the performer to her audience, or some incidental jokes, prevent the performance being a performance of music; but it is plain that the presence of Miss Gracie Fields dominated the whole of this entertainment.

I was provided with a great deal of evidence. A number of experts (or persons who were termed experts) gave evidence on each side as to what was the nature of a variety entertainment, and the question is one of considerable difficulty in some circumstances. But in my view, the evidence of Mr. Macqueen-Pope came closest to a picture of the true situation, when he said that an entertainment given in conditions such as those which prevailed in the case of these five entertainments became a variety entertainment, if it was dominated by a well-known variety performer doing the act which he or she did in the variety theatre, or in a recognised variety performance. It seems to me that in the case of the first three concerts on July 20, 21 and 28, 1952, those concerts or entertainments were dominated and coloured by the presence of variety entertainers, and they plainly became variety entertainments.

1953

EASTBOURNE CORPORATION v. COMMISSIONERS OF CUSTOMS AND EXCISE.

Danckwerts J.

Though I think the matter is perhaps somewhat more difficult in the case of the concert of October 30, 1952, because it is conceivable that a variety star might so alter his or her style that he or she might appear in another variety entertainment in perhaps quite a different character, it cannot be said that the performance by Miss Gracie Fields on October 30, 1952, was of such a different nature as that from the normal performance which she would give in an ordinary variety entertainment. Therefore, the conclusion which I reach is that in the case of this entertainment also, it was dominated by a variety performer, and became a variety entertainment.

I have not troubled to consider very carefully the meaning of the term "music hall" in the context of the Act because the term "music hall" seems to have become rather obsolete—for the purposes with which I am concerned at any rate; I was told indeed that "music hall" has been superseded by "variety "entertainment." It is sufficient, therefore, I think if I consider the matter from the point of view of "variety entertainment," and on that issue the conclusion which I reach is that the plaintiffs are entitled to a declaration of some sort in regard to the entertainment of August 28, 1952, but fail in their claim in respect of the other four entertainments mentioned in the writ.

In the case of the entertainment of August 28, 1952, I am prepared to make a declaration that the entertainment at the Winter Garden, Eastbourne, Sussex, on August 28, 1952, consisted of one or more of the items referred to in section 8 (1) of the Finance Act, 1946, and that the said entertainment was not "a "music hall or other variety entertainment" within the meaning of section 3 of the Finance Act, 1952. Otherwise, in my judgment, the action fails.

Judgment accordingly.

Solicitors: Sharpe, Pritchard & Co. for F. H. Busby, Town Clerk, Eastbourne; Solicitor, Customs and Excise.

J. L. D.

[CHANCERY DIVISION.]

1953 Nov. 24, 25, 26; Dec. 16.

Lloyd-Jacob J.

 In re WHEATCROFT BROS. LD.'S TRADE MARKS.

Trade Mark—Registration—Name of plant—Roses—Trade marks the "variety" names—Variety names sole designation of a rose—Not distinctive — Confusion — Wrongly registered — Rectification of register—Trade Marks Act, 1938 (1 & 2 Geo. 6, c. 22), ss. 9, 11 (1), 15, 32 (1).

"Distinctive mark."

The variety name of a rose being the sole designation of a particular type of rose to both the trade and public, it cannot be validly registered as a trade mark under the Trade Marks Act, 1938, to denote the rose of a particular proprietor.

A firm of rose growers had registered 11 variety names as trade marks in respect of roses. They failed to disclose in the application for registration that they were the variety names. Application was made by another firm of rose growers under section 32 of the Act, for the rectification of the register of trade marks by removal of the marks, on the ground, (1) that the variety names could not be distinctive within the meaning of section 9 and were therefore wrongly registered; (2) that their continuance on the register would cause confusion and was contrary to section 11. The evidence was that variety names were registered with the National Rose Society, and were alone used by the trade and public as the designations of particular roses.

The respondents contended, inter alia, that the objection that a trade mark was invalid because it was the descriptive name of an article should be determined by section 15, and not by sections 9 and 11:—

Held, (1) that variety names could not be distinctive of the roses of the respondents as required by section 9, and had it been disclosed on registration that they were the variety names they would not have been registered; they were therefore wrongly registered;

(2) that the continuance on the register of these marks would in the circumstances inevitably cause confusion, and constitute an impediment and embarrassment to traders, and they must be expunged from the register;

(3) that section 15 was concerned only with what occurred after registration, and could not restrict investigation into distinctiveness under section 9, or into the question of confusion under section 11, so that the contention under that section failed; that section moreover contained a positive direction to deem as wrongly registered any mark which by reason of concurrent user in a descriptive sense would occasion deception or confusion.

MOTION.

Wheatcroft Bros. Ld., a firm of rose growers, were the registered proprietors of eleven trade marks, registered in respect of roses; the marks being "Coppelia," "Cocorico," "Pigalle," "Confidence," "Mahina," "Mascotte," "Moulin Rouge," "Tzigane," "Festival" and "Magali." Wisbech Plant Co. Ld., who were also rose growers, applied under section 32 [1] of [1] Trade Marks Act, 1938, s. 9: "(1) In order for a trade mark . . . "to be registrable in Part A of the "register, it must contain or consist "of at least one of the following "essential particulars . . . (d) a word "or words having no direct reference "to the character or quality of the "goods . . . (e) any other distinctive "mark. . . .

"(2) For the purposes of this "section 'distinctive' means adapted, "in relation to the goods in respect "of which a trade mark is registered, "to distinguish goods with which "the proprietor of the trade mark is "or may be connected in the course "of trade from goods in the case of "which no such connexion subsists. ". . ."

S. 11: "It shall not be lawful "to register as a trade mark or part "of a trade mark any matter the use "of which would, by reason of its "being likely to deceive or cause con-"fusion or otherwise, be disentitled "to protection in a court of justice. ". . ."

S. 15: "(1) The registration of a "trade mark shall not be deemed to "have become invalid by reason only "of any use, after the date of the

1953

WHEATCROFT BROS. LD.'S TRADE MARKS, In re.

the Trade Marks Act, 1938, for the removal of the marks on the ground that the registrations were made without sufficient cause, and that the marks were wrongly registered, and wrongly remained on the register in contravention of sections 9 and 11 of the Act.

Basil Drewe Q.C. and T. A. Blanco White for the applicants, Wisbech Plant Co. Ld.

Geoffrey Tookey Q.C. and P. S. Bevan for the respondents, Wheatcroft Bros. Ld.

Cases referred to in argument: In re Leonard & Ellis' Trade Mark [2]; In re H. N. Brock & Co. Ld. [3]; Philippart v. Wm. Whiteley Ld. [4]; In re Spillers' Ld.'s Application [5]; In re Williams & Co. Ld.'s Application. [6]

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 16. LLOYD-JACOB J., reading his judgment. By this motion, the applicants, Wisbech Plant Co. Ld. seek the rectification of the trade mark register by the removal therefrom of eleven trade marks standing in the name of the respondents, Wheatcroft Bros. Ld., all of which were registered without proof of distinctiveness, five of which are entered upon the register in respect of "Roses, Rose Cuttings and Rose Trees" and the remaining six in respect of "Rose Plants." As the evidence disclosed, this variation in the classification of goods has no genuine significance in relation to the points for consideration, and it calls for no further mention. The locus standi of the applicants was admitted, and evidence and argument were directed to the issues of the propriety of the original admission of these marks to the register and of the continuance of the marks thereon since registration.

The applicants' statement of case, by para. 6, asserted a ground of objection under section 15 (1) (a) of the Trade Marks Act, 1938, but this objection, although retained by the applicants

"registration, of a word or words "which the trade mark contains, or of "which it consists, as the name or "description of an article or substance: Provided that, if it is proved "... (a) that there is a well-known "and established use of the word ... "as the name or description of the "article ... by ... persons carrying "on a trade therein, not being use in "relation to goods connected in the "course of trade with the proprietor "... (2) Where the facts mentioned "in paragraph (a) ... the proviso to "the foregoing subsection are proved "with respect to any word ... then "(a) if the trade mark consists solely "of that word ... the registration of "the trade mark, so far as regards "registration in respect of the article "... in question ... shall be deemed "for the purposes of section thirty-two "of this Act to be an entry wrongly "remaining on the register. ..."

S. 32: "(1) Any person aggrieved "by ... any entry made in the register without sufficient cause, or by "any entry wrongly remaining on the "register, ... may apply ... to the "court. ..."

[2] (1884) 26 Ch.D. 288.

[3] [1910] 1 Ch. 130, 137; 26 T.L.R. 100; 26 R.P.C. 850.

[4] [1903] 2 Ch. 274; 24 T.L.R. 707; 25 R.P.C. 565.

[5] (1953) 70 R.P.C. 51.

[6] (1917) 34 R.P.C. 197.

for future consideration should an opportunity arise on appeal, was not developed in argument, nor was I invited to deal with it. One other preliminary matter requires to be stated. The respondents did not attempt to support by evidence the contention particularized in their statement of defence that certain combinations of letters and figures as therein set out had come to be identified in the public mind with certain varieties of roses. This contention will not therefore qualify for further notice.

By section 49 of the Trade Marks Act, 1938, the tribunal in a proceeding relating to a trade mark is required to admit evidence of the usages of the trade concerned. It will be convenient to summarize this evidence by way of introduction. There has existed, since the year 1876, an organization called the National Rose Society, with a present membership exceeding 25,000, one purpose of whose existence is to encourage and develop the cultivation of roses in this country. Certain of the members of this society, being professional rose growers, are also members of the Association of British Rose Producers, and for convenience of reference these two organizations can be respectively termed the "society" and the "association."

A new rose variety is developed as a consequence of experimentation by a "rose raiser" in the cross-fertilization of existing varieties, and it would appear that only a very small percentage of the seedlings so produced are found to be sufficiently outstanding to justify introduction to the market. When one such is developed and a sufficient stock of rose trees created therefrom by budding, the raiser or an associate to whom he has entrusted the task of introducing the variety to the market, and called the "introducer," will seek to procure publicity for the variety, in order that the purchasing public may be encouraged to buy and plant examples of it. For this purpose an acceptable designation of the variety is essential. The raiser or introducer may himself offer for sale, and sell the new variety in the form of trees or bushes ready for planting, or he may dispose of buds of the new variety to professional rose growers for them to use in the development of trees and bushes. The designation chosen is referred to as the name of the rose, and it is the usual practice for rose growers to publish catalogues wherein the roses they offer for sale are identified by name, and to guarantee that goods supplied in response to orders will be found to be true to name. They can secure supplies of a variety introduced by some other grower by direct purchase from him of trees and bushes or of buds for implantation into stock of their own choosing, or indirectly by acquisition of trees or bushes of the required variety from persons in possession of the same, which trees and bushes may provide a quantity of buds or grafts with which to propagate further supplies. This propagation may be effected so rapidly that by the time the merits of a new introduction and the publicity efforts of its introducer have operated to create a substantial public demand, rose growers other than the introducer

1953

WHEATCROFT BROS. LD.'S TRADE MARKS, In re.

Lloyd-Jacob J.

will be possessed of supplies with which to satisfy the requirements of the public, and this even though the introducer, by refraining from supplying his competitors directly with either trees or bushes or buds, had sought to maintain his exclusive dealing.

The evidence established that the identification of a variety of rose was in practice secured by examination of the blooms, and as these are produced from the budded or grafted portion of the tree or bush, the nature and origin of the root stock are of no particular significance for such identification, although they may vitally affect—as will the skill and effectiveness of the budding—the habit and strength of the tree or bush.

Difficulty in a number of instances appears to have been experienced before 1948 due to the use of a plurality of designations in respect of examples of a single variety of rose, and in that year the society introduced what was termed the Rose Registration Scheme, whereby a list was compiled containing one identifying name in respect of each known variety, and the society accepted the responsibility of registering for the benefit of all concerned with roses the identification name attached by the introducer to any new variety of rose submitted for the purpose.

The registration scheme secured the approbation of the association, which recommended its members not to use in their trade catalogues any identification name not recognized by the society. Amongst their other activities, the society maintains a trial ground, wherein rose trees submitted by members are planted and tended, and their habit and quality tested and noted. Upon the results of these trials certificates are granted for meritorious introductions, but only when an identifying name for the variety has been entered upon the society's register. The Rose Registration Regulations and the application form, the completion of which is an essential preliminary to the registration, were exhibited in evidence.

In completing the application form, the introducer asserts the variety to be new and in this country previously unnamed, and must propose for registration the name that he suggests for its future designation. The regulations include a provision that exhibition of a variety under a name other than the name registered shall render the exhibit liable to disqualification in any competition to which the powers of the society extend. Speaking generally, it is by exhibition at flower shows sponsored by the society and by the receipt of certificates, medals and the like awards given by the society, that an introducer may expect to bring his variety to the notice of the interested public. It is, I think, a fair conclusion on the evidence that at the present time an introducer could not expect to popularize a new variety without meeting the requirements of the society in respect of registration, and if a member also of the association it would be possible for him to commence to market supplies of it in the ordinary way of business under a name not registered with the society only by disregarding the association's specific recommendation. Indeed, as the respondents fairly acknowledged in evidence, it would be wholly impracticable to designate a rose in the course of trade by a name other than that under which the variety was registered with the society, and they further acknowledged that should this be attempted, chaotic conditions would result.

It is against this background of trade usage that the particulars of the registrations in suit fall to be considered. The respondents, having accepted the task of introducing new varieties raised abroad into the market in this country, sought to carry out that task in such a way as to ensure, first, the availability only of satisfactory examples, and second, a reasonable financial return to the raiser and his associates. In pursuance of these purposes, the respondents agreed with their principals abroad to follow a particular course of action, whereby the designation selected for a new variety was to be registered with the society, and as soon as reasonably possible thereafter registered as a trade mark. With two exceptions (registered trade marks No. 701,611 "Concerto" and No. 709,608 "Festival") this procedure was followed in respect of the trade marks in suit, and the exceptions in no way indicate any desire to modify the procedure in principle.

In this way it was hoped that the designation would, by reason of its registration with the society, become the means whereby the variety could alone be identified, and further, by reason of its registration as a trade mark, be available to indicate a connexion in the course of trade between articles so designated and the proprietors and registered users of the registered trade mark, so as to preclude unauthorized growers from offering supplies.

The present proceedings are based upon the provisions of section 32 of the Act, which, shortly stated, permit the removal from the trade marks register of entries therein made without sufficient cause, or which wrongly remain therein. So far as concerns each original entry, the applicants seek to establish that the statutory requirements contained in section 9 of the Act were not complied with, and so far as concerns each original registration and its continuing presence upon the register they contend that the provisions of section 11 render both unlawful.

The prerequisite for registration in Part A of the register as set out in section 9 is distinctiveness, "distinctive" being defined in subsection (2) as meaning "adapted to distinguish "goods with which the proprietor of the trade mark is or may be "connected in the course of trade from goods in the case of "which no such connexion subsists." Such distinctiveness may be established in the case of certain categories specified in the section merely by inference, and in other cases by affirmative evidence. All the registrations in suit were accepted as inferentially distinctive, on the ground that each consisted of a word having no direct reference to the character or quality of the goods.

1953

WHEATCROFT BROS. LD.'S TRADE MARKS, In re.

Lloyd-Jacob J.

Seeing that the classification of goods in respect of which registration was sought was expressed broadly to cover all varieties of rose, there was of course no reason for the registrar to suspect that the averment that the mark was proposed to be used, as contained in the application form, was true only in relation to one particular variety of rose, and still less reason for him to be put upon inquiry as to the characteristics or qualities possessed by such variety, so as to permit him to determine the absence of any direct reference in the mark propounded for registration.

In the light of the evidence before me, it is clear that at the respective dates of application for each of these marks, the respondents intended only to use each mark in relation to one variety of rose, which variety as they well knew and intended either was or would be characterized by the same name recorded in the register of the society. Had the application form accurately reflected these intentions the registrar could not have regarded the mark proposed as inferentially distinctive. An intention to use the mark as the name of a variety appears to be wholly inconsistent with a bona fide intention to use it as signifying a connexion in the course of trade with the supplier, for which purpose it must necessarily be capable of differentiating between examples of the same variety coming from differing trade sources.

If the question be posed:—Was the name intended for use to distinguish rose trees of the respondents' growing from rose trees of the same variety grown by others, or was it intended for use to distinguish one variety introduced by the respondents from the generality of roses, there can be only one answer, for the inevitable consequence of registration with the society was to give the name a variety status. The evidence which establishes this is not questioned, and the desire of the respondents to prevent other rose growers from offering supplies of any of these new varieties save under specific authorization, even if successful, would not affect the intention to use as such, but would merely condition the circumstances in which roses so named were dealt with in commerce.

Once the respondents decided to invite the society to accept any particular name as an identification of the variety to which it was applied, they put it out of their power to intend the name only to identify such instances of the variety as they themselves had raised. If they can contrive some manner of monopolizing the production of a particular variety, it is true that the variety name will not fall to be used save upon their products. This possibility, although it might conceivably permit the respondents to create and acquire a secondary meaning for the original variety name, would certainly not justify a registration granted without evidence of distinctiveness.

The propriety of these registrations being called in question, I am satisfied that the court is entitled, and indeed bound, to examine the objection under section 9, in the light of all the evidence adduced. So examined, registrations Nos. 700,985 "Cocorico," 701,614 "Pigalle," 709,607 "Coppelia," 709,605 "Magali," 709,609 "Moulin Rouge," 701,613 "Mascotte," 700,984 "Tzigane" and 709,606 "Mahina" do not qualify under section 9 (1) (d), and were therefore entered upon the register without sufficient cause.

Similar reasoning as to lack of distinctiveness likewise condemns registration No. B 701,612 "Confidence." With regard to Nos. 701,611 "Concerto" and 709,608 "Festival," these marks were registered before any application had been made to the society for their entry as variety names. The precise reason for this inversion of the designed procedure was not specified in respect of No. 701,611 "Concerto," and was due so far as concerned "Festival" to the circumstance that the originally designed name for the variety, "Cannes Festival," was in fact registered with the society as a preliminary to registration as a trade mark, but the requirements of the trade mark registry caused the geographical reference in the name to be dropped at the application stage. As I am satisfied that in neither instance was any departure from the intended use proposed, these registrations are equally vulnerable with the others for the same reasons.

Turning now to the objection under section 11, the evidence satisfies me that to the thousands of persons acquainted with the rose registration scheme of the society, the use of any name entered upon that register as importing a reference to trade origin would inevitably cause confusion. Moreover, save upon the footing that sellers other than the respondents will have no opportunity of meeting demands for these varieties when expressed in the only manner open to the buyer for the identification of his requirements, the inevitable result of leaving these marks on the Register of Trade Marks would be to impede the efforts of such other traders and to embarrass both them and their customers.

The evidence affords no grounds for assuming either a future inability on the part of growers to produce any of the varieties to which the marks in suit are assigned or the absence of any public demand for their products under their variety names. It is, of course, true that production of such varieties will require for its inception the receipt of some supply of stock from the respondents' growing, but neither procurement of supplies nor production of stock therefrom need involve any unlawful act as the law now stands. If, therefore, it be right to postulate a state of affairs wherein willing sellers and willing buyers are minded to deal in these commodities, the imposition of a clog upon their means of identifying the subject-matter of their dealing must operate in restraint of trade.

1953

WHEATCROFT BROS. LD.'S TRADE MARKS, In re.

Lloyd-Jacob J.

In my judgment, section 11 of the Act requires this court to safeguard the free operation of normal trade channels from such interference so far as it proceeds under the protection of trade mark registration. For this reason the entries in respect of all the marks the subject of this motion wrongly remain upon the register and must be expunged therefrom.

It was strongly urged upon me by counsel for the respondents that having regard to the provisions of section 15 of the Act, the objection that a trade mark is invalid because it is the descriptive name of an article falls to be determined according to the terms of that section and not under sections 9 and 11. This submission must be rejected. With the exception of subsection (3) of section 15 (which relates to chemical substances and is therefore not in point) this section is concerned with what has developed after the date of registration. It cannot therefore operate to restrict or avoid the investigation into distinctiveness which by section 9 is imposed upon the registrar at the application stage, and the use of the expression " by reason only " in subsection (1) shows that no substitute for the investigation under section 11 was intended. If the legislature had intended to permit the continued registration of marks which in use were causing deception and confusion, much plainer direction would have been found in the statute.

If the argument with regard to section 15 be put somewhat differently and it be submitted that the section should be taken as a guide to the proper decision in cases where concurrent use as a trade mark and as a description was to be anticipated, the respondents would fare no better.

If the whole of section 15 be closely examined, it will be found that it contains a positive direction to deem as wrongly registered any mark which by reason of concurrent use in a descriptive sense could occasion deception or confusion, and this irrespective of the intentions of the registered proprietor as to its use.

Where, as here, the respondents themselves promote and adopt the descriptive use, they cannot complain of the consequential effect upon the validity of the trade mark.

Having had the advantage of seeing and hearing Mr. Harry Wheatcroft in the witness box, it is only right to add that the respondents appear to have intended no impropriety. Being convinced, as he was, that the welfare and prestige of British rose growers required the establishment of some control over the marketing of new varieties, this gentleman appears to have been assured that the registration of variety names as trade marks would create an opportunity, and the introduction into trade mark law of the registered user provisions would enable the respondents to authorize, under properly controlled conditions, the supply of their new varieties to the public by suitably qualified growers. I accept from him that the respondents desired to protect the public from obtaining poor examples of new varieties, and were wishful only to secure fair and equitable terms upon which the industry could collaborate with them.

Although the respondents must bear the consequences of having failed to disclose to the registrar the correspondence they intended between variety name and trade mark (but for which failure the marks would never have been registered nor these proceedings have been possible), I have no ground for attributing to them any personal knowledge of this default. What they were really seeking was a means or method of preventing the use of stock of their growing for the propagation of rose trees and bushes by unauthorized professional rose growers, such as is provided by the domestic patent law in some other countries. In so doing, they adhered to an earlier understanding in relation to the tenth commandment, and overlooked the modern gloss which A. H. Clough felicitously expressed in "The Latest Decalogue" as "Thou shalt not covet, but tradition

"Approves all forms of competition."

For the purpose the respondents had in mind I am satisfied that the registration of the trade marks in suit was of no avail, for they were not validly registered, nor can they properly remain on the register. Accordingly, I must direct the rectification of the register as prayed.

Application granted.

Solicitors: Metcalfe, Copeman & Pettefar; Smith & Hudson for Day, Johnson & Boot, Nottingham.

I. G. R. M.

[LEEDS ASSIZES.]

* REGINA v. COOK.

1953
Nov. 16, 17.
Stable J.

Criminal Law—Mental deficiency—Procuration of mental defective girl—Carnal knowledge with girl under statutory supervision—Mental Deficiency Act, 1913 (3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 28), s. 56 (1) (a) (b).
Mental deficiency.

By section 56 (1) of the Mental Deficiency Act, 1913: "Any "person (a) who unlawfully and carnally knows . . . any woman "or girl under care or treatment in an institution or certified "house or approved home, or whilst placed out on licence therefrom "or under guardianship under this Act; or (b) procures . . . "any woman or girl who is a defective to have unlawful carnal "connection . . . with any person or persons . . . shall be guilty "of a misdemeanour. . . ."

P., a certified mental defective, was under the statutory supervision of a mental health social worker who boarded her out with the defendant's wife at the defendant's house. It was alleged that

---

[Reported by G. M. SMAILES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

1953

REGINA
v.
COOK.

while P. was at the house the defendant had carnal connection with her. On a charge against the defendant under section 51 (1) (b):—

Held, that (1) the facts alleged did not show that the defendant had procured P. to have the carnal connection with him; (2) the defendant had not committed an offence under section 56 (1) (a) because P. did not come within the categories therein mentioned and therefore if, sed quaere, "unlawful" in section 56 (1) (b) meant contrary to section 56 (1) (a), the defendant could not be guilty of the offence charged.

TRIAL before Stable J. and a jury.

The defendant was charged with procuration of a mental defective girl contrary to section 56 (1) (b) of the Mental Deficiency Act, 1913, the particulars being that between April 12 and May 21, 1953, he procured Jean Pearson, a girl aged 17 years, who was then a defective, to have unlawful carnal connection with himself.

The facts proved by witnesses for the prosecution were that the girl Pearson was on January 15, 1951, certified as, and had ever since that date been, a feeble-minded person under the Mental Deficiency Acts. She had not been placed in any institution or certified house or approved home or placed out on licence therefrom or under guardianship, but had been placed under the supervision of a Miss Appleyard, a mental health social worker, under the Mental Deficiency Acts. In April, 1953, Miss Appleyard boarded Pearson out with Mrs. Cook, the wife of the defendant, at the defendant's house. While Pearson was so boarded at the house the defendant one morning asked her to go back to bed. She went and the defendant there had carnal connection with her. The defendant had carnal connection with her under similar circumstances on two subsequent occasions.

[STABLE J. Section 56 (1) (b) says: "Who procures, or "attempts to procure, any woman or girl who is a defective "to have unlawful carnal connection," so that the act of intercourse has to be an unlawful act of intercourse and then you are thrown back on section 56 (1) (a). What is meant by the word "unlawful"? Does it mean outside the bonds of matrimony?]

A. M. Hurwitz for the prosecution.

J. M. Dodson for the defendant submitted that there was no case to answer.

The following cases were cited in the arguments: Rex v. Mackenzie & Higginson[1]; Rex v. Christian.[2]

STABLE J. Members of the jury, this case arises under an Act of Parliament which is intended to protect women who are mentally defective from the lusts of the opposite sex. Parliament has created categories of mental defectives covering a fairly wide field, and when a person has been certified by a medical officer as being a mental defective, the patient can be put into some sort of an institution. If she benefits from treatment, she may be let out on licence. Alternatively, the patient may be put under guardianship. Short of that she can be put under what is called "statutory supervision" which means that she is not put into a home, or under guardianship, but a person like Miss Appleyard keeps a watchful eye on her. That was the situation of the girl in the present case and the defendant is charged with the offence of having procured this girl to have intercourse with him.

[1] (1910) 27 T.L.R. 152. [2] (1913) 23 Cox C.C. 541.

On examination of the Act of Parliament that creates this offence (Mental Deficiency Act, 1913, s. 56 (1) (a)) one finds that it provides that it is an offence to have intercourse with a mental defective who is in an institution, or who has been placed out on licence, or who has been placed under a guardianship order. It does not say that it is a criminal offence to have sexual intercourse with a girl who is merely under statutory supervision, as this girl was. Therefore, the act of intercourse with this girl was not a criminal offence. If she had been under guardianship or if she had been an inmate of one of these homes it would have been unless the man could have satisfied you that he did not know and had no reasonable grounds to suspect it; but Parliament has definitely refrained from making it a criminal offence to have intercourse with a girl in this girl's situation. Therefore, these acts of intercourse, however morally reprehensible, were not criminal offences.

To get over that difficulty the defendant is charged under another paragraph of the same section of the Act which makes it an offence to procure a defective girl to have sexual intercourse with a man. It is not easy to define what procuration amounts to but there is not a shred of evidence that this man procured anybody. He did not get the girl to come into his house. He did not get her away from her mother. Nobody suggests that Mrs. Cook was a procuress, getting hold of this girl for immoral purposes. Inasmuch as the Act has most specifically refrained from making the act of intercourse itself a criminal offence, there is no evidence before you on which you can convict this man of an offence under the Act of Parliament. Although you may think there is a defect in the law, you have no alternative but to return a verdict of Not Guilty against this man.

Verdict: "Not Guilty."

Solicitors: R. C. Linney, County Hall, Wakefield; Carter, Bentley & Gundill, Pontefract.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

1953
Oct. 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31; Nov. 2, 3, 4, 12.

McNair J.

 ROE v. MINISTER OF HEALTH AND OTHERS. WOOLLEY v. SAME.

[1949 R. No. 3784.]

[1948 W. No. 3792.]

Negligence—Onus of proof—Res ipsa loquitur—Operation under control of two persons—Hospital—Anaesthetist—Operations—Injection of spinal anaesthetic—Contamination by phenol—Plaintiffs permanently paralysed—Liability of hospital for acts of specialist anaesthetist—Liability of anaesthetist.
Hospital—Negligence.

Two patients in hospital were operated on on the same day. Both operations were of a minor character and in each case a spinal anaesthetic, namely, nupercaine, was injected by means of a lumbar puncture by a specialist anaesthetist assisted by the theatre staff of the hospital. The nupercaine had been contained in sealed glass ampoules which had been stored in a solution of phenol. After the operations both patients developed severe symptoms of spastic paraplegia resulting in permanent paralysis from the waist down. In actions for damages for personal injuries against the Minister of Health as successor in title to the trustees of the hospital, and against the anaesthetist, the plaintiffs relied on the doctrine res ipsa loquitur inasmuch as the injuries which they had sustained did not normally follow upon a spinal anaesthetic properly administered:—

Held, (1) that where an object or operation is under the control of two persons not in law responsible for the acts of each other, the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur cannot apply to either person since the res, if it speaks of negligence, does not speak of negligence against either person individually.

Held, (2) that the hospital, although responsible in law to the plaintiffs for the acts of their servants, the theatre staff, was not so responsible for the acts of the anaesthetist who, as a specialist, was in a position comparable with that of a visiting surgeon or physician for whose acts a hospital does not assume responsibility in law.

Gold v. Essex County Council [1942] 2 K.B. 293; 58 T.L.R. 357; [1942] 2 All E.R. 237, and Cassidy v. Minister of Health [1951] 2 K.B. 343; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 539; [1951] 1 All E.R. 574 applied.

Held, (3) that the plaintiffs' claims failed against both defendants, since (a) the hospital had discharged its duty by supplying a competent anaesthetist and a trained theatre staff; and (b) it had been established by the evidence that the plaintiffs' injuries were in fact caused by the injection of nupercaine contaminated by phenol which could have occurred by percolation through "invisible cracks" or molecular flaws in the glass ampoules containing the nupercaine, since there were no positive proved facts from which a legitimate inference could be drawn as to the amount of phenol which had in fact percolated into the ampoules. In those circumstances neither the anaesthetist nor a fortiori the theatre staff could be guilty of negligence in failing to appreciate the risk of such percolation on the basis of medical knowledge in 1947. Neither could the anaesthetist be held to be guilty of negligence in law in failing to apply a differential colour test which might have disclosed a risk which, in common with many other anaesthetists, he did not appreciate as a possibility.

[Reported by MRS. E. M. WELLWOOD, Barrister-at-Law.]

ACTION.

The following statement of facts is taken from the judgment. In these two consolidated actions the plaintiffs, Cecil Henry Roe, a farm labourer, aged 46, and Albert Woolley, a labourer, aged 51, sought to recover damages for personal injuries which they suffered as the result of the administration to them of a spinal anaesthetic on October 13, 1947, at the Chesterfield and North Derbyshire Royal Hospital. In each case the surgical operation for which they were anaesthetized was of a comparatively minor character—in Roe's case an operation upon a damaged cartilage in the knee and in Woolley's case an operation for a hydrocele. But in each case the end-result was disastrous as both men developed in the course of time a condition of spastic paraplegia—more severe in the case of Roe—which resulted in both becoming permanently paralysed from the waist downwards. In these circumstances they brought actions for damages for personal injuries against (1) the Minister of Health as successor in title under the National Health Service Act, 1946, and the National Health Service (Appointed Day) Order, 1948, to the trustees of the hospital; and (2) against Dr. J. Malcolm Graham, who was responsible for the administration of the anaesthetic in each case.

Detailed charges of negligence against each defendant were set out in the pleadings; but in substance the plaintiffs' cases proceeded on the following lines: (a) As against both defendants it was urged that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applied inasmuch as the disastrous result in fact experienced did not ordinarily follow upon a spinal anaesthetic properly administered. Alternatively (b) as against the hospital it was urged (1) that (on the basis that the defendant Graham was in law the servant or agent of the hospital) the injuries were caused by the negligent injection of the contents of a glass ampoule of nupercaine contaminated by phenol or carbolic acid; and (2) that (on the basis that the defendant Graham was not in law the servant or agent of the hospital) the contamination occurred through the negligent mishandling of the ampoules by the theatre staff, and, further, that the failure to detect the contamination was due to the failure to employ an effective system of differential colouring in the phenol or carbolic solution in which the ampoules were stored. Further (c) as against the defendant Graham it was urged that he negligently injected the contents of an ampoule of nupercaine contaminated by phenol or carbolic, that he failed to make any proper examination for cracks in the ampoules, and failed to adopt and maintain an effective system of differential colouring in the phenol or carbolic solution in which the ampoules were stored.

1953

ROE
v.
MINISTER
OF HEALTH.

The defendants, while denying the several allegations of negligence, raised an affirmative case that the injuries were in fact caused by the nupercaine itself administered without negligence, the nupercaine being supplied in sealed glass ampoules by the manufacturers, Ciba Laboratories Ld. The manufacturers were accordingly joined as third defendants and took part in the trial for some days, but were finally dismissed upon the admission by counsel for the plaintiffs and the first two defendants that no legal liability was in the result then alleged against them.

Richard Elwes Q.C., John Hobson and R. F. Hannay for the plaintiffs.

Montague Berryman Q.C., R. Marven Everett Q.C. and J. S. Macaskie for the first defendant.

H. B. H. Hylton-Foster Q.C. and J. R. Cumming-Bruce for the second defendants.

Gilbert Paull Q.C., Neville Faulks and Philip Syrett for the third defendants.

The following cases were among those cited in argument: Lindsey County Council v. Marshall [1]; Cassidy v. Minister of Health [2]; Gold v. Essex County Council [3]; Ballard v. North British Railway [4]; The Kite [5]; Caswell v. Powell Duffryn Associated Collieries Ld. [6]

Cur. adv. vult.

November 12. McNAIR J., having stated the facts set out above, continued: The method of anaesthesis employed was the well-known method of injecting nupercaine into the patient's theca by means of a lumbar puncture between the lumbar vertebrae. This method, at any rate in 1947 before the general development of the use of other relaxant drugs, was widely used and had the advantage of securing by a simple technique normally involving little distress to the patient a complete relaxation in the field of the intended operation.

I desire to emphasize at the outset that no charge of negligence was made based upon the adoption of this method of anaesthesis for the two operations in question. At the hearing before me, which lasted for eleven days, I had the advantage of hearing the evidence given by a number of surgeons, neurologists, anaesthetists and pathologists of the highest professional standing, who, while each desiring to assist the court without any reservation, differed widely in many respects in their views of the cause of the condition which developed in both plaintiffs following upon the

[1] [1937] A.C. 97; [1936] 2 All E.R. 1076; 52 T.L.R. 661.

[2] [1951] 2 K.B. 343; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 539; [1951] 1 All E.R. 574.

[3] [1942] 2 K.B. 293; 58 T.L.R. 357; [1942] 2 All E.R. 357.

[4] 1923 S.C. 43.

[5] [1933] P. 154; 49 T.L.R. 525.

[6] [1940] A.C. 152; 55 T.L.R. 1004; [1939] 3 All E.R. 722.

administration of the anaesthetic. I have had accordingly a more than usually anxious task in attempting to reach a solution.

[His lordship described the anatomy of the spinal column, stated the facts as to the development of the disease in each case, reviewed the evidence and continued:] In these circumstances Mr Elwes as counsel for the plaintiffs, emphasizing the close parallelism between the two medical histories and the fact that injuries of this nature do not normally follow from spinal anaesthetics properly administered, submits that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applies (a) as against the hospital on the basis that in law the hospital is responsible for the actions of Dr. Graham as well as for the actions of the theatre staff; (b) as against Dr. Graham on the ground that he administered the anaesthetic and had control of the theatre staff in all revelant respects.

The validity of this submission in my judgment depends on determining (1) the extent of the obligation assumed by the hospital towards patients received by the hospital; (2) the position of Dr. Graham in relation to the hospital; and (3) the extent, if any, of the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur where the offending object or operation is under the control of two persons not in law responsible for the acts of each other.

Before examining these points, certain further facts should be stated. (i) Both Roe and Woolley were contributors for hospital and surgical treatment under a contributory scheme run by the hospital, so that they made some contribution for their treatment which was received by the hospital. This, however, appears to be in law irrelevant since the same standard of care applies whether the treatment is gratuitous or on payment. (ii) Dr. Graham, who had been in practice as a general medical practitioner since he qualified in 1939, was appointed in October, 1941, as a temporary anaesthetist at the hospital to help out wartime shortages. In that capacity he attended for anaesthetic purposes for one afternoon a week until May, 1946. During this time he became deeply interested in the science of anaesthesia, and after a course of reading and after attending a course on anaesthesia at the Radcliffe Infirmary he took his Diploma of Anaesthesia granted by the Joint Board of the Royal Colleges of Surgeons and Physicians, this being at that time the only specialist qualification in anaesthesia. By the autumn of 1946 he had decided to give up his general practice and devote his whole time to anaesthetics. In October, 1946, he was, with Dr. Pooler, who had taken his Diploma of Anaesthesia some years earlier, appointed as a visiting anaesthetist to the hospital. He and Dr. Pooler between them were under an obligation to provide a regular anaesthetic service for the hospital, it being left to them to decide how to divide up the work. In fact, apart from emergencies, they worked at the hospital on alternative days. The hospital set aside a sum of money out of their funds derived from investments, contributions and donations for division among the whole of the medical and

1953

ROE
v.
MINISTER
OF HEALTH.

McNair J.

surgical staff including visiting and consulting surgeons as the participants might decide. Dr. Graham participated in this fund but otherwise received no remuneration from the hospital. He was at all times allowed to continue his private anaesthetic practice.

I now turn to (1), the problem of the obligation assumed by the hospital towards patients received for treatment. The two most relevant authorities, both of which are binding upon me, are the decisions of the Court of Appeal in Gold v. Essex County Council[1] and Cassidy v. Ministry of Health.[2] I take as my guide the passage in the judgment of Lord Greene M.R. in Gold's case[3]: "The question which presents itself in the present case "may, therefore, be formulated as follows: When a patient "seeking free advice and treatment such as that given to the "infant plaintiff knocks at the door of the defendant's hospital, "what is he entitled to expect? He will find an organization "which comprises consulting physicians and surgeons, presum-"ably also house physicians and surgeons, a staff of nurses, "equipment for administering Grenz ray treatment and a radio-"grapher, Mead, employed to give that treatment. So far as "consulting physicians and surgeons are concerned, clearly the "nature of their work and the relationship in which they stand "to the defendants precludes the drawing of an inference that "the defendants undertake responsibility for their negligent "acts."

I also think it is clear that the judgments of Somervell and Singleton L.JJ., who formed the majority on this point in Cassidy's case,[4] proceed on the same basis. No useful purpose would be served by my expressing my own views upon the judgment of Denning L.J. in the latter case, which states the hospital's obligation in much wider terms, except to say that there is in my judgment much force in the criticism directed by Mr. Berryman against Denning L.J.'s reading of the decision in Mersey Docks and Harbour Board v. Coggins and Griffiths,[5] which apparently forms the basis of this judgment.

I accordingly conclude (1) that so far as Dr. Graham was concerned, the hospital's obligation towards their patient was limited to providing a competent anaesthetist, which obligation the hospital undoubtedly fulfilled, and that the hospital was not liable in law for his acts of negligence, if any; and that so far as the theatre staff were concerned, the hospital assumed towards their patients the vicarious responsibility of a master for his servants. (2) It follows from what I have said above that in my judgment the position of Dr. Graham as a specialist anaesthetist was comparable to that of a visiting surgeon or

[1] [1942] 2 K.B. 293; 58 T.L.R. 357; [1942] 2 All E.R. 237.

[2] [1951] 2 K.B. 343; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 539; [1951] 1 All E.R. 574.

[3] [1942] 2 K.B. 293, 302.

[4] [1951] 2 K.B. 343.

[5] [1947] A.C. 1; 62 T.L.R. 533; [1946] 2 All E.R. 345.

physician for whose acts the hospital does not assume responsibility in law. As to (3) the extent of the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur where the thing or operation is under the control of two persons not in law responsible for each other—I am unable to understand how it can be said that the maxim can apply to either of such persons, since the res, if it speaks of negligence, does not speak of negligence against either individually: see the passage in Lord Murray's speech in Carruthers v. MacGregor.[6] In this connection reference should also be made to the words of Farwell L.J. in Hillyer v. St. Bartholomew's Hospital,[7] quoted by Somervell L.J. in Cassidy's case.[8]

Furthermore, it was established on the evidence that, though the anaesthetist is responsible for the choice of the anaesthetic, for the giving of directions as to its preparation and for general supervision of the activities of the theatre staff, he cannot properly be regarded as responsible for their casual acts of negligence.

Accordingly, in my judgment the ordinary onus rests upon the plaintiff of proving negligence against the hospital or Dr. Graham. It being conceded that the injection of nupercaine per se was on the facts of this case not negligent, and it being clearly established on the medical evidence that the injuries were not caused (1) by an infective organism, as in Voller's case,[9] or (2) by traumatic injury to the spinal column by the needle itself, and no other contaminant than phenol being suggested, the first step in this proof of negligence must be to satisfy the court that the injuries were in fact caused by the injection of phenol.

None of the medical witnesses had consciously ever seen the results of injecting phenol into the human theca. Accordingly, the arguments for and against this view had necessarily to be based largely on deductive reasoning from the observed effects of phenol in other circumstances and the known effects of other toxic substances on the contents of the theca itself. After the most anxious consideration I have come to the conclusion that the phenol theory is sufficiently established for it to form the basis of a finding by the court that the injuries were in fact caused by the injection of phenol with the nupercaine, and I so find. [His Lordship stated the reasons for his finding, examined the medical evidence, and continued:]

I now come to what I regard as the most difficult part of this case, namely, the inquiry whether it is proved either by presumption, inference or direct evidence, that the phenol which I find was introduced was so introduced by reason of the negligence of Dr. Graham or the hospital staff.

It is now clear that phenol can find its way into an ampoule of nupercaine stored in a solution of phenol through cracks which are not detectable by the ordinary visual or tactile examination

[6] 1927 S.C. 816, 823.
[7] [1909] 2 K.B. 820, 827; 25 T.L.R. 762.
[8] [1951] 2 K.B. 343, 354.
[9] (1947) 203 L.T.J. 264.

1953

ROE
v.
MINISTER
OF HEALTH.

McNair J.

which takes place in an operating theatre—these cracks were referred to in the evidence as "invisible cracks"—or through molecular flaws in the glass. The attention of the profession was first drawn to this risk in this country by the publication of Professor Macintosh's book on Lumbar Puncture and Spinal Anaesthesia in 1951. In 1947 the general run of competent anaesthetists would not appreciate this risk. Dr. Graham certainly did not appreciate this as a risk. I accordingly find that by the standard of knowledge to be imputed to competent anaesthetists in 1947, Dr. Graham was not negligent in failing to appreciate this risk and a fortiori the theatre staff were not negligent. Accordingly (subject to one further point, namely, the absence of an effective colouring of the phenol), it seems to me that the plaintiffs' case must fail unless I am satisfied that the amount of phenol which percolated into the ampoules in fact used in the two cases of Roe and Woolley could not have percolated in through "invisible cracks."

In this connexion I have to bear in mind the classical passage in Lord Wright's speech in Caswell v. Powell Duffryn Associated Collieries Ld.[10] as to the distinction between inference and conjecture and ask myself whether there are in this case "any "positive proved facts from which an inference" as to the amount of phenol which percolated can be drawn. If there are not, any finding as to the amount would be conjecture. [His Lordship reviewed the medical evidence and continued:] In my judgment, in the absence of any clear proof as to the minimum concentration necessary, the results of these calculations were so speculative and founded upon such uncertain data that no legitimate inference can be drawn from them as to the quantity of percolation. Such concrete evidence as there was seems to suggest that the degree of substitution of nupercaine by phenol cannot have been great since the nupercaine administered, and administered in the minimum dose, apparently produced its normal and anticipated degree of anaesthesia, and there was no evidence that phenol had any anaesthetic effect.

Again, even if it had been possible to establish with any certainty the minimum percolation which must have taken place to produce the results, it would on the evidence be quite impossible to infer even as a matter of reasonable possibility that that percolation must have percolated into the ampoules through visible cracks. It is clear that under the system adopted (which cannot be criticized on the basis of 1947 knowledge) some of the ampoules may have been in the solution for many days or even weeks; for I am unable to accept as accurate Sister Fletcher's recollection that all the ampoules were renewed on October 11, having regard to the contemporary documentary material which was put to her in cross-examination by Mr. Paull.

[10] [1940] A.C. 152, 169; 55 T.L.R. 1004.

Furthermore, having seen Dr. Graham, who gave his evidence in a very careful and forthright manner, and having heard him describe and seen him demonstrate the method of examination to which he subjected the ampoules before aspiration, I find it extremely difficult to believe that he could in the case of two successive patients have missed a visibly cracked ampoule. Accordingly, even if it be true that on proof of damage by phenol, the burden shifted to Dr. Graham to displace the implication of negligence, this burden in my judgment he has successfully discharged by showing that phenol in a significant quantity could percolate into an ampoule otherwise than by visible cracks and remain undetected without negligence on his part.

There remains for me to consider the question of the inadequacy of the colouring agent used in the phenol solution. It was admitted, or, if not admitted, established, that the colouring agent used, namely, 9 mins. of Bordeaux B. red to ½ gallon of solution, was inadequate to detect percolation under theatre conditions; but it was not proved to my satisfaction that a prudent anaestheist in 1947 who did not realize the risk of percolation through invisible cracks should have used a deeper colour tint than that in fact used. Indeed, the contrary seems to be the case.

The only references in medical literature to which I have been referred about the importance of using a colouring agent when sterilizing ampoules by immersion in disinfectant are in two American publications (neither of which would be within the range of the ordinary anaesthetist in this country), namely, (1) Pitkin's Conductive Anaesthesia (1946 ed.), and (2) an article by Drs. Nicholson and Eversole in the Journal of the American Medical Association dated November, 1946.

Nor was it proved that the quantity of phenol which did in these cases percolate into the ampoule (that quantity being unknown) would have been detected by the use of the colouring concentration commonly used in 1947, if there was any such standard. The truth is that Dr. Graham, believing, in common with other competent anaesthetists in 1947, that there was no danger of percolation except through cracks which would be visible under a proper theatre examination, was not relying upon colour except as an additional precaution in the case of ampoules visibly cracked.

In my judgment, on the standard of a reasonably competent anaesthetist in 1947, he cannot be blamed for so acting. It would, in my judgment, be quite wrong to find Dr. Graham guilty of negligence in law for not adopting a technique which might have disclosed the presence of a risk which he, in common with many other competent anaesthetists, did not appreciate as a possibility.

Furthermore, as regards the hospital, as I have reached the conclusion that it is not possible for me by legitimate inference from proved facts to say that the quantity of phenol in fact

1953

ROE
v.
MINISTER
OF HEALTH.

McNair J.

introduced can only have come in by visible cracks, it would be wrong I think for me to find that the cracks, if any, through which the phenol percolated were caused by negligence on the part of the theatre staff. None of the experiments as to formation of cracks in ampoules—whether visible or invisible—lead me to the conclusion that invisible cracks must be caused by, or can only reasonably be attributed to, rough handling by the theatre staff. The experiments, except those spoken to by Mr. Johnson, were all carried out on ampoules of a different texture to the glass used in 1947. Sister Drever and Sister Fletcher were both called before me and demonstrated their method of handling the ampoules. They gave me the impression that they were well trained and deft in the handling of ampoules and were not persons who were likely to handle the ampoules carelessly.

In the result, therefore, the plaintiffs' claims fail both against the hospital and Dr. Graham.

Judgment for defendants.

Solicitors: Gibson & Weldon, for John Whittle, Robinson & Bailey, Manchester; Berrymans; Hempsons; Swepstones.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

1953
Oct. 15.

Lord Goddard C.J., Sellers and Havers JJ.

* REGINA v. JUDGE WILLES.
Ex parte ABBEY NATIONAL BUILDING SOCIETY.

County Court—Jurisdiction—Action for recovery of land—House—Legal charge—Mortgagee's action for possession against surety—Consent to judgment by defendant—County court judge's refusal to hear case—County Courts Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 53), ss. 43, 53; County Court Rules, 1936, Ord. 24, r. 4 (2).

By a legal charge made between the owner of a house as mortgagor, a building society as mortgagee and the defendant as surety, the owner attorned tenant of the house to the building society. The legal charge exceeded £500 and contained a power of sale in the event of subscriptions falling into arrears. The owner died and after her death the defendant was in possession of the house. The subscriptions under the charge having fallen into arrears, the building society brought an action for possession in the county court against the defendant. Before the case was called the defendant orally agreed to consent to judgment. The judge refused to hear the case, holding that he had no jurisdiction since it was an action to enforce a charge. The building society moved for an order of mandamus directing the county court judge to hear and determine the action:—

Held that, (1) no question of jurisdiction arose since by virtue of sections 43 and 53 of the County Courts Act, 1934, any common law action or proceeding in equity could be tried in a county court provided that the parties consented in writing; and that (2) apart from consent, the judge had jurisdiction to hear the case since it was an action for the possession of property forming the security for payment to the plaintiff of principal money or interest as specifically provided for in Ord. 24, r. 4 (2), of the County Court Rules, 1936, and Form 385 thereunder.

---

[Reported by Mrs. E. M. WELLWOOD, Barrister-at-Law.]

MOTION for order of mandamus.

The applicants, the Abbey National Building Society, were the plaintiffs in an action in the Ilkeston County Court in which they claimed possession of a house at Hands Road, Langley Heanor, Derby, which was occupied by the defendant in the action, Alexander Richardson. The plaintiffs alleged that under a legal charge dated May 1, 1950, made between them, one Olive Richardson, the owner of the house, now deceased, and the defendant, Olive Richardson attorned tenant of the house in question to the plaintiffs, and that the plaintiffs were at liberty at any time after the power of sale under the legal charge had arisen to enter on all or any part of the mortgaged property and to determine the tenancy without previous notice. The power of sale arose as the subscriptions covenanted to be paid under the legal charge had fallen three months or more in arrears. The defendant was in possession of the house. He was not the mortgagor or a person who had attorned tenant for the plaintiffs.

On the day of the hearing in the county court the defendant, after taking independent advice at the suggestion of the plaintiffs' solicitor, signified his willingness to consent to judgment, but when the case was called the judge held that he had no jurisdiction to hear the case as it was an action to enforce a charge which exceeded £500, and he subsequently delivered a reserved judgment setting out his reasons. The plaintiffs in the action thereupon moved for an order of mandamus directing the judge to hear and determine the case.

W. W. Stabb for the applicants.

The respondents did not appear and were not represented.

LORD GODDARD C.J., having stated the facts, continued: The court regrets very much that the judge took the action he did because it has put the parties to a great deal of extra expense for no reason whatever. Before the case was called on, the solicitor representing the building society had seen the defendant, who was apparently willing to consent to judgment. The solicitor for the society very properly told the defendant to obtain independent advice from another solicitor. The solicitor whom the defendant consulted advised him to consent to judgment, whereupon the defendant indicated his willingness to do so. As soon as the case was called on, the judge took the point that he had no jurisdiction to hear the case, and he delivered a written judgment setting out certain reasons in which he referred to his judicial experience. It is odd, however, that in the course of his judicial experience he had overlooked the fact that where parties consent to have 1953

REG.
v.
JUDGE WILLES.
Ex parte
ABBEY
NATIONAL BUILDING SOCIETY.

Lord Goddard
C.J.

a case decided in the county court no question of jurisdiction arises.

The present case is nothing but a common law action and section 43 of the County Courts Act, 1934, provides: "If, "with respect to any action assigned for the time being to the "King's Bench Division of the High Court, the parties to the "action agree, by a memorandum signed by them or by their "respective solicitors, that a county court specified in the memo-"randum shall have jurisdiction in the action, that court shall "have jurisdiction to hear and determine the action accordingly." That section deals with common law matters, and section 53 also gives jurisdiction by agreement in equity proceedings; so that the parties, being quite willing for the judge to proceed with the case and give judgment, had only to put their agreement into writing to confer ample jurisdiction on the judge. But the judge did not give the parties a chance of putting their agreement into writing but proceeded to give a judgment saying that he had no jurisdiction to hear the case.

With respect to the judge, we cannot understand why he said he had no jurisdiction. This was an action by a mortgagee. The judge seems to have taken the point that the plaintiffs were seeking to enforce a charge, and although the land was worth less than £100 a year, and he had jurisdiction to entertain an ordinary action for recovery of land, he would not have jurisdiction to enforce a charge. He seems to have entirely overlooked the fact that the matter is expressly provided for by Ord. 24, r. 4, of the County Court Rules, 1936, in much the same way as it is provided for in the High Court Rules. Subrule (2) provides: "In an "action (other than a foreclosure action) in which there is a "claim for possession of any property forming a security for "payment to the plaintiff of any principal money or interest, "with or without a claim for the whole or part of such money or "interest, a judgment for the plaintiff shall include an order to "the plaintiff as set out in Form 385, or if such money or interest "also is ordered, in Form 386, and a copy of the judgment shall "be served on the plaintiff."

When one looks at Form 385 in the County Court Forms, one finds the form of judgment as follows: "It is adjudged that the "Plaintiff do recover from the Defendant possession of the land. ". . . And it is ordered that the Defendant do give the Plaintiff "possession of the said land. . . . And it is ordered that upon the "Defendant paying to the Plaintiff the moneys remaining due to "the Plaintiff upon the security of a mortgage (or charge) . . . "the Plaintiff (subject and without prejudice to the due exercise "of any power of sale for the time being vested in him) do re-"deliver to the Defendant possession of the property subject to "the said mortgage (or charge) and release to the Defendant the "security constituted by the said mortgage (or charge)." That is because the mortgagee has the power of entering into possession of the property, but the mortgagor still has a right to redeem the property by tendering the money to the mortgagee and paying the costs.

1953

REG. v. JUDGE WILLES. Ex parte ABBEY NATIONAL BUILDING SOCIETY.

Lord Goddard C.J.

In the present case one is not concerned with the question of the mortgagor and mortgagee. It is perfectly true that the mortgagee was saying that he was entitled to possession, but the person in possession was a person not a party to the mortgage except as a surety, and he had no right to be in possession. None of the considerations which the judge set out in his judgment has any relevance to this case. It is simply the case of a man who is in possession of property to which the plaintiffs could show a better title. It was most unfortunate that when both parties were before him—and when he was dealing with a defendant in a humble way of business and a small property—that the judge should say, in effect, that the representatives of the building society ought to have brought the case in the High Court. They ought not; they quite properly brought the case in the county court. Quite apart from any consent, the judge had ample jurisdiction to try the case by virtue of the provisions in the County Court Rules. In any case, if the judge had any doubt, all that he had to do was to tell the parties to put their consent in writing. As it is, the costs and expenses of that day have been thrown away, the plaintiffs have been put to the expense of coming to this court to obtain an order of mandamus, and the case must go back to the county court to be re-heard, the position presumably being that when the defendant found that the judge refused to try the case he took the gifts the gods were offering and remained in possession. It is an unfortunate state of affairs, and this order must go.

SELLERS J. I agree.

HAVERS J. I agree.

Application granted.

Solicitors: Butt & Bowyer for A. J. Cash & Sons, Derby.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

F. & K. JABBOUR v. CUSTODIAN OF ISRAELI ABSENTEE PROPERTY.

1953 Oct. 19, 20, 21, 22, 23; Nov. 27.

Pearson J.

Conflict of Laws — Chose in action or debt — Transfer or discharge — Applicability of proper law or lex situs—Situs of chose in action—Insurance—English company—Policy effected in Haifa—Claim—End of Palestine mandate — Claim transferred to custodian by Israeli legislation—Whether assured or custodian entitled—Whether legislation operated extraterritorially—Whether confiscatory.

1953

F. & K. JABBOUR v. CUSTODIAN OF ISRAELI ABSENTEE PROPERTY.

Conflict of Laws—Contract—Proper law—New State—Whether change of proper law effected. Conflict of laws — Foreign legislation. Insurance — Claim — Unliquidated damages — Chose in Action. Company — Residence — Agency abroad. Residence. Evidence — Foreign law—Proof—No witnesses—Decision by judge on foreign enactments. Statute—Extraterritorial effect. "Is"—"Any person "who is . . ."—Effect of regulations. "Moveables"—Chose in action. "Damages"—Insurance claim.

By a policy of insurance dated November 21, 1947, issued by an English insurance company through their agents in Haifa, the company agreed to cover the plaintiffs against loss in respect of a garage owned by them at Haifa. In January, 1948, the garage was blown up during riots, the loss being covered by the policy. Shortly afterwards the plaintiffs left Haifa and went to reside in Egypt where they have remained ever since. In May, 1948, the British mandate in Palestine was terminated and the State of Israel was proclaimed.

By emergency regulations passed in December, 1948, a custodian of absentee properties was appointed and it was the duty of every person to deliver up to the custodian any property of an absentee which was under his control and if such property was a liability towards the absentee, such person was to discharge the liability to the custodian. "Absentee" was defined as any person who was the lawful owner of any property in the area of the regulations and who on and after November 29, 1947, was in, inter alia, Egypt. "Pro-"perty" was stated to include movables, moneys and a right to property.

From December 31, 1949, the insurance company ceased to accept new business in Israel and there was no evidence that the company's agents there had authority to conclude settlements without referring to the company. In 1950 the Absentee Property Law came into force and was in substantially the same terms as the regulations, and provided that the Law should be read as one with the regulations.

In an interpleader action between the plaintiffs and the custodian in which each party claimed to be entitled to the sum admittedly payable under the policy:—

Held, (1) that such an insurance claim was a claim for unliquidated damages; that, as a chose in action, it was situated where it was properly recoverable—where the debtor resided; that where a corporation resided in two or more countries a chose in action was properly recoverable from the corporation in the country where it was primarily payable; that, on the facts, the company, through its agents, resided in Haifa up to December 31, 1949, and that that was the primary place of payment according to the ordinary course of business; and that, accordingly, the chose in action was there situate.

(2) That the proper law of the contract was that of Palestine until the termination of the mandate and thereafter that of Israel, and not, as the plaintiffs contended, thereafter that of Palestine as at the termination of the mandate.

(3) That it was the lex situs, not the proper law, which could alter the title to debts and choses in action.

(4) That the chose in action was a "movable" within the meaning of the regulations, the Law of 1950, and as generally understood, and was therefore "property" within the meaning of the Law and the regulations.

(5) That the Law was confined to property situated in Israel, and if the custodian had to show that the chose in action was caught de novo by the Law, which, on a proper construction of the Law, he did not, he would fail because it was not proved that the chose in action was situated in Israel at any time after the Law came into force; but that the Law, on its true construction, only continued the existing régime under the regulations with alterations.

(6) That accordingly the claim against the company had properly become vested in the custodian, and the plaintiffs failed.

The regulations and Law were measures of economic warfare analogous to the English legislation relating to the custodian of enemy property; neither the regulations nor the Law were confiscatory.

In re Munster [1920] 1 Ch. 268; 36 T.L.R. 173 applied.

INTERPLEADER ACTION.

The Yorkshire Insurance Co. Ld. eventually admitted liability under a policy of insurance, which was issued on November 21, 1947, at the insurance company's Haifa agency in favour of F. & K. Jabbour Brothers, to pay the sum of £5,039 4s. in respect of a loss which had occurred on January 18, 1948. There were rival claims to that sum, first, from F. & K. Jabbour Brothers, as the persons who were insured under the policy; secondly, from the Custodian of Absentee Property of the State of Israel, claiming to be entitled to receive that sum by virtue of Israeli Regulations of December, 1948, and an Israeli Law of March, 1950.

On January 11, 1952, an interpleader order was made, directing that the insurance company should pay into court the amount in dispute after deduction of its costs, and that an issue should be tried between F. & K. Jabbour as plaintiffs and the custodian as defendant. The net sum paid into court, after deduction of the insurance company's costs, was £4,962 19s. 9d.

At an early stage of the hearing it was decided that, on the admitted facts, the plaintiffs in the issue had a prima facie right to receive the amount in dispute and the burden of proof was on the defendant to establish his claim under the Israeli regulations and the Israeli Law.

It was admitted by the plaintiffs that at the time when the policy was effected the plaintiffs were in a part of Palestine which is now in the State of Israel, and that the application for the policy was made by or on behalf of the plaintiffs through the insurance company's agents and the grant of the policy was made by the company through their agents who were at the time in a part of Palestine which is now in the State of Israel.

On January 18, 1948, the plaintiffs' garage and workshop at Haifa were mined and blown up, and the contents to which the policy related were destroyed, the destruction being a loss covered by the policy.

On March 26, 1948, the plaintiffs left Haifa and went to Egypt, where they have resided ever since.

At midnight of May 14/15, 1948, the British Mandate in Palestine was terminated and the State of Israel was proclaimed. On December 2, 1948, the Israeli Minister of Finance made

1953

F. & K. JABBOUR v. CUSTODIAN OF ISRAELI ABSENTEE PROPERTY.

Emergency Regulations concerning Properties of Absentees, and on March 31, 1950, the Absentee Property Law came into force. By both the regulations and the Law, property of an absentee, as defined, became vested in the custodian.

The plaintiffs claimed a declaration that the sum in question was due from the insurance company to the plaintiffs under the policy. By his points of defence the custodian alleged that the policy was effected in the following circumstances: (a) the property in respect of which it was granted; (b) the plaintiffs; (c) the making of the application for the policy; (d) the agents of the insurers to which the application was made, and (e) the making of the agreement for and the granting of the policy by the insurers through their agents, was or were in a part of what was Palestine which is now in the territory of the State of Israel. It was claimed, therefore, that the policy was to be governed by the law of Palestine up to May 15, 1948, and subsequently by the law of Israel. Alternatively it was claimed that the local situation of any debt payable by the insurers under the policy was the part of Palestine which was now Israel. It was pleaded that the plaintiffs were at all material times "absentees" within the meaning of the regulations and the Law and that the sum due under the policy and the rights against the insurance company were vested in the defendant by virtue of those regulations and the Law.

John Megaw Q.C. and I. C. Baillieu for the plaintiffs.
Leonard Caplan for the custodian.

The cases referred to in argument appear in the judgment.

Cur. adv. vult.

Nov. 27. PEARSON J. read a judgment in which he stated the facts and continued: The plaintiffs' counsel, for the purpose of one aspect of the many-sided argument in this case, desired to contend that the regulations and the Law were confiscatory. The defendant's counsel objected that this point was not open to the plaintiffs because it had not been pleaded, but he also said that he would not object to an amendment of the points of reply to cover this point, if he were then allowed to plead and prove, for the purpose of showing that the Israeli legislation was analogous to trading-with-the-enemy legislation, that there had been a period of armed fighting followed by a period of uneasy relations between Israel and the Arab states.

The plaintiffs' counsel contended that no amendment of the points of reply was required, because it was for the defendant to prove that the regulations and Law were of such character as to be recognizable and enforceable by the courts of this country.

It appeared to me, and in effect I gave a ruling, that, in view of the attitude of the defendant's counsel, it was not necessary to have the question of pleading, and the burden of proof argued and decided or for evidence to be called, because the broad facts of the relations between Israel and the Arab states were well known to everybody and could be judicially noticed, although evidence would be required if it were necessary to establish the dates of commencement and cessation of hostilities of the proper legal or diplomatic description of the relations at any time between Israel and the Arab states. At a later stage the defendant's counsel referred to McQuaker v. Goddard,[1] and for the purpose of clarifying and amplifying the judicial knowledge produced for inspection certain United Nations documents which supplied the dates and confirmed the facts which had been previously mentioned.

As questions will arise under the regulations and the Law as to whether the plaintiffs' claim against the insurance company, which according to the defendant's contention became vested in him, was "property" within the meaning of the relevant provisions, and whether it was a "mere right to claim "damages," it is necessary to consider the legal nature of the claim and what, if any, situation it had at the material times.

It is established by many decided cases that such a claim is a claim for unliquidated damages: Grant v. Royal Exchange Assurance Co.[2]; Hardcastle v. Netherwood[3]; Castelli v. Boddington.[4] (Assumption on a valued policy of marine insurance. Averment of partial loss by perils of the sea; breach; non-payment thereof.) Luckie v. Bushby[5]; Lloyd v. Fleming[6]; Pellas v. Neptune Marine Insurance Co.[7]; Swan & Cleland's Graving Dock and Slipway Co. v. Maritime Insurance Co. and Croshaw[8]; Baker v. Adam[9]; William Pickersgill & Sons Ld. v. London and Provincial Marine and General Insurance Co. Ld.[10]

Such a claim is unliquidated because the plaintiff has to prove the amount, and even after an adjustment of the amount the plaintiff (unless he chooses to sue on an account stated) must still prove the amount, using the adjustment as evidence because it involves an admission by the insurer, but such evidence might be rebutted, for instance, by proof of a mistake—Luckie v. Bushby.[11] But the word "damages" is puzzling and seems to be used in a rather unusual sense, because the right to indemnity arises, not by reason of any wrongful act or omission on the part of the insurer (who did not promise that the loss would not happen or that he would prevent it) but only under his promise to indemnify the insured in the event of a loss. The usual meaning of the word "damages" is as stated in Halsbury's Laws of England, 2nd ed., vol. 10, p. 82, where it is said: "Damages may be defined as the pecuniary compensation which

[1] [1940] 1 K.B. 687, 700; 56 T.L.R. 409; [1940] 1 All E.R. 471.
[2] (1816) 5 M. & S. 439.
[3] (1821) 5 B. & A. 93.
[4] (1852) 1 E. & B. 66.
[5] (1853) 13 C.B. 864.
[6] (1872) L.R. 7 Q.B. 299.
[7] (1879) 5 C.P.D. 34.
[8] [1907] 1 K.B. 116, 123; 23 T.L.R. 101.
[9] (1910) 15 Com.Cas. 227.
[10] [1912] 3 K.B. 614, 622; 28 T.L.R. 591.
[11] 13 C.B. 864.

1953

F. & K. JABBOUR v. CUSTODIAN OF ISRAELI ABSENTEE PROPERTY.

Pearson J.

"the law awards to a person for the injury he has sustained by "reason of the act or default of another, whether such act or "default is a breach of contract or a tort; or, put more shortly, "damages are the recompense given by process of law to a "person for the wrong that another has done him."

On the other hand there is an interesting footnote in Mayne on Damages, 11th ed., p. 1. The first sentence of the text is: "Damages are the pecuniary satisfaction obtainable by success "in an action." The footnote states: "Mayne's definition was "intentionally wide to bring within the scope of his work actions "for the price of goods, amounts payable under policies of "insurance, dividends in bankruptcy and other cases where "money is recovered otherwise than as compensation for a "wrong. Lawyers generally distinguish, however, between debt "and damages. Where under a contract, instrument or statute "a person is entitled to a sum certain, either ascertained or "capable of being ascertained, the sum constitutes a debt and "can be recovered as such: but failure to pay a debt when "due is a wrong and an action may be framed either for the "debt or for damages."

The explanation of the use of the expression "unliquidated "damages" to describe a claim for an indemnity under an insurance policy may be wholly or partly afforded by the old form of pleading in assumpsit, alleging a breach by non-payment, as in Castelli v. Boddington.[12] But as the only wrong admitted by the insurer is his failure to pay a sum due under a contract, the amount of which has to be ascertained, he seems to be in much the same position as the person who owes and has failed to pay a reasonable price for goods sold and delivered or a reasonable remuneration for work done or services rendered. The claim is for unliquidated damages, but the word "damages" is used in a somewhat unusual sense.

The claim for indemnity under an insurance policy after a loss has occurred is not a proper subject for a garnishee order: Randall v. Lithgow[13]; Israelson v. Dawson (Port of Manchester Insurance Co. Ld. Garnishees),[14] where Scrutton L.J. said[15]: "I "have come to the conclusion that as between assured and "underwriter there is no debt. There may be a breach of "contract or an obligation to indemnify, but there is nothing "which can be called a debt or an indebtedness within the "meaning of Ord. 45, r. 1." But such a claim for indemnity is a chose in action which can be assigned. Lloyd v. Fleming[16] and Swan's case[17]; Green v. Brand[18]; English and Scottish Mercantile Investment Co. v. Brunton[19]; Bank of Toronto v. St. Lawrence Fire Insurance Co.[20]; A. S. Tallina v. Estonian

[12] 1 E. & B. 66.
[13] (1884) 12 Q.B.D. 525.
[14] [1933] 1 K.B. 301.
[15] Ibid. 304.
[16] L.R. 7 Q.B. 299.
[17] [1907] 1 K.B. 116.
[18] (1884) Cab. & El. 410; 1 T.L.R. 79.
[19] [1892] 2 Q.B. 700; 8 T.L.R. 772.
[20] [1903] A.C. 59.

State Steamship Line[21]; Halsbury's Laws of England, 2nd ed., vol. 18, p. 495, note (g).

Reference was made to condition No. 14 of the policy, giving the insurance company an option to reinstate, and to condition No. 11, requiring the insured to give due notice of his claim with proper particulars, and afterwards to give all such further particulars and documents and information as might be reasonably required by or on behalf of the insurance company, and, providing that "no claim under this policy shall be possible "unless the terms of this condition have been complied with." But the correspondence in this case from July 7, 1948, to December 22, 1949, shows (1) that the insurance company never suggested that they wished to exercise their option to reinstate the property, and they impliedly elected not to do so; (2) that the plaintiffs reported the loss to the insurance company's Haifa agent on the day of the loss, and a survey report was prepared after their expert had visited the site and was forwarded to head office in England, and the insurance company never asked for any further particulars or documents or information, and the amount of the indemnity was agreed between the plaintiffs and the insurance company by letters of March 29, October 18 and November 11, 1949. Under condition 11 the right to be indemnified by a payment of money must accrue at some time and, in my judgment, it had accrued at any rate by November 11, 1949, if not by some earlier date.

Next to be considered is the situation of the chose in action. It is established by the decided cases that not only debts, but also other choses in action, are for legal purposes localized and are situated where they are properly recoverable and are properly recoverable where the debtor resides: Commissioner of Stamps v. Hope[22]; In re Maudslay, Sons & Field[23]; Rex v. Lovitt[24]; Favorke v. Steinkopff[25]; Swiss Bank Corporation v. Boehmische Industrial Bank[26]; New York Life Assurance Co. v. Public Trustee[27]; Sedgwick Collins & Co. v. Rossia Insurance Co. of Petrograd[28]; England, Scottish and Australian Bank Ld. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners[29]; Sutherland v. Administrator of German Property,[30] where the claim was against English shipowners for damages for breach of contract or in tort, and it was held to be a chose in action situated in England. The Tallina case,[31] where the claim was for payment under an English policy of marine insurance and was considered to be a chose in

[21] (1947) 80 Ll.L.Rep. 99, 111, 113, 114.
[22] [1891] A.C. 476, 481.
[23] [1900] Ch. 602, 609; 16 T.L.R. 228.
[24] [1912] A.C. 212, 218; 28 T.L.R. 41.
[25] [1922] 1 Ch. 174, 178.
[26] [1923] 1 K.B. 673, 678, 681, 682, 684; 39 T.L.R. 179.
[27] [1924] 2 Ch. 101; 40 T.L.R. 430.
[28] [1926] 1 K.B. 1, 15; 41 T.L.R. 663.
[29] [1932] A.C. 238, 243, 246, 248, 252, 256, 258; 48 T.L.R. 170.
[30] [1934] 1 K.B. 423; 50 T.L.R. 107.
[31] 80 Ll.L.Rep. 99.

1953

F. & K. JABBOUR v. CUSTODIAN OF ISRAELI ABSENTEE PROPERTY.

Pearson J.

action situated in England: In re Banque des Marchands de Moscou.[32]

A corporation resides in a country if it carries on business there at a fixed place of business, and, in the case of an agency, the principal test to be applied in determining whether the corporation is carrying on business at the agency is to ascertain whether the agent has authority to enter into contracts on behalf of the corporation without submitting them to the corporation for approval: Saccharin Corporation Ld. v. Chemische Fabrik Von Heyden Aktiengesellschaft[33]; Okura & Co. Ld. v. Forsbacka Jernverks Aktiebolag[34]; Thames and Mersey Marine Insurance Co. v. Societa di Navigazione A Vapore Del Lloyd Austriaco.[35]

On the facts I hold that the insurance company is proved to have had a residence in Haifa up to December 31, 1949, but is not proved either to have had or not to have had a residence there after that date.

Where a corporation has residence in two or more countries, the debt or chose in action is properly recoverable, and therefore situated, in that one of those countries where the sum payable is primarily payable, and that is where it is required to be paid by an express or implied provision of the contract or, if there is no such provision, where it would be paid according to the ordinary course of business; Rex v. Lovitt[36]; New York Life Insurance Company v. Public Trustee.[37]

On the evidence in this case the insurance policy was issued in Palestine at the Haifa agency and was in respect of property situated in Haifa, and there was an option for the insurance company to reinstate the property and the sum to be paid was not to exceed a sum stated in Palestine currency, and any claim under such a policy would, according to the insurance company's ordinary course of business, have been settled by a payment at the Haifa agency. When all these facts are taken into account it may be that there should be read into the policy an implied term that payment should be made in Palestine currency as currency and, therefore, in Palestine, being the only country in which that currency is legal tender.

If there is no such term of the policy, still the natural and primary place of payment according to the ordinary course of business and the inferred expectations of the parties when the policy was issued is Haifa. I hold that the chose in action was properly recoverable, and therefore, situated in Haifa up to December 31, 1949, but its situation after that date is uncertain.

The defendant relies upon the regulations of December, 1948, and the Law of March, 1950. The defendant's notice to admit facts, dated October 3, 1952, set out, inter alia, the following facts: "(1) That the document entitled the Law and Administration

[32] [1952] 1 T.L.R. 739; [1952] 1 All E.R. 1269.

[33] [1911] 2 K.B. 516, 522, 524, 526.

[34] [1914] 1 K.B. 715, 724; 30 T.L.R. 242.

[35] (1914) 30 T.L.R. 475.

[36] [1912] A.C. 212; 28 T.L.R. 41.

[37] [1924] 2 Ch. 101; 40 T.L.R. 430.

"Ordinance 5708–1948 Emergency Regulations Concerning Pro-"perties of Absentees, attached to this notice with annexed "copy certificate by Haim Herman Cohn, then Attorney-"General of Israel, and dated October 18, 1950, is a true and "accurate translation from the Hebrew language of a law passed "by the competent legislative authority of Israel. (2) That the "said law was a valid and effectual part of the law of Israel "from December 2, 1948, until March 31, 1950. (3) That the "document entitled the Absentees' Property Law 5710–1950, "attached to this notice with annexed copy certificate by Haim "Herman Cohn, then Attorney-General of Israel, and dated "December 13, 1950, is a true and accurate translation from the "Hebrew language of a law passed by the competent legislative "authority of Israel. (4) That the said law is and has been a "valid effectual part of the law of Israel since March 31, 1950."

It was assumed and expressly or impliedly agreed by counsel for both parties at the hearing and should be taken as established, that all the facts Nos. 1 to 4 are admitted, and, therefore, that the regulations were a valid and effectual part of the law of Israel from December 2, 1948, to March 31, 1950, and that the law has been a valid and effectual part of the law of Israel since March 31, 1950, and that the translations supplied are true and accurate.

No witness was called to give expert evidence of Israeli law. The plaintiffs' counsel did not raise any objection on that ground, or contend that the defendant necessarily failed to prove his case by reason only of no such witness having been called. When I asked what the position was in that respect, I understood that both counsel on behalf of the parties desired that the regulations and the law should be construed and applied without expert assistance, and it was their view or submission that that course could properly be taken. I have thought it right to verify that by reference to the authorities, and for that purpose have considered the following: Concha v. Murrieta [38]; Russian Commercial and Industrial Bank v. Comptoir d'Escompte de Mulhouse [39]; Princess Paly Olga v. Weisz [40]; Lazard Brothers & Co. v. Midland Bank Ld.[41]; De Beeche v. South American Stores Ld.[42]; In re Cohn [43]; The Tallina case,[44] at pp. 107, 113 and 116, and Dicey on Conflict of Laws, 6th ed., at pp. 73 and 868.

I think it does appear from the reports of In re Cohn [45] that in that case Uthwatt J. construed and applied a provision of the German Code without having had any oral evidence of German law, and if that is so it affords a precedent for this case. Also there is a passage in Dicey on Conflict of Laws, p. 868,

[38] (1889) 40 Ch.D. 543, 550, 554.

[39] [1923] 2 K.B. 630, 643; reversed on appeal [1925] A.C. 112; 40 T.L.R. 837.

[40] [1929] 1 K.B. 718.

[41] [1933] A.C. 289, 298; 49 T.L.R. 94.

[42] [1935] A.C. 148, 158; 51 T.L.R. 189.

[43] [1945] 1 Ch. 5.

[44] 80 Ll.L.Rep. 99, 107, 113, 116.

[45] [1945] 1 Ch. 5.

1953

F. & K. JABBOUR v. CUSTODIAN OF ISRAELI ABSENTEE PROPERTY.

Pearson J.

where it is said: "How far can judges examine foreign laws "for themselves? On this point it is impossible to lay down any "absolute rule, the courts wisely having avoided any pronounce-"ment which might unduly fetter their discretion. They "recognize as obvious the impossibility in normal cases of judges "forming any useful opinion on foreign law except on the basis "of expert evidence, but by a prudent exercise of common-"sense they have shown themselves willing to waive proof by "experts where such is manifestly unnecessary, as, for instance, "on points which must be formally proved, but need really no "expert testimony, which may be costly or difficult to procure."

In the circumstances I think it right in accordance with the wishes of the parties to face the task of construing and applying the regulations and the Law without the assistance of an expert in Israeli law and subject also to the disadvantage that the documents which I have to construe and apply are translations from the original Hebrew text.

I did not feel entitled or qualified to look through volumes of Palestine or Israeli ordinances or statutes or law reports as they were not in evidence and I would not know which of the ordinances or statutes were still in force or which of the reported decisions were still good law at any material time. It must be assumed that the Israeli rules of construction are the same as the English rules of construction.

On December 2, 1948, the Israeli Minister of Finance, by virtue of his powers conferred on him by section 9 (a) of the Law and Administration Ordinance 5708—1948, made the Emergency Regulations and these regulations remained in force until March, 1950. I must first refer to the word "absentee," which is defined in regulation 1. "In these Regulations (a) 'absentee' "means—(1) any person who is a lawful owner of any property "which is in the area of these regulations or enjoys or holds it, "whether by himself or through some other person, and who, "on the 16th Kislev, 5708 (November 29, 1947) or thereafter—"(a) was a citizen or subject of the Lebanon, Egypt, Syria, "Saudia, Trans-Jordan, Iraq or the Yemen, or (b) was in any "one of the above-mentioned countries or in any part of Palestine "outside the area of these regulations."

In my opinion the word "is" at the beginning of that definition in the words "any person who is a lawful owner of "any property which is in the area of these regulations" means at any time when the regulations are in force. At some time in or before November, 1949, as I have already held, the plaintiffs' claim became a chose in action and it was situate within the area of the regulations as defined in paragraph (1) of regulation 1, that is to say, the area within which the law of the State of Israel applies. It is not proved that the plaintiffs had any other property in the area of the regulations at any time in the period, beginning, presumably, on December 2, 1948, when the regulations were in force. The plaintiffs were in Egypt from about March, 1948, onwards. Therefore, they fall within the definition of "absentee" if, and only if, the chose in action was "property" within the meaning of these regulations.

Paragraph (c) of regulation 1 provides that "property" includes immovables and movables, moneys, a right in property, whether immediate or contingent, and goodwill. Although in each of the other paragraphs of this regulation the word "means" is used, so that there is a definition, in paragraph (c) the word used is "includes," and it seems to follow that the provision in paragraph (c) is not intended to be a definition, or at any rate not a complete definition.

I should have thought "moneys" would be "movables," and yet they are both mentioned. It looks as if the draftsman was trying to make sure of covering particular types of property, as to which there might be a doubt, rather than to give an exact and comprehensive definition. Mr. Megaw for the plaintiffs argued that, because "moneys" and "a right in property" (whatever that may be) and "goodwill" are specifically mentioned, the word "movables" should be given a restricted meaning, confined to physical movables or chattels. The word "movables" is not, so to speak, indigenous to English law, which has its own native distinction between real property and personal property, but the word "movables" has become known in English law through private international law, and normally is used to include both "tangible movables," such as chattels, and "intangible movables," such as choses in action: In re Maudslay, Sons v. Field[46]; In re Hoyles[47]; Dicey's Conflict of Laws, 6th ed., pp. 557–8; Cheshire on Private International Law, pp. 426–7; Martin Wolff on Private International Law, 2nd ed., p. 502.

It is inherently improbable that regulations of this character would intend to leave unaffected a class of property so obvious and so important as debts and choses in action, but there are two other regulations which seem decisive on this question. Regulation 7 provides that: "It shall be the duty of every person "to deliver up to the custodian any property of an absentee "which is under his control; and if such property is a liability "or undertaking towards the absentee, such person shall dis-"charge such liability to the custodian or carry out such "undertaking towards him."

There is also regulation 22 (a) (2), which provides: "No "person shall pay to any person other than the custodian a debt "or fulfil an obligation which are vested property, without the "consent in writing of the custodian whether before or after the "act; if the Minister of Finance published an order in the "Official Gazette requiring such consent before the act, thence-"forth any consent of the custodian after the act shall be "invalid."

[46] [1900] 1 Ch. 602, 609, 610; 16 T.L.R. 228.

[47] [1911] 1 Ch. 179, 183; 27 T.L.R. 131.

1953

F. & K. JABBOUR v. CUSTODIAN OF ISRAELI ABSENTEE PROPERTY.

Pearson J.

Having regard to the ordinary scope of the word "movables" and to the inherent improbability that debts and choses in action would be left unaffected by such regulations, and to the language of regulation 7 and regulation 22 (a) (2), I hold, after taking into account Mr. Megaw's argument, that the chose in action—the claim against the insurance company—was a "movable" and therefore "property" for the purposes of the regulations. [His Lordship referred to further provisions in the regulations and continued:] I hold that under these regulations the chose in action—the claim against the insurance company—became vested in the custodian. But it now remains to consider, inter alia, whether there is any alteration of that position by virtue of the Law of 1950. The Law of 1950 provides, by section 37: "The provisions of the Law shall replace the provisions of the "Emergency Regulations concerning Properties of Absentees, "5709–1948, as from the 13th day of Nisan 5710 (March 31, "1950); but this Law shall be read as one with those regulations, "and for this purpose, those regulations shall be deemed to be a "law which has been amended by this Law." Then section 38 provides: "Any act done before the 13th day of Nisan 5710 "(March 31, 1950), which would have been validly done if, at "the time it was done, this Law as it stands on the 13th day "of Nisan, 5710 (March 31, 1950), had been in force, shall be "deemed to have been validly done."

Comparison of the Law with the regulations shows that the general effect is substantially the same, the same matters being dealt with and on similar grounds, though there are many changes of wording and details. [His Lordship referred to various sections of the Law, held that the chose in action was "property" within the meaning of the Law and continued:]

The next question is whether the Law in general applies to property situated anywhere in the world, or only to property situated in Israel. First, there is a rule that legislation should be construed as applying only within its proper territorial limits, unless the contrary intention appears. Maxwell on Statutes, 10th ed., p. 144; Bank Voor Handel En Scheepvaart N.V. v. Slatford[48]; Attorney-General v. Campbell[49]; Colquhoun v. Brooks[50]; Regina v. Jameson[51]; Tomalin v. Pearson.[52]

Secondly, in view of the definition of "absentee," absurd results would follow if the vesting was in general applied to property outside Israel. Suppose that a person living in Egypt has £10,000 worth of property in Egypt, £10,000 worth of property in America and £10,000 worth of property in Australia, and suppose that he paid a short visit to Palestine or Israel at any time after November 29, 1947, taking (as he must) some personal property with him. Then all the property held by him

[48] [1953] 1 Q.B. 248, 258.
[49] (1872) L.R. 5 H.L. 524, 531.
[50] (1889) 14 App.Cas. 493, 503, 511.
[51] [1896] 2 Q.B. 425; 12 T.L.R. 551.
[52] [1909] 2 K.B. 61, 64; 25 T.L.R. 477.

in Egypt, America and Australia would vest in the custodian and became subject to all the provisions of the Law. That unreasonable result is, of course, not conclusive, because excessive width of legislation can be rectified by administrative action in this case by the custodian releasing the property. But that example is only an illustration of the many difficulties that would arise.

Thirdly, the provisions of a number of the sections indicate an intention to deal only with property situated in Palestine, at any rate so far as immovable property is concerned.

Fourthly, the evident scope of the Law considered as a whole is to regulate ownership of and dealings with property in Israel of persons who are absentees as defined. I hold that in general, subject to some possible exceptions, the Law does not apply to property situated outside Israel.

A further point is that, even if the Law upon its true construction purported to apply to property situated anywhere in the world, the courts of this country would refuse to recognize it as having such a wide operation or, in general, as applying to property situated outside Israel: The Tallina case.[53]

Accordingly, if the defendant had to show that the chose in action was, so to speak, caught de novo by the Law of 1950, he would fail to do so, because it is not proved that the chose in action was situated in Israel at any time after the Law came into force. But the next question is whether the defendant does have to show that the chose in action was caught de novo by the Law of 1950. Section 37 of the Law is important and needs careful consideration: "The provisions of the Law shall replace "the provisions of the Emergency Regulations concerning "Properties of Absentees, 5709–1948, as from the 13th day of "Nisan 5710 (March 31, 1950); but this Law shall be read as "one with those regulations, and for this purpose, those regula-"tions shall be deemed to be a law which has been amended "by this Law."

This section is entirely dealing with and is the only provision dealing with the matter of transition from the regulations to the Law. In my opinion the words "this Law shall be read as one "with those regulations," taken in their context, do not merely provide a canon of construction, but also provide a continuity of the régime. The next words are: "and for this purpose these "regulations shall be deemed to be a law which has been "amended by this Law." Therefore, the régime under the regulations does not perish but continues subject to the amendments introduced by the Law. The Law does not create a new régime starting again from the beginning; it continues with alterations on an existing régime. That interpretation of section 37 is supported by a comparison of the provisions of the regulations with the provisions of the Law, showing that in substance the Law does not abolish or radically alter the system set up by the regulations but only makes minor alterations in it.

[53] 80 Ll.L.Rep. 99.

1953

F. & K. JABBOUR v. CUSTODIAN OF ISRAELI ABSENTEE PROPERTY.

Pearson J.

It follows, in my opinion, that the provision for continued vesting, contained in regulation 5 (d)* of the regulations and carried on with only minor alterations by section 4 (c) of the Law,† has the effect of keeping the chose in action continuously vested in the custodian notwithstanding the replacement of the regulations by the Law. That is a proper extra-territorial operation of the Law. Personal property, which has become vested in a State department, or official of some country by legislation of that country, while the property was situated in that country, does not cease to be so vested by reason of its subsequent removal to another country. Princess Paley Olga v. Weisz.[54] I should add that in the present case it is not proved that the chose in action had ceased to be situated in Israel by March 31, 1950, or at any time.

I therefore hold that the defendant succeeds in this issue, because the chose in action became vested in the defendant under the Regulations of 1948 and remained vested in the defendant under the Law of 1950.

It is right, however, to say something about a contention of Mr. Caplan, to which much argument was directed on both sides, because if Mr. Caplan's contention is correct the case should be decided in his favour on a different ground. He contended that the law by which a debt or chose in action can properly be affected (whether by discharge or modification or transfer of the right) is the proper law of the contract, rather than the lex situs. Mr. Megaw contended, inter alia, that the only law by which a debt or chose in action can properly be so affected is the lex situs.

The problem arises because a debt or chose in action can be regarded in two ways: (1) it can be regarded as properly movable property, and when so regarded it naturally falls under the lex situs; (2) it can be regarded as a still unperformed obligation under a contract, and therefore it might be still subject to the proper law of the contract and liable to be discharged or altered by that law. A legislative provision that a debt or a chose in action owing to A shall be discharged by payment to B could be regarded either as involving a transfer of the ownership of the property from A to B, or as an alteration of the contractual obligation by substituting B for A and as the obligee.

I am inclined to think that there is a short answer to Mr. Caplan's contention in this case. The Israeli Law of 1950 is, on the face of it, a law dealing with property and not with contract, and therefore it should be construed as applying only

* Regulation 5 (d): "Vested property—(1) shall remain vested property so long as it has not become relinquished property under Regulation 30 or released property under Regulation 29; (2) the Custodian shall be entitled to receive it wherever he may find it."

† S. 4 (c): "Vested property—(1) shall remain vested property so long as it has not become released property under section 28 or ceased to be the property of an absentee under section 27; (2) may be taken over by the Custodian wherever he may find it."

[54] [1929] 1 K.B. 718.

within those territorial limits which are appropriate to property legislation. Accordingly, an initial vesting under that law could only be of a property situated in Israel, and if Mr. Caplan had to show that this chose in action was caught de novo by the Law of 1950, he would fail to do so for want of proof that the chose in action was situated in Israel at or after the time when the Law came into force.

I have, however, considered more generally the authorities relied on by Mr. Caplan and Mr. Megaw in support of their respective contentions. I will take first the principal authorities on Mr. Caplan's side. In the early cases to which he referred either no distinction or no clear distinction was drawn between the proper law and the lex situs, the distinction being avoided by the use of such phrases as "a debt or liability arising in any country." On this point, the beginning of Lord Ellenborough's judgment in Potter v. Brown [55] should be compared with the latter part of his judgment, and with the judgment of Lawrence J. in the same case. In Ellis v. M'Henry [56] the judgment of the court, which comprised Bovill C.J., Willes, Keating and Brett JJ., was delivered by Bovill C.J. Referring to certain previous authorities he said [57]: "In the first place there is no "doubt that a debt or liability arising in any country may be "discharged by the laws of that country, and that such a dis-"charge, if it extinguishes the debt or liability, and does not "merely interfere with the remedies or course of procedure to "enforce it, will be an effectual answer to the claim, not only in "the courts of that country, but in every other country. This "is the law of England, and is a principle of private international "law adopted in other countries. It was laid down by Lord "King, in Burrows v. Jemino"[58]; by Lord Mansfield in Ballan-"tine v. Golding [59]; by Lord Ellenborough in Potter v. Brown [60]; "by the Privy Council, in Odwin v. Forbes,[61] and in Quelin v. "Moisson [62]; and by the Court of Queen's Bench in the case of "Gardiner v. Houghton [63] and by the Court of Exchequer "Chamber, in the elaborate judgment delivered by my brother "Willes, in Phillips v. Eyre." [64]

But there is also a passage where he said [65]: "There are nice "distinctions which may sometimes arise where, though a con-"tract is made in one country, it is to be performed or to take "effect in another; or is made under circumstances which show "that it is intended to be subject to some law other than that "of the place in which it was made; Lloyd v. Guibert.[66] But "no such point arises in these cases, as the contracts out of [55] (1804) 5 East 124.

[56] (1871) L.R. 6 C.P. 228.
[57] Ibid. 234.
[58] (1726) 2 Str. 733.
[59] (1784) 1 Cooke's Bankruptcy Laws, 8th ed., p. 487.
[60] 5 East 124.
[61] Buck 57.
[62] (1828) 1 Knapp 265.
[63] (1862) 2 B. & S. 743.
[64] (1869) L.R. 4 Q.B. 225.
[65] L.R. 6 C.P. 237.
[66] 6 B. & S. 100.

1953

F. & K. JABBOUR v. CUSTODIAN OF ISRAELI ABSENTEE PROPERTY.

Pearson J.

"which these debts arose were both made and to be performed "in Upper Canada."

In Perry v. Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States of America[67] the plaintiff had, in May, 1903, taken out a 20-year endowment life assurance policy for 10,000 roubles, which were payable at the defendants' office in St. Petersburg, and the terms of an imperial decree provided that all disputes which might arise in connection with the assurance operations carried on by the defendants in Russia should be settled according to the Russian laws and in the Russian courts of justice. On November 18, 1919, the Soviet Government issued a Decree of Cancellation of which the material provisions were: "(1) Life assurance "in all its forms in the R.S.F.S.R. shall be abolished; (2) all "contracts entered into with insurance companies and savings "banks for the purpose of life insurance are annulled; (3) all "insurance premiums shall be transferred to the revenue of the "Treasury." Branson J. said[68]: "The first question is what is "the proper law of the contract. In my opinion there is no "doubt about the answer. The proper law of the contract is the "law of Russia. This appears plainly from condition 7." Later he said[69]: "The proper law of the contract being Russian, the "next question, which is one of fact, to be decided upon the "evidence, is what has been the effect of the Soviet legislation "upon the contract." After considering the evidence as to Russian law, he said[70]: "Upon these grounds I accept the "evidence as to Russian law of Professor Sack and Mr. Konkie-"vitch, and find, in accordance with it, that the contract "between the plaintiff and the defendants was annulled "by the Cancellation Decree, if, indeed, there was any con-"tractual nexus left in existence between them after the "Monopolisation Decree came into force in December, 1918, "and the plaintiff cannot recover upon it."

That is a clear decision that a contract can be annulled, the contractual nexus between the parties can be dissolved, by legislation of the country whose law is the proper law of the contract. It is to be observed, however, that as no payment would have become due under the policy before the year 1923, and the contract was annulled in 1919, if not earlier, no chose in action had arisen, so there was nothing to which any lex situs could apply.

In Rex v. International Trustee for the Protection of Bondholders Aktiengesellschaft[71] the headnote reads: "In 1917 the "British Government made an offer in New York of 5½ per cent. "secured loan convertible gold notes, the principal and interest "of which and of the bonds into which they might be converted "were to be payable, without deduction for British taxes, in "New York in United States gold coin, or, at the option of [67] (1929) 45 T.L.R. 468.

[68] Ibid. 470.
[69] Ibid.
[70] Ibid. 473.
[71] [1937] A.C. 500; [1937] 2 All E.R. 164.

"the holder, in London, in sterling at the fixed rate of 4·86½ "dollars to the pound. The offer was made 'subject to the "'approval by our counsel of necessary formalities.' The "respondents were the holders of a bond, in exchange for a Note, "by which the British Government promised to pay one "thousand dollars on February 1, 1937, either in New York, "at the office or agency to be maintained there by them, in gold "coin of the United States of the standard of weight and fineness "existing in February, 1917, or in London in sterling money at "the fixed rate of 4·86½ dollars to the pound. The payment "was to be made without deduction for any British taxes. In "1933 by a joint resolution of the Congress of the United States, "which it was admitted had the force of law, it was provided "that every provision contained in any obligation which pur-"ported to give the obligee a right to require payment in gold "or a particular kind of coin or currency, or in an amount in "money of the United States measured thereby, was against "public policy, and that any such obligation should be discharged "upon payment, dollar for dollar, in any coin or currency which "at the time of payment was legal tender for public or private "debts. On a petition of right by the respondents claiming "that they were entitled to be paid such a sum in dollars as "would equal in value the number of dollars of the standard "specified in the bond—namely, of the weight and fineness "which was prescribed by the law of the United States existing "in February, 1917:—Held, (1) that a consideration of all the "circumstances relating to the offer of the loan—the fact that "the notes were issued in the first instance in the United States, "were expressed to be in terms of United States currency, and "were to be paid on one option in New York on a value estimated "by reference to United States coins—pointed to the law of the "United States being the proper law of the contract; and (2) "that the joint resolution of Congress had the statutory effect "of requiring the bond to be discharged upon payment of dollar "for dollar of the nominal amount."

That shows that the obligation under a bond could before its maturity be converted by legislation of the country of the proper law from what may be called a "piece of gold" obligation into what may be called a "simple currency" obligation. But that case was concerned, solely or at any rate primarily, with debts falling due after the date of the legislation, and does not show what effect, if any, such legislation would be allowed to have on debts already accrued before the coming into force of the legislation.

In Kahler v. Midland Bank Ld.[72] the assumed facts were that the securities were held by a London bank to the order of a Czechoslovakian bank, and the owner had no contractual relation with the London bank, but had a contract of bailment with the Czechoslovakian bank. The contract of bailment was made in

[72] [1950] A.C. 24; 65 T.L.R. 663; [1949] 2 All E.R. 621.

1953

F. & K. JABBOUR v. CUSTODIAN OF ISRAELI ABSENTEE PROPERTY.

Pearson J.

Czechoslovakia and its proper law was Czechoslovakian law; at the time of the contract and at all times thereafter a system of exchange control was in force in Czechoslovakia, and the effect of that was that by Czechoslovakian law the owner never became entitled to take possession of the securities, because the consent of the National Bank of Czechoslovakia was required and not obtained; therefore, the owner never had a right to take possession of the securities and his claim in detinue against the London bank failed. That case does not deal with the position which would have arisen if the owner had at one time had under his contract a right to take immediate possession of the securities in England and supervening Czechoslovakian legislation had purported to deprive him of that right.

There is also Lorentzen v. Lydden & Co. Ld.,[73] but the decision in that case appears to have been based mainly on the consideration of public policy referred to on pp. 215–216 of the report.

On the other side there are a number of authorities which tend to show that only the lex situs can alter the title to debts and choses in action. In re Maudsley, Sons & Field[74]; Lecouturier v. Rey[75]; Swiss Bank Corporation v. Boehmische Industrial Bank[76]; New York Life Insurance Co. v. Public Trustee[77]; Sedgwick Collins & Co. Ld. v. Rossia Insurance Co. of Petrograd,[78] per Sargent L.J.; the same case in the House of Lords, reported as Employers' Liability Assurance Corporation v. Sedgwick Collins & Co.[79]; In re Russian Bank for Foreign Trade[80]; Sutherland v. Administration of German Property[81]; The El Condado[82]; A.G. Der Manufacturen I.A. Woronin Leutschig v. Frederick Huth & Co.[83]; In re Banque des Marchands de Moscou[84]; the Slatford case,[85] per Devlin J., not following Lorentzen v. Lydden & Co. Ld.[86]

Evidently, there is a considerable weight of authority in favour of the view that only the lex situs can alter the title to debts and choses in action, and the authorities cited to prove the contrary proposition do not seem to have that effect. On principle, there is the consideration that, if the action to recover a debt or chose in action is brought in the country where it is properly recoverable and therefore situated, and if there is a conflict between the lex situs and the proper law (the one having legislation which vests the debt or chose in action in A and the

[73] [1942] 2 K.B. 202; 58 T.L.R. 178.
[74] [1900] 1 Ch. 602; 16 T.L.R. 228.
[75] [1910] A.C. 262; 26 T.L.R. 368.
[76] [1923] 1 K.B. 673; 39 T.L.R. 179.
[77] [1924] 2 Ch. 101.
[78] [1926] 1 K.B. 1, 50; 41 T.L.R. 663.
[79] [1927] A.C. 95, 104, 117, 125; 42 T.L.R. 749.
[80] [1933] Ch. 745, 766; 49 T.L.R. 253.
[81] [1934] 1 K.B. 423, 430, 433; 50 T.L.R. 107.
[82] (1939) 63 Ll.L.Rep. 330, 334, 341.
[83] (1946) 79 Ll.L.Rep. 262, 266.
[84] [1952] 1 T.L.R. 739, 741–744.
[85] [1953] 1 Q.B. 248, 257–261.
[86] [1942] 2 K.B. 202.

other having legislation which vests the debt or chose in action in B), the court trying the action will be bound to apply its own law which is the lex situs. I am unable to accept Mr. Caplan's contention on this part of the argument.

On the question as to what has been and is the proper law of the insurance contract, Mr. Caplan contended that it has been and is the law in force from time to time, that is to say, the law of the mandated territory in Palestine up to the date of termination of the mandate and thereafter the law of Israel. Mr. Megaw contended that the proper law of the insurance contract was from the beginning and still is the law of the mandated territory of Palestine, and since the termination of the mandate it is that law as existing at the date of termination. In support, or partial support, of this contention, Mr. Megaw cited a decision of a German court referred to in Wolff on Private International Law, 2nd ed., p. 425, and In re Fried Krupp Actien-Gesellschaft.[87]

On the other side, Mr. Caplan cited: In re Chesterman's Trusts,[88] and Banco de Bilbao v. Sancha.[89] The proper law is normally at any rate considered to be the law of a place, e.g., lex loci contractus or the lex loci solutionis, and I think Mr. Caplan's contention is the orthodox view and should prevail.

Finally, there was some argument on the question whether the regulations and the Law either of them should be considered to be confiscatory. As the regulations and the Law are evidently measures of economic warfare, and analogous to the English legislation and orders relating to the Custodian of Enemy Property, I would say on the authority of In re Munster[90] that they are not confiscatory. That is on the assumption that according to their true construction their operation is in general at least confined within proper territorial limits. If they should be construed as applying universally or to a large extent to property in any part of the world, possibly a different view could be taken, but the refusal of recognition of courts in other countries might be based on the supposed extra-territorial operation rather than on any confiscatory character. It is not necessary for the purposes of this case to attempt the not easy task of ascertaining from the decided cases what is the meaning or test of "confiscatory" legislation, or what difference confiscatory character makes to its operation in other countries.

My decision, therefore, is in favour of the custodian on this issue. His claim is for a declaration that the sum of £5,039 4s. due from the insurance company under the said policy is due to the defendant. I think he should have that declaration.

Declaration accordingly with costs.

Solicitors: Stoneham & Sons; Herbert Oppenheimer, Nathan & Vandyk.

J. D. P.

[87] [1917] 2 Ch. 188, 193.
[88] [1923] 2 Ch. 466, 478.
[89] [1938] 2 K.B. 176, 195; 54 T.L.R. 603.
[90] [1920] 1 Ch. 268.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

C. A.

1953
Dec. 8, 9, 10, 11.

Singleton, Birkett and Hodson L.JJ.

* PATRICK (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. BROADSTONE MILLS LD.

Revenue—Income tax—Profits of trade—Stock in hand—Accountancy—Cotton spinners—Base stock system of accounting—Cotton stocks omitted from trading account or included at arbitrary figure—Method not appropriate for income tax purposes—Valuation of stock at cost or market price—Income Tax Act, 1918 (8 & 9 Geo. 5, c. 40), Sch. D, Case I.

Revenue—Case stated—Findings of fact—Insufficient to "accept" evidence.

A cotton spinning company had for many years consistently employed for all purposes a system of accounting known as the base stock system. Under it the raw cotton actually on the machines (fixed process stock) appeared in the balance sheet but did not appear in the trading account at all, while an agreed weight of the cotton standing by the machines (spare process stock) was included in the trading account at a fixed or arbitrary figure. At a period when the price of cotton was rising considerably, the company was assessed to income tax for the year 1948–49 on the basis that all the fixed and spare process stock was brought into the trading account at a price representing the cost of the raw cotton plus the cost of processing it.

The company appealed against that assessment to the Special Commissioners, who found that the base stock method was one of the methods recognized in the trade and was, as a method for computing profits, in accordance with sound commercial practice; and they allowed the appeal. On appeal by the Crown by case stated, Vaisey J. held that the method was not appropriate for assessment to income tax, since it did not afford a true picture of the profits in any one year of charge. On appeal by the company:—

Held, on an analysis of the results, that the finding at which the Commissioners must be taken to have arrived, to the effect that the base stock method was appropriate for assessment to income tax, was wrong in law, since under that method the raw cotton was not treated as stock to be valued for income tax purposes at the beginning and end of the relevant accounting year at either cost or market price, whichever was the lower, and the profits from the trade for the year of assessment were thus not correctly shown.

Per Singleton L.J. In the case stated the Special Commissioners said that they "accepted" the evidence of all the expert witnesses, though that evidence was an expression of conflicting views. The Special Commissioners, as the tribunal of fact, should state their findings of fact clearly and not leave it to the court to deduce them from a study of the evidence.

Decision of Vaisey J. affirmed.

APPEAL from Vaisey J.

[The facts, briefly summarized below, are fully set out in the judgment of Singleton L.J.]

The taxpayers were a company of cotton spinners at Stockport, incorporated in 1920, when it took over as a going concern the business carried on since 1904 by Broadstone Spinning Co.

Ld. The company owned two mills in which cotton was processed into yarn, the average time taken for the raw cotton to pass through the mill and emerge as saleable yarn being approximately six to eight weeks.

The company had always adopted a system of accounting, known as the "base stock system" and used for nearly 50 years, by which the cotton on the machines, known as fixed process stock, and an agreed weight of the cotton which at all times stood beside the machines, known as spare process stock, were not shown in the trading account at cost or market value, but were either omitted (in the case of the fixed process stock) or included at a fixed and arbitrary figure, the company contending that the cotton clothing the machines was best treated as part of the machines, without which they could not function.

At a period when the cost of cotton was rising considerably, the company was assessed to income tax for the year 1948–49 under Case I of Sch. D of the Income Tax Act, 1918, in the sum of £27,000, and an additional assessment for the same year in the sum of £19,218 less £11,853 capital allowances, on the basis that all the fixed and spare process stock were brought into the trading account at a price representing the cost of the raw cotton plus the cost of processing.

The company appealed against that assessment to the Commissioners for the Special Purposes of the Income Tax Acts, who found that the method adopted by the company for dealing with its base stock in its accounts was one of the methods recognized in the particular trade of cotton spinning and was in accordance with sound commercial practice. They also found that the method the company had adopted for computing its profits was in accordance with sound commercial practice; and they allowed the appeal. On July 24, 1953, Vaisey J., on appeal by the Crown by case stated, held that although the base stock method of accountancy was unobjectionable for some commercial purposes, it was not appropriate for the purpose of assessments to income tax, because it did not afford a true picture of the profits in any one year of charge, and because for that purpose the process stock of the company at the beginning and end of a year of charge should be valued and brought into account at cost. He expressed the view that in computing the company's profits no part of such stock should be either treated as a fixed asset or brought into account at a mere arbitrary figure. He allowed the Crown's appeal.

The company appealed.

Cyril King Q.C., S. M. Young and H. H. Monroe for the company.

Sir Andrew Clark Q.C. and Sir Reginald Hills for the Crown.

C. A.
1953
PATRICK
v.
BROADSTONE
MILLS LD.

The following cases were cited in the argument: Usher's Wiltshire Brewery Co. Ld. v. Bruce (Surveyor of Taxes) [1]; Sun Insurance Office v. Clark (Surveyor of Taxes) [2]; Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Cock, Russell & Co. Ld. [3]; Worthington v. Oceana Development Co. Ld. [4]; Collins (Inspector of Taxes) v. Firth-Brearley Stainless Steel Syndicate Ld. [5]; Edward Collins & Sons Ld. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners [6]; J. P. Hall & Co. Ld. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners [7]; Whimster & Co. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners [8]; John Smith & Son v. Moore (Inspector of Taxes) [9]; Heather (Inspector of Taxes) v. A. Redfern & Sons. Ld. [10]; Asia Mill Ld. v. Ryan (Inspector of Taxes) [11]; Golden Horse Shoe (New) Ld. v. Thurgood [12]; In re Spanish Prospecting Co. Ld. [13]; Holden (Isaac) & Sons Ld. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners [14]; B. G. Utting & Co. Ld. v. Hughes (Inspector of Taxes). [15]

SINGLETON L.J. I will endeavour first to state the question for our consideration as simply as I can. The company has always adopted a system of accounting which is known as the base stock system. Under that system the fixed process stock, i.e., the cotton which is on the machines, does not appear in the trading account at all, and the spare process stock is taken at an arbitrary figure. The contention of the company is that the system is well recognized and is in accordance with the principles of sound commercial accountancy and that it ought to be adopted in order to arrive at the company's liability to tax.

On behalf of the Crown it is said that, even if the system is satisfactory for ordinary commercial requirements over a period of years, it is not a proper way in which to arrive at the company's profits for taxation purposes in any year of assessment, and further that it does not show the full amount of profit for the year in question. Moreover, it is claimed that no system will give the true profits of the year unless there is a valuation of stock made (either on market price or cost price) at the beginning and at the end of the accounting period; in other words, if there is a variation between the beginning and the end of the year in the amount of stock, or in its value, those are matters for consideration which are omitted to an extent if the company's method of valuation is applied.

The Commissioners found (in paragraph 15 of the case) that the method adopted by the company concerning its base stock in

[1] [1915] A.C. 433; 31 T.L.R. 104; 6 T.C. 399.
[2] [1912] A.C. 443; 28 T.L.R. 303; 6 T.C. 59.
[3] (1949) 65 T.L.R. 725; [1949] 2 All E.R. 889; 29 T.C. 387.
[4] (1949) 65 T.L.R. 726; 28 A.T.C. 393.
[5] (1925) 9 T.C. 520.
[6] (1924) 12 T.C. 773.
[7] [1921] 3 K.B. 152; 12 T.C. 382.
[8] (1925) 12 T.C. 813.
[9] [1921] 2 A.C. 13; 37 T.L.R. 613; 12 T.C. 266.
[10] (1944) 26 T.C. 119.
[11] [1951] W.N. 390; 32 T.C. 275.
[12] [1934] 1 K.B. 548; 18 T.C. 280.
[13] [1911] 1 Ch. 92; 27 T.L.R. 76.
[14] (1924) 12 T.C. 768.
[15] [1940] A.C. 463; 56 T.L.R. 495; [1940] 2 All E.R. 76; 23 T.C. 174.

its accounts is one of the methods recognized in this particular trade of cotton spinning and is in accord with sound commercial practice. They also found that the method the company had adopted for computing its profits was in accordance with sound commercial practice; and they allowed the appeal against the assessment.

They did not consider the third contention put forward by the representative of the Crown, that the company's method "did "not show the full amount of the profits of the relevant year, "but showed a distorted view of those profits and understated "them, and the company had been undercharged in the first "assessment made upon it." Their failure to consider this has led to the expenditure of much time in this court. Mr. King, on behalf of the company, submitted that on the findings of the Special Commissioners the company was entitled to succeed. Sir Andrew Clark, on behalf of the Crown, submitted that, notwithstanding the findings, the method adopted could not be a proper way to ascertain the profits of the company in the year of assessment if it did not show the full amount of the profits, or if it showed a distorted view of them, and he set out to show that this was so; to which Mr. King replied that we ought to be guided by the findings of the Commissioners on fact. All this could have been avoided if the Commissioners had made a finding on the third contention. They ought to have done so. For some time I thought that this court ought to remit the case to them for a finding, but it was put to us that there could only be one answer, and that, in such circumstances, there was no point in sending the case back.

There is a further matter to which I direct attention. Four witnesses gave evidence before the Special Commissioners, who set out a summary of their evidence in the case. In each case the Commissioners say of the evidence, "which we accepted." I do not know what that means, particularly in regard to the evidence of the accountants. If it means that they accepted the views given as those of the witnesses who gave them it carries one nowhere. If it means more than that, it does not appear to me that they could accept both of two conflicting views. The essential requirement of a case stated is that it shall contain the findings of fact of the tribunal which states it. This case is lacking in that respect. It is said by Mr. King that we ought to assume that the Commissioners, by reason of their conclusion, accepted the evidence of Mr. Robson in preference to that of Mr. Gower. That may be a fair assumption to make; but the Commissioners have already said that they accept the evidence of both, and nowhere do they say that Mr. Gower is wrong in the view he expressed that the method adopted by the company led to a distorted view of the profits in the relevant year.

I mention these matters with the object of saving time in future cases. It is not that which someone says which is of importance. The court ought to have before it the findings of

C. A.
1953
PATRICK
v.
BROADSTONE
MILLS LD.
Singleton L.J.

fact of the tribunal; if those are clearly stated there is usually no need to set out the evidence which is given.

It is not easy to state the facts in this case, which involves some technical matters, without reading a considerable part of the case itself. Paragraph 3: "At all stages in the production "of yarn, quantities of cotton in various stages of manufacture "are either on the machines or are waiting by each machine "ready to take the place of the cotton on that machine. The "cotton which is actually on the machines and undergoing pro-"cess is termed fixed process stock and that which is waiting "to replace the cotton on the machines is termed spare process "stock. . . ." Paragraph 4: "We were concerned in the appeal "with the method of dealing, in computing the company's profit "for income tax purposes, with the fixed process stock and an "agreed weight (hereinafter called the base weight) of spare "process stock (being the minimum required to ensure continuity "of production); these are together referred to as base stock. "The company in fact held spare process stock in excess of the "base weight of spare process stock but there was no dispute as "to how this should be dealt with. It was agreed that for income "tax purposes the excess should be valued at cost price (being "lower than the market value)." Paragraph 5: "(1) The com-"pany, and its predecessor, Broadstone Spinning Company Ld., "has always adopted a system of accounting known as the base "stock system. In this system the base stock and any further "spare process stock held are not carried in the accounts at cost "or market value, but are carried, either at a fixed price or at "an arbitrary price. (2) There was produced to us, for the "purpose of illustration, a hypothetical account in illustration of "the company's trading account for the accounting period (which "follows closely the actual trading figures for the period) and a "copy of the company's balance sheet as at April 3, 1948. (3) In "the trading account, the base stock assumed to be 123,000 "pounds in weight does not figure at all, either in opening or in "closing stocks, and the further spare process stock in excess of "the base weight is carried at a figure of 28 pence per pound. "This is an arbitrary figure designed to represent the cost of raw "cotton plus a weighting for the cost of processing. The figure "was originally 12½ pence, and was increased in 1945 to 17 pence, "then to 28 pence at March 29, 1947, and later to 30 pence at "April 3, 1948. (4) In the balance sheet the fixed process stock "is included in the item 'Land, buildings, boilers . . . and fixed "'stock—£333,236.' It is so included at an unascertained figure "representing the cost of the fixed process stock on the purchase "of the mills by the company in 1920, and has not been changed "since."

That paragraph makes clear two or three matters of great importance in this case. The first is that the fixed process stock, that is, the cotton which is on the machines which has been processed, is not taken into account so far as regards the trading account. It is omitted entirely, because on the company's system it is not treated as part of the stock in the ordinary sense but is said to be included in the item of "Land, buildings, "boilers and fixed stock" in the balance sheet. It is not in the profit and loss account, or in the trading account. Another matter to notice is that the spare process stock which is included in the trading account is taken, not at its value, but at an arbitrary figure. The third matter of importance is the very large variation in the price of cotton which has taken place over the years. Paragraph 5 (3), which I read, shows values from 12½d. a pound rising to 30d., and I think that I am right in saying that the later figures show that by the end of the accounting year the value had risen to 42d. per pound.

Paragraph 6 states the practice which had been followed by the company: "(1) In all previous years of assessment the "profits of the company and of its predecessor, Broadstone "Spinning Company Ld., were computed for income tax pur-"poses according to the base stock system, i.e., the fixed process "stock did not figure in the account (although, as stated in "paragraph 5 above, a value was in fact attached to it in the "company's balance sheet), the base weight of spare process "stock was valued at the arbitrary figure referred to in para-"graph 5 (3) above, and any further 'spare process stock' in "excess of the base weight was valued at cost. (2) The assess-"ments under appeal were made on the basis of bringing in all "stocks of cotton at cost (which was agreed to be lower than "market value); i.e., the base stock and the whole of the further "spare process stock in excess of the base weight were brought "in at the opening and the close of the account at a price repre-"senting the cost (at such opening or close) of raw cotton plus "the cost of processing. (3) The question for our determination "was whether the company was entitled to have its profits" (for the accounting period) "computed for income tax purposes "according to the base stock system."

Paragraph 7 (b) again sets out the variation in prices. Paragraph 8 mentions two documents to which I shall have to refer later, D1 and D2, which become important when the court is asked to consider whether there could be more than one answer to the Crown's third contention: "The weight of fixed "process stock on machines in No. 1 mill rose during the "accounting period from 31,191 pounds to 44,204 pounds (vide "statements D1 and D2). No. 1 mill was put out of production "in 1941 as a result of arrangements for the concentration of "industry, and the cotton on the machines was run off. The "company then created a reserve of £7,132 (which figures in the "balance sheet), to cover the estimated cost, at prices then "current, of re-clothing the mill. No. 1 mill is now gradually "being brought back into production, and the machines are "partially re-clothed; the cost of the fixed process of cotton "on the machines in this mill has not yet been debited to the

C. A.
1953
PATRICK v. BROADSTONE MILLS LD.
Singleton L.J.

"reserve account, but has temporarily been charged against "revenue, although the company intends to capitalize it. When "fully clothed, the machines in No. 1 mill will carry a weight "of 88,000 pounds of cotton." Let me add that No. 2 mill carries 92,000 pounds of cotton on the machines, so that the two mills together would carry upon the machines 180,000 pounds of cotton. It is not shown in the company's trading account, though it is said that it is in the balance sheet figure of land, buildings, etc.

The next four paragraphs in the case concern the witnesses who appeared before the Special Commissioners and paragraph 9 begins in this way: ". . . the secretary of the company "attended and gave evidence before us (which we accepted) to "the following effect." He said that it was essential for the economical running of a mill that the machines should always remain clothed, and he described the system of buying and selling the cotton. He said that the fixed process stock was taken into the company's balance sheet as a fixed asset and did not figure in the trading account, and that the directors of the company had always taken the view that that was the way they wished the accounts to be presented to the shareholders, it being their view that a true trading result was arrived at in that way. I think it might well be said that if one had every year the same amount of base stock and fixed process stock, and if the value of it was the same, it would not affect the position of the trading account. But if the amount changes and the value changes, the position is not the same.

The secretary is further recorded as saying: ". . . that the "cotton on the machines (i.e. the fixed process stock) is always "changing and is always on the move, and that the cotton on "the machines at the end of the accounting period had in fact "cost the company 42·85 pence per pound as shown in exhibit "D2. The cotton on the machines at the end of the accounting "period must have been bought during the period, and its price "would be included in the purchases charged in the company's "accounts. The price would, however, have been debited to "the particular sale occasioning the purchase of the cotton. "The 136,000 pounds of cotton on the machines at the end of "the accounting period had cost the company 31·88 pence per "pound; that was the bale price, plus the cost of processing "work done on that stock. That cost turned into sterling was "£7,892 plus £16,425. The company had in fact allowed cotton "bought at the advanced price to replace cheaper cotton on the "machines. It had, however, advanced the price of yarn "immediately the raw cotton price increased: the increase in the "price of raw cotton was immediately (and, in his opinion, "rightly) priced on yarn and not left on the base stock on the "machines."

Mr. Robson, a member of a firm of chartered accountants, gave evidence on behalf of the company, which again the Commissioners say that they "accepted." He said that the company had followed "a recognized commercial accountancy basis. The "base stock method is a good method of accounting, though "some other people might say there is a better method. He "did not agree that it was undoubtedly a better method to "bring in base stock at the beginning and end of the year at "cost or market value; business people who consider the base "stock method suitable in their businesses consider it the best." He added that "an accountant would give an unqualified certifi-"cate to accounts as giving a true and fair view of the profits "of a company whether it employed the one method or the "other so long as the company had adhered to one method "consistently" from year to year. Later, in the record of his evidence: "He agreed that in times of rising prices accounts "prepared on the base stock method would show profits lower "in amount than accounts prepared on the cost or market value "basis; in times of falling prices, the opposite result would be "produced."

As far as I can gather from the figures shown in the case, there have been for some years consistently rising prices for cotton. That means that if the fixed basis is followed year after year their accounts would show profits lower in amount than accounts prepared on the cost or market value basis. The record of the witness's evidence continues: "But, on the basis of the "principles which those people who use the base stock method "hold, there is no distortion of profits in times of rising prices." The meaning of that is that those who use this principle prefer to look on the base stock in precisely the same way as they look on the machines. In other words, they regard the cotton, the raw material, at one stage as part of their fixed capital merely because it is on the machines. It passes through the machine in the course of a few weeks and is treated just as is any other cotton. That is the meaning of Mr. Robson's words, "on the "basis of the principles which those people who use the base "stock method hold." He added: "Business people who use "the base stock method do so because they consider it an "appropriate method for their particular businesses; they regard "the cotton clothing the machines as part of the machines, "without which the machines cannot function, just as a sewing "machine cannot function without a certain minimum weight "of thread upon it. They say, in effect, that the weight of "base stock is just as much a part of the machine as the "lever which engages it." On this view, which the witness considered a tenable view, "the base stock is part of the fixed "assets, and replacements are replacements for maintenance "purposes to be charged against trading as a maintenance cost." It must follow from that principle, if it is adopted, that as prices rise the cotton which is on the machine costs more. It is paid

C. A.
1953
PATRICK
v.
BROADSTONE MILLS LD.
Singleton L.J.

for out of revenue, but the cotton which is on the machines is not shown in the revenue account.

The case then deals with the evidence of Mr. Gower, chartered accountant, who is the principal advisory accountant to the Board of Inland Revenue. Some criticism was directed to the evidence of this gentleman. Mr. Gower has for some years been contending for that which he regards as the true principle of real prices and real values, and he has sought to show that the base stock method of accounting is not right, at least for tax purposes. I can well understand that those who follow that system of accounting equally hold the view that they ought to be allowed to have their own method of accounting.

Mr. Gower's evidence begins in this way: "He thought it "was common knowledge that the general basis for the valuation "of stock in trade in all forms, whether raw material, processed "material, or finished goods, was cost price or market value, "whichever was the lower." There is no finding on that. Is it common knowledge that the general basis of the valuation of stock in trade in all forms is cost price or market value? That has been stated in one or two of the cases to which our attention was drawn, but I am concerned here rather with the evidence of the witness. Mr. Gower produced a book to which I do not propose to refer. "He said that the base stock method had "been employed by a limited number of concerns—limited both "as regards the trades in which it was used, and the number "of concerns in any particular trade using it. He considered "that it was unobjectionable and made little difference to results "over a number of years, provided that the quantity of base "stock did not vary, and provided that there were no violent "fluctuations in the cost of the raw material; but in a time of "violent fluctuations, and in particular in a time of constantly "rising prices, in his view, the use of the base stock method "could and did give rise to very misleading results." He said that when prices were rising continually, the accounts did not show a fair view of the position. In the present case he said that the quantity of base stock had risen and that in the period under review "the price of raw cotton had risen seriously. The "cost of the 'fixed process stock' had increased during the year "by something like 10½d. per pound from about 32d. per pound "to about 42d. per pound. Valued in accordance with the "Revenue's contention at cost, the process stock was worth "£22,502 at the beginning of the year and £37,947 at the end—"an increase of £15,445. As shown by the company's books, "the increase during the year in the value of the process stock "was £4,289. There was thus a difference of £11,156 which "had been charged against the profits in this year." He went into further figures, and said that they pointed to the conclusion that the base stock method resulted, in the prevailing circumstances, "in an understatement of profits and the creation of a "hidden reserve. This was due to the fact that the base stock

"method was being used for times for which it could not be "considered at all suitable." The paragraph which summarizes the evidence of Mr. Gower said that the Commissioners "accepted" it. Again, there is no finding of the Commissioners on the last part of that evidence. The statement of Mr. Gower's evidence continues: "He agreed that the base stock method is "a reasonable and recognized method of accounting, and one "which business men could reasonably and properly adopt, and "is good commercial accounting, but he made the qualification "that in times of rising prices it is a conservative method, and "does not produce such correct results as the cost or market "value method. By 'conservative' he meant keeping something "well in hand. No auditor would cavil at conservative accounts; "he rather welcomed them for shareholders' purposes. It was "open to the company to use the base stock method. Asked "whether the company's accounts were erroneous, he expressed "the view that they were conservative and understated the "profits by reason of a hidden reserve of the true cost of cotton. "In his opinion the base stock method did not show the true "quantum of profits earned in the relevant year. In times of "falling prices it worked in the reverse way; where costs were "falling you were losing some of the conservative element and "were absorbing some of the hidden reserve. Once you got "back to a stage where the prevailing cost of cotton was the "same as that adopted for base stock, you were back to zero. "On present day prices he described the base stock method as "distorting the real trend of results. In a stable period, when "prices hardly rose or fell, there was nothing in it."

Mr. Gower emphasized that the Special Commissioners were asked to consider the tax position for one accounting period. The evidence which he gave was to the effect that he did not like the base stock accounting system for tax purposes. It did not matter if one kept the base stock at the same figure and if prices remained the same. If one or other of the elements changed one did not get, by using it, the true profits of the relevant year. He went on to say that the process stock was not a fixed asset. It was just the same as any other cotton bought that passed through the mill and through the machines in the mill, and it ought to be treated as any other cotton was.

Another witness, the principal inspector of taxes, said that efforts had been made to get everyone to adopt the system of cost or market price in regard to stock; he had gone into the position and investigated it and he had found that in the cotton trade 88½ per cent. of the spinners were now valuing process stock at cost in their books, and 11½ per cent. were adopting the base stock method, although, he added, "the latter concurred "in the adjustment to the cost basis for taxation purposes." There is no importance in that from the point of view of the law, but I think that it does show that on the whole it is recognized by accountants who advise trading concerns that when there are

C. A.
1953
PATRICK
v.
BROADSTONE MILLS LD.
Singleton L.J.

violently fluctuating prices the cost or the market value of the stock gives the more accurate result in any accounting period.

The first matter for consideration is: what is fixed process stock and what is spare process stock? The answer surely is clear. They are both stock. They are so called. They are bought as stock. All the cotton, the raw material, is bought for the purpose of being turned into yarn by being passed through the mill in the ordinary way. Both the fixed process stock and the spare process stock are paid for out of revenue. The evidence of the company's secretary shows "that the cotton on the "machines at the end of the accounting period" must have been bought during the period and its price would be included in the purchases charged in the company's accounts. The cost of that cotton has passed through the company's accounts.

How can one arrive at the profits of the year without considering what one has on the other side? The position is illustrated by the two documents I mentioned earlier, D1 and D2. D1 shows the company's cotton stock as at the commencement of the accounting period, March 29, 1947. D2 shows the position at the end of the accounting period, April 3, 1948. The first thing which I notice on looking at them is the figure in regard to cotton on the machines, the fixed process stock. In the case of No. 2 mill the amount on the machines remains the same. It is working to capacity, and the amount on the machines was then 92,000 pounds. No. 1 mill had been used for something else during the war and had been stripped of its cotton. During this accounting year it was being gradually brought back to full production. At the beginning of the accounting year the amount of cotton on the machines was 31,191 pounds. At the end of the year it was 44,204 pounds, an increase, as the case shows, of 13,000 pounds in the accounting year, so that there was in No. 1 mill somewhat over £2,000 worth of cotton more in quantity at the end of the accounting period than there was at the beginning of that period; and that cotton had been paid for out of revenue.

The figures in D1 and D2 show also the spare process cotton, and it appears from D1 as though the company had on March 29, 1947, 45,000 odd pounds of spare process cotton, that is, cotton waiting nearby to be used on the machines as occasion arose. That 45,000 pounds odd was taken in the accounts at an arbitrary figure of 28d. a pound. How it is possible to get accuracy in any account by taking an arbitrary figure I do not know. The broad middle column in D1 shows the division up of that 45,000 pounds odd into 23,278 pounds and 21,774 pounds. I take it that that was because it had been pointed out by someone, no doubt on behalf of the Revenue, that the company could not well claim, even on their valuation basis, to have so much spare process cotton as 45,000 pounds at any one time. It was too much; so they reduced that figure to 23,278 pounds, and thereafter in the accounts the figure of 28d. appears against 23,278 pounds, and the balance of 21,774 pounds is taken at what is said to be the cost price of 32·1d. a pound. I find it difficult to see any reason for putting on the spare process cotton a lower figure than cost or market price. Prices were rising all the time. When I look at D2, which shows the figures for the end of the year, I find in the left-hand column the figure of spare process cotton is there put as 76,371 pounds. I do not appreciate the reason for that great increase. True, it is said that the mill was coming into further use, as is shown by the increased cotton on the machines in No. 1 mill, but I should not have thought that there would have been anything like that increase in spare process cotton, and indeed that seems to have been recognized, because in the broad column in the middle, in the same way as in D1, the figures are split up later and the same weight is taken, 23,278 pounds, for the spare process cotton, on which an arbitrary figure of 30d. is put, whereas the balance of 53,093 pounds has against it the value of 42·85d., to which the price had risen. I do not follow the reason for any arbitrary price at all in a matter of this kind, but again it may not matter if conditions do not change through the year. As I have said, the justification for the practice, so far as there is justification, was said by Mr. Robson to be that those who adopted the practice in this trade—and it may be in some other trades—regarded the cotton on their machines as part of the machines.

In arriving at the correct position, those who have to make valuations are guided by section 29 of the Finance Act, 1926: "any income tax in respect of profits or gains or income charge-"able under Case I, Case II, Case IV, or Case V of Schedule D "which would but for the foregoing provisions of this section "have been computed as aforesaid shall be computed, subject "to the provisions of this Part of this Act and subject as herein-"after provided, on the full amount of the profits or gains or "income of the year preceding the year of assessment." The same is shown by section 1 of the Income Tax Act, 1918, and by Schedule D, 1 (a) (2). The object is to find the profits or gains from the trade for the year of assessment.

In considering the question of stock, I think that the principle stated by the Lord President, Lord Clyde, in Whimster & Co. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners,[1] has been accepted generally. The Lord President is reported as saying[2]: "In computing the "balance of profits and gains for the purposes of income tax, "or for the purposes of excess profits duty, two general and "fundamental commonplaces have always to be kept in mind. "In the first place, the profits of any particular year or account-"ing period must be taken to consist of the difference between "the receipts from the trade or business during such year or "accounting period and the expenditure laid out to earn those "receipts. In the second place, the account of profit and loss

[1] (1925) 12 T.C. 813.

[2] Ibid. 823.

C. A.
1953
PATRICK v. BROADSTONE MILLS LD.
Singleton L.J.

"to be made up for the purpose of ascertaining that difference "must be framed consistently with the ordinary principles of "commercial accounting, so far as applicable, and in conformity "with the rules of the Income Tax Act, or of that Act as "modified by the provisions and schedules of the Acts regulating "excess profits duty, as the case may be. For example, the "ordinary principles of commercial accounting require that in "the profit and loss account of a merchant's or manufacturer's "business the values of the stock-in-trade at the beginning and "at the end of the period covered by the account should be "entered at cost or market price, whichever is the lower; "although there is nothing about this in the taxing statutes." As I say, that has been adopted in general and it is sound in practice. The Lord President, in saying that "the ordinary "principles of commercial accounting require that in the profit "and loss account of a merchant's or manufacturer's business "the values of the stock-in-trade at the beginning and at the "end of the period covered by the account should be entered "at cost or market price, whichever is the lower," was in one sense going into accountancy matters. But I venture to think that that view of his is based on general experience and common sense—one cannot get at the true position unless one takes actual figures as distinct from arbitrary figures.

In the same case Lord Sands said[3]: "Where a trader sits "down to ascertain from his books his profits or losses for the "year, it is not enough that he should set on one side the money "he has paid out, other than capital outlay, and on the other "the money he has received in respect of the year's business "plus the price he paid for commodities now in his possession. "There are at least three other things that he must take into "account—the present value of these commodities, the debts "he has incurred, and the debts due to him, in respect of the "year's operations." The cotton in this case, whether it be in bale in the mill or ready to be used alongside the machine or in the machine, is a commodity which the trader has bought in order to turn into yarn. Later Lord Sands said[4]: "The con-"sideration of how it would be prudent for a trader to act does "not solve the question here presented to us as one of Revenue "law. Under this law the profits are the profits realized in the "course of the year. What seems an exception is recognized "where a trader purchased and still holds goods or stocks which "have fallen in value. No loss has been realized. Loss may "not occur. Nevertheless, at the close of the year he is "permitted to treat these goods or stocks as of their market "value. This exception to the general rule has never, however, "been extended to the case of probable or indeed apparently "inevitable loss to be incurred in the execution of future

[3] Ibid. 826. [4] Ibid. 827.

"contracts entered into during the year in question, and the "authorities are against it."

Mr. King referred us to Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Cock Russell & Co. Ld.,[5] in which Croom-Johnson J. cited the words which I have just read from the Whimster[6] case, and said himself[7]: "There is nothing in the relevant legislation "which indicates that in computing the profits and gains of a "commercial concern the stock-in-trade at the start of the "accounting period should be taken in and that the amount of "the stock-in-trade at the end of the period should also be taken "in. It would be fantastic not to do it; it would be utterly "impossible accurately to assess profits and gains merely on a "statement of receipts and payments or on the basis of turn-"over. It has long been recognized that the right method of "assessing profits and gains is to take into account the value of "the stock-in-trade at the beginning and the value of the stock-"in-trade at the end as two of the items in the computation."

There is one other authority to which I should like to refer. Mr. King directed our attention to the Sun Insurance Office v. Clark (Surveyor of Taxes)[8] of which the headnote reads[9]: "A "company carrying on the business of fire insurance, had made "a practice of carrying forward annually, in its published "accounts, as a reserve, 40 per cent. of the yearly premium "receipts representing estimated losses on unexpired risks, and "had claimed to be assessed on this basis. It was found as a "fact by the Commissioners that 40 per cent. was a reasonable "and proper allowance, and the company's claim was admitted. "The Crown contended that the company was not legally "entitled to the allowance. Held," (by the House of Lords) "that The General Accident, Fire, and Life Assurance Corpora-"tion v. McGowan[10] notwithstanding, there is no rule of law "as to the admissibility of an allowance for unexpired risks in "estimating profits, but the question is one to be decided by "reference to the facts in each case; and that on the facts "found in this case the allowance claimed was a proper allow-"ance to be made." The General Commissioners for the City of London in that case had found that the allowance was a proper one to make. There was an appeal to the Revenue Court, and Bray J. dismissed the appeal. The Court of Appeal allowed the appeal from Bray J., and the House of Lords restored the order of Bray J. and of the Commissioners, allowing the appeal from the order of the Court of Appeal.

The difficulty which arose in that case was owing to a misunderstanding which was said to be a failure to appreciate the reasons for the decision of the House of Lords in the McGowan[10]

[5] (1949) 65 T.L.R. 725; 29 T.C. 387.
[6] 12 T.C. 813.
[7] 29 T.C. 387, 392.
[8] [1912] A.C. 443; 28 T.L.R. 303; 6 T.C. 59.
[9] 6 T.C. 59.
[10] 5 T.C. 308.

C. A.
1953
PATRICK v. BROADSTONE MILLS LD.
Singleton L.J.

case. Mr. King relied on this case and on Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Cock Russell & Co. Ld.[11] in support of his submission that the court ought not to interfere with what he claimed was a finding of fact by the Commissioners. If the report of the case is examined, I think it hardly supports the proposition for which Mr. King contends. Lord Loreburn L.C. said [12]: "An "estimate being necessary and the arriving at it by in some "way using averages being a natural and probably inevitable "expedient, the law, as it seems to me, cannot lay down any "one way of doing this. It is a question of fact and of figures "whether what is proposed in each case is fair both to the Crown "and to the subject." The Lord Chancellor considered the decision in McGowan's [13] case: "In McGowan's [14] case, to which "reference is made, three methods of estimating these gains or "profits were before the House. I place first, merely for con-"venience sake and not for its importance or value, a faint "suggestion which was made in the case of McGowan,[15] which, "as I understand it, was as follows:—It was suggested that "each contract of insurance made during a particular year should "be considered separately. If it had expired then the actual "result should be taken, whether profit or loss. If it had not "expired then an estimate should be made, having regard to "the period unexpired and the degree of risk, which might be "different (in summer and winter for example) during that period. "I do not imagine that either the Crown or the company would "seriously desire such an inquiry. I do not know how many fire "insurances are effected by a great company within a twelve-"month, probably scores of thousands or even hundreds of "thousands. Such a process, as to the unexpired contracts, "would be minute and almost interminable. It was rejected "because there was no evidence that it would be a reasonable "way of ascertaining what was desired.

"The second method suggested in that case was that of "merely taking for each year the sum total of the premiums "received and the sum total of the losses paid and subtracting "the one from the other, without regard to the fact that the "premiums cover risks running on into subsequent years and "the losses include losses arising out of contracts made in "previous years. This method is of course not precise or "scientific. It proceeds upon the view that when this is done "for the three consecutive years indicated by the statute and the "figures thus reached are averaged, a fair and reasonable con-"clusion is attained. This method was adopted long ago and "has more than once been the subject of consideration in courts "of law. I can conceive it being unfair either in the case of a "rapidly increasing or of a rapidly diminishing fire insurance "business. It may prove unfair in both cases. But in

[11] 29 T.C. 387.
[12] 6 T.C. 59, 75.
[13] 5 T.C. 308.
[14] 6 T.C. 59, 75–76.
[15] 5 T.C. 308.

"McGowan's[15] case it was not proved to be unfair. On the "contrary it closely corresponded with the dividends actually "distributed and was upon the facts of that case clearly the most "accurate and reasonable of the methods which alone were pro-"pounded for our consideration. Accordingly it was adopted. "I think it is in general a good working rule, but no one in this "House has said that it ought to supersede the truth if the "truth is in conflict with it in any case.

"A third method, similar in principle to that advanced by "the now appellants, was also considered by your Lordships in "the case of McGowan.[15] This method is to carry forward "annually at the close of the year a percentage of the premium "income in order to allow for unexpired risks. It has no preten-"tions to being precise. I can easily imagine cases in which "an actuary could show it was misleading. But if it comes "nearer to the truth than any other method in a particular case, "I do not understand why it should not be adopted. This third "method, however, in its application to that case, the "McGowan[15] case, would have meant that the insurance com-"pany was to pay income tax upon the footing of about £15,000 "profits and gains in the three statutory years, whereas they "had divided dividends of about £60,000 in those three years. "And there was no evidence and no finding, nor could there "honestly have been, that the third method worked fairly "between the Crown and the subject. In those circumstances "this House rejected the third method. The House adopted the "second, but so far from laying it down as a rule of law, it was "expressly pointed out that the second method was of itself "imperfect and, though a good working rule generally, would "not be applicable if in any case it appeared upon the facts to "involve hardship. The headnote in the Law Reports is quite "wrong and the view of Bray J. of what the House decided in "McGowan's[15] case is accurate." Towards the end of his speech the Lord Chancellor added[16]: "I am equally anxious "that your Lordships should not be supposed to have laid down "that the method applied by the Commissioners in the present "case has any universal application. If the Crown wishes in "any future instance to dispute it they can do so by evidence, "and it is not to be presumed that it is either right or wrong. "A rule of thumb may be very desirable, but cannot be sub-"stituted for the only rule of law that I know of, viz.: that "the true gains are to be ascertained as nearly as it can be "done."

Thus I read Lord Loreburn as having said that there may be one or two or three methods of arriving at the profits for the relevant period. The one which shows most accurately the position between the revenue on the one hand and the taxpayer on the other hand is the one which ought to be adopted. In other words, it is not sufficient to say that a particular system of [15] 5 T.C. 308.

[16] 6 T.C. 59, 77.

C. A.
1953
PATRICK
v.
BROADSTONE MILLS LD.
Singleton L.J.

accounting is a well recognized system of accounting and all right during normal times, if the contention on the other side is that the system does not give a true result for the particular year, the accounting year.

That was the case which the Crown put forward before the Special Commissioners. It is shown by their contentions, particularly the one to which I have already referred, but the Special Commissioners, although they had this case before them for quite a long time, failed to consider that contention.

I would state these general propositions: (1) One cannot arrive at the profits of the year without taking into account the value of the stock one has at the beginning of, and at the end of, the accounting year. (2) The figures for stock are just as important as any other figures. Values may have to be estimated when market price is taken, but any departure from accuracy is reflected in the trading account. (3) Stock should be taken either at cost price or at market price, whichever is the lower. The company's method of accounting does not meet these requirements for the relevant year. They have more stock, purchased out of income, than their trading account shows, and other stock is not taken at the right figure. It seems to me that the submission of Sir Andrew Clark that there can be only one answer to the Crown's third contention is established.

Vaisey J. towards the end of his judgment said: "On the "whole, I have come to the conclusion that my decision in this "case must be for the Crown. I am satisfied that the base stock "method of accountancy as adopted by the company is recog-"nized and accepted in the industry and is unobjectionable for "some commercial purposes. But I hold that it is not appro-"priate for the purpose of assessments to income tax, because "it does not afford a true picture of the profits in any one year "of charge, and because for that purpose the process stock of "the company at the beginning and end of a year of charge "should be valued and brought into account at cost (being lower "than market value). It seems to me that in computing the "company's profits no part of such stock should be either treated "as a fixed asset or brought into account as a mere arbitrary "figure."

The Special Commissioners, after making their findings, stated: "We held that the appeal succeeded and we left the "figures to be agreed." I think that it is right to say that they held that the appeal succeeded on their findings already stated in paragraph 15 of the case. It appears to me that on the facts they misdirected themselves in law in so holding. The decision of Vaisey J. was right, and in my view this appeal ought to be dismissed.

BIRKETT L.J. I am of the same opinion. In view of the comprehensive judgment which my Lord has just delivered, I will state quite briefly the reasons why I have come to the same conclusion, though I should like it to be clearly understood that I accept his reasoning and conclusions on all those detailed matters with which he has dealt so fully.

The case has been one of very great interest, and because of the nature of the figures a case of some complexity, and I should like to acknowledge the help which I have received from the arguments of counsel on both sides.

When the matter came before the Special Commissioners it was by way of an appeal by the company from the assessment made on them by what I may call the Gower method of assessment. The company took the view, and submitted to the Special Commissioners, that they were not bound by that method at all, and were entitled to have the figures for income tax assessed on the system which they and their predecessors in trade had used for almost 50 years. That was the issue before the Special Commissioners.

I was very much impressed, by the argument of Mr. King that the only question before this court was whether there was evidence to support the findings of the Special Commissioners. If the answer to that question was in the affirmative, he submitted, then this court had no course other than to support the decision of the Special Commissioners and reverse the judgment of Vaisey J.

During the argument I was at some pains to try to ascertain the real question which this court had to determine. The question formulated by the Special Commissioners on the face of it seems complete. The question for their determination was "whether the company was entitled to have its profits computed "for income tax purposes according to the base stock system." Mr. King said that the Commissioners had the precise question and the detailed evidence before them. They formulated the questions for this court thus: "The questions of law for the "opinion of the court are:—(1) Whether there was evidence on "which we could arrive at our findings in paragraph 15 of this "case, and (2) whether, in view of such findings, our decision "was erroneous in law."

My Lord has said that the Commissioners had not really made the proper findings, but Mr. King most strenuously argued during the discussion that they had, and that when one looked at the form in which they had stated their question, they must have been taken to know that the point before them was the assessment for the income tax year. It is plainly so stated: "Those are our findings which we set out in paragraph 15," and those findings are two. They are (1): "We, . . . , found "that the method adopted by the company dealing with its base "stock in its accounts is one of the methods recognized in this "particular trade of cotton spinning and is in accordance with "sound commercial practice." I do not think that anybody is ready to dispute that finding, because Mr. Gower in his evidence lent support to it. Mr. Robson certainly said the same thing.

C. A.
1953
PATRICK v. BROADSTONE MILLS LD.
Birkett L.J.

(2): "We also found that the method the company had adopted "for computing its profits was in accordance with sound com- "mercial practice." So far as the accountants were concerned, that too would seem to follow from their first finding, because both Mr. Gower and Mr. Robson said that there are reputable firms who prefer this method for their companies' accounts. Finally they said: "We held that the appeal succeeded." By that they must have meant, I think, that "because we have "found that this base stock method employed by this company "was in accordance with sound commercial practice, and "because we found that the method of computing the profits "by that system was in accordance with sound commercial "practice, therefore it was suitable for income tax purposes."

I am bound to say that I think that third conclusion was wrong. If that be a proper construction of the findings of the Commissioners, it was erroneous in law, as it is not a pure question of fact so much as a mixed question of fact and law.

My Lord has read the relevant words of section 29 (1) of the Finance Act, 1926 :"subject as hereinafter provided, on the "full amount of the profits or gains or income of the year preced- "ing the year of assessment." The Rules applicable to Cases I and II in the Income Tax Act, 1918, provide: "(1) The tax "shall be charged without any other deduction than is by this "Act allowed." "(3) In computing the amount of the profits or "gains to be charged, no sum shall be deducted in respect of ". . . (e) any loss not connected with or arising out of the trade, "profession, employment or vocation"; and "(f) any capital "withdrawn from, or any sum employed or intended to be "employed as capital in such trade, profession, employment or "vocation."

I should have thought that the true question properly formulated and properly stated for the Special Commissioners was this: did the base stock method of accountancy, for which this company contends, correctly ascertain the full profits as enjoined by section 29 for income tax purposes for the year of assessment in question? I do not think that they really answered that question. I have looked again at the evidence of Mr. Robson on which Mr. King placed so much reliance, and I had in mind his criticism of Vaisey J., who had said that Mr. Robson did not seem to commend that system. Mr. King said that it was not part of the duty of Mr. Robson to commend any system—he was merely giving evidence about the matter. Mr. King also complained of Vaisey J. arrogating to himself that which was the task of the Special Commissioners, when he said: "but I hold that it is not appropriate for the purpose of assess- "ments to income tax, because it does not afford a true picture "of the profits in any one year of charge." Mr. King said, with great force, that the only reason that was said was because the company did not adopt what is called the Gower system but adopted its own base stock system. If the evidence of Mr. Robson is analysed carefully, it is a little singular that he seems to skirt this central question in the case: is the base stock method of computing profits the proper method in accordance with the income tax Acts? I will summarize what Mr. Robson was saying in this way: It is quite true that there is no one method that can be said to be the proper method to apply, speaking generally, among cotton spinning concerns: some use the base stock method and others the Gower method of cost or market value. But the company, when they did follow the base stock method, were following commercial practice. It is a good method, though other people may say that there is a better method. Mr. Robson then said that he did not think it was better to adopt the Gower method, and bring in the base stock at the beginning and end of the year at cost or market value. He said that people who use the base stock method do not agree with that; that if it were employed consistently this method gave a true view of the profits of the company. He said that he had given certificates certifying companies' accounts framed on that basis. For example, he said that if there were a question of ascertaining the commission of a manager in a particular company he would adopt the method consistently used by the company and would not institute any other method. But all the way through, while he was discussing the question of rising and falling prices and the base stock system in relation thereto, he nowhere said: "In my view this system produces an accurate "result in that it provides the full profits for the year of assess-"ment." I think that Vaisey J. was to that extent justified in commenting on the evidence of Mr. Robson.

Perhaps I may refer to what Lord Porter said in Asia Mill Ld. v. Ryan (H.M. Inspector of Taxes) [17]: "Moreover what may "be prudent accountancy for a company is not necessarily the "correct method of ascertaining the proper assessment for "Income Tax."

I am bound to say that the view which I have taken of the findings of the Special Commissioners here is that they were concerned almost wholly with the first part of that sentence of Lord Porter. The base stock system is the appropriate method for this company which it has adopted consistently for its own purposes, for company purposes; but I do not think the Commissioners have really addressed themselves to the true question in this case: did this base stock method of accountancy correctly ascertain the full profits for income tax purposes for the year of assessment?

Quite naturally, all sorts of subsidiary questions thereupon arise, as, for example, did the base stock method have the effect of making deductions from profits which are expressly or by necessary implication forbidden by the Act of 1918 or any other relevant taxing statute? But if we are asked to say: That if [17] [1951] W.N. 390; 32 T.C. 275, 296.

C. A.
1953
PATRICK v. BROADSTONE MILLS LD.
Birkett L.J.

there be evidence to support the findings by the Special Commissioners, then the task of this court is ended, because it must support them, I am bound to answer that the findings of fact by the Special Commissioners do not conclude the matter. Even if one were to say that so far as these findings went there is nothing with which one can quarrel, nevertheless the true issue in this case is still left undetermined, and I think that Vaisey J. was right, though his way of expressing it does not perhaps cover quite accurately the real issue in the case. I would prefer to formulate it in this way: the Special Commissioners who considered the facts of this case considered them only up to one particular point and then stopped short. Bearing in mind the essential features of this base stock system which has been most accurately described by my Lord, taking into account that the fixed stock never comes into the trading account or appears in the balance sheet, and bearing in mind that the spare process stock had an arbitrary figure attached to it, the true view is that the Special Commissioners reached that stage and then stopped. They said: "There is no doubt at all that the base stock method "has been the method in vogue among cotton spinners for very "many years—in this particular case for nearly fifty years." For computing profits for the company's purposes there was no fault to be found with it. But as the real question was whether that system was a proper system for ascertaining accurately the full profit in accordance with section 29, I think that the Special Commissioners did not really address their minds to that topic.

For this reason I am of opinion that this appeal ought to be dismissed, and I concur quite fully in the judgment which my Lord has just delivered.

HODSON L.J. I agree.

Appeal dismissed.
Leave to appeal to the House of Lords refused.

Solicitors: Peacock & Goddard for Barlow, Parkin & Co., Stockport; Solicitor of Inland Revenue.

M. M. H.

[CHANCERY DIVISION.]

1953
Dec. 14, 15.
Wynn-Parry J.

* In re TOUT & FINCH LD.

[No. 00432 of 1953.]

Building—Contract—Insolvency of main contractor—Owner's right to pay unpaid sub-contractor—Retention money—Paid to contractor—Interest "fiduciary as trustee for sub-contractor"—Voluntary liquidation of contractor—Effect.
Bankruptcy. Company—Winding up. Assignment—Equitable.

A local authority entered into a contract, in the standard R.I.B.A. form, with a company as main contractors for the erection of 57 flats. The contract provided, inter alia, (a) that the architect should nominate specialist sub-contractors; (b) that on the issue by the architect of certificates in respect of work done, the company should pay to them within 14 days the amount certified less 10 per cent. retention money and a discount; (c) by clause 21 (c), that before the issue of a certificate the architect might require proof that the sub-contractors' accounts included in previous certificates had been duly discharged "in default whereof the employer may "pay such accounts . . . and deduct the amount so paid" from any sums otherwise payable to the company, with a proviso that nothing in the contract was to "render the employer . . . liable to pay any "nominated sub-contractor"; (d) that the architect was to issue interim certificates under which the company was to receive payments, less 10 per cent. retention money, which became payable as to one-half on the "practical completion of the work," and as to the other half on a final certificate of the architect at the expiration of the "defects liability period."

The applicants were nominated sub-contractors for the construction of reinforced concrete floorings; their sub-contract with the company was in the standard "F.A.S.S.," form approved by the trade organisations, and provided (a) that within 14 days of the receipt of a certificate the contractor was to pay to the sub-contractor the sum certified less retention money and cash discount, and (b) by clause 11 (h), as to retention money, that "the contractor's interest "in such money is fiduciary as trustee for the sub-contractor and if "the contractor . . . purports to . . . charge such interest . . . "(otherwise than by floating charge . . .) the contractor shall there-"upon immediately set aside and become a trustee for the sub-"contractor of a sum equivalent to the retention money and shall "pay the same to the sub-contractor on demand. . . ."

On September 19, 1952, the architect issued an interim certificate which included a sum due to the applicants. On December 19, 1952, the company, which had become insolvent, went into voluntary liquidation. The contract was nevertheless completed, the date of the "practical completion of the works" being October 25, 1952, and that of the end of the "defects liability period" being April 25, 1953. The architect, however, withheld the issue of his final certificate until the decision of the court on the points raised by this summons:—

Held, (1) that the language of clause 21 (c) of the main contract was applicable both to interim and to final certificates, so that the local authority were entitled at their discretion to make a direct payment of any unpaid balance to the applicants: In re Wilkinson, ex parte Fowler [1905] 2 K.B. 713 applied;

(2) that the company had under the main contract an interest in the retention money which they could make the subject of a valid equitable assignment, and that such an assignment had been effectively made by clause 11 (h) of the sub-contract; so that the company were trustees and were bound to pay over to the applicants retention money received in respect of the applicants' work.

Drew & Co. v. Josolyne (1887) 18 Q.B.D. 590; 3 T.L.R. 482 followed; Wilmot v. Alton [1897] 1 Q.B. 17; 13 T.L.R. 58 distinguished.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS.

The facts are set out in the judgment.

1953

TOUT & FINCH LD., In re.

Raymond Jennings Q.C. and Stuart Daniel for the applicants.
John Montgomerie for the liquidator.
R. D. Stewart-Brown for the local authority.
Lionel Edwards Q.C. and Dennis Lloyd for a representative general creditor.

The following cases, not referred to in the judgment, were cited in argument: Milestone (J. A.) & Sons Ld. v. Yates Castle Brewery Ld.[1]; Henry v. Hammond[2]; In re Lind.[3]

WYNN-PARRY J. This is a summons taken out in the voluntary liquidation of the company asking for the determination of two matters. The company carried on the business of building contractors, and went into voluntary liquidation on December 19, 1952. The company is insolvent.

On January 15, 1951, the company entered into a building contract expressed to be made between the company, who were called the contractors, of the first part, Union Assurance Society Ld., as sureties, of the second part, and Ilford Corporation, to whom I will refer for convenience as the council, of the third part. The object of the contract was the erection by the company for the council of a number of flats, 57 in all, on a particular site within the borough of Ilford. The contract price was £66,125 9s., and it was provided that the current edition of the Royal Institute of British Architects' form of conditions of contract, applicable where quantities form part of the contract, adapted for the use of the council, should apply. For the purpose of this judgment I only find it necessary to refer to a very few of those conditions. Clause 21 provides: "Where prime "cost or provisional sums are included in the bills of quantities "for persons to be nominated or selected by the architect to "supply and fix materials or to execute work on the site, (a) "such sums shall be deemed to include 2½ per cent. cash dis-"count and shall be expended in favour of such persons as the "architect shall direct, and all specialists or others who have "been nominated or selected by the architect are hereby "declared to be sub-contractors employed by the contractor and "are referred to in these conditions as 'nominated sub-contrac-"'tors.'" Sub-cl. (b) reads: "The sums directed by the "architect to be paid to nominated sub-contractors for work, "materials or goods comprised in the sub-contract shall be paid "by the contractor within 14 days of receiving from the architect "a certificate including the value of such work, materials or "goods less only (i) any retention money which the contractor "may be entitled to deduct, and (ii) a cash discount of 2½ per "cent." Sub-cl. (c) reads: "Before any such certificate is issued "to the contractor he shall, if requested by the architect, furnish "to him reasonable proof that all nominated sub-contractors'

[1] [1938] 2 All E.R. 439.
[2] [1913] 2 K.B. 515; 29 T.L.R. 340.
[3] [1915] 2 Ch. 345.

"accounts included in previous certificates have been duly dis-"charged, in default whereof the employer may pay such "accounts upon a certificate of the architect and deduct the "amount so paid from any sums otherwise payable to the con-"tractor." By sub-cl. (e) it is provided: "Neither the existence "nor the exercise of the foregoing powers nor anything else "contained in these conditions shall render the employer in any "way liable to pay any nominated sub-contractor."

Clause 24 deals with certificates and payments. By sub-cl. (a): "At the period of interim certificates named in the "appendix to these conditions interim valuations shall be made "whenever the architect considers them necessary, and, subject "to cl. 21 of these conditions, the architect shall issue a certi-"ficate stating the amount due to the contractor from the "employer, and the contractor shall be entitled to payment "therefor within the period named in the appendix." Sub-cl. (b) reads: "The amount so due shall, subject to cl. 21 (c) of "these conditions and to any agreement between the parties as "to stage payments, be the total value of the work properly "executed and of the materials and goods delivered upon the "site for use in the works up to and including a date not "more than seven days before the date of the said certificate, "less the amount to be retained by the employer (as hereinafter "provided) and less any instalments previously paid under this "clause." Sub-cl. (c) provides for the amount which may be retained by the employer in virtue of cl. 24, which in the particular case was 10 per cent. Then sub-cl. (d) provides: "The amounts retained in virtue of this clause shall be dealt "with in the following manner: on practical completion of the "works, and subject to cl. 17 of these conditions, the architect "shall issue a certificate for one moiety of the total amounts "so obtained and the other moiety shall be paid to the con-"tractor upon the issue of the architect's final certificate." By sub-cl. (f): "Upon expiration of the defects liability period "stated in the appendix to these conditions or upon completion "of making good defects under cl. 12 of these conditions, which-"ever is the later, the architect shall issue a final certificate of "the value of the works executed by the contractor and such "final certificate, save in cases of fraud, dishonesty or fraudulent "concealment relating to the works or materials or to any matter "dealt with in the certificate and save as regards all defects and "insufficiencies in the works or materials which a reasonable "examination would not have disclosed, shall be conclusive "evidence as to the sufficiency of the said works and materials."

One of the nominated sub-contractors was the applicants, and they were nominated by the architect, so that the company had no choice in their selection; but in accordance with the usual practice there was brought into existence between the company and the applicants a sub-contract dated April 23, 1951, in the

1953

TOUT & FINCH LD., In re.

Wynn-Parry J.

"F.A.S.S." form approved by the National Federation of Building Trades Employers and the Federation of Associations of Specialists and Sub-Contractors. That sub-contract provides in the usual way for the execution by the sub-contractor of the sub-contract works which are described as "Construction "'Helicon' Hollow Tile and reinforced concrete fire resisting "floors and roofs, reinforced concrete landings and staircases, "etc., for 57 flats."

By cl. 10 of the sub-contract provision is made for the price of the sub-contract works, upon which nothing really relevant turns. By cl. 11: "(a) The contractor shall subject to and in "accordance with the main contract from time to time make "application . . . to the architect for certificates of payment and "for the inclusion therein of the amount which at the date there-"of fairly represents the value of the sub-contract works and of "any variations authorised under this sub-contract then executed "and of the materials and goods delivered upon the site for use "in the sub-contract works." By sub-cl. (b): "Within four-"teen days of the receipt by the contractor of any certificate "from the architect the contractor shall notify and pay to the "sub-contractor the amount certified therein to be due in respect "of the sub-contract works and any authorized variations thereof, "less retention money, that is to say, the proportion attribut-"able to the sub-contract works of the amount retained by the "employer in accordance with the main contract, and less a "cash discount of 2½ per cent., if payment is made within "fourteen days as aforesaid." Sub-cl. (h) reads: "If and to the "extent that the amount retained by the employer in accord-"ance with the main contract includes any retention money "the contractor's interest in such money is fiduciary as trustee "for the sub-contractor and if the contractor attempts or purports "to mortgage or otherwise charge such interest or his interest "in the whole of the amount retained as aforesaid (otherwise "than by floating charge if the contractor is a limited company), "the contractor shall thereupon immediately set aside and "become a trustee for the sub-contractor of a sum equivalent "to the retention money and shall pay the same to the sub-"contractor on demand; provided that upon payment of the "same to the sub-contractor the amount due to the sub-con-"tractor upon final payment under this sub-contract shall be "reduced accordingly by the amount so paid."

On September 19, 1952, the nineteenth certificate was issued. That set out under the heading "Builder's Work," "Estimated "value of builder's work, £45,156," to which was added, "Estimated value of unfixed materials, £25," giving a total, in round figures of £45,181, which shows that the certificate covered the whole of the work up to that date, September 19. Then there was set out a list of the nominated sub-contractors, the second of which was the applicants. Their type of work was described as "Reinforced concrete floors etc." and the amount against their name was £7,876. A comparison with the previous certificate shows that at the date of the previous certificate the amount in their case was £7,276, so that they had earned another £600 in the interim. Then there followed a list of nominated suppliers, and a total of £67,355, from which was deducted retention money at the rate of 10 per cent., £6,735, leaving £60,620. Then there is the legend: "Add retention "released on completed blocks and increased costs of nominated "suppliers, £2,660." Then followed a note which stated: "Payments on account have not been deducted. A copy of this "report has been forwarded to the contractor. All nominated "sub-contractors and nominated suppliers have been notified of "the amounts due to them in respect of this report."

According to the evidence the date of the "practical com-"pletion of the works" was about October 25, 1952, so that on that basis the end of the "defects liability period," six months after the date of practical completion, would have been April 25, 1953. It is clear from the evidence that the work has been completed, and that notwithstanding the liquidation of the company, the council did not take over the completion of the contract as they would have been entitled to do under the conditions; and the architect is now in a position to issue his final certificate, but has not yet done so because of the present dispute.

The applicants have raised two points. They say first of all that they are entitled to a declaration that, in accordance with cl. 21 (c) of the main contract between the company and the council, the council are entitled to pay to the applicants the balance remaining unpaid of amounts included in previous certificates given in favour of the applicants. They ask secondly for a declaration to the effect that the company are trustees of any retention money, that is as defined in cl. 11 (b) of the sub-contract, where the phrase has a narrower meaning; and that, in effect, either the retention money when it becomes payable should be paid direct to the applicants, or that if it comes into the liquidator's hands he is bound at once to pay it over to the applicants.

Primarily both questions turn on the construction of these two documents. The first question appears to me to turn entirely, so far as construction is concerned, on cl. 21 of the main contract. It appears from what I have read of that clause, that the scheme is that the sums referred to in sub-cl. (a) are to be expended in favour of such persons as the architect shall direct, including nominated sub-contractors. In order to carry that out, there is set up the machinery which starts in sub-cl. (b), where it is provided that the sums directed by the architect to be paid to nominated sub-contractors for work, materials or goods comprised in the sub-contract shall be paid by the contractor within fourteen days. In sub-cl. (c) the reference to "such certificate" is clearly back to the certificate referred to in the latter part of sub-cl. (b), that is, a certificate including the value of such work, materials or goods, namely, the work, materials or goods referred to in the earlier part of sub-cl. (b), less only any retention money which the contractor may be entitled to deduct and the cash discount. On that basis, sub-cl. (c) proceeds to provide that the architect has the right, before he issues the certificate, to ascertain from the company whether the company has duly discharged the amounts due to the nominated sub-contractors under previous certificates, with the consequence that if the architect makes the inquiry and finds that the company has not made those payments, then the council has a right—and the matter is entirely one for the council—to pay such accounts upon a certificate being duly given by the architect, and, as mere necessary machinery, to deduct the amount so paid from any sums otherwise payable to the contractors.

1953

TOUT & FINCH LD., In re.

Wynn-Parry J.

The point which has been made by Mr. Edwards on behalf of the general body of creditors is that the certificate there referred to can only refer to an interim certificate, and cannot refer to a final certificate; and he seeks to establish that point by the interpretation which he places on cl. 24. For the purpose of establishing the point he has to satisfy me that each certificate only deals with work done and money earned since the date of the last certificate, but in my judgment there are two points against that. First it appears to me that the language of sub-cl. (b) is directly against that construction, because it says that the amount so due "shall be the total value"—that is, the amount of the certificate shall be the total value—"of the work properly "executed and of the materials and goods delivered upon the site "for use in the works up to and including a date not more than "seven days before the date of the certificate." Secondly, when one considers the form of certificate to which I have already sufficiently fully referred, it appears clear that the certificate does not proceed upon that basis, but on the basis indicated by the language in sub-cl. (b). It therefore seems to me as a matter of construction that sub-cl. (c) of cl. 21 is apt to cover not only interim certificates but a final certificate.

On that basis it appears to me that this case is covered by the decision of Bigham J. in In re Wilkinson, ex parte Fowler.[1] In that case, according to the headnote, A signed a contract with a local authority to construct sewage works at a price to be paid to him by monthly instalments, less 10 per cent., on the certificate of the engineer of the local authority; the 10 per cent. to be retained and paid to A six months after completion of the works. The contract also provided that certain machinery for the works was to be supplied to A by specified firms, and that (cl. 54), "If the engineer shall have reasonable cause to believe "that the contractor is unduly delaying proper payment to the "firms supplying the machinery, he shall have power if he thinks "fit to order direct payment to them." Pausing there, it will be seen that for all practical purposes that clause corresponds to sub-cl. (c) of cl. 21 of the main contract in this case. In October, 1904, A was adjudicated bankrupt on his own petition. At that date the contract was substantially completed, and there was then due under it the sum of £1,574 only, of which £1,349 was retention money and £224 was a sum payable on the engineer's next certificate, and these two sums were claimed by the trustee in bankruptcy. At that date A owed £836 in various amounts to the specified firms for machinery supplied to him for the works; and subsequently the engineer in 1905 made two orders under cl. 54 directing payment of the £836 out of the £1,574 to the firms in settlement of their accounts. It was held (so far as material) that the power conferred by cl. 54 on the engineer was not annulled or revoked by the bankruptcy and that the firms, by virtue of the two orders of the engineer, were entitled to be paid the £836 out of the £1,574 in priority to the claim of the trustee.

[1] [1905] 2 K.B. 713.

It will be seen, from that paraphrase of the headnote in that case, that it would be difficult to imagine a case which could more completely cover this case. In the course of his judgment Bigham J. said [2] this—and I think it is desirable to refer to this passage because of the importance of the policy which underlies such a clause as this—" Now the contract contains a provision " on which, in my judgment, the whole question turns. It is " clause 54. That clause, in my opinion, is inserted in the " contract for the benefit, not only of the people who supply the " machinery, but also of the council itself. It is very much to the " interest of the council to see that contracts of this kind for " public works into which they enter are carried out in a manner " satisfactory to all persons who are concerned in the performance " of them. The council certainly may, and no doubt frequently " do, make contracts of this kind, and they make them much " more advantageously when the people who supply the machinery " or other goods which are to be used by the contractor in the " performance of the contract know that there is a reasonable " probability that they will be paid. The council are enabled, " by inserting a clause of this kind in their contract, to give a " certain amount of confidence to people who supply goods to the " contractor, and in that way they are placed in a better position " when they come to make contracts again than they otherwise " would be; and, therefore, I say that the clause is inserted, not " only in the interests of the persons who supply goods to the " contractor, but also in the interests of the council themselves."

His Lordship then proceeded to construe the clause, and held that, notwithstanding the supervention of the bankruptcy, the clause remained in effect and that the two orders of the engineer were valid and effective orders. That case, as I say, covers this case. The council in this case have taken up what in my view is a very proper attitude, that is, they made it quite plain before the case came into this court that if permitted to do so by the

[2] Ibid. 719.

1953

TOUT & FINCH LD., In re.

Wynn-Parry J.

form of the judgment of this court, they would desire to exercise this power under sub-cl. (c) in respect of nominated sub-contractors. It so happens in this case that the figures show that there will be sufficient—so far as one can see more than sufficient—to deal with all the claims of the nominated sub-contractors, without there being any necessity for abatement or apportionment.

Therefore, for those reasons, I propose, in answer to this question in the summons, to make the declaration for which the applicants ask in the modified form which I have indicated earlier in this judgment.

I now pass to a consideration of the other question, which turns on the sub-contract. That involves the construction of cl. 11, and particularly sub-cll. (b) and (h). The first thing to do is to construe the clauses so far as is necessary. Sub-cl. (b) defines "retention money" as "the proportion attributable to "the sub-contract works of the amount retained by the employer "in accordance with the main contract, and less a cash discount "of 2½ per cent., if payment is made within fourteen days." Bearing in mind that definition of retention money, I turn to sub-cl. (h). On the face of it there are clear words used which are apt to create a trust which will operate by way of an equitable assignment of assets described as the contractor's interest in the retention money. It is said, first of all, that on a true construction of the document, which, of course, must be read as a whole, there is no trust, and nothing more than a running account. In support of that argument there is prayed in aid, for instance, cl. 13 of the sub-contract which provides that the contractor shall be entitled to make certain deductions or set-offs from any sums, including any retention money, which he may be liable to pay to the sub-contractor. But such a clause as that appears to me not to affect the matter one way or another. It cannot in the least be decisive, because it appears to me to be a perfectly normal and perfectly sensible provision to make, namely, that against what the company may owe to the applicant as trustee, the company may set off moneys which may be owing by the sub-contractor to the company.

Then it is said that what is made the subject of the alleged trust is the contractor's interest in the money, but that he has no such interest in that money as can form the subject of a trust; and for that purpose great reliance was placed by Mr. Edwards on Wilmot v. Alton.[3] The headnote sufficiently states the facts: "A trader, who carried on the business of a "theatrical costumier, contracted with a company to supply "dresses for a ballet and keep them in repair for the sum of "£40 a week for twelve weeks commencing from a certain date. "She subsequently charged her right and interest under the "contract in favour of the plaintiff as security for an advance "made by him. The dresses were duly supplied to the company "under the contract, but before any moneys became payable

[3] [1897] 1 Q.B. 17.

"under it the trader became bankrupt." It was held by the Court of Appeal, affirming the judgment of the Lord Chief Justice, "that the charge in favour of the plaintiff gave no title "as against the defendants, the trustees in bankruptcy, to moneys "which might become due under the contract after the "bankruptcy."

In the course of his judgment, Lord Esher M.R. said[4]: "During the period contemplated by the contract she"—that is, the trader—"became bankrupt. The effect of that was that "she could no longer fulfil the contract. The trustee in bank-"ruptcy in such a case may, if he thinks it for the benefit of the "estate, carry on the business and the contract; but he is not "obliged to do so. He would have a right to say that he would "not have anything to do with the contract. If the trustee in "this case had done so, no moneys not already accrued due under "the contract could after that become payable to any one under "it. After the bankruptcy therefore no money would have "become payable under the contract, unless the trustee had "elected to go on with it, and to perform the conditions which "by the terms of it were to be performed by the bankrupt. If "he did go on with the contract, then in consideration of his "doing so week by week the sums of money payable under the "contract would become due. Therefore the case stands thus. "At the moment of the bankruptcy, there is, as regards sums to "become payable in futuro under the contract, no debt due. "There are amounts which may or may not become due according "as the conditions of the contract are or are not fulfilled. In "order to earn those amounts, the conditions of the contract "must be fulfilled, and their fulfilment depends upon the question "whether the trustee in bankruptcy will go on with the contract "or not." That appears to me quite clearly to be (as it was put by Mr. Jennings, on behalf of the applicants) a case illustrative of the established principle of bankruptcy law that it is impossible to assign the profits of a business earned after the bankruptcy. The reference in the later part of the judgment of Lord Esher M.R. to Ex parte Nichols[5] confirms this. That is not this case, because here I have a contract where there is a provision for the retention of retention moneys. They represent moneys already earned, though not yet payable.

That situation appears to me to be conclusively covered by the decision of the Court of Appeal in Drew & Co. v. Josolyne.[6] In that case a building contract provided for payments to be made as the work proceeded subject to the retention of 20 per cent. of the value of the work shown in each certificate. The contractors assigned a portion of the retention moneys to secure a debt, and notice of the assignment was given to the building owners. After making the assignment, the contractors

[4] Ibid. 20.
[5] (1883) 22 Ch.D. 782.
[6] (1887) 18 Q.B.D. 590; 3 T.L.R. 482.

1953

TOUT & FINCH LD., In re.

Wynn-Parry J.

filed a petition for liquidation, the works then remaining incomplete. In the liquidation a trustee and committee of inspection were appointed. The trustee, in pursuance of the resolution of the committee of inspection, completed the work himself, advancing moneys for the purpose of which an amount exceeding that of the retention moneys which had been assigned was still unpaid. There was no other asset from which he could be recouped. The trustee and the mortgagee both claimed the amount of the retention moneys which had been assigned, and on the interpleader issue to try the title to the moneys it was held, so far as is relevant for my purposes, "that the assignment of the retention moneys held good as against the trustee; and that the mortgagees were therefore entitled to succeed." Now it may, I think, properly be said, that that was a very strong case, because, as will be seen from the summary of the facts which I have given, the trustee himself advanced moneys for the purpose of completing the contract; yet he was not allowed in respect of those moneys to compete with the equitable assignee. Lord Esher M.R. (who later gave the leading judgment in Wilmot v. Alton [7]) said [8]: "This appears to me a very plain case." He then set out the facts quite shortly, and proceeded: "What then was the position of the trustee in liquidation? He was not obliged to carry out the contract. He might have said that he would have nothing to do with it. The trustee, however, had an option to go on with the contract. There could be no new contract without the building owners' consent. It would be a perversion of language to say that the law by giving power to the trustee to carry on the contract means that he may make a new contract. If he elects to go on with the work, he goes on under the old contract as the trustee of the liquidating debtors' estate and will take their rights under the contract subject to any valid assignment which they may have made of such rights. When the building owners refrained from taking the work out of the contractors' hands and the trustee elected to go on with it, the old contract, as it seems to me, continued in effect. The contract work went on and was completed, and the architect certified accordingly, under the old contract, and, thereupon, if there had been no question of any assignment, the building owners would have been bound to pay the retention moneys over to the trustee. But there had been an equitable assignment of a portion of those moneys by the contractors before the liquidation, of which the building owners had notice; and in consequence they are bound to pay such portion of them to the assignees."

In the course of his judgment Bowen L.J. said [9]: "The truth is that the trustee simply carried on the contract of the liquidating debtors. It may be that the trustee or his firm

[7] [1897] 1 Q.B. 17.
[8] 18 Q.B.D. 590, 595.
[9] Ibid. 597.

"found the money which enabled the contract to be carried on "and completed, without which the retention moneys would "not have become payable, but that was his own affair, and "could not give him any priority over the equitable assignees "of the retention moneys; nor do I see that anything else took "place to give him such priority. The old contract continued "to subsist and the assignment by the contractors of the reten-"tion moneys to become due under it still held good." Finally I refer to the observations of Fry L.J. towards the beginning of his judgment[10]: "Here there was a building contract under "which the contract price was to be paid in the usual way, "namely, by payments on account upon the certificates of an "architect and payment of the balance after completion of the "work. The builders mortgaged a portion of the retention "moneys to become payable to them. These moneys were "the price of work already done, which however would not "become payable till the whole of the work was completed. The "mortgagors of those moneys could not set up a title to be re-"couped the moneys expended in completing the contract in "priority to their own assigns, nor could any person claiming "under them. The trustee comes in under the mortgagors as "trustee of their estate, and the committee of inspection request "him to carry on the contract upon which the liquidating "debtors were engaged at the time of the liquidation. If this "contract was so carried on, then the trustee so carrying it on "claims under the mortgagors and could not claim anything "expended in completing the contract against their mortgagees "of the retention moneys."

Those passages appear to me completely to cover the case before me on this question. They show, to my mind beyond doubt, that the company, under the main contract, had in the retention moneys, an interest which they could make the subject of a valid equitable assignment, and that in my view they have effectively done by the language of sub-cl. (h) of cl. 11 of the sub-contract.

For those reasons, I propose to make declarations in accordance with the effect of this judgment. I think that the first declaration might take the form suggested by Mr. Jennings, namely, a declaration that the interest of the company in the retention money as defined in the sub-contract, being part of the moneys retained by the council in accordance with the main contract, is fiduciary, and that the company are trustees for the applicants in accordance with clause 11 (h) of the sub-contract. Then I will also declare that the company and the liquidator are bound in accordance with the said cl. 11 (h) of the sub-contract to preserve entire the retention money upon receipt thereof by the liquidator from the council, and to pay the same to the applicants less only the cash discount of 2½ per cent. provided for by the sub-contract.

[10] Ibid. 598.

1953

TOUT & FINCH LD., In re.

Declaration accordingly.

Solicitors: Braby & Waller; Preston & Naylor; Town Clerk, Ilford.

F. R. D.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

C. A.

1953 Dec. 15.

Somervell, Denning and Romer L.JJ.

* BIRTWISTLE v. TWEEDALE.

PRACTICE NOTE.

Law Reports—Citation—Authenticity—Reports by persons not qualified as barristers—Estates Gazette.

During argument counsel for the appellant asked that their Lordships should refer to a report in the Estates Gazette:—

SOMERVELL L.J. I am unwilling that reports from the Estates Gazette should be cited since those reports are not by a barrister-at-law.

DENNING L.J. I agree. There are quite enough cases that can be cited.

ROMER L.J. I agree.

[Reported by Miss P. STANLEY, Barrister-at-Law.]

[CHANCERY DIVISION.]

1953 Dec. 17, 18.

Harman J.

* LOVE v. PHARAOH AND ROBERTS.

PRACTICE NOTE.

Practice—Affidavits—Chancery Division—Figures and dates—To be in figures and not in words—Costs of re-swearing and re-filing affidavit not complying with direction payable by solicitor personally.
Solicitor—Costs.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS.

This summons came originally before Wynn-Parry J., who on December 2, 1953, refused to hear it on the ground that figures in the plaintiff's affidavit were set out in words and not in figures, as required by the direction at p. 683 of the Annual Practice, 1953, see [1923] W.N. 288; [1940] W.N. 51. He adjourned it for the affidavit to be re-sworn and re-filed in proper form. On December 17, the summons came before Harman J. before whom the point as to costs was kept open.

A. J. Balcombe for the plaintiff.
The first defendant did not appear and was not represented.
Ian Edwards-Jones for the second defendant.

HARMAN J. It is best to dispose of this matter straight away. As is well known, there is a direction in the Annual Practice that figures and dates in affidavits should be expressed not in words but in figures. My predecessor P. O. Lawrence J. used to make solicitors pay personally the costs of any affidavits not complying with that direction. My brother Wynn-Parry J., I gather, did not deal with any costs, but I agree with counsel's understanding that the costs of the adjournment should be paid by the plaintiff. That, however, does not preclude me from carrying out what I understand to be Wynn-Parry J.'s intention, namely, that the solicitors personally should pay. I am very glad to hear from counsel for the plaintiff that his professional clients state that they are prepared to pay the costs personally; but be it known that, hereafter, the masters, on the preliminary hearing of adjourned summonses, will have authority to visit any substantial infraction of this direction by ordering that the affidavit be taken off the file and re-sworn at the expense of the solicitor who files it. Those costs will be, in the present case, the costs of and occasioned by the adjournment and of re-filing the affidavit: but I hope that, in future, the masters will deal with the matter at an earlier stage, in which case it will not cause any delay.

Solicitors: W. G. Mace & Sons, Tenterden; Kingsford, Dorman & Co. for Kingsford, Flower & Pain, Ashford.

K. R. A. H.

[CHANCERY DIVISION.]

* WARMAN v. BARCLAYS BANK LD. AND ANOTHER.

1953
Oct. 30.
Harman J.

[1951 W. No. 4248.]

Legal Aid—Costs—Taxation—Settlement of action—Items disallowed by taxing master — Consultation with leading and junior counsel — Country solicitor's attendance at and travelling expenses to consultation — Conference with junior counsel before accepting offer of settlement—Legal Aid and Advice Act, 1949 (12 & 13 Geo. 6, c. 51), Sch. III.
Solicitor—Costs. Counsel—Costs. Costs—Solicitor and client.

1953

WARMAN
v.
BARCLAYS
BANK LD.

An action of a complicated and difficult nature was settled before delivery of defence by the plaintiff accepting the offer of a money payment. The plaintiff was a legally-aided person and her costs were under Schedule III to the Legal Aid and Advice Act, 1949, taxed on the ordinary basis of a solicitor and client taxation.

The taxing master disallowed a number of items, including, inter alia, (1) a fee for a consultation with leading and junior counsel in London, and a fee for the country solicitor's attendance and his travelling expenses incurred in connexion with the consultation; (2) a fee for a conference with junior counsel attended by the plaintiff after the offer of settlement was made and before it was accepted:—

Held, that these items were properly incurred, and should therefore be allowed.

SUMMONS.

The plaintiff brought an action against Barclays Bank Ld., as executors of Maud Mary Brown, who died on July 16, 1950, and secondly against the sole beneficiary under her will, in which she claimed specific performance of an agreement made about 1932 between herself and the deceased relating to testamentary dispositions to be made respectively by her and the deceased in respect of a house in Cardiff. Alternatively, she claimed damages for breach of the agreement. She further claimed damages for the breach by the deceased of promises to pay for goods and services supplied by the plaintiff.

The plaintiff's allegations in the statement of claim, so far as here relevant, were: By an oral agreement made in or about 1932 she and the deceased had agreed to purchase this house and to live together in it and to share the costs of the purchase, maintenance and outgoings; they had also agreed that in the event of the death of either, the house was to belong absolutely to the survivor. In pursuance of that agreement they orally agreed to execute, and not to revoke, mutual wills by which each one should give her interest in the house to the other. In August, 1933, the plaintiff and the deceased, in fulfilment of that agreement, each made a will in the other's favour. On June 29, 1950, the deceased, in breach of her agreement, made a new will revoking her earlier will and bequeathing all her property on trust for the second defendant absolutely.

Before delivery of defence the action was settled on terms that the second defendant paid a sum of money to the plaintiff. The plaintiff was a legally-aided person, and an order was made for the taxation of her costs as between solicitor and client in accordance with the Third Schedule to the Legal Aid and Advice Act, 1949.[1]

[1] Legal Aid and Advice Act, 1949, Sch. III, rule 4: "(1) . . . costs shall "be taxed for the purpose of this "Schedule according to the ordinary "rules applicable on a taxation as "between solicitor and client where "the costs are to be paid out of a "common fund in which the client "and others are interested: Provided "that no question shall be raised as "to the propriety of any act for "which prior approval was obtained "as required by regulations."

On taxation the taxing master disallowed a number of items, including, inter alia, (a) a fee for a consultation after delivery of the statement of claim between junior and leading counsel, a fee for the country solicitor's attendance at that consultation which was in London, and his disbursements in travelling from Cardiff to London; (b) a fee for a conference with junior counsel after the offer of a settlement had been made and before it was accepted.

The solicitor stated in regard to (a) that his attendance at the consultation was to give leading counsel the background and history of the case, and to supply any necessary details of the case which were only possessed by him; (b) this conference was held in order that counsel could explain to the plaintiff the desirability of seriously considering the second defendant's offer to settle, as the plaintiff was anxious not to accept an offer if it could be improved on; and she was entitled to hear direct from junior counsel his views of the difficulties which existed in establishing her case; she would, moreover, have been able to correct him if he were under any misapprehension as to facts only known to her. It was only in this way that the plaintiff could make a decision on the offer which she would not regret later.

The taxing master stated that with regard to (a) the matter could have been adequately dealt with by written instruction to counsel to advise, and (b) that these costs were incurred through over-caution, and were neither necessary nor proper.

This summons was taken out to review the taxation of costs.

R. J. S. Harvey for the plaintiff.

HARMAN J. This is a summons to review a taxation under the Legal Aid and Advice Act, 1949; taxation under Schedule III to that Act is, subject to certain matters which do not concern us for this purpose, regulated in these words: "costs shall be "taxed for the purposes of this schedule according to the ordinary "rules applicable on a taxation as between solicitor and client "where the costs are to be paid out of a common fund in which "the client and others are interested: Provided that no question "shall be raised as to the propriety of any act for which prior "approval was obtained as required by regulations." So that for the present purpose it is an ordinary solicitor and client taxation.

A number of objections were carried in, some of which were allowed by the master, and others disallowed, and the legally-aided person has obtained the sanction of the Legal Aid Committee to carry the matter to this court.

[His Lordship, having upheld the master's refusal to allow certain items, which do not call for report, continued:] A group of objections arose in this way: after the statement of claim was drawn and delivered, the country solicitors were minded to take the advice of leading counsel, and they applied for leave from the local Legal Aid Committee. They obtained leave, and having regard to the proviso to rule 4 of Schedule III to the Act the master must, at the outset, accept the view that it was a case appropriate for leading counsel, and no question arises as to the propriety of instructing him. The master, looking at the question broadly, decided to allow five guineas for leading counsel's opinion —he was practising in London—and he disallowed all other fees to the leader.

1953

WARMAN v. BARCLAYS BANK LD.

Harman J.

What, however, was charged in the bill was, first of all a fee for a double consultation in London with the leading and the junior counsel; secondly, a fee for the country solicitor's attendance at that consultation; thirdly, as a disbursement, the travelling fees of the country solicitor who came up from Cardiff, and, fourthly, ten guineas for the opinion which leading counsel wrote as a result of the consultation.

Originally, nothing was allowed except that one sum of five guineas, but the taxing master relented to the extent of another five guineas, and allowed ten guineas for leading counsel's opinion; but he would not allow the consultation nor the country solicitor's attendance and travelling expenses. This type of case where the statement of claim depended on a number of small facts, and where there was this sort of client, seems to me to justify the exceptional course of the country solicitor himself coming up to London; and certainly, in my view, it justified the consultation with the leader before the latter wrote his opinion, because he would want, and I think that he would probably insist on it, to see junior counsel who had drawn the statement of claim and who had already advised. As it turned out, leading counsel advised certain amendments to the statement of claim, and no leader would advise those in an action without having his junior there, as a mere matter of ordinary courtesy. I think that it would be right to allow a proper fee for the leader and junior for that consultation, whatever the proper fee is, and to allow a proper fee for the country solicitor's attendance and for his disbursements on travelling. Whether they come to the amount which he has charged, £8 3s. 2d., is for the taxing master to determine and not for me.

I propose to leave the item relating to the leader's opinion as the master has left it; on the whole I do not think that ten guineas was an unjustified fee to charge.

At a later stage in the case the junior counsel left the Bar and another counsel came into the case. An offer was made by the second defendant to settle the case for a money payment, not a very handsome one; now plaintiffs never like it when they are offered a sum which is less than that which they hope to get—but lawyers know the difficulties to be faced when they are put to proof in cases of this kind which involve mutual wills; and it was desirable to satisfy her, if it were possible, that it was in her true interest at that stage to settle the litigation; and that she should see counsel for that purpose is, in my view, altogether proper. I propose to allow counsel's fee for a conference of £2 7s. 0d. and whatever sum the solicitor may properly charge for attending that conference.

Judgment accordingly.

1953

WARMAN v. BARCLAYS BANK LD.

Solicitors: Wrentmore & Son for Morgan, Lloyd & Evans, Cardiff.

I. G. R. M.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

 JOHNSON v. CROGGAN & CO. LD. AND ANOTHER.

1953 Dec. 3, 4, 14.

Pilcher J.

[1952 J. No. 2643.]

Building — Regulations — Delegation of duties to foreman — Injury to foreman—Negligent selection of unsafe ladder by foreman—Injured by breaking of ladder — Technical breach of statutory duty by employers — Liability — Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948 (S.R. & O. 1948, No. 1145), regs. 4, 29 (1) (8)—Law Reform (Contributory Negligence) Act, 1945 (8 & 9 Geo. 5, c. 28), s. 1.

Joint tortfeasors. Statutory duty — Contributory negligence. Invitor and invitee—Defective ladder selected by invitee. Factory.

Employers, in accordance with the custom of their trade, delegated to the plaintiff, an experienced and competent steel erector who was the foreman in charge of work to which the Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948, applied, the task of selecting and approving suitable gear for the work. Although it was, as he knew, within the scope of his authority to ask for suitable ladders—which would have been provided—the plaintiff, without his employers' knowledge, selected and used a lightly constructed fruit-picking ladder which he knew was unsuitable and unsafe for the work in question. Owing to its lightness of construction the ladder broke under the plaintiff's weight and he fell to the ground. In an action for damages for personal injuries sustained in the fall in which the plaintiff alleged breach by his employers of their statutory duty under regulations 4 and 29 (1):—

Held, that in the circumstances, the employers had properly and almost inevitably delegated the task of selecting and approving suitable gear to the plaintiff who knew and recognized that they had done so, and that, even though the employers were technically in breach of regulation 29 (1), the plaintiff, in acting within the scope of his delegated authority, had negligently selected an unsafe ladder and was therefore, the sole author of his own wrong; that from a commonsense point of view the employers were completely blameless and so no question of contribution under the Law Reform (Contributory Negligence) Act, 1945, arose; that the maxim ex turpi causa non oritur actio applied and that, therefore, the plaintiff's claim failed.

Smith v. Baveystock & Co. Ld. [1945] 1 All E.R. 530 applied.

1953

JOHNSON
v.
CROGGAN
& CO. LD.

Per Pilcher J. obiter. Were it necessary to apportion the damages recoverable under section 1 of the Act of 1945, the amount recoverable by the plaintiff must be reduced by 99 per cent.

Dictum of Tucker L.J. in Cakebread v. Hopping Brothers (Whetstone) Ld. [1947] K.B. 641, 653; 63 T.L.R. 277; [1947] 1 All E.R. 389 considered.

ACTION.

The plaintiff, an experienced and competent steel-erector, was employed by the first defendants as foreman in charge of the erection, under subcontract, of a new steel roof on a fruit store on the farm premises of the second defendants. The work on the fruit store, which was situated about 60 or 70 miles from the first defendants' headquarters, was work to which the Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948, applied. It was the first defendants' practice, and the custom of the trade, when sending their steel erectors to places at a distance from their headquarters, to delegate to the foreman steel-erector in charge of the work the duty of deciding upon the heavy gear, including ladders, necessary for the particular job, and of selecting and approving it. The plaintiff was well aware of the position and also knew that he had full authority to select and procure what gear he required; and that he could refuse gear if he considered it unsuitable. The plaintiff, on being shown round by one Macey, a director of the second defendants, found that the gear available on the site was not suitable and rang up the first defendants, who told him to telephone to the contractors and ask them to supply whatever gear he required. Whilst walking round the site the plaintiff had seen and roughly tested a fruit-picking ladder and was told by Macey that the second defendants had a number of such ladders which he could make use of if he thought that they would serve his purpose. The plaintiff, although he knew that they were unsuitable for building operations, decided to use the second defendants' ladders, and accordingly did not ask the contractors for any ladders. It was, as he knew, within the scope of his authority to ask the contractors to supply suitable building ladders and, had he asked, such ladders would have been supplied. Macey knew that the plaintiff and his mate were using the fruit picking ladders but the first defendants did not; had the plaintiff told them they would not have agreed to such use.

On November 24, 1950, the plaintiff, in order to descend from the roof of the fruit store, put both feet on one of the fruit picking ladders which was resting against a brick wall about 18 feet high. As the ladder took his whole weight both side runners snapped and it broke into three pieces, plunging him to the ground. The ladder in question was made of wood and was quite unsuitable and unsafe for use in a building operation when it would be supported only at one point near the topmost rung; and it was because of the lightness of its construction that it broke.

The plaintiff claimed damages in respect of the injuries received in his fall, alleging that the accident was caused by the first defendants' breach of their statutory duty under regulations 4 and 29 (1) of the Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948,[1] and/or by their negligence at common law. Further and in the alternative the plaintiff claimed damages against the second defendants alleging that they were in breach of the duty owed to him as an invitee upon their ladder.

C. J. T. Pensotti for the plaintiff.
John Russell for the first defendants.
Malcolm Morris for the second defendants.

The following cases were referred to in argument: Gallagher v. Dorman, Long & Co. Ld.[2]; Barcock v. Brighton Corporation[3]; Smith v. Baveystock & Co. Ld.[4]; Vincent v. Southern Railway Co.[5]; Cakebread v. Hopping Brothers (Whetstone) Ld.[6]; Woods v. Durable Suites[7]; Stapley v. Gypsum Mines Ld.,[8] and Marshall v. Cellacite and British Uralite Ld.[9]

Cur. adv. vult.

December 14. PILCHER J. stated the facts and continued: The first defendants contend that, as was the custom of the trade, they delegated to the plaintiff, their foreman on this particular job and an experienced steel-erector, the duty of selecting the gear required for the particular job. He was a man who had necessarily used ladders for many years, and he was no doubt, having seen the work he had to do, as competent as anyone to decide whether such work could safely be done with a ladder of the fruit-picking type some 20 feet long and supported only at one point near the top. I am satisfied that the first defendants, relying upon the plaintiff's experience, had left—and almost necessarily left—to him the selection of the gear required and that the plaintiff was well aware that that was the position. It seems to me that it is almost inevitable that when steel-erectors

[1] Buildings (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948, reg. 4: "It shall be the duty of every contractor and employer of workmen who is undertaking any of the operations to which these regulations apply (1) to comply with such of the requirements of regulations 5–30, . . . as affect any workman employed by him. . . . It shall be the duty of every person employed to comply with the requirements of such regulations as relate to the performance of an act by him, and to co-operate in carrying out Parts II to VII of these regulations. . . ."
Reg. 29: "(1) Every ladder and step-ladder shall be of good construction, sound material and adequate strength for the purpose for which it is used. (8) No wooden ladder shall be used unless it is constructed with (a) uprights of adequate strength. . . ."

[2] [1947] 2 All E.R. 38.

[3] [1949] 1 K.B. 339; 65 T.L.R. 90; [1949] 1 All E.R. 251.

[4] [1945] 1 All E.R. 531.

[5] [1927] A.C. 430.

[6] [1947] K.B. 641; 63 T.L.R. 277; [1947] 1 All E.R. 389.

[7] [1953] 1 W.L.R. 857; [1953] 2 All E.R. 391.

[8] [1952] 2 Q.B. 575; [1952] 1 All E.R. 1092.

[9] (1947) 63 T.L.R. 456.

1953

JOHNSON
v.
CROGGAN
& Co. LD.

Pilcher J.

are sent out to distant or remote places to carry out specialized work heavy gear must be obtained locally; and it is in the circumstances only reasonable that the choice of the gear to be used should be left to the foreman of the job.

Smith v. Baveystock & Co. Ld.[1] shows quite clearly that in an appropriate case it is competent for an employer to delegate his statutory duty to a competent employee. In that case the employer was held entitled to delegate his duty to fence or adjust the guard on a circular saw under the Woodworking Machinery Regulations. Goddard L.J. said[2]: "It is, of course, "perfectly clear that an employer can delegate the duty of seeing "that machines are properly fenced or adjusted to proper "employees, that is to say, to employees who have the necessary "knowledge and experience for them to see that the machine is "fenced as securely as it is possible to do. If an employer dele-"gates that work to a competent man and the competent man "does not carry it out, it follows from that, of course, that the "employers' duty has not been discharged. In this particular "case impliedly the duty of seeing that the fence is properly "adjusted is delegated to the man who works the machine, who "is an experienced person in relation to that particular job. It "is very difficult indeed to see how it could be otherwise done. "One has to try to interpret these rules and obligations in the "light of a certain degree of common sense and also in such a "way as to enable the machines to be used. Parliament "obviously has approved the use of circular saws and recognizes "that circular saws may be used in industry at the present time. "Then one has to consider how, in the ordinary and normal "working of a factory, this business can go on of adjusting the "guard. It would be quite impracticable, I suppose, for a fore-"man to go round every five minutes to see whether a workman "had got his machine adjusted exactly to the last degree of "safety. It must be left to the experience and common sense "of the man to see that it is adjusted in that way as is most "safe."

Smith v. Baveystock & Co. Ld.[3] was a case in which the employee to whom the duty was delegated was himself injured because he failed properly to carry out the duty delegated to him. Lord Goddard found that in the circumstances of that case there had been no negligence or breach of statutory duty by the defendants. du Parcq L.J., after considering the situation which might have obtained if the employers had been prosecuted for a breach of the regulations, said[4]: ". . . when it comes to "proceedings in a civil court for damages, I think they [the "employers] are entitled to say: 'The fault is really yours and "'not ours. We were quite entitled to rely on you. True, if "'somebody else had been injured by any failure on your part "'to fulfil your obligation we should have had to pay the penalty,

[1] [1945] 1 All E.R. 531.
[2] Ibid. 532.
[3] [1945] 1 All E.R. 531.
[4] Ibid. 535.

" ' we should have been responsible to him. We cannot rid " ' ourselves of our obligation. But it is quite absurd to think " ' that if you, who are really the person to blame because you " ' were reasonably and properly entrusted by us with this duty, " ' failed to carry it out, therefore, we have got to pay damages " ' to you.' "

In Gallagher v. Dorman, Long & Co. Ld.[5] employers failed in their submission that they had delegated to the workman a statutory duty not to overload a crane. Wrottesley L.J., who was delivering the judgment of the court, said[6]: " The word " ' delegation ' when used in connexion with the statutory duty of " the employer does not mean the same thing as ' employment.' " An employer does not, merely by employing his servant to work " a crane, delegate to him the statutory duty of seeing that the " crane is not overloaded. The theory of delegation of a statutory " duty is intelligible where the duty is a positive duty such as " to keep the guard of a power saw in adjustment. In the case " of a negative duty such as not to overload a crane, the " conception of delegation presents considerable difficulty."

I was also referred to Barcock v. Brighton Corporation,[7] where the question of delegation of his duty by the employer was discussed. In that case the plaintiff, to whom certain duties had been delegated, succeeded on the ground that the defendants had not instituted and maintained a safe system of work. I do not think that the case helps me, and I accordingly say no more about it.

I now come to consider the claim of the plaintiff in so far as it is based upon an alleged breach by the first defendants of their statutory liability. The work upon which the plaintiff was engaged was work to which the Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations apply. The plaintiff relied on breaches by his employers of regulations 4 and 29 (1). Regulation 4 provides: " It shall be the duty of every contractor and employer of work- " men who is undertaking any of the operations to which these " Regulations apply to comply with " (inter alia) regulations 5 to 30. The regulation also provides that it shall be the duty of every person employed to comply with the requirements of such regulations as relate to the performance of an act by him and to co-operate in carrying out Part II of the regulations. Regulation 29 is in Part II, and is in the following terms: [His Lordship read regulation 29 (1) and (8) and continued:]

On my findings of fact, the ladder which broke was not a ladder of adequate strength for the purpose for which it was used, and in particular its uprights were not of adequate strength. The first defendants were thus, as it seems to me, in technical breach of their absolute obligation to provide a ladder of adequate strength for the purpose for which it was in fact used by the plaintiff. The plaintiff himself who had a duty to co-operate,

[5] [1947] 2 All E.R. 38.
[6] Ibid. 41.
[7] [1949] 1 K.B. 339; [1949] 1 All E.R. 251.

1953

JOHNSON v. CROGGAN & CO. LD.

Pilcher J.

quite apart from any question of delegation, was in breach of regulation 29 (8) in that he used a wooden ladder with uprights of insufficient strength. It is clear, moreover, from the cases to which I have referred, that an employer is entitled in appropriate circumstances to delegate his statutory duty to an experienced employee. I find that the plaintiff was such an employee, and that the circumstances in which the first defendants carried out their business were such that it was eminently reasonable, if not commercially necessary, that they should delegate to their foreman on the spot the selection and approval of the actual heavy gear, including ladders, required for that particular job. The defendants did so delegate this duty to the plaintiff, and the plaintiff recognized and understood that they had done so. The plaintiff, in my view, should have appreciated that the ladder in question was unsuitable and unsafe. If the plaintiff's mate had been injured by the collapse of the ladder, the first defendants could not, of course, have escaped liability, but the situation is obviously different where it is the person to whom the duty to select and approve the ladder had been properly delegated who is himself injured by reason of the insufficiency of the ladder.

On my findings, the plaintiff's case against the first defendants seems to be covered by the decision of the Court of Appeal in Smith v. Baveystock & Co. Ld.,[8] subject only to the fact, that that case was decided before the passing of the Law Reform (Contributory Negligence) Act, 1945. But whether the present case is regarded as one in which there has been a technical breach of a statutory duty by the first defendants who had properly delegated the performance of that duty to a foreman, or as a case in which the first defendants have committed no breach of statutory duty, the result in my view is the same. I am inclined to think that it would be difficult to argue in this case that the first defendants were not in at any rate technical breach of their statutory duty, but the common sense of the matter is, that the plaintiff, acting within the scope of his delegated authority and negligently selecting an unsafe ladder, was the author, and the sole author, of his own misfortune. I can see no good reason why the well-known principle ex turpi causa non oritur actio should not apply in this case.

I should like to make brief reference to a passage in Cakebread v. Hopping Brothers (Whetstone) Ld.[9] That was a case in which the plaintiff was injured in the course of working a circular saw. The guard with which the saw was fitted was incapable of proper adjustment and consequently did not comply with the Woodworking Machinery Regulations. The plaintiff himself failed to make the necessary adjustments to the guard which was provided. That case, of course, was decided after the passing of the Law Reform (Contributory Negligence) Act and Hilbery J. decided that the plaintiff failed. His decision was varied by the

[8] [1945] 1 All E.R. 531.

[9] [1947] 1 K.B. 641; 63 T.L.R. 277; [1947] 1 All E.R. 389.

Court of Appeal who came to the conclusion that it was a case in which the defendants, having been throughout and continuously in breach of their statutory duty in that they had failed to provide a guard which complied with the regulations, were themselves to blame, but that the plaintiff's negligence had contributed to the extent of 50 per cent. towards the accident and his consequent injuries. Tucker L.J., after reviewing the authorities and pointing out what was the situation which had obtained in the earlier cases such as Vincent v. Southern Railway Co.,[10] continued[11]: "In that case," [Vincent v. Southern Railway Co.[12]] "of course, the House of Lords, had not before it, any "more than had Goddard L.J. in Smith v. Baveystock,[13] the "question what the position would have been under this new Act "of 1945, and I do not read the observations of any of their "Lordships as compelling me to hold that the workman here is "entirely out of court by reason of his negligence. I think that "he was negligent and that his negligence contributed to the "accident, as did the breach of statutory duty and common law "negligence of the employers. I therefore think that this is a "case under the new Act for apportioning the damages. I agree "with the figure proposed by my Lord. I think that the damages "" should be equally apportioned in this particular case on the "ground of the interview between the workman and the foreman. "I can quite conceive that, in a case of the type of Smith v. "Baveystock[13] where nothing of that kind occurs, a competent "skilled man is left in charge of a properly constructed machine, "there is proper delegation to him under reg. 21 and proper "supervision in the factory—if in those circumstances the workman is injured, and assuming, without deciding, that the "question of contribution would arise in such a case, I can quite "conceive, and I say no more, that a court might take the view "that in those circumstances something like 90 per cent. of the "blame might possibly fall on the plaintiff workman. I think "that this case is on its facts to be distinguished altogether from "a case of that kind."

There is perhaps some ground for saying that this case where there has been, in my view, a technical breach by the employer of his statutory duty to provide a safe and suitable ladder is a case of the kind to which Tucker L.J. was referring. Accordingly, I have had to consider that matter: I have found that the employers were acting in accordance with the usual practice of the trade, and that they were acting reasonably in confiding to their experienced employee the choice of suitable heavy gear; in the popular sense the only fault which can be attributed to anyone is the fault of the plaintiff, in choosing a completely unsuitable ladder.

By section 1 of the Law Reform (Contributory Negligence) Act: "Where any person suffers damage as the result partly of

[10] [1927] A.C. 430.
[11] [1947] 1 K.B. 641, 653.
[12] [1927] A.C. 430.
[13] [1945] 1 All E.R. 430.

1953

JOHNSON v. CROGGAN & CO. LD.

Pilcher J.

"his own fault and partly of the fault of any other person or per-"sons, a claim in respect of that damage shall not be defeated." Looking at the matter from the commonsense point of view—and I venture to think that that is the proper aspect from which to view this case—there was no fault here in the employers. If they were entitled, and, indeed, as I find, almost bound to delegate to the plaintiff the duty of selecting and approving gear, they could do no more, so I very gravely doubt whether it can properly be said that the defendants here were in fault under the section; that being so, I think it would be driving matters too far to hold that, in a case of this kind where the defendants are, in my view, completely free from blame, I am compelled to find them to blame and then to allocate some very large proportion of the blame—possibly 99 per cent.—to the plaintiff. That would seem to me to be the kind of situation which ought not to arise, and I do not propose to decide the case on that ground.

I propose to look at the matter from what I conceive to be the commonsense point of view. I am satisfied here that the only person who was to blame in this matter was the plaintiff. He was negligent and also in breach of the statutory duty imposed upon him under the Building Regulations, and it was his own negligence and breach of duty which immediately caused the accident and resulting injury. I see no reason why upon the facts of this case the maxim ex turpi causa non oritur actio should not apply, and accordingly I find that the plaintiff's claim fails. If I should be wrong about this, and if it had been necessary for me to decide the case on what I may perhaps call the contributory basis, I should without hesitation find that whilst the defendants were in technical breach of the regulations, the amount recoverable by the plaintiff should be reduced by 99 per cent., the result of which would be that he would recover virtually nothing. I am accordingly of opinion that the plaintiff's claim against the first defendants based upon the alleged breach of their statutory duty fails. The selection and approval of this heavy gear having been left, and properly left under a proper system of work, to the plaintiff, and the plaintiff having made this unfortunate and bad selection, it is quite impossible to say that the defendants were negligent or failed to institute and supervise a proper system of work. For the reasons which I have given, I am quite satisfied that the plaintiff's common law claim against the first defendants must also fail.

The plaintiff's claim against the second defendants can be decided quite shortly. The contention that the plaintiff was in substance an invitee of the second defendants upon the ladder is, in my view, quite ill-founded and if authority is needed to support my opinion I need only refer to Marshall v. Cellactite & British Uralite Ld.,[14] where factory owners gave permission to contractors working on their premises to borrow plant required for

[14] (1947) 63 T.L.R. 456.

1953

JOHNSON v. CROGGAN & Co. LD.

Pilcher J.

the work, and one of the contractors' employees was injured by falling from a defective ladder. It was held that the contractors, the second defendants, were alone to blame since they had themselves selected the ladder for this particular work. Lord Greene M.R. said [15]: "Because Cellactite" [the factory owners and the first defendants] "had given Adlon" [the employers of the workman] "a general permission to use any plant it was "said that it was just as if Cellactite had put the ladder in place, "with their own hands. That argument is fallacious, because "the permission was not a permission relative to any particular "piece of plant, but a general permission to use plant, and no "guarantee was given or representation made to anyone as to the "safety of any particular piece of plant or its suitability for any "particular work." Those words seem to me amply to cover the circumstances and the facts which I have found in regard to the way in which Macey told the plaintiff that he could use any of his, Macey's, ladders if he thought that they would serve his purpose. Macey did not in any sense of the word press the plaintiff to use the ladders or guarantee that the ladders were suitable for the job. That was a matter which lay within the competence of the plaintiff and within his competence alone. I think that that case affords a short answer to the plaintiff's claim against the second defendants. That is sufficient to dispose of this case, and accordingly the plaintiff's claim fails both against the first and against the second defendants.

Judgment for the defendants.

Solicitors: Sprinz & Sons for J. P. Nolan & Janes, Southend-on-Sea; Carpenters; Isadore Goldman & Son for E. A. Morling & Son, Maidstone.

J. F. L.

[15] Ibid. 457.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

* REGINA v. BRIGHTON BOROUGH JUSTICES. Ex parte JARVIS.

1953 Dec. 18.

Lord Goddard C.J., Sellers and Barry JJ.

Licensing—Occasional licence—Application—Application for occasional licence in Brighton by holder of a full on-licence in Taunton—Justices' consent to occasional licence for off-licence premises "on "the occasion of Christmas shopping facilities"—Consent given on condition that no liquor sold for consumption on the premises—"Occasion"—Whether occasional licence can be off-licence—Validity of justices' consent—Where consent administrative or judicial act—Customs and Excise Act, 1952 (15 & 16 Geo. 6 & 1 Eliz. 2, c. 44), s. 151—Licensing Act, 1953 (1 & 2 Eliz. 2, c. 46), s. 148.

Justices — Administrative or judicial decision — Licensing. Crown Practice—Certiorari—Application by party not interested—Disaction—Administrative or judicial decision—Licensing justices.

1953

REGINA
v.
BRIGHTON BOROUGH
JUSTICES.
Ex parte
JARVIS.

The holder of an off-licence for the sale of intoxicating liquor in respect of premises in Brighton also held a full on-licence in respect of premises at Taunton. The permitted hours during which liquor could be sold at the off-licence premises in Brighton, which closed at 7 p.m., were from 10.30 a.m. to 2 p.m. and from 6 p.m. to 10.30 p.m. The licensee, in his capacity as the holder of an on-licence at Taunton, applied to the Brighton justices under section 151 of the Customs and Excise Act, 1952, for their consent to the grant of an occasional licence allowing him to sell liquor at his Brighton premises during the afternoons of Christmas week, for the convenience and accommodation of the public. The justices consented to the grant of an occasional licence authorizing him to sell liquor between the hours of 2.30 p.m. and 6 p.m. on December 22, 23 and 24 "upon the occasion of Christmas shopping facilities," their consent being given upon the licensee giving undertakings not to sell any intoxicating liquor for consumption on the premises between 2.30 p.m. and 6 p.m., and to close the premises for the sale of intoxicating liquor off the premises at 7 p.m. On an application by rival trader for an order of certiorari:—

Held, that the object of an occasional licence, which must be an on-licence, was to enable the public to obtain refreshment when attending at a certain place or occasion. Such a licence could not be restricted to off-licence purposes, nor could the holder of an off-licence be granted an on-licence which was, by conditions attached to it, in effect an off-licence, merely to enable him to sell liquor during the hours when his off-licence did not permit him to do so. The consent given by the justices was one which they had no power to give and, accordingly, an order of certiorari must go.

Held further, that "Christmas shopping facilities" was not an occasion for which an occasional licence should be granted.

APPLICATION for order of certiorari.

The respondent, Paul Dauthieu, was the holder of a Customs and Excise off-licence for the retail of spirits, wines and beer in respect of premises at 64, London Road, Brighton, and of other premises in various parts of the south of England. The respondent was also the holder of a full on-licence in respect of the Bear Hotel, Taunton. The permitted hours for the sale of intoxicating liquor at the respondent's premises in Brighton, and at other licensed premises in Brighton were between 10.30 a.m. and 2.30 p.m., and between 6 p.m. and 10.30 p.m., but the respondent closed his premises at 7 p.m. On December 11, 1953, the respondent, having served notice of his intention upon the chief constable of Brighton and the clerk to the justices, applied, in his capacity as the holder of an on-licence in respect of the Bear Inn, Taunton, to the Brighton justices for consent to the granting to him of an occasional licence under the Customs and Excise Act, 1952,[1] authorizing the sale by him of intoxicating liquors at 64, London Road, Brighton, between the hours of 2.30 p.m. and 6 p.m. on December 19, and during the period December 21 to December 24, 1953, on the occasion of Christmas week, for the convenience and accommodation of the public. The grounds of the application were that in the period immediately before Christmas tremendous pressure was experienced by the respondent's staff with consequent strain on them, and that, if the application were granted, it would benefit afternoon shoppers.

[1] Customs and Excise Act, 1952, s. 151: "(1) Where the appropriate "consent has been obtained by the "holder of a retailer's on-licence the "Commissioners shall grant to him "an excise licence (hereinafter in this "section referred to as an 'occasional "'licence') authorising the sale by "him of any intoxicating liquor to "which his retailer's licence extends "at such place other than the pre-"mises in respect of which his "retailer's licence was granted, dur-"ing such period not exceeding in "Great Britain three weeks or in "Northern Ireland three days at one

At the hearing of the application the respondent offered to give an undertaking that no liquor would be sold for consumption on the premises and the justices, in exercise of their powers under section 148 of the Licensing Act, 1953, consented "to the grant "of an occasional licence to Paul Andre Schremer Dauthieu "(being the holder of a retailer's on-licence in respect of the Bear "Inn . . . Taunton in the county of Somerset) authorizing the "sale by him of intoxicating liquor on the 22nd, 23rd and 24th "days of December, 1953, between the hours of 2.30 p.m. and "6 p.m. . . . at 64, London Road, Brighton, . . . upon the occasion "of Christmas shopping facilities." The justices' order was endorsed "This occasional licence is granted on undertakings "given by the" [respondent] "(a) not to sell any intoxicating "liquor for consumption on the premises between 2.30 p.m. and "6 p.m., and (b) to close the premises for the sale of intoxicating "liquor off the premises at 7 p.m."

The applicant, a licensed victualler carrying on business in Brighton and a member of the General Purposes Committee of the Brighton and County Licensed Victuallers' Protection Society and Friendly Association, a rival trader, in common with the other members of his society and association, to the business carried on at 64, London Road, Brighton, moved for an order of certiorari

"time, and between such hours, as "may be specified in the consent: . . . "(2) In the foregoing subsection, the "expression 'the appropriate con-"'sent' means—(a) in England or "Wales, the consent of the justices "granted on an application made in "accordance with s. 64 of the Licens-"ing (Consolidation) Act, 1910; . . . "Provided that, without prejudice "to any discretion of the appropriate "authorities aforesaid to refuse their "consent or permission, they shall "not grant it unless they are of "opinion that the grant of an occa-"sional licence is expedient for the "convenience and accommodation of "the public."

Licensing Act, 1953 (which repeals and replaces the Licensing Act, 1910) s. 148: "(1) For the purposes of "section 151 of the Customs and "Excise Act, 1952 (which provides "for the grant of occasional licences "to the holders of retailers' on-"licences who have obtained the "appropriate consent), the expression "'appropriate consent' means con-"sent granted by justices of the peace "under this section. (2) The justices "shall not hear an application for "consent unless satisfied that the "applicant has served on the chief "officer of police at least twenty-four "hours' notice of his intention to "apply for the consent, stating the "name and address of the applicant, "the place and occasion for which the "occasional licence is required, the "period for which he requires it to be "in force, and the hours to be speci-"fied in the consent. (3) Without "prejudice to any discretion of the "justices under this section to refuse "their consent, they shall not grant "it unless they are of opinion that "the grant of an occasional licence "is expedient for the convenience and "accommodation of the public. . . ."

1953

REGINA v. BRIGHTON BOROUGH JUSTICES. Ex parte JARVIS.

to bring up and quash the justices' consent to the grant of the occasional licence on the grounds: that the justices had no power to grant the consent in respect of the occasion, or the period, or the premises for which it was given; that the respondent in his application for the consent did not state the occasion or any occasion for which the licence was required; that the justices gave the consent subject to conditions which they had no power to impose; and that the justices, in granting the consent, had exceeded their jurisdiction.

J. G. S. Hobson for the applicant.
Harold Brown for the respondent.

The following cases were referred to in argument: Reg. v. Bath Licensing Justices *; Rex v. Rotherham Licensing Justices,† and Chandler v. Emerton and others, Justices.‡

LORD GODDARD C.J. referred to section 151 of the Customs and Excise Act, 1952, and section 148 of the Licensing Act, 1953, and continued: The first objection that has been taken by Mr. Harold Brown for the respondent is that, quite apart from the particular facts of this case, certiorari will not lie because the granting of consent by the justices is an administrative and not a judicial act. I can only say that I think that that argument is made about sixty years too late. It has now long been held, since Sharp v. Wakefield,[1] Boulter v. Kent Justices [2] and that class of case, that what justices do in relation to licensing matters are judicial acts, and, if any more recent authority is required, Rex v. Rotherham Justices,[3] considered in Rex v. Torquay Justices,[4] is ample authority for the proposition that certiorari will lie. The court finds no difficulty in saying that this consent, which must be applied for to justices sitting in court and considered by them, and as to which they have to exercise a discretion whether the matter is for the convenience and accommodation of the public, is clearly a judicial act and an order which can be brought up and reviewed by this court.

The respondent holds an on-licence in respect of the Bear Inn at Taunton, in the county of Somerset, some 150 miles from Brighton, if not more. He also holds off-licenses in Brighton and other South Coast towns. For this purpose it must be remembered that, although licences can be sub-divided into many different classes, the main division is between on-licences and off-licences; on-licences permit the consumption of intoxicating liquor on the licensed premises during certain permitted hours, while

* [1952] 2 All E.R. 700.

† (1939) 55 T.L.R. 718; [1939] 2 All E.R. 710.

‡ [1940] 2 K.B. 261; 56 T.L.R. 790; [1940] 3 All E.R. 146.

[1] [1891] A.C. 173; 7 T.L.R. 389.

[2] [1897] A.C. 556; 13 T.L.R. 538.

[3] (1939) 55 T.L.R. 718; [1939] 2 All E.R. 710.

[4] [1951] 2 K.B. 784; [1951] 2 T.L.R. 652; [1951] 2 All E.R. 656.

off-licences permit the sale, but not the consumption on the premises, of intoxicating liquor during the permitted hours.

The respondent thought that it would be convenient for the public (and, I have no doubt, profitable for himself) if he could sell liquor at his shop at Brighton all through the day, irrespective of the permitted hours. Accordingly, he applied to the Brighton justices for an occasional licence. He could only do that as the holder of an on-licence, therefore he applied, not in his capacity of a Brighton or a Sussex licensee, but in his capacity of the holder of a licence at Taunton. I am surprised that in the circumstances the justices entertained the application at all. However, they granted this very curious licence, "upon the occasion of Christmas "shopping facilities." The occasion of Christmas shopping might be an "occasion"; but I do not know how "shopping facilities" can be an "occasion." It is a curious way of putting it but I am not going to determine this case merely upon that.

The justices put on the licence "This occasional licence was "granted on undertakings given by the applicant (a) not to sell "any intoxicating liquor for consumption on the premises between "2.30 and 6 p.m., and (b) to close the premises for sale of intoxi-"cating liquor for consumption off the premises at 7 p.m." It is to be observed that an occasional licence must be a full on-licence. The justices, therefore, can only grant the respondent a full on-licence; but what they have done here is to say: "We will give "you an occasional licence, that is to say, a full licence, on the "terms that you only use it as an off-licence; and, on the other "hand, you may sell at places where you have only got an off-"licence, so at the same time we will give you an occasional "licence on those premises."

The answer is that they have given a licence that they have no power to give. There is no power to turn an off-licence into an on-licence in this way and no power to restrict an on-licence into an off-licence. If a man is granted an on-licence, he can sell only during permitted hours and he is not obliged to close till the hours come to an end. If, on the other hand, he has an off-licence, he cannot have granted to him an on-licence which is really, in effect, an off-licence, merely to enable him to sell liquor during hours when his off-licence does not allow him to sell. The whole object of an occasional licence (which is granted for an occasion such as a flower show or a race meeting, or it may be now a festival occasion which may last as long as three weeks) is to give the public a chance of getting refreshment when attending at the place in question. Here, the licence that was granted is neither fish, flesh nor good—nor bad—red herring. In my opinion, it is not a licence, and therefore this application is granted.

I would add that, although I am not necessarily deciding it, the other licensees may not be interested persons; if they are not, the only difference would be that then the issue of certiorari would be discretionary and not as of right. Assuming, therefore, that the application must be one applying to us in our discretion to grant certiorari, I think that this is eminently a case in which we should exercise our discretion because, if this state of affairs were allowed—we are told (there is no actual evidence about it) that it has been tried on in other places—it would be an obvious way of getting round the provisions of the Licensing Act and justices would be acting in a way which, in our opinion, the law does not permit. It is, therefore, just as well that this question should be decided.

1953

REGINA v. BRIGHTON BOROUGH JUSTICES. Ex parte JARVIS.

Lord Goddard C.J.

SELLERS J. I agree. I think that the justices misconceived the position here. They granted an on-licence for premises where no on-licence was required, and where there was no occasion to grant one. They then sought to make what was obviously an on-licence, granted to the holder of a retailer's on-licence, into something which was an off-licence and to restrict it in a way which I do not think that they were empowered to do. I agree with the decision of my Lord.

BARRY J. I agree.

Order of certiorari.

Solicitors: Godden, Holme & Co. for Edwin Boxall & Kempe, Brighton; Blyth, Dutton, Wright & Bennett for Graham Hooper & Betteridge, Brighton.

J. F. L.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

1953 Dec. 15, 16.

Barry J.

* WATT v. HERTFORDSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL.

[1952 W. No. 1451.]

Negligence—Safe system of work—Fireman—Fireman injured while travelling to emergency in vehicle with unlashed jack—Obvious risk—Whether fire authority entitled to require fireman to travel in dangerous situation—Standard of duty owed.

Fire Brigade. Volenti non fit injuria.

Fire authorities are bound to provide proper equipment and to take reasonable care to avoid exposing firemen to unnecessary risks, but the primary object of the service is to save human life and property and, speed being an essential requirement in carrying out that object, fire authorities are entitled to require their firemen to undertake risks far greater than those encountered in other employments, not only when fighting a fire, but also when being transported to the scene of a fire or other emergency.

ACTION.

Since 1939 the plaintiff had been employed by the defendants, the local fire authority, as a fireman at Watford fire station. On July 27, 1951, the plaintiff was on duty at the fire station when an emergency call was received to the effect that a woman was trapped under a heavy vehicle about 200 or 300 yards away. The sub-officer in charge immediately left the station in a pump-escape vehicle, but before going he gave instructions that the plaintiff's team should follow him to the scene of the accident transporting with them in a Fordson lorry heavy lifting gear, namely a large jack standing on four small wheels and weighing about two or three hundredweight. The jack was loaded into the back of the lorry and was accompanied by the plaintiff and two other firemen who steadied the jack. The lorry had a plain floor and sides and there was nothing to which the jack could have been lashed. Shortly after the lorry had left the fire station the driver had to apply the brakes suddenly; all three men were thrown off their balance, the men steadying the jack were unable to hold it and it slewed forward, catching the plaintiff's ankle and causing him serious injuries.

Three vehicles were in regular use at the fire station, a pump-escape and a water tender, which were both unsuitable for the carriage of the jack, and an Austin tender which was used as an emergency tender and which was properly equipped for the carriage of the jack, and in which it could be properly secured. The Austin tender was put to other uses and was out of the station and not available for the carriage of the jack during about 30 hours in the week; at the time that the emergency call was received it was not in the station. The Fordson lorry on which the jack was carried on July 27, 1951, was not one of the regular vehicles used by the fire authority at the Watford station, but had been lent to the station for the transport of training equipment only a few days before the plaintiff's accident. Emergency calls other than fire calls were fairly frequent at the fire station, but it was rare for the heavy jack to be required, and in the normal course, if the jack was required when the Austin tender was not available to carry it, another station would be notified and would answer the call. On the occasion in question it would have taken at least ten minutes for assistance to arrive from the nearest fire station.

The plaintiff, alleging negligence at common law, brought the action to recover damages for the injuries which he received. The defendants denied liability.

H. B. Grant for the plaintiff.
Lord Hailsham Q.C. and Roland Brown for the defendants.

The following case was referred to in argument: Merrington v. Ironbridge Metal Works Ld.[1]

BARRY J. stated the facts and continued: It was not suggested that the driver of the lorry was negligent in the way in which he controlled the vehicle, because it was recognized by the plaintiff that in travelling towards the scene of an accident

[1] [1952] 2 All E.R. 1101.

1953

WATT
v.
HERTFORDSHIRE
COUNTY COUNCIL.

Barry J.

of this kind it was incumbent upon the driver to cover the distance as quickly as possible, and in that endeavour it might well be necessary for him on occasions to apply his brakes with considerable violence. Unfortunately, the sudden application of the brakes threw all three men, including the plaintiff, who were travelling on the flat floor of the lorry, off their balance.

The principal question which I have to decide is whether the plaintiff has established that this accident was due to the negligence of his employers. It is very properly conceded by Lord Hailsham on behalf of the defendants that if the peculiar considerations associated with the fire service were to be eliminated from this case and it were to be treated as an ordinary case of master and servant in some commercial enterprise, then the defendants would have failed to have taken reasonable care to secure the safety of their workman. The lorry had a perfectly plain, flat floor, there was nothing on the floor or on the side or tail boards to which any ropes or wires could be attached, and the heavy jack could not have been lashed in any effective manner. The jack was highly mobile, particularly at one end supported by the castor, and any careful employer must have foreseen that, if it were carried in the back of that lorry, steadied only by the hands of two men, there was a very considerable danger of it slipping on some sudden movement of the lorry, such as a violent swerve or a violent application of the brakes, and, having regard to its weight, it would not be difficult to foresee that, if it did move, it was liable to do considerable damage to anyone who happened to be upon the lorry floor. I have, however, to look at the very special circumstances in this case.

[His Lordship referred to the situation at the fire station when the emergency call was received and continued:] When the call arrived, the sub-officer, in the exercise of his discretion, decided to transport the heavy jack, which he thought would clearly be required having regard to the nature of the emergency with which he was called upon to deal, in the Fordson lorry which was the only vehicle available on which it could be carried. I do not know whether he directed his mind to the possible risks involved in carrying the jack upon the flat floor of the Fordson, but had he done so, as I have already indicated, it must have been clear to him that the risk involved in transporting the jack in that way was, to put it at its lowest, a substantial risk.

The question which I have to answer is whether the defendants were negligent in these circumstances in requiring the plaintiff to travel on the floor of the lorry while the jack was being carried, unsupported by any platform and with its movement unchecked by any chocks upon the floor or by any system of strapping or lashing. This question is not an easy one, but on the whole I have come to the conclusion that the plaintiff has failed to establish negligence on the part of his employers. As Lord Hailsham pointed out, and as Mr. Grant conceded, an employer's obligations to his servants are, in the absence of some statutory requirement, not absolute obligations. An employer is bound to exercise reasonable care to avoid exposing those employed by him to unnecessary risks, and it is obvious that it is part of his duty to take reasonable care to provide his workmen with proper equipment for the work which they have to undertake. What is "reasonable," however, must depend upon the circumstances and upon the nature of the employment in which any particular servant may be engaged.

In joining the fire service, it seems to me that the plaintiff voluntarily engaged himself in a type of employment which he knew involved very much greater risk than many other types of employment which he could have chosen. In fighting fires fire authorities are entitled to require their firemen to undertake, and their firemen gladly undertake, risks far greater than those which would be encountered in other kinds of employment. An employee is entitled to expect his employer to subject the scaffolding which he uses to minute scrutiny to ascertain that it is in every way safe for its purpose, and he is also entitled to require his employers to provide hand-rails and other safety precautions which will reduce the risk of any accident to any man, but similar considerations do not apply to men engaged in fighting fires. It is inherent in their employment that they take risks in and about a building which a bricklayer or a builder's labourer would never be called upon to undertake. A person who joins the fire service must be aware that, not only in actually fighting the fire but in being transported to the place where the fire is taking place he will be called upon to take risks which other persons travelling in motor-vehicles would not be required to undertake. The primary object of the whole service, of which the plaintiff I am sure is a most worthy member, is to save human life and property, and, to carry out those objects, speed is a most essential requirement.

I think that Lord Hailsham is right when he says that no negligence has been established against the sub-officer or any of the other men who were working with the plaintiff at the fire station on the afternoon of this accident. The sub-officer was faced with an emergency. Even vis-à-vis the plaintiff he was entitled to use his initiative and to do what he reasonably could to bring the necessary assistance to the injured woman in the shortest possible space of time. I think that in this emergency when there was a vehicle available he was entitled to use it even though he knew, or certainly ought to have known, that it was not ideally adapted for the use to which he proposed to put it. It has been suggested by Mr. Grant that he might have detailed one or two of the firemen to drag the jack to the scene of the accident by hand. I do not know whether the sub-officer had any exact information as to the distance between the scene of the accident and the fire station, but even if he had, it seems to me that it would clearly take longer to drag a heavy implement of this kind along the street than it would to transport it by lorry.

1953

WATT
v.
HERTFORDSHIRE
COUNTY COUNCIL.

Barry J.

Speed being the essential element, he was, in my view, justified in making that decision. If in fact the woman had died as a result of some delay in bringing the necessary equipment to the scene of her accident, her death would weigh very heavily on the sub-officer's conscience and I think the same would apply to any of the others engaged at the Watford station. It is forcibly argued by Mr. Grant that even though the sub-officer might have been under a duty to bring aid to the injured woman, as a member of the public, as soon as possible, that does not mean that, vis-à-vis the plaintiff and the other members of the brigade he was entitled to use the Fordson lorry and to answer this call. It was submitted that the defendants were not entitled to disregard the safety of their own servants in an effort to save other people's lives or property. Lord Hailsham agreed—and everyone must agree—that fire authorities are not entitled to subject their employees to unnecessary risk. The question here is: Was the risk unnecessary? In my judgment, it was not. The risk was an ordinary incident of the hazardous employment of a fireman. I think, in all the circumstances, it was a necessary risk and that the sub-officer was entitled to call upon the plaintiff and the remainder of the plaintiff's team to travel in the Fordson lorry although it was carrying the jack which was clearly inadequately secured.

It is also necessary to consider whether, even in the absence of any negligence on the part of the sub-officer and the other men employed at the Watford station, the defendants, as a fire authority, were in breach of their duty to the plaintiff. It is said that they ought to have foreseen that the Austin towing van, which was properly equipped for carrying the jack, might be engaged on other work when an emergency call requiring the use of a jack was received, and that some other vehicle at the station should have been equipped so as to enable it to carry a heavy jack of this kind in safety, or that the lorry which was temporarily in use at the fire station should have been fitted with some temporary device, such as chocks or clips, to enable the jack to be adequately secured to its floor.

Emergency calls of this kind requiring the transport of a jack are extremely rare and I do not think that I could properly find negligence on the part of the defendants in failing to equip, as possibly they could have equipped, their pump-escape or their water tender with some clips or chocks for carrying the heavy lifting gear. Lord Hailsham pointed out that examples of this kind can always be carried to absurd lengths. If two vehicles had been equipped for carrying this jack and both happened to be out of commission or unavailable, it could then be said that the fire authority was negligent in not having provided a third, and so on. I do not think that I can find negligence on the part of the fire authority in having only one vehicle equipped for this purpose. In the ordinary course of events if that vehicle happened to be away from the station when an emergency call requiring the use of heavy lifting equipment arrived, the normal course to take would be to invoke the assistance of some other station, but on this particular occasion an alternative course was open to the sub-officer. The Fordson lorry happened to be available and he thought it right to use it in an endeavour to help the woman with the least possible delay. I think I would be doing a great disservice to the fire service as a whole if I were to hold that, in those circumstances, the defendants were negligent or in breach of their duty to the members of the fire brigade.

1953

WATT v. HERTFORDSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL.

Barry J.

I do not think that this is a case in which the defence of volenti non fit injuria has any real relevance. Lord Hailsham preferred to put his case on the basis that, in the circumstances, the plaintiff had failed to prove any negligence on the part of his employers. I think that is how this case must be put and I think that the plaintiff has so failed and there must be judgment for the defendants.

Judgment for the defendants.

Solicitors: Denis Hayes for F. S. Ellis & Co., Watford; Berrymans.

J. F. L.

[PROBATE, ETC., DIVISION.]

* PRACTICE NOTE (JUSTICES' CLERKS).

1954 Jan. 15.

Lord Merriman P. and Collingwood J.

Husband and Wife—Justices—Retirement of justices—Presence of clerk. Justices—Clerk—Retirement with justices—Matrimonial case.

LORD MERRIMAN P. In a statement made in the Divisional Court of the Queen's Bench Division on November 16, 1953, about clerks to justices being present when the justices have retired to consider their decision, Lord Goddard C.J. said that the ruling of that court did not apply to justices when exercising jurisdiction in matrimonial cases, as they were then subject to the directions and control of this Division. Before making any pronouncement in response to several requests for a ruling by this court on the subject, I wished to consult the judges of this Division. I now have their authority to say that they agree with the statement I am about to make. I am also authorized by the Lord Chancellor to say that he approves of it. Vaisey J. also asks me to say that he agrees with it.

I wish to say at the outset that it rarely happens that an allegation of undue interference by the clerk in the decision of a complaint under the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Acts is made a ground of appeal to this Divisional Court. Nevertheless, it is at least as important in cases of this class as in other cases dealt with by magistrates' courts that the decision should be that of the justices themselves, and not that of the justices and their clerk; and that not only should this be so in fact, but that nothing should be done to give the parties or the public the impression that the clerk is influencing the decision. I am, therefore, in complete agreement with the Lord Chief Justice that it should not be regarded as a matter of course that, if justices retire to consider their decision, the clerk should retire with them; moreover, whether the justices invite the clerk to retire with them, or send for him in the course of their deliberations, I agree that the clerk should always return to his place in court as soon as the justices release him, leaving them to complete their deliberations alone.

1954

PRACTICE NOTE (JUSTICES' CLERKS).

Lord Merriman P.

Bearing in mind that domestic proceedings are often lengthy and may involve points of law in relation to the complaint itself or to the amount of maintenance, and that this court insists that a proper note of the evidence must be kept, and that, in the event of an appeal, justices must be prepared to state the reasons for their decision, I recognize that more often than not magistrates may properly wish to refresh their recollection of the evidence by recourse to the clerk's note, or to seek his advice about the law, before coming to their decision. Having regard to the high standard of care which is generally shown by magistrates' courts in dealing with these domestic proceedings, I do not think it is necessary for me to say more than that I am confident that justices taking part in them may be trusted to act, and to ensure that they appear to act, on the fundamental principle that they alone are the judges.

J. B. G.

[COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL.]

C. C. A.

1953 Nov. 30; Dec. 1, 4.

Lord Goddard C.J., Sellers and Barry JJ.

*REGINA v. DAVIES.

Criminal Law — Evidence — Evidence of accomplice — Murder — Boy attacked by gang—Subsequent death from stab wound inflicted by one of gang—Evidence by one of attackers previously acquitted on murder charge — Whether evidence of accomplice requiring corroboration.

The appellant, D., together with other young men, attacked with their fists some youths, including one B. A knife was used and B. subsequently died from stab wounds. D., and five of his companions including one L., were charged with murder, but when the matter came for trial, no evidence was offered against L. and three others, and verdicts of Not Guilty of murder were entered. At D.'s trial on a charge of murdering B., L. gave evidence. D. was convicted. His main ground of appeal was that L. and another witness were accomplices and that the judge had failed to warn the jury that it would be dangerous to accept their evidence without corroboration, and it was submitted that L.'s evidence was not corroborated:—

---

[Reported by Miss C. J. ELLIS, Barrister-at-Law.]

Held, dismissing the appeal, that as when L. gave his evidence he had been acquitted of B.'s murder, he could not be an accomplice to the charge of murder. The facts negatived any participation by L. and the other witness in the murder. The fact that they were making an attack with their fists did not of itself associate them with the attack by one of their number with a weapon which caused death.

APPEAL against conviction.

The appellant, Michael John Davies, was convicted on October 22, 1953, at the Central Criminal Court of the murder of John Ernest Beckley, a youth aged 17, on Clapham Common on the evening of July 2, 1953. The following statement of facts is taken from the judgment of Sellers J.: Between 9.30 p.m. and 10 p.m. on the night of July 2, 1953, Beckley and three others named Ryan, Chandler and Carter were attacked by a gang of eight or ten youths including the appellant, all of whom were complete strangers to them. That attack seemed to have been instigated by a youth Coleman who thought that he had been insulted by Beckley and his companions who had been sitting near the bandstand on Clapham Common.

The fight began at a drinking fountain near the bandstand in the northern part of the common, and, after receiving considerable punishment, the four youths managed to escape and ran away in different directions. During that stage of the fight Ryan had received a knife wound over the right shoulder blade. Ryan and Carter managed to evade their pursuers, but Beckley and Chandler were less fortunate. Having broken away from their assailants, each of them ran by different paths to the main road which ran along the north side of the common. There they both boarded a bus which was stationary at some traffic lights at the junction of Cedars Road. Most of the attacking gang were still in pursuit and when the bus halted at a bus stop a short distance beyond the traffic lights, Beckley, who was still on the rear platform, was pulled off the bus. Chandler was either pulled from the bus or dismounted himself after Beckley had been dragged from the platform, and they were both again attacked on the pavement by at least six assailants, including the appellant.

During the fight which ensued a knife was again used, as Chandler undoubtedly received a stab in the stomach. Beckley at last managed to break away, almost certainly by that time severely wounded, and ran along the pavement in front of the bus. The appellant and the other attackers followed and closed around him. They then ran away and Beckley was left lying on the pavement with no less than eight stab wounds on his head and body, the most serious of which was one in the small of the back. Shortly afterwards Beckley died as a result of those wounds.

C. C. A.
1953
REGINA
v.
DAVIES.

The evidence of the prosecution showed that before the fighting at the fountain began the appellant produced a knife and opened it, saying as he did so: "I will be all right with "this." Before or during that part of the fight someone had shouted "Get out the knives," or words to that effect. No knife was ever discovered, but witnesses identified a knife which they saw in the appellant's hand as being similar to a knife produced at the trial, which was a cheap knife with a green handle, easily obtainable in shops in the neighbourhood of Clapham Common and elsewhere. In his own statement the appellant admitted that he was actively engaged not only in that part of the fight but also in the later attack on Beckley and Chandler at the bus stop. He also admitted that he followed Beckley along the footpath to the place where Beckley finally collapsed and crowded round him with the other youths. The appellant denied that he ever used a knife or had a knife in his hand.

Two women, who were sitting in the front seat on the top of the bus, witnessed the final stages of the attack. They saw the assailants running along the footpath, and one of them "seemed to go up to another boy and shake him. He seemed "to shake him, making a motion as if he shook his shoulders." Immediately afterwards the boy who had been shaken fell to the ground and there could be no doubt that that boy was Beckley. One of those witnesses, Miss Frayling, clearly identified the appellant as the youth who "seemed to shake" Beckley. The appellant afterwards crossed the road in front of the bus and Miss Frayling saw him make what she described as a "shutting "motion" and then put a green-handled object into the right-hand inside breast pocket of his coat. She thought it was a knife.

When the appellant's clothing was examined traces of blood were found inside this pocket and around the pocket opening. Blood in small quantities was also found on the right sleeve of his coat above the cuff, and on his waistcoat and shirt. Lastly, evidence was given of certain threats uttered by the appellant soon after those events had occurred and of remarks made by him to youths named Lawson and Wood.

The appellant appealed against his conviction for Beckley's murder.

David Weitzman Q.C. and R. R. Russell for the appellant.
Christmas Humphreys and Maxwell Turner for the Crown.

The following cases were cited in argument: Rex v. Lewis [1]; Rex v. Mohamed Farid [2]; Attorney-General v. Lineham [3]; Rex

[1] (1937) 26 Cr.App.R. 110; [1937] 4 All E.R. 360.
[2] (1945) 30 Cr.App.R. 168.
[3] [1929] Ir.Rep. 19.

v. Baskerville[4]; Rex v. Atkinson[5]; Rex v. Lee Kun[6]; Rex v. Jennings[7]; Rex v. Carr[8] and Rex v. Rudd.[9]

Cur. adv. vult.

SELLERS J. reading the judgment of the court, stated the facts as set out above and continued: The main ground of appeal was that the judge had omitted to warn the jury that the witnesses Lawson and Wood were accomplices or were to be regarded as accomplices and that it would be dangerous to rely on their evidence unless corroborated, and it was submitted that there was no corroboration of the evidence of Lawson. No such warning was given and at no time in the trial was it suggested by anyone that these two youths or either of them were accomplices or that the customary warning should be given by the judge, but this matter became the substantial ground of the appeal.

Wood had apparently taken some part in the fighting at the fountain, but not subsequently, and he was not charged with any offence. He spoke of the prisoner having a knife with a green handle before the attacks. Lawson was one of the number who started the attack at the fountain and he continued to the bus stop and remained throughout. He had originally been charged with the murder of Beckley together with Davies, Coleman, Power, Woodman and Allen, but when the matter came for trial no evidence had been offered against Lawson, Power, Woodman and Allen and a verdict of Not Guilty of murder was returned in each of those four cases. Lawson subsequently pleaded Guilty to a common assault and it was made clear at the trial that he came to give his evidence from prison where he was undergoing the sentence for that offence.

The position therefore was that when Lawson gave his evidence he had been acquitted of the murder of Beckley and the prosecution submitted before this court that he could not therefore be an accomplice to the charge of murder. We think that that is so and that the judge was not required to treat Lawson as an accomplice, still less Wood. These two men had been engaged with others in an assault or series of assaults which cannot be too strongly condemned, but the facts negatived any participation by them in the murder. The fact that they were making an attack with their fists, and perhaps by kicking too, does not in itself associate them with the attack by one of their number with a knife or other weapon which caused death. The judge was not, therefore, under any obligation to treat Lawson as an accomplice and to warn the jury in respect of his evidence, and it was a matter of discretion whether or not he should give any caution to the jury on other grounds.

[4] [1916] 2 K.B. 658.
[5] (1934) 24 Cr.App.R. 123.
[6] [1916] 1 K.B. 337; (1915) 32 T.L.R. 225; (1915) 11 Cr.App.R. 293.
[7] (1912) 7 Cr.App.R. 242.
[8] (1909) 2 Cr.App.R. 317.
[9] (1948) 64 T.L.R. 240; (1948) 32 Cr.App.R. 138.

C. C. A.
1953
REGINA
v.
DAVIES.

It was submitted on behalf of the appellant that if Lawson was not strictly an accomplice he should have been treated as one. Reliance was placed on Rex v. Lewis,[1] Rex v. Mohamed Farid,[2] and Attorney-General v. Lineham.[3] It may be that for the purposes of the rule which is concerned with the testimony of witnesses whose evidence may be influenced in the witness's own interest that the court should not seek to lay down a narrow or precise definition of an "accomplice." It may be that certain witnesses should, in the interest of a fair trial, be treated as accomplices. In Rex v. Mohamed Farid,[4] the witnesses in question were not accomplices with regard to the actual offence charged against the prisoner, but this court held that the warning should have been given. In the present case, however, we do not think it was obligatory for a warning to have been given in the customary terms as Lawson was not an accomplice, and because, in fact, the accused himself agreed in many respects with Lawson's evidence. When it was put to the accused that he was disagreeing with Lawson and that therefore Lawson was lying, the accused said he was under a misunderstanding.

Lawson's evidence was important. He said that shortly after the fighting and after Beckley had been left at the roadside, obviously seriously injured by the wound from which he died shortly afterwards, the accused came to the coffee stall at the Plough and was talking to Lawson and Woodman. This the accused in his evidence agreed. In the course of the conversation Lawson said that the accused said that all he tried to do was to run a knife up and down and that he did not stab Beckley. In examination in chief the accused admitted a conversation but stated that what he said was not Lawson's version but this: "I "said it looked like somebody had cut his face, cut Beckley's face. "(Q) And I think Lawson agreed, at any rate at one time, that "the words which might have been used were that somebody "must have put a knife up and down his face? (A) Yes, Sir. "(Q) Is that what you said or something like that? (A) Yes, "Sir. (Q) Was there any question of your saying anything like "you had done anything with a knife? (A) No, Sir, definitely "not." And in cross-examination: "(Q) Did you say to Lawson "at the café 'All I tried to do was to run the knife up and "'down?' (A) No, Sir. (Q) That is an invention on his part? "(A) Not necessarily an invention; a mistaken statement. (Q) "It is a very very different thing from 'He must have been cut' "or something of that kind is it not? (A) Not a lot of difference, "no." And later: "(Q) Leaver, Wood, and Miss Pilkington "telling lies about you with a knife in your hand before the "fight? (A) Yes. (Q) Lawson, Brenda Wood, Sylvia Chubb "and again Wood are all wrong in what you were saying after "the fight? (A) Lawson is mistaken; the others are wrong."

[1] (1937) 26 Cr.App.R. 110.
[2] (1945) 30 Cr.App.R. 168.
[3] [1929] Ir.Rep. 19.
[4] 30 Cr.App.R. 168.

The difference between the versions was put to the jury by the judge and the issue on this point for them was whether Lawson was mistaken or was inventing his version or whether the accused's statement was correct and what inference they would draw from or what effect they would give to the conversation. In these circumstances the accused corroborated the incident, the conversation and a substantial part of the statement and it is not surprising therefore that at the trial nothing was said about Lawson being an accomplice and about corroboration being necessary.

The jury came back and asked a question about Lawson's evidence and obviously attached importance to it. Several witnesses had spoken of the accused having a knife; there was no evidence that any one else had a knife. Miss Frayling, after the affair at the bus stop, saw the accused shake Beckley by the shoulders and afterwards close and place into the breast pocket of his coat a knife. The evidence of Lawson, if the jury accepted it, together with such bloodstains as were to be found on the accused's clothing, added pointers to the accused's guilt.

Complaint was made that the jury were informed, partly in evidence by Superintendent Davies and partly by counsel for the prosecution, that there was no evidence that any of the other boys had knives in this fight, and that that was why the prosecution offered no evidence against the four and ultimately against Coleman after the jury had disagreed at the first trial of Davies and Coleman, where it was not contended that Coleman had a knife, but that he knew that Davies had a knife and he entered into the attack alongside of him.

We think it is unfortunate that this matter was introduced in this way even though it may have been prompted by certain questions by the defence, but there was in fact no evidence before the jury that anyone of the other youths had a knife that night; it was not affirmatively suggested by the defence that any particular person had a knife; when Lawson was in the witness box it was not suggested that he had a knife, and the judge stressed to the jury that they must be satisfied that it was the accused who stabbed Beckley and inflicted the wounds upon him from which he died.

We cannot therefore give effect to that ground of appeal. The appeal is dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Registrar, Court of Criminal Appeal; Director of Public Prosecutions.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

C. A.

1953
May 7.

Lord Goddard C.J., Birkett and Hodson L.JJ.

* BLACKMAN v. RAILWAY EXECUTIVE.

Invitor and invitee—Railway station—Patch of oil—Injury to pedestrian—Standard of duty—Steps taken to render premises reasonably safe.

Fact or law.

The plaintiff, when walking along a part of a railway station—from which passengers were not expressly excluded—slipped on a patch of oil which had dripped from vehicles which normally used that area, and fell and received injury. The foreman on duty had seen the oil after a vehicle had been moved, and had immediately ordered sawdust, kept available for that purpose, to be put down and had called to passengers not to go that way. The plaintiff, who did not hear the foreman and who was not seen by him, slipped on the oil before the sawdust could be put down. In an action by her for damages for negligence Hilbery J. held that the plaintiff was an invitee of the defendants and, consequently that their duty to her was to take reasonable steps to keep their premises as free from danger as was reasonably possible; and that, there having been no failure to observe the danger from the oil or to render it innocuous within a reasonable time, the defendants had not been guilty of any failure to exercise reasonable care and were not, therefore, liable. The plaintiff appealed:—

Held, that Hilbery J. had applied the correct legal test and had accurately defined the duty owed by the defendants to the plaintiff; the question whether the defendants had taken adequate and reasonable steps was one of fact for the trial judge, and his finding should not be disturbed.

Decision of Hilbery J. [1953] 1 W.L.R. 2; [1953] 1 All E.R. 4, affirmed.

APPEAL from Hilbery J.

On May 19, 1948, the plaintiff was walking across Paddington Station on her way to the Bakerloo Tube station. Part of the great hall of Paddington station, known as the "lawn," was used for the loading and unloading of mail vans, which, with other vehicles used for the carriage of mails, stood there from time to time. Passengers were not prohibited from using that part of the station but they were not encouraged to do so. The vehicles standing on the lawn had to be kept lubricated and oil occasionally dripped from them on to the ground rendering the surface slippery. When that occurred, sawdust kept on the premises for the purpose, was put over the oil. On the day in question, just before the plaintiff arrived on the lawn, some vehicles, under which a patch of oil had formed, were moved. The foreman on duty noticed the oil and immediately shouted to passengers not to go that way and called to a trolley driver to bring some sawdust and put it down. At the time the plaintiff was passing behind the foreman. He did not see her and she did not hear him directing the passengers not to go that way. The plaintiff slipped on the oil and fell, injuring her back and shoulder. She brought an action against the defendants claiming damages for negligence.

Hilbery J. held that the plaintiff, although on her way to the Tube station, was an invitee of the Railway Executive, and that the duty of the defendants was to take reasonable steps to have and keep their premises as reasonably free from danger as was reasonably possible and that there had been no failure on the part of the defendants to render the oil innocuous within a reasonable time. He therefore gave judgment for the defendants. The plaintiff appealed.

Edward Wooll Q.C. and F. L. Clark for the appellant.
Neil Lawson for the respondents.

LORD GODDARD C.J. stated the facts, and continued: Hilbery J. admittedly applied the correct principle of law in deciding the question before him, and correctly stated that it was the duty of the Railway Executive to keep their platforms reasonably safe so as to prevent a passenger from meeting with an unexpected danger. It was impossible to prevent some slippery places on the platforms, and the most that the Railway Executive could do, when they knew that there was oil on a platform, was to take reasonable steps to prevent members of the public from slipping on the oil. What more could be done than for the foreman porter to shout to people to go another way, or warn them against coming that way until the sawdust was brought, I do not know. Hilbery J. came to the conclusion, after hearing the evidence, that the defendants did take reasonable steps to avoid danger to passengers. It is impossible for us to interfere with his finding unless we were of opinion that he had applied either too high or too low a test so as to make his finding on that point obviously wrong. It must be borne in mind that questions of fact and law must not be confused. Once the standard of duty has been laid down correctly, the question whether the Railway Executive took adequate and reasonable steps was purely one of fact. Hilbery J. found and, I think, rightly found, that the Railway Executive did that which was reasonable in the circumstances, and that being so, we cannot disturb the judgment which he gave in favour of the defendants and we must, therefore, dismiss this appeal.

BIRKETT L.J. I agree, and have nothing to add.

HODSON L.J. I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Alfred Bieber & Bieber; M. H. B. Gilmour.

P. B. D.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

C. A.

1953
Dec. 9, 10.

Evershed M.R., Jenkins and Morris L.JJ.

* JONES v. GATES.

Agricultural Holding — Notice to quit — Validity — Meaning of "required" for use other than agriculture—Whether arbitration exclusive remedy—Minister's power to make regulations—Whether mandatory—Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948 (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 63), ss. 24, 26—Agriculture (Control of Notices to Quit) Regulations, 1948 (S.I. 1948, No. 190), reg. 4.

Arbitration. Statutory Instrument. "Required."

The effect of section 24 (1) and (2) of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948, is that a landlord cannot, without the Minister's consent, serve an effective notice to quit on the tenant of an agricultural holding unless, inter alia, the notice to quit is given (section 24 (2) (b)) "on the ground that the land is required for a use, other "than for agriculture, for which permission has been granted on an "application made under the enactments relating to town and "country planning . . . and that fact is stated in the notice." Regulation 4 of the Agriculture (Control of Notices to Quit) Regulations, 1948, provides that where a notice to quit is given on that ground, "it shall be open to the tenant, within one month from the "giving of the notice to quit, to serve on the landlord a notice . . . "requiring any question arising out of the reason stated in the "notice to quit to be determined by arbitration under the Act "of 1923."

The landlord of an agricultural holding who wished to sell the land as a sports ground but who had not entered into any negotiations for such sale, served a notice to quit on the tenant stating that the land was required for a use other than agriculture for which permission had been granted under the enactments relating to town and country planning. The tenant served a counter-notice complying with section 24 (1) of the Act of 1948:—

Held, (1) that the onus was on the landlord to prove that the land was "required" within the meaning of section 24 (2) of the Act of 1948 for a use other than agriculture, and he had not proved that it was so "required."

(2) That section 26 of the Act of 1948 did not bind the Minister to make regulations requiring questions arising under section 24 (2) to be determined by arbitration.

(3) That the fact that the tenant had not served on the landlord a notice under regulation 4 of the regulations did not preclude him from challenging the validity of the notice to quit since the question raised by his challenge—namely, whether section 24 (2) of the Act of 1948 had been successfully invoked—was not a question "arising out "of the reason stated in the notice to quit."

Budge v. Hicks [1951] 2 K.B. 335; [1951] 2 All E.R. 245; sub nom. Hicks v. Budge [1951] 2 T.L.R. 349 considered.

Decision of Judge Armstrong affirmed.

APPEAL from Judge Armstrong sitting at Bournemouth County Court.

On June 25, 1951, the plaintiff, John Clement Jones, served on the defendant, John Gates, who was the tenant of a field of 6·162 acres at Northbourne in the county borough of Bournemouth, the following notice: "We hereby give notice to quit "and deliver up [the field] . . . The land is required for a "use other than agriculture for which permission has been "granted under the enactments relating to town and country "planning." On June 28, 1951, the tenant, or his agent on his behalf, served a counter-notice to the effect that section 24 (1) of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948, should apply, and that the notice to quit should not have effect unless the Minister of Agriculture and Fisheries consented to its operation.

At the hearing before the county court judge the landlord gave evidence that the field had at one time been used for a sports ground but had been let during the war to the present tenant, and that he now intended to sell it as a sports ground. He said that he had had inquiries from a business firm and a football club and that he would have no difficulty in selling the land for that purpose. The county court judge found, however, that the landlord had had no offers and was not then in negotiation with anyone; and he, therefore, decided that the landlord had not shown that the field was "required" for a use other than agriculture, and gave judgment for the tenant.

At the hearing of the landlord's appeal it was conceded that the field in question was an "agricultural holding" within the scope of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948.

R. R. D. Phillips for the landlord.
Robert Hughes for the tenant.

The following cases were referred to in argument: Ireland v. Taylor[1]; Nuthall v. Entertainments and General Investment Corporation[2]; Cunliffe v. Goodman[3]; Budge v. Hicks[4]; Julius v. Bishop of Oxford[5]; Rex v. Barlow[6]; Reg. v. London County Council JJ.[7]; Rex v. Leicester JJ.[8]

EVERSHED M.R. referred to the facts and continued: The form of notice and counter-notice is a reference to the terms of section 24 (1) of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948: "Where "notice to quit an agricultural holding or part of an agricultural "holding is given to the tenant thereof, and not later than one "month from the giving of the notice to quit the tenant serves on "the landlord a counter-notice in writing requiring that this "subsection shall apply to the notice to quit, then, subject to the "provisions of the next following subsection, the notice to quit "shall not have effect unless the Minister consents to the opera-"tion thereof." Parliament has there enacted in the plainest terms that where a cross notice is given within a month, then, subject only to what follows in the next subsection, the notice

[1] [1949] 1 K.B. 300; 65 T.L.R. 3; [1948] 2 All E.R. 450.
[2] [1947] 2 All E.R. 384.
[3] [1950] 2 K.B. 237; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 2) 109; [1950] 1 All E.R. 720.
[4] [1951] 2 K.B. 335.
[5] (1880) 5 App.Cas. 214.
[6] (1693) 2 Salk. 609.
[7] (1893) 2 Q.B. 476, 487.
[8] (1827) 7 B. & C. 6.

C. A.
1953
JONES
v.
GATES.
Evershed M.R.

to quit is not to have effect unless the Minister consents. By section 24 (2): "The foregoing subsection shall not apply where "... (b) the notice to quit is given on the ground that the "land is required for a use, other than for agriculture, for which "permission has been granted on an application made under the "enactments relating to town and country planning or for which "(otherwise than by virtue of any provision of those enactments) "such permission is not required, and that fact is stated in the "notice."

It is apparent that the landlord, by the statement at the end of his notice, purported to invoke paragraph (b) of subsection (2) so as to exclude the operation of subsection (1). The tenant challenged the landlord's right to invoke section 24 (2), and called upon the operation of subsection (1), claiming that without the Minister's consent the notice was invalid.

In those circumstances the first question which the county court judge had to decide was whether the land was required for a need other than for agriculture for which permission had been granted on an application under the enactments relating to town and country planning. Nobody has suggested that a mere statement of the fact that the notice to quit is given on that ground is sufficient to satisfy subsection (2) and that the terms of the subsection are satisfied by the mere ipse dixit of the landlord. The conclusion of the county court judge was this: "As to its "being so required the plaintiff says that he intends to sell the "field as a sports ground and would have no difficulty in doing "so. He has, he says, had inquiries from a business firm and "a football club but has so far had no offer and is not, I gather, "now in negotiation with anybody. He does not propose either "to let it for that purpose or so to use it himself. On that "evidence Mr. Phillips says that a reasonable prospect of use "is shown and that that satisfies the word 'required.' I do "not think that in the absence of a definite person or persons "willing to negotiate there could be said to be such a reasonable "prospect and I am not, therefore, satisfied that the holding "is 'required' for the purpose." I agree entirely with that language of the county court judge: he said, there is no-one in negotiation with the landlord nor, as it seems to me on the evidence, was there anybody at any relevant time.

The matter may, I think, therefore, be put quite briefly thus: If the question be—Is this land required for a use referred to in section 24 (2), then who now requires it?—it is clear that the landlord does not so require it, for he does not propose to use it or to let it; and there is no other user except what Mr. Phillips calls "the prospective purchaser," who is an unidentified and possibly non-existent person. It follows, therefore, that, in my judgment, the county court judge rightly decided adversely to the landlord.

Only one of several other points considered by the county court judge arises here. Mr. Phillips has contended very strenuously that the jurisdiction of the court is wholly ousted in this matter as the result of the joint effect of section 26 of the Act of 1948 and certain regulations made thereunder. I am by no means satisfied that this point is really open, for although I do not doubt that Mr. Phillips took the point generally before the county court judge, it seems from the place in which it appeared in the judge's note that he was dealing there with certain other points which Mr. Phillips adumbrated, and which might arise under the Town and Country Planning Act, 1947. If this point had been a valid point, it should have been taken at the beginning, because it could have led to the conclusion that in the circumstances of the case the tenant was not entitled to challenge the notice to quit at all, and, therefore, that the evidence which the plaintiff himself gave was inadmissible and was a waste of time. However, I will assume that the matter is open.

A second preliminary observation is that the language of section 24 makes it abundantly plain that a landlord is not entitled to serve an effective notice on a tenant of an agricultural holding without the Minister's consent, save in cases in which one or other of the provisions of subsection (2) are shown to be satisfied. Prima facie, therefore, it is for a landlord, if he desires to obtain an order for ejectment, to show that subsection (1) is excluded.

Section 26, which gives rise to the problem, provides, so far as relevant: "(1) The Minister [of Agriculture and Fisheries] "may make regulations: (a) for requiring any question arising "under subsection (2) of section 24 of this Act to be determined "by arbitration under this Act . . ." By subsection (2): "The "power conferred on the Minister by this section shall be exer- "cisable by statutory instrument . . ."

One of the points which was urged on us by Mr. Phillips was that section 26 was obligatory. He said that the Minister was bound to make regulations, and he drew attention, quite fairly and rightly, to the point that the general policy of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948, is that questions of fact which arise and require to be determined between landlord and tenant (for example as regards compensation and other matters) are to be decided by arbitration; but I am unable in its context to construe section 26 as making it obligatory upon the Minister to make regulations or to say that unless he does so section 24 is rendered wholly inoperative. The many references in the Act to arbitration—for example section 2 (2), which provides, "Any dispute "arising as to the operation of the foregoing subsection in "relation to any agreement shall be determined by arbitration "under this Act"—make it, I think, plain that when compulsory arbitration is intended formulae are used which are wholly different from those used in section 26. On the other hand, I will assume that if the Minister makes regulations which "require" a question to be determined by arbitration, the right to arbitrate may well be the exclusive means of challenge.

C. A.
1953
JONES v. GATES.
Evershed M.R.

As in Budge v. Hicks,[1] the relevant regulations are the Agriculture (Control of Notices to Quit) Regulations, 1948, which came into operation on March 1, 1948, that is before the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948, came into operation. It is, however, conceded here, as it was in Budge v. Hicks,[1] that these regulations must now be treated as applicable under the present Act.

By regulation 4 of the regulations: "In any case where it "is stated in a notice to quit that the notice is given for one "or more of the reasons specified in the next following regula- "tions," where one of the reasons so specified is that the land is required for a use other than for agriculture for which permission has been granted under the enactments relating to town and country planning following the terms of section 24 (2), "it "shall be open to the tenant, within one month from the giving "of the notice to quit, to serve on the landlord a notice in writing "requiring any question arising out of the reason stated in the "notice to quit to be determined by arbitration under the Act."

Regulation 4 was considered by the Court of Appeal in Budge v. Hicks,[1] where a question arose about the scope of the regulation and whether, within its scope, it was obligatory. The three Lords Justices carefully left the matter open and, not unnaturally, each of them, particularly Denning L.J., drew attention to the fact that, if it was meant to be obligatory, the use of the formula "it shall be open to the tenant" was somewhat surprising, because ex facie it seemed to give an option. Somervell L.J. stated that for his part he would be in no way shocked or surprised if the effect of this regulation was to make any matter of fact exclusively a matter for arbitration; for he thought it natural enough and proper that technical agricultural matters should be dealt with by arbitration rather than in the courts. With all that I agree; but plainly the matter with which we are concerned is in no sense a technical agricultural matter. We have been asked to decide what is the true meaning of the Act and, particularly, of the word "required" in section 24 (2), and on such a matter it would be, I think, surprising if this regulation had the effect for which Mr. Phillips contends.

This notice was served on June 25, 1951, to take effect on July 19, 1952. According to the argument, unless the tenant by July 25, 1951, served a notice calling for arbitration of the question whether the landlord did in fact require the land for a use other than agriculture, and so forth, the tenant was for ever thereafter shut out from challenging the validity of the notice. On the view that we hold, it turns out that the notice was a fictitious notice, in the sense that it was based on a fictitious, or unreal, and wholly invalid ground (and in using the word "fictitious" I am not, of course, making any suggestion against the good faith of anybody: the notice did not in fact exist). I should have thought that a tenant would have very great difficulty in discovering to his own satisfaction in one month whether a landlord did, or did not, intend to use, or whether anybody else wanted or intended to use, the holding in a particular way, and whether permission had been granted and whether any other requirements of the section had been satisfied. The practical effect would be that in every case a tenant would have to serve an arbitration notice for his own protection in order to keep open the point that the notice might be challenged. Mr. Phillips says that there would be no great harm or expense in that; but it seems to me to be undesirable and, I think, it is very unlikely to have been the intention of Parliament.

[1] [1951] 2 K.B. 335; [1951] 2 All E.R. 245; sub nom. Hicks v. Budge [1951] 2 T.L.R. 349.

The question, however, remains whether the terms of this regulation are such as clearly to exclude the jurisdiction of the court. In view of the wording of section 24 it is plain that nothing short of perfectly clear terms of exclusion will suffice. It is true that, by setting a time limit and providing that it shall be "open within one month," it is arguable that, unless that is done within one month, the right of challenge may be gone; but looking at this regulation according to its ordinary meaning, I am unable to hold that its effect has been to exclude this tenant's right to challenge the whole basis on which the notice has been given.

Without desiring to determine now what is the exact scope of this and other regulations, and whether as regards other matters they may have the effect of giving exhaustive and exclusive jurisdiction to an arbitrator, in this case I am not satisfied that the point which the tenant takes, namely whether subsection (2) has been effectively invoked, can be said to be a "question arising out of the reason stated in the notice to "quit." The question which the tenant raises by his challenge is whether the reason is a reason at all within the meaning of subsection (2); and I think that the language chosen, namely "any question arising out of the reason," is not apt to cover the question of the premises on which the validity of the notice rests. For those reasons I reject the argument that the tenant is now precluded from raising the point whether this land is required for a use other than agriculture, and so forth. It follows, therefore, that in my judgment the county court judge rightly concluded this case in giving judgment for the defendant, and in those circumstances this appeal fails and must be dismissed.

JENKINS L.J. I agree.

MORRIS L.J. I agree.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Sharpe, Pritchard & Co. for Rendall, Litchfield & Co. (Bournemouth); Peacock & Goddard for Luff, Raymond & Williams (Wimborne Minster).

E. D.

[PRIVY COUNCIL.]

J. C.† 1954 Jan. 13.

* THABO MELI AND OTHERS . . . . APPELLANTS;

AND

THE QUEEN . . . . . RESPONDENT.

ON APPEAL FROM THE HIGH COURT OF BASUTOLAND.

Basutoland—Criminal Law—Murder—Erroneous belief of accused that blows caused death—Whether mens rea in respect of their subsequent acts which in fact caused death—Preconceived plot to kill—One inseparable transaction.

Criminal Law.

The appellants, in execution of a preconceived plot to kill the deceased, took him to a hut where he was struck over the head with an instrument, and then, believing him to be dead, they took him out and rolled him over a low cliff and dressed the scene to make it look like an accident. The medical evidence established, however, that the injuries received in the hut were not sufficient to cause the death, which was in fact due to exposure when he was left at the foot of the cliff. The appellants appealed against their conviction for murder, alleging, inter alia, that while the first act—the blows in the hut—was accompanied by mens rea, it was not the cause of death, but that the second act, while it was the cause of death, was not accompanied by mens rea, and contended that in those circumstances they were not guilty of any crime, except perhaps culpable homicide:—

Held, that it was impossible to divide up what was really one transaction in that way. The appellants set out to do all those acts as part of, and to achieve, their plan, and it was much too refined a ground of judgment to say that, because they were under a misapprehension at one stage and thought that their guilty purpose had been achieved before it in fact was, therefore they were not guilty of murder. There was no difference relevant to the present case between the law of South Africa and that of England, and by both laws there could be no separation such as that for which the appellants contended merely because of their misapprehension.

Judgment of the High Court of Basutoland affirmed.

APPEAL (No. 28 of 1953), by special leave in forma pauperis, from a judgment and sentence given and passed in the High Court of Basutoland (Harragin Ag.J.) (March 26, 1953) whereby the four appellants were convicted and sentenced to death upon a charge of having murdered a Mosuto male, one Ntlobiseng Lekhoo. The appellants, who were jointly indicted and jointly tried, had pleaded not guilty to the charge.

It was alleged that the deceased had been brought to a hut on July 12, 1952, given beer, and while in a partially intoxicated condition was struck on the head with an instrument, and then carried out of the hut and left in the open. The main and substantial questions in this appeal arose from the conflict as regards the cause of the death of the deceased, between the evidence of two self-confessed accomplices upon which the case for the prosecution was mainly based, and the medical evidence called on behalf of the prosecution.

† Present: LORD GODDARD C.J., LORD REID, and MR. L. M. D. DE SILVA.

Both the accomplices gave evidence to the effect that they believed the deceased to be dead as a result of the blows in the hut. The medical evidence was to the effect that the deceased had not died as a result of the blows, but that his death was due to exposure, and the trial judge found as a fact that he did not die from the blows but from exposure.

In those circumstances it was submitted for the appellants, inter alia, that they ought not to have been, and were wrongly in law, found guilty of having murdered the deceased; that according to the Roman-Dutch law, which was to be applied in Basutoland in accordance with the provisions of the General Law Proclamation (Laws of Basutoland, 1949 Rev., c. 26), a fundamental and essential requirement in the proof of a charge of murder was an animus occidendi or intention on the part of those charged therewith to kill, and the killing, in pursuance of such intention of the person murdered. That was to say that in the case of the appellants they could not according to that law have murdered the deceased, inasmuch as the death, as caused according to the medical evidence and found by the trial judge, was not and could not have been intended by them since they believed that the deceased was already dead when he was left out in the open, and his death by exposure, therefore, was, so far as the appellants were concerned, something unintended by them or which they could not have expected to have happened. They had, it was contended, in regard to the death of the deceased as caused according to the medical evidence and the finding of the judge no animus occidendi or mens rea.

1954. Jan. 13. S. N. Bernstein and A. Hughes-Chamberlain for the appellants.

Frank Gahan Q.C. and J. G. Le Quesne for the respondent.

The following cases and textbooks were referred to in argument: Rex v. Ndhlovu [1]; Rex v. Valachia [2]; Rex v. Kuzwayo [3]; Pittman's Criminal Law in South Africa, 3rd ed., p. 116; South African Criminal Law and Procedure, 5th ed., vol. 1, p. 31, by Gardiner and Lansdown.

Jan. 13. The judgment of their Lordships was delivered by LORD REID. The four appellants in this case were convicted of murder after a trial before Harragin J. in the High Court of Basutoland, in March, 1953. The appeal which has been heard by this Board dealt with two matters: first, that the conclusions of the judge on questions of fact were not warranted; and, second,

[1] [1945] S.A.L.R.(A.D.) 369, 371.
[2] [1945] S.A.L.R.(A.D.) 826, 831.
[3] [1949] 3 S.A.L.R.(A.D.) 761, 771.

J. C.
1954
MELI
v.
THE QUEEN.

that, by reason of a matter which can be dealt with later, on a point of law the accused are entitled to have the verdict quashed.

On the first matter, there really is no ground for criticizing the judge's treatment of the facts. It is established by evidence, which was believed and which is apparently credible, that there was a preconceived plot on the part of the four accused to bring the deceased man to a hut and there to kill him; and then to fake an accident, so that the accused should escape the penalty for their act. The deceased man was brought to the hut. He was there treated to beer and was at least partially intoxicated; and he was then struck over the head in accordance with the plan of the accused.

There is at least doubt whether the weapon which was produced as being like the weapon which was used would have produced the injuries which were found, but it may be that this weapon is not exactly similar to the one which was used, or it may be that the blow was a glancing blow and produced less severe injuries than those which one might expect; but, in any event, the man was unconscious after receiving the blow.

There is no evidence that the accused then believed that he was dead, but their Lordships are prepared to assume that they did; and it is only on that assumption that any statable case can be made for this appeal. The accused took out the body, rolled it over a low krantz or cliff, and dressed up the scene to make it look like an accident. Obviously they believed at that time that the man was dead, but it appears from the medical evidence that the injuries which he received in the hut were not sufficient to cause the death and that the final cause of his death was exposure where he was left at the foot of the krantz.

The point of law which was raised in this case can be simply stated. It is said that two acts were necessary and were separable: first, the attack in the hut; and, secondly, the placing of the body outside afterwards. It is said that, while the first act was accompanied by mens rea, it was not the cause of death; but that the second act, while it was the cause of death, was not accompanied by mens rea; and on that ground it is said that the accused are not guilty of any crime except perhaps culpable homicide.

It appears to their Lordships impossible to divide up what was really one transaction in this way. There is no doubt that the accused set out to do all these acts in order to achieve their plan and as parts of their plan; and it is much too refined a ground of judgment to say that, because they were under a misapprehension at one stage and thought that their guilty purpose had been achieved before in fact it was achieved, therefore they are to escape the penalties of the law. Their Lordships do not think that this is a matter which is susceptible of elaboration. There appears to be no case either in South Africa or England, or for that matter elsewhere, which resembles the present. Their Lordships can find no difference relevant to the present case

J. C.
1954
MELI
v.
THE QUEEN.

between the law of South Africa and the law of England, and they are of opinion that by both laws there could be no separation such as that for which the accused contend, so as to reduce the crime from murder to a lesser crime, merely because the accused were under some misapprehension for a time during the completion of their criminal plot.

Their Lordships must, therefore, humbly advise Her Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed.

Solicitors: Hy. S. L. Polak & Co.; Burchells.

C. C.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

C. A.
1953
Dec. 18.
Somervell, Denning and Romer L.JJ.

* BARROW GREEN ESTATE CO. v. EXECUTORS OF WALKER, DECD.

Agriculture—Agricultural holding—Repairs—Compensation—Compensation for dilapidation or deterioration—Arbitrator—Arbitrator entitled to refer to the terms of the contract of tenancy—Agriculture Act, 1947 (10 & 11 Geo. 6, c. 48), ss. 9, 10 (3), 11 (1), (2) (d) (e) (f), (3), 37 (1)—Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948 (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 63), ss. 57 (1), 65—Agriculture (Maintenance, Repair and Insurance of Fixed Equipment) Regulations, 1948 (S.I. 1948, No. 184).
Arbitration.

In an arbitration to determine claims under section 57 (1) of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948, for compensation "in respect of "the dilapidation or deterioration of, or damage to, any part of the "holding or anything in or on the holding caused by non-fulfilment "by the tenant of his responsibilities to farm in accordance with "the rules of good husbandry," the arbitrator is bound to have regard to (i) the terms and conditions of the lease or agreement under which the holding was held, (ii) any other contractual agreement between the landlord and tenant in relation to the holding and (iii) S.I. No. 184 of 1948 in so far as it applies. The words "non-"fulfilment by the tenant of his responsibilities" in the section cannot be construed as including an obligation which, under the contract of tenancy, the landlord has himself undertaken to perform.

APPEAL from His Honour Judge Clark sitting at Epsom County Court.

David Walker was lessee of an agricultural holding under a lease dated January 23, 1939. The lease contained a covenant by the landlord to repair the fixed equipment before the tenant went into possession; and both landlord and tenant entered into certain covenants as to their respective obligations to repair the fixed equipment after the tenant had gone into possession. David Walker died in 1950, and the landlord served a notice to quit on his representatives who quitted the holding on September 29, 1952.

[Reported by Miss P. STANLEY, Barrister-at-Law.]

C. A.

1953

BARROW GREEN ESTATE CO. v. EXECUTORS OF WALKER, DECD.

In arbitration proceedings the landlord claimed compensation from the tenant in respect of the dilapidation or deterioration of, or damage to, the holding under section 57 (1) [1] of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948. The tenant maintained that he was released from his obligation to repair under the lease as the landlord himself was in breach of his contract to put the fixed equipment into a state of repair. A question arose whether the arbitrator was (a) bound or (b) entitled to have regard to the terms and conditions (i) of the lease or agreement under which the holding was held; (ii) of any other contractual agreement between the landlord and the tenant in relation to the holding

[1] Agriculture Act, 1947, s. 9: "The following provisions of this "Part of this Act shall have effect "for the purpose of securing that "owners of agricultural land fulfil "their responsibilities to manage the "land in accordance with the rules "of good estate management, and "that occupiers of agricultural land "fulfil their responsibilities to farm "the land in accordance with the "rules of good husbandry."

S. 10: "(3) The responsibilities "under the rules of good estate "management of an owner of land "in the occupation of another person "shall not in relation to the mainten-"ance and repair of fixed equipment "include an obligation to do anything "which that other person is under an "obligation to do by virtue of any "agreement."

S. 11: "(1) For the purposes of "this Act, the occupier of an agricul-"tural unit shall be deemed to fulfil "his responsibilities to farm it in "accordance with the rules of good "husbandry in so far as . . . the occu-"pier is maintaining a reasonable "standard of efficient production. . . ."

"(2) In determining whether "the manner in which a unit is "being farmed is such as aforesaid, "regard shall be had . . . to the "extent to which— . . . (d) the neces-"sary steps are being taken to secure "and maintain crops and livestock "free from disease and from infesta-"tion by insects and other pests; (e) "the necessary steps are being taken "for the protection and preservation "of crops harvested or lifted, or in "course of being harvested or lifted; "(f) the necessary work of mainten-"ance and repair is being carried "out.

"(3) The responsibilities under the "rules of good husbandry of an occu-"pier of an agricultural unit which is "not owned by him shall not include "an obligation to carry out any work "of maintenance or repair which the "owner of the unit or any part there-"of is under an obligation to carry "out in order to fulfil his responsi-"bilities to manage in accordance "with the rules of good estate "management."

S. 37: "(1) The Minister may, "after consultation with such bodies "of persons as appear to him to "represent the interests of landlords "and tenants of holdings, make regu-"lations prescribing terms as to the "maintenance, repair and insurance "of fixed equipment which shall be "deemed to be incorporated in every "contract of tenancy of a holding, "whether made before or after the "commencement of this Part of this "Act, except in so far as they would "impose on one of the parties to an "agreement in writing a liability "which under the agreement is "imposed on the other."

Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948, s. 57: "(1) The landlord of an "agricultural holding shall be en-"titled to recover from a tenant of the "holding, on the tenant's quitting the "holding on the termination of the "tenancy, compensation in respect of "dilapidation or deterioration of, or "damage to, any part of the holding "or anything in or on the holding "caused by non-fulfilment by the "tenant of his responsibilities to farm "in accordance with the rules of good "husbandry."

S. 65: "(1) Save as expressly pro-"vided in this Act, in any case for "which apart from this section the "provisions of this Act provide for "compensation, a tenant or landlord "shall be entitled to compensation in "accordance with those provisions and "not otherwise, and shall be so en-"titled notwithstanding any agree-"ment to the contrary. Provided "." . . ."

and (iii) of S.I. No. 184 of 1948,[2] in so far as it applies, if at all, to the lessor only.

The arbitrator answered those questions in the affirmative (without stating whether he was entitled or bound to look at the documents) and stated a case. The landlord appealed to the county court judge who reversed the arbitrator's decision.

The tenant now appealed.

A. C. Goodall for the tenant.
J. Dean for the landlord.

SOMERVELL L.J. stated the facts, read section 57 (1) of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948, and continued:—Statutory Instrument No. 184 of 1948 was made under section 37 of the Agriculture Act, 1947, and is still in force although the rule-making power in that Act has been repealed and replaced by a rule-making power in the later Act. It provides: "The provi-"sions set forth in the schedule hereto relating to the mainten-"ance, repair and insurance of fixed equipment, shall be deemed "to be incorporated in every contract of tenancy of a holding, "whether made before or after the commencement of Part III of "the said Act, except in so far as they would impose on one of the "parties to an agreement in writing a liability which under the "agreement is imposed on the other"; that is to say, that if and so far as the claim in the present case came under the statutory instrument and its schedule the arbitrator would have to have regard to the terms of the original tenancy in order to see whether under it a liability which under the regulations was imposed on the landlord or tenant was under the tenancy agreement imposed on the other party. So far as the point of law is concerned, it was common ground before the judge and before us that this instrument is in the same category as the contract itself because, if I may put it in this way, the machinery by which this instrument attains its object is by deeming that its provisions will be incorporated into the contract. If you cannot look at the contract you cannot look at the provisions which are deemed to be incorporated in it. Before the county court judge, counsel who was then appearing for the tenants linked the three classes of documents together and referred to them as the contract of tenancy. The words of section 57 (1) of the Act of 1948 are: "non-fulfilment "by the tenant of his responsibilities to farm in accordance with "the rules of good husbandry." The relevant provisions regarding those rules are to be found in Part II of the Agriculture Act, 1947, and this Part of the Act has not been repealed. [His

[2] By S.I. No. 184 of 1948: "The "provisions set forth in the Schedule "hereto relating to the maintenance, "repair and insurance of fixed equip-"ment, shall be deemed to be incor-"porated in every contract of "tenancy of a holding, . . . except in "so far as they would impose on one "of the parties to an agreement in "writing a liability which under the "agreement is imposed on the other."

C. A.
1953
BARROW GREEN ESTATE CO. v. EXECUTORS OF WALKER, DECD.
Somervell L.J.

Lordship read sections 9, 10 (3), 11 (1), (2) (d) (e) (f), and (3), stated that Mr. Dean relied on this last subsection and continued:] That subsection would seem more concerned to provide that there should be no overlap than to deal expressly with the terms of the agreement in favour of the tenant.

I think an important section in the Act of 1947 which assists in solving this problem is section 37, under which the Statutory Instrument to which I have already referred was made. [His Lordship read section 37 and continued:] Therefore, when the Act empowers the Minister to make detailed provisions regarding the maintenance and repair of fixed equipment, one of the matters under sections 10 and 11, there is an express provision that those regulations must not be deemed to impose on one party a liability which under an agreement is imposed on the other.

I will now come back to section 57 (1). The submission made on behalf of the landlord seems to me to be one which, on general principles of construction, would require the plainest possible words before it should be adopted in construing this subsection—let me assume that under the contract of tenancy the landlord has expressly undertaken an obligation in respect of maintenance and repair which, if the contract of tenancy had been silent as to it, would have fallen on the tenant either under the regulations or under the general principles which would be applied in such a matter by an arbitrator; let me assume that the landlord has failed to carry out his obligations; and let me assume that if the tenancy continued he could be sued; and, without begging any question as to the measure of damage, I will assume that the cost of making good the maintenance and repair which he had failed to carry out would be £500. The submission for the landlord would then mean this: he realizes that the lessee has died, that the relatives do not want to keep on the property and that the tenant will be shortly quitting, and he could say to himself: "Not only need I not now maintain what I ought to have "maintained and repair what I ought to have repaired but let "us hope it all gets rather worse by the time the tenant quits. "Assuming then the cost of doing what I should have done is "£700, I shall be able to recover £700 under section 57 (1) of the "Act of 1948." It would indeed be surprising if Parliament had conferred such a windfall on landlords.

Mr. Dean said with some force that there may be sections in the Act which confer benefits on tenants and it would not be surprising if one found somewhere benefits conferred on the landlord. That may well be, but one would not expect to find a benefit conferred on bad landlords, that is those who have not carried out their obligations. I think that these words, "non-"fulfilment by the tenant of his responsibilities," cannot be construed as including an obligation which, under the contract of tenancy, the landlord has himself undertaken to perform.

Reliance was placed as against that construction on the fact that under section 57 (3) a landlord may in lieu of claiming compensation under subsection (1) claim compensation in accordance with a written contract of tenancy. I do not think that that helps the argument but is to cover the possibility of a contract of tenancy which puts on the tenant a liability greater than that which the statute puts on him. It was no doubt thought wrong to take away from the landlord a right to proceed under such a contract.

I need not refer in detail to section 7 (1) except to say that I think that reinforces the argument for the tenant. The judge referred to sections 10 and 11 of the Act of 1947, and he in part based his decision on the absence of any reference in section 11 (3) to the agreement. I am bound to say that, having regard to the general provisions of that Act, they lead me to the conclusion that they were not intended to shift burdens expressly undertaken by one or the other except in the case where express words were used. I would have expected a reference in that subsection to the agreement, but there may be some explanation of it consistent with my construction of section 57 (1), so I do not propose to go into it in detail because, even if an argument can be based on the absence of any reference there, I am quite clear that that would not entitle one to construe section 57 (1) as including a responsibility which by contract the landlord himself had undertaken.

Mr. Dean referred to section 65, the section which provides that one cannot contract out of the right which the Act confers for compensation, but I do not think that it is material in the present case.

For these reasons I have come to a different conclusion from that of the judge and I would allow the appeal and would answer the question by saying that, in my view, the arbitrator is bound to have regard to the terms and conditions of the lease or agreement under which the holding was held and any other contractual agreement between the landlord and the tenant in relation to the holding, and to S.I. No. 184 of 1948 in so far, if at all, as it applies.

Denning L.J. Under the Agriculture Acts of 1947 and 1948 the occupier of agricultural land is put under a responsibility "to farm the land in accordance with the rules of good husbandry." The question in this case is whether the occupier can, by contract, shift this responsibility on to the owner of the land. This question does not arise in regard to the actual cultivation of the land, but only in regard to the maintenance and repair of fixed equipment. Let me give an instance. "Fixed equipment" includes hedges and fencing. If there had been nothing in the contract of tenancy, the tenant would have been bound, under the statutory regulations, to provide all the material and labour to keep up the hedges and fences: but under the contract of tenancy, the owner was bound to provide the material (such as the posts and wire) and the tenant was bound

C. A.
1953
BARROW GREEN ESTATE CO. v. EXECUTORS OF WALKER, DECD.
Denning L.J.

to provide the labour. The owner says that, despite the contract, he can put on the tenant the responsibility of providing the material: and he says that if the tenant does not provide it, the owner can, at the end of the tenancy, get compensation for any deterioration on that account.

The question depends on the true interpretation of the Acts. It is quite clear from sections 9, 10 and 11 of the Act of 1947 that Parliament intended that the fixed equipment should be properly maintained and repaired, and that it should be maintained either by the owner or the occupier: but those sections do not make it clear on whom the responsibility should fall. That only appears from other parts of the Act and from the regulations. These show that if the contract of tenancy is silent on the matter, then by the regulations the tenant is bound to maintain and repair the fixed equipment: but if and in so far as the contract of tenancy puts the responsibility on the owner, then the contractual responsibility remains intact. There is nothing in the statutes which absolves the owner from his contractual responsibility, but on the other hand there is much to preserve it. I need only mention section 15 (3) of the Act of 1947, which shows that, in order to ascertain their respective liabilities, the Minister can call for a sight of the contract: and section 37 (1) of the Act of 1947 which provides that the regulations must not contradict the contract. Much reliance was placed by the owner on sections 10 (3) and 11 (3) of the Act of 1947, but the provisions are only designed to ensure that there shall be no overlap.

In my opinion, therefore, the arbitrator, in assessing the responsibility of the tenant to farm in accordance with the rules of good husbandry, must take into account any specific obligations which by contract are placed on the landlord. The tenant cannot be made to pay for the landlord's own breaches of contract.

I agree with my Lord that the appeal should be allowed.

ROMER L.J. I agree, and have very little to add, as my brethren have already covered the ground so completely. It seems to me that the only point of substance which can really be urged in support of the landlord's contention is the difference in phraseology which the legislature used in section 10 (3) as contrasted with that used in section 11 (3), the difference being that whereas in the first subsection, contained as it is in a provision concerning the responsibilities of the owner in relation to good estate management, it is enacted that these responsibilities "shall not in relation to the maintenance and repair "of fixed equipment include an obligation to do anything which "that other person is under an obligation to do by virtue of any "agreement"; in section 11 (3) there is excepted from the responsibilities of the occupier in relation to the rules of good husbandry "an obligation to carry out any work of maintenance "or repair which the owner of the unit or any part thereof is "under an obligation to carry out in order to fulfil his respon- "sibilities to manage in accordance with the rules of good estate "management," which it is suggested means the statutory rules of good estate management as distinct from contractual responsibilities. There is that point, I quite agree. I am not sure what the explanation of the difference is in the language in section 10 (3) referring to an agreement, and in section 11 (3) where no such express reference is made. But, as I say, it is to my mind the only point which is really of any substance or weight in favour of an argument which leads to such remarkable results as have been indicated in the course of the discussion. I think that it would be putting upon it a weight which it is quite unable to bear as a base for the view which the landlord seeks to found upon it. The possible results have been illustrated by my Lord and Denning L.J., and it seems to me plain that the heavier the responsibilities which a landlord contractually undertook the more inevitably he would resort to this section instead of resorting to his right under the covenants, because he would then recover from the tenant more and more in respect of the damage caused by his own contractual omissions. It seems to me to be almost a ludicrous result and it would need language far clearer than is to be found in any of the statutory provisions to which we were referred to justify such a finding.

I would merely add in conclusion that, whatever the intention was in omitting from section 11 (3) the reference to the agreement which is to be found in section 10 (3), it seems to me perfectly plain that, in order to ascertain what the owners' obligations are in relation to good estate management, as also in order to ascertain what the occupier's duties are in relation to good husbandry, one has to look at the contract. One is compelled to do that in express terms by section 10 (3) and, as I think, by virtue of compelling inference under the provisions of section 11 (3). For these reasons, and for the reasons which my brethren have indicated, I agree that this appeal should be allowed.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Church, Adams, Tatham & Co., for Burges, Salmon & Co., Bristol; Wheeler, Brill & John, Oxted.

[CHANCERY DIVISION.]

1954
Jan. 13.

Danckwerts J.

* In re BAGSHAW, DECD.
WESTMINSTER BANK LD. v. TAYLOR AND OTHERS.

[1952 B. No. 4649.]

Will—Bequest to charitable institution—War memorial cottage hospital—Nationalization—Hospital taken over by hospital management committee—Name and objects of charity altered—Permanent charity—Bequest retained by charity.

Hospital—Nationalization—Bequest to charitable institution—War memorial cottage hospital—Name and objects of charity altered—Bequest not acquired by hospital management committee—Retained by charity.

Charity—War memorial cottage hospital—Name and objects of charity altered—Permanent charity—Entitled to retain bequest—Not affected by nationalization of hospital.

A testatrix by her will made in 1942 gave her residuary estate to a charitable institution known as Bakewell and District War Memorial Cottage Hospital. By resolutions passed in 1946 and 1947 the governing body of the charity, under the powers contained in its rules and trust deed, altered the name of the institution to the Bakewell and District 1914–18 War Memorial Charity, and altered its objects to include certain charitable purposes other than the cottage hospital. On July 5, 1948, the National Health Service Act, 1946, came into force and the site, buildings and endowments of the cottage hospital vested in the Minister of Health. Certain funds were not, however, taken over under the Act.

The testatrix died in 1951; the bequest under her will was claimed by the charity under its new name, the hospital management committee, in whose area was the cottage hospital, and by the next-of-kin:—

Held, (1) that the claim of the next-of-kin must fail at the outset, since it was plain on the authorities that the bequest was either a gift for the charity which still existed or for the purpose designated by the description in her will;

(2) that it was established by In re Faraker [1912] 2 Ch. 488 and In re Lucas [1948] Ch. 424; 64 T.L.R. 343; [1948] 2 All E.R. 22 that a charity founded as a perpetual charity did not come to an end, although its objects and name be altered according to the due process of the law, and that there was no distinction in principle between the alteration of the objects and name under a scheme as in those cases and under the charity's own rules as in the present case; and the bequest being to a plainly identified charity, it took in effect in favour of the charity under its new name.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS.

Jane Bagshaw, by her will dated July 17, 1942, gave all her real and personal estate (subject to the payment of her debts and funeral and testamentary expenses) to the Bakewell and District War Memorial Cottage Hospital absolutely. She died on June 27, 1951, without having altered her will.

The cottage hospital was founded in 1921 as an unincorporated charitable institution, wholly maintained by voluntary contributions, "for the reception and relief of sick or temporarily disabled

"persons as a permanent memorial to the officers and men "belonging to Bakewell and District who fell in the Great War."

At a meeting of the general body of subscribers on November 19, 1921, rules were adopted, and it was resolved that trustees be appointed to hold any real and personal property belonging to the institution, and that a trust deed should be executed declaring the trusts of the institution's property, and of any other money which might from time to time become payable to the trustees on behalf of the institution. The trust deed was executed on December 31, 1921, pursuant to that resolution.

The object of the institution at the time of the will of the testatrix was declared by the rules as affording "accommodation "and facilities such as might not exist in the homes of the "patients for the remedial treatment of poor persons resident "within a radius of five miles from the Memorial Cross in Bake-"well when suffering from disease or bodily injury . . ." There was a proviso permitting the treatment of non-residents who became seriously ill or were injured within the area.

The cottage hospital so constituted was carried on continuously from 1921 until 1946, when the governing body of subscribers became anxious about the hospital's future having regard to the National Health Service Bill which had been introduced into the House of Commons. At meetings held in 1946 and 1947 the governing body of the subscribers, under the powers conferred by their rules to alter the rules, and under the power conferred by clause 8 of the trust deed, passed resolutions altering the objects and the name of the charity.

Clause 8 of the trust deed provided: "If at any time hereafter "in the opinion of a two-thirds majority of the governing body "a cottage hospital cannot be maintained the trustees shall hold "the capital and income of the trust premises for the time being "subject to the trusts hereof upon trust to apply the same as "capital or as income for such charitable purposes and objects "and in such manner for the benefit of the inhabitants of the "said parish of Bakewell and the surrounding parishes as the "governing body shall in their absolute discretion think fit "the governing body having power to settle any scheme or "schemes for such last-mentioned application." In accordance with that power, a resolution was passed expressing the opinion that two-thirds of the governing body were of opinion that a cottage hospital could not be maintained.

The name of the institution was altered to the Bakewell and District 1914–18 War Memorial Charity, and its objects were altered so as to provide: "Primarily, the provision of such "additional hospital, medical, and other benefits of a charitable "nature for the inhabitants of the parish of Bakewell, and "surrounding parishes within a radius of five miles from the "Memorial Cross in Bakewell, and secondarily towards such "relief as is charitable amongst necessitous ex-servicemen or

1954

BAGSHAW, DECD., In re.

"women of the war 1914–18 or the war 1939–45 or their depen"dants resident in the parishes aforesaid, and the provision of "any necessary assistance . . ."

The hospital was carried on as hitherto until the National Health Service Act, 1946, came into force on July 5, 1948. At that date the site, buildings and endowments vested in the Minister of Health under the Act. Since that time the hospital had been carried on in the same building by the Sheffield No. 3 Hospital Management Committee under the name of the Bakewell and District War Memorial Cottage Hospital.

A certain residue of the funds of the institution were unaffected by the Act. In 1949 a new set of rules was adopted for the institution with its new name and new objects.

The question to be determined on this summons was whether the residuary bequest under the will of the testatrix was payable to the trustees of the Bakewell and District 1914–18 War Memorial Charity to be applied for the objects of that charity, or to the Sheffield No. 3 Hospital Management Committee to be applied for the purposes of the Bakewell and District War Memorial Cottage Hospital, or devolved as on intestacy on the next-of-kin.

W. S. Wigglesworth for the Westminster Bank Ld., executor of the testatrix's will.

R. O. Wilberforce for H. C. B. Taylor, chairman of and sued on behalf of the Bakewell and District 1914–18 War Memorial Charity.

Michael Browne for the Sheffield No. 3 Hospital Management Committee.

John Monckton for next-of-kin.

Denys Buckley for the Attorney-General.

Cases cited in argument: In re Faraker [1]; In re Glass [2]; In re Hutchinson's Will Trusts [3]; In re Lucas [4]; In re Meyers [5]; In re Morgan's Will Trusts. [6]

DANCKWERTS J., having stated the facts, continued: The objects of the charity have ceased to be for the purpose of providing a hospital for poor people within the limited district prescribed under the original trust, and different trusts have been constituted.

The fund is claimed, not only by the charity as constituted under the new name and with new objects, but also by the hospital management committee which, under the National Health Service Act, carries on the activities of the hospital in the hospital buildings formerly owned by the charity. It is claimed on behalf

[1] [1912] Ch. 488.
[2] [1950] Ch. 643n.; [1950] 2 All E.R. 953n.
[3] [1953] Ch. 387; [1953] 1 All E.R. 996.
[4] [1948] Ch. 424; 64 T.L.R. 343; [1948] 2 All E.R. 22.
[5] [1951] Ch. 534; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 435; [1951] 1 All E.R. 538.
[6] [1950] Ch. 637; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 1) 1037; [1950] 1 All E.R. 1097.

of the latter that this was a bequest which operated not in favour of the charity whose name appears in the will, and which now bears a different name and has different objects, but for the purposes for which the hospital buildings were used at the date when the testatrix made her will; it is also claimed that those purposes are in substance maintained at the present time by the Sheffield No. 3 Hospital Management Committee.

A claim is also made, on the basis of failure of the trusts, by the next-of-kin of the testatrix. The last-mentioned claim is one which must fail in any event, because it is plain on the authorities that the bequest was either a gift to the charity which still exists, or for the purpose designated by the description contained in the will of the testatrix.

It is well established by cases such as In re Faraker [1] and In re Lucas [2] that a charity founded as a perpetual charity can never come to an end, even though its objects and its name may be altered according to due process of law. In those two cases the objects and name of the charity concerned had been altered by a scheme established either by the court or the Charity Commissioners. In the present case the alteration has not been effected by means of any scheme made by an outside body such as the Charity Commissioners or the court, but the objects and the name have been altered in a perfectly legal manner through the machinery provided in the trust deed created by the founders of the charity itself.

It seems to me that there is no distinction whatever in principle between the alteration by one method and the alteration by the other method, and the charity remains the same charity, although its name and its objects have been altered. The gift was to a plainly identified charity which existed at the date of the will under a particular name by which it is designated in the will of the testatrix, and the gift takes effect in favour of that charity and in favour of no other charity at all.

The bequest is therefore a gift for the general purposes of the charity described correctly by the testatrix as the Bakewell and District War Memorial Cottage Hospital, but now known as the Bakewell and District 1914–18 War Memorial Charity, and payable accordingly to the trustees of the charity.

Declaration accordingly.

Solicitors: Woodcock, Ryland & Co. for Goodwin & Cockerton, Bakewell; Cree, Godfrey & Wood for Brooke, Taylor & Co., Bakewell; Gibson & Weldon for L. J. Thomas, Sheffield; Treasury Solicitor.

I. G. R. M.

[1] [1912] 2 Ch. 488.

[2] [1948] Ch. 424; 64 T.L.R. 343; [1948] 2 All E.R. 22.

[CHANCERY DIVISION.]

1954
Jan. 14, 15

Harman J.

* WESTMINSTER BANK LD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS.

[1952 W. 2130.]

Revenue — Estate duty — Annuity — Valuation for purposes of estate duty—Basis of calculation—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), s. 7 (1), (5).
Annuity.

Under a deed of separation dated February 26, 1926, the estate of a testator, who died on May 10, 1947, was liable for an annuity payable, until appropriation, out of the residue, during the lifetime of the widow. There were at all times ample funds in the estate to provide for the annuity. A dispute having arisen between the executors' solicitors and the Controller of Death Duties on the sum to be deducted, in computing the principal value of the estate, to represent the amount of the liability attaching to the estate, at the date of the testator's death, because of the existence of the annuity:—

Held, that the amount to be deducted was the cost, at the date of the deceased's death, of a British Government annuity of the same amount.

In re Castle [1916] W.N. 195 and Ford v. Batley (1853) 17 Beav. 303 applied.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS.

By a deed of separation, dated February 26, 1926, George Wolsey became liable to pay to his wife Grace Mary Eleanor Wolsey (who was born on July 16, 1882) an annuity of £750 and a further sum up to but not exceeding £100 a year for outgoings in respect of her general residence. The annuity and the said £100 were paid by him to his wife down to the date of his death, which took place on May 10, 1947, and had since that date been paid to her by his executors.

By his will, dated August 3, 1940, the executors were directed to appropriate an annuity fund and until such appropriation to pay the annuity out of the residuary estate. The net principal value of the estate, subject to the deduction of the correct amount in respect of the liability represented by the annuity, was £71,286. No fund was constituted to provide for the annuity, as the executors acted on the view that it was charged on the whole of the estate.

Correspondence took place between the executors and the Controller of Death Duties, acting for the Commissioners of Inland Revenue, on the sum to be deducted in computing the principal value of the estate to represent the liability attaching to that estate at the date of the testator's death. The correspondence showed that four sums had been put forward as a correct sum to be deducted, namely; (1) the sum which it would have cost the executors to purchase a British Government annuity of the same amount; (2) the sum which, according to a statement made by or on behalf of the Controller of Death Duties, it would have cost the executors to purchase a British Government annuity of the same amount "on the basis of the price of consols "at the time of the deceased's death"; (3) the sum which it would have cost the executors to purchase an annuity of the same amount from a first class British life assurance company; (4) a sum suggested by or on behalf of the Controller as acceptable to him "to avoid further correspondence and close this "particular estate."

A summons was taken out by the executors to determine whether, in calculating the principal value of the estate for purposes of estate duty, the amount to be deducted as the amount of the liability for the annuity was (a) the sum which the plaintiffs would have had to pay, at the date of the deceased's death, for purchasing a British Government annuity of the same amount; or (b) the sum which the plaintiffs would have had to pay at the said date for purchasing an annuity of the same amount on the basis of the price of consols at that date; or (c) the sum which the plaintiffs would have had to pay at the said date for purchasing an annuity of the same amount from a first class British life assurance company; or (d) some and, if so, what other sum.

N. E. Mustoe Q.C. and G. B. Graham for the plaintiffs.

Sir A. L. Ungoed-Thomas Q.C. and J. H. Stamp for the defendants.

Cases referred to in argument: Ford v. Batley [1]; In re Castle [2]; In re Beecham's Settlement [3]; In re Rothermere [4]; In re Cottrell [5]; In re Ellis [6]; In re Bradberry [7]; In re Hollins [8]; In re Carew [9]; In re Thomas [10]; In re Barnes. [11]

HARMAN J. This is an originating summons taken out under Order 54A, for the construction of a statute—a procedure sanctioned in the case of estate duty questions by section 3 of the Administration of Justice (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1933.

The question to be determined is the value to be put on a debt or incumbrance which falls to be deducted from the estate of George Wolsey. The debt or incumbrance in question is an annuity, but it is not an annuity bequeathed by his will. The annuitant is a creditor, or potential creditor, of his estate and comes before any beneficiary under it. It follows that the provisions in the will with regard to this annuity which the testator

[1] (1853) 17 Beav. 303.
[2] [1916] W.N. 195.
[3] [1934] 1 Ch. 183.
[4] [1945] 1 Ch. 72; 61 T.L.R. 69; [1944] 2 All E.R. 593.
[5] [1910] 1 Ch. 402.
[6] [1935] Ch. 193.
[7] [1943] Ch. 35; 59 T.L.R. 131; [1942] 2 All E.R. 629.
[8] [1918] 1 Ch. 503; 34 T.L.R. 310.
[9] [1939] Ch. 794; 55 T.L.R. 875; [1939] 3 All E.R. 200.
[10] [1946] Ch. 36; 62 T.L.R. 23; [1945] 2 All E.R. 586.
[11] [1939] 1 K.B. 316; 55 T.L.R. 248; [1938] 4 All E.R. 870.

1954

Westminster Bank Ld. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners.

Harman J.

sought to make and indeed any other provisions of the will are in my judgment irrelevant.

Only one section is involved and that is section 7 of the Finance Act, 1894, which provides: "(1) In determining the "value of an estate for the purpose of estate duty allowance shall "be made for . . . debts and incumbrances . . . and any debt "or incumbrance for which allowance is made shall be deducted "from the value of the land or other subjects of property liable "thereto." This is an incumbrance for which the whole of this estate is liable. There is ample estate, far more than is sufficient to secure the annuitant in her rights. Those are the rights given by a separation deed made in 1926 between her and her husband, the testator.

By section 7 (5): "The principal value of any property shall "be estimated to be the price which, in the opinion of the Com-"missioners, such property would fetch if sold in the open "market at the time of the death of the deceased." This annuity is property, and one way of construing the statute is to suppose that the principal value of this annuity is the subject-matter of subsection (5) and that it is the opinion of the Commissioners which will settle it, subject of course to their opinion being properly arrived at.

But another view is possible, as was pointed out by Mr. Mustoe in reply, namely that subsection (5) of section 7 only applies to assets and not to liabilities and, after the Commissioners have arrived at their opinion as to the principal value of the assets of any estate, then you must deduct the debt or incumbrance under section 7, arriving at its value as best you may; and that the opinion of the Commissioners has no particular weight in the matter. I do not think that I need decide which is the true view, because, if it was open to the Commissioners by their opinions, as it were, to set up a prima facie case, they have not elected to do so.

There have been long negotiations between the executors and the Estate Duty Office, as to the method by which this annuity should be valued, but they have been unable to arrive at any conclusion on that matter. So that, although the testator died in 1947, the matter still remains unresolved.

The difference lies within a narrow compass and has resolved itself before me largely into a dispute, first as to the tables on which the annuitant's expectation of life is to be based, and secondly the rate of interest which the estate ought to be assumed to be earning for this purpose—both highly artificial matters. The evidence was begun by the evidence of Mr. Jenkins, an official of the Westminster Bank trustee department, who sets out four different methods which have been suggested to quantify this liability. They vary between £11,819 on the one hand and £9,750 on the other. That was in August, 1952. The considerable period which has elapsed since then has been occupied by two actuaries firing long range guns at one another at infrequent intervals making clear that neither of them was prepared to accept entirely the other's premises. The differences between them appear to be, first, that one bases his valuation on the Consols rate of interest, and the other on the average rate of interest earned by average trustee securities at the time when the testator died. Secondly, one wishes to use the Registrar General's Table of Mortality for the whole country, and the other wishes to use the yardstick used by actuaries in general which is a publication by the Institute called "The Mortality of "Annuitants, 1900–1920," a book which is commonly used by insurance companies and those advising them when purchasing annuities. I do not think that I need go into the details.

The result is that no decision has been reached and the summons asks "whether, in calculating the principal value of the "estate for purposes of estate duty, the amount to be deducted "as the amount of the liability of an annuity of £850 a year "payable to Grace Mary Eleanor Wolsey pursuant to a deed "of separation made on February 26, 1926 is" and then three different methods are set out and there is added a general question, if none of those represents the true sum.

The matter differs from the ordinary case of an annuitant under a will and therefore from the cases, a large number of which have been cited to me, where the estate is insolvent and the annuities are valued for the purpose of paying an abated sum to the annuitants on principles which the Court of Chancery has followed for a great number of years with certain variations as required.

There has to be a valuation somehow, and it is a highly artificial matter because, there is no right in anybody to force a lump sum on the annuitant. I think, as there has to be a valuation, one way at least of doing it—and it seems to me a good practical way—is to consider what might happen if all the beneficiaries, being sui juris and all wishing to wind up this estate and take what capital they could at once, called on the executors to satisfy the annuitant and get her out of the way in order to free the rest of the estate. Supposing her to be recalcitrant and refusing to agree to such a course, the executors might, I should have thought, prudently ask the direction of the court in the matter. Of course they might and, Mr. Stamp says that they should, rely on their own fortitude and distribute the estate, except for what sum they thought was proper, but I do not think that the executors are bound to take that line. It is quite possible if they went to the court, everybody desiring the estate to be wound up at once, except the annuitant, the court might well say: "Give the annuitant the best security she can have for her "annuity and then she cannot have any cause of complaint." Whatever calculation you make of an actuarial kind the circumstances of the future cannot be foreseen; the interest on Consols might be reduced. But if one provides the annuitant with the best kind of annuity which society as we know it can provide, then she cannot be heard to complain. Therefore, I think, when one is considering what is the burden on this estate, which this annuity may be said to represent, it is the burden of procuring the best security which the annuitant might have for her money, short of having the whole estate preserved till the end of her life to answer her claims. If that be right, the answer is that the true burden, which should be deducted under the section, is the cost at the relevant date of buying an annuity from the National Debt Commissioners on the Government tables. As it seems to me, that is a convenient way of measuring this particular kind of liability, and it prevents the sort of technical argument between actuaries which has been carried on in this deliberate manner for the last few years without any result at all except the waste of a certain amount of paper. It provides a kind of rule of thumb which seems to me to be a reasonable one. Eve J. in a rather analogous case, took a somewhat similar view. I am referring to In re Castle,[1] in which there was a gift of an annuity, and the annuitant elected to take payment of a capital sum, and the question raised was, on what basis the capital value should be ascertained. In that case Eve J. said "it was desirable there should be a standardized rule in these "matters," and that "a Government annuity should be pur-"chased or the capital value should be calculated by reference "to the Government tables and not to the price at which the "annuity could be purchased from an insurance company. That, "he considered, was the course an executor should follow where "no other direction was given him."

1954

West-minster Bank Ld. v. Inland Revenue Commis-sioners.

Harman J.

I observe that, as long ago as 1853 Sir John Romilly M.R. said in Ford v. Batley[2]: "The annuitant is entitled to have "the best security for his annuity, which is a Government "security. I am, therefore, of opinion, that he is entitled to "a Government annuity." That I quote to show that that is the best kind of security an annuitant can have. Though in law she has not any right to have such an annuity, yet, as this artificial valuation has to be made, it seems to me to be a convenient way of measuring the burden imposed on the estate.

I propose therefore to answer the question raised by the summons in the sense of (a). I do not propose to give either side any costs.

Declaration accordingly.

Solicitors: Griffinhoofe & Brewster; Solicitor of Inland Revenue.

J. L. D.

[1] [1916] W.N. 195.

[2] 17 Beav. 303, 304.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

* MARTIN-SMITH v. SMALE.

C. A.

1954
Jan. 11.

Denning and Romer L.JJ.

[1953 M. No. 3720.]

Agriculture—Agricultural holding—Notice to quit—Consent—Tenant's appeal to Agricultural Land Tribunal dismissed—Condition imposed on landlord—Approved bailiff to be appointed—Tenant's refusal to give up possession—Effect of condition—Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948 (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 63), ss. 24, 25.

A landlord applied to the Minister of Agriculture and Fisheries for his consent to the operation of a notice to quit on the tenant of an agricultural holding in order that the landlord might herself farm the holding in the interests of efficient farming and good estate management. The Minister gave his consent. The tenant appealed to the Agricultural Land Tribunal which gave its consent to the operation of the notice to quit but imposed a condition that "the "landlord appoints a bailiff approved by the Hertfordshire Agri-"cultural Executive Committee before taking possession." Notice to quit was given on August 12, 1952, terminating the tenancy on September 29, 1953. On October 1, 1953, the Agricultural Executive Committee gave a somewhat qualified approval to the bailiff whom the landlord had appointed. The tenant failed to give up possession on the ground that the landlord had not fulfilled the condition imposed by the tribunal. Pearson J. gave the landlord leave to sign final judgment for possession. On appeal:—

Held, that the condition which had been imposed by the Agricultural Land Tribunal under section 25 (5) of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948, was valid having regard to the purpose for which the landlord proposed to terminate the tenancy; but that, if the condition had in fact not been fulfilled, it was not a matter of which the tenant could complain—it was the duty of the Minister and no one else to enforce it; that the condition could only operate when the tenancy had come to an end; and that, accordingly, the tenant had no defence to the landlord's claim to possession.

Decision of Pearson J. affirmed.

APPEAL from Pearson J.

In this action the plaintiff, Violet Mary Martin-Smith, claimed possession of Northchurch Farm, Berkhamsted, Herts, of which she was the owner, against the defendant, Cyril Smale, her tenant. The landlord had given the tenant notice to quit expiring on September 29, 1953. The requisite consent to the service of the notice to quit had been given by the Agricultural Land Tribunal subject to the condition that the landlord should appoint a bailiff approved by the local Agricultural Executive Committee. The tribunal had imposed that condition pursuant to the power conferred on them by section 25 of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948.[1] The tenant refused to give up possession,

[1] Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948, s. 25 (5): "Where . . . the Agricul-"tural Land Tribunal consent . . . "to the operation of a notice to quit, ". . . the tribunal may impose such "conditions as appear . . . to the . . . . "tribunal requisite for securing that "the land to which the notice relates "will be used for the purpose for "which the landlord proposes to ter-"minate the tenancy."

C. A.
1954
Martin-Smith v. Smale.

contending that the landlord had not complied with the terms of the condition. Pearson J. gave the landlord leave to sign final judgment.

The tenant appealed.

Lord Hailsham Q.C. and Gilbert Dare for the tenant.
E. Dennis Smith for the landlord.

Denning L.J.: In this case the landlord of an agricultural holding of 148 acres in Hertfordshire claims possession from a farmer to whom it was let. By reason of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948, s. 24 (1) and (2), a landlord was not able to give an effective notice to quit, unless he first obtained the consent of the Minister. The landlord, therefore, applied for the consent of the Minister. The Agricultural Executive Committee inquired into the matter and recommended that the Minister should give his consent.

According to their findings, the landlord was a woman who was relinquishing public duties and proposed to take up farming with her son. She had the farm house of Northchurch Farm, but not the land (148 acres) attached to it because it was let to the defendant. The defendant was a farmer who was farming a good deal of other land besides these 148 acres. The Agricultural Executive Committee recommended that consent should be given on the ground that the tenant's general farming standard was low; and that, if he were farming a smaller area, his standard might improve. They found that the house and land of Northchurch Farm should be brought into one occupation, and that the grounds on which the landlord desired to terminate the tenancy were both desirable and in the interests of good estate management. They considered that the degree of hardship involved would be equal on each; and so the Agricultural Executive Committee recommended the Minister to give his consent, which he did.

The tenant thereupon appealed (as he had the right to do) to the Agricultural Land Tribunal, which also gave its consent. The formal decision stated that the tribunal, "having satisfied itself "that all parties have appeared before it or have been duly "summoned to appear and having heard the case tendered by "the parties and having inspected the said land hereby gives "its consent to the operation of the said notice to quit intended "to be served relating to the said land." But the tribunal added this condition: "Subject to the condition that the land-"lord appoints a bailiff approved by the Hertfordshire Agricul-"tural Executive Committee before taking possession."

The consent of the tribunal was given on July 30, 1952. On August 12, 1952, a notice to quit was given by the owner to terminate the tenancy on September 29, 1953. Shortly before the notice expired, the landlord appointed one as bailiff. On October 1, 1953, the Agricultural Executive Committee made a report upon Page of a somewhat qualified character which was not a whole-hearted approval because of his youth. On this account it is said that the condition was not fulfilled, and that the tribunal's consent was inoperative.

In my opinion, even if this condition was not fulfilled (on which I express no opinion), it is not a matter of which the tenant can take advantage. This condition was imposed by the tribunal in the interests of the community at large, and it is the duty of the Minister and no one else to enforce it. Section 29 of the Act shows that, if a condition is not fulfilled, the Minister may take possession of the land and deal with it as he thinks fit; but it does not nullify the notice to quit or the consent to it. The tenant ought to have gone out before any question arose as to the fulfilment of the condition. The landlord was not bound to appoint a bailiff until the tenant had gone out. The notice to quit was good, because the tribunal had previously consented to it, and the tenant has no defence to the claim.

[His Lordship proceeded to consider a question raised in connexion with the constitution of the tribunal (which does not call for report) and continued:] Accordingly, in my judgment this appeal should be dismissed.

ROMER L.J. I agree. Under section 25 of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948, the tribunal had power to impose such conditions as appeared to them requisite for securing that the farm in question, to which the notice to quit related, would be used for the purpose for which the landlord proposed to terminate the tenancy. The purpose for which the landowner proposed to terminate the tenancy was not merely that she might farm the land in conjunction with her son, but that they might farm it in the interests of "efficient farming." That is the language also of section 25 (1) (a) of the Act. That was the purpose for which the tenancy was being terminated and in relation to which the tribunal had power to impose a condition.

The condition which they imposed on, or which they attached to, their consent to the operation of the notice to quit was that the owner should appoint a bailiff approved by the Hertfordshire Agricultural Executive Committee before taking possession. That condition was a perfectly valid one to impose having regard to the purpose for which the landlord proposed to terminate the tenancy. But whether it was a good condition (as I myself firmly believe it was) or whether it was a bad condition, I cannot see that it was a matter of which the tenant could complain. If anyone were to challenge the validity of that condition, it would surely be the landlord: because it was not intended to operate and in fact, having regard to the contract between the owner and the farmer, could not operate until the tenancy had come to an end; and when the tenancy came to an end it would follow that the tenant would have no further interest in the farm.

C. A.
1954
MARTIN-SMITH v. SMALE.
Romer L.J.

The person who would have the sole interest in the farm would be the owner, and if his ownership was going to be fettered by this condition, it would be for the owner to complain and not the tenant. Accordingly, it appears to me that there is no ground for holding that the tenant has any defence.

I entirely agree with what my Lord has said that the defendant in this case ought not to have leave to defend on that ground.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Lucien Fior; Sharpe, Pritchard & Co.

B. A. B.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

1954
Jan. 21.
Lord Goddard C.J., Byrne and Parker JJ.

* HOPE v. BROWN.

Criminal Law—Attempt—Preparation—Sale at excessive price—Preparation of illegal price tickets—Intention to attach to meat before delivery to customers—Act preparatory to commission of offence—Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, reg. 55AB—Meat (Prices) (Great Britain) Order, 1952 (S.I. 1952, No. 1122), art. 3.
Emergency Legislation.

The manager of a butcher's shop, having prepared meat for delivery to customers, placed a ticket on each package of meat specifying the correct price in accordance with the Meat (Prices) (Great Britain) Order, 1952. In a drawer in the shop he placed another set of tickets each relating to one of the packages, but bearing a price in excess of that permitted by the order. The manager admitted that before the meat was delivered the tickets in the drawer would be substituted for those originally attached to the packages. On a charge of attempting to commit an offence against the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, and the order of 1952:—

Held that, by making out the false tickets and placing them in the drawer the manager was merely doing an act preparatory to the commission of an offence, and the act was too remote from the actual transaction necessary to constitute the attempt; accordingly he was not guilty of the offence charged.

Dictum of Parke B. in Reg. v. Eagleton (1855) Dears.C.C. 515, 538 applied.

Dictum of Lord Goddard C.J. in Gardner v. Akeroyd [1952] 2 Q.B. 743, 750 explained.

CASE STATED by Wigan justices.

On August 7, 1953, 21 informations were preferred by the appellant, Fred Hope, an enforcement inspector of the Ministry of Food, against the respondent, Thomas Brown, each alleging that on or about June 19, 1953, at Higher Ince, Lancaster, the respondent attempted to commit an offence against the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, reg. 55AB, in that he attempted to sell meat at a price exceeding the maximum applicable in accordance with the Meat (Prices) (Great Britain) Order, 1952 (S.I. 1952, No. 1122), art. 3.

At the hearing of the informations the justices found the following facts: At all material times the respondent was employed as manager at a butcher's shop at 22, Peel Street, Higher Ince, by one Melling. On Friday, June 19, 1953, two enforcement inspectors visited the shop and found in a refrigerator 22 packages containing meat. On 21 of them respectively there was a ticket bearing the customer's name, the weight, and specifying a price which was in accordance with the Meat (Prices) (Great Britain) Order, 1952. Each of the packages had been prepared by the respondent. In a drawer in the shop there was another set of tickets each of which related to one of the packages. On each of these a total price was marked which in each case was in excess of that which could lawfully have been charged. After being cautioned by one of the inspectors the respondent made and signed a statement in the following terms: "All this waste and excessive fat had to be trimmed and I try "to oblige the customers, that's all. The extra price on the "second ticket is to cover up the trimmings. I do this entirely "on my own initiative to try to make the turnover and Mr. "Melling does not know a thing about it. When the orders go "out on the Saturday, the girl is instructed to change the "tickets over, and when she comes back, she brings the genuine "ticket back so I can sort the book out."

At the close of the appellant's case it was submitted on behalf of the respondent that there was no case to answer in that the facts relied on by the appellant were not sufficient in law to establish an attempt by the respondent to commit the offence charged. It was contended by the appellant that on the facts proved and in the absence of any other evidence the respondent ought to be convicted. The justices, being of the opinion that there was no case to answer, dismissed the informations.

J. P. Ashworth for the appellant.
John Newey for the respondent.

The following cases were cited in argument: Reg. v. Eagleton[1]; Reg. v. Cheeseman[2]; Gardner v. Akeroyd[3]; Rex v. Woods[4]; Wiles v. Maddison.[5]

LORD GODDARD C.J. stated the facts and continued:—The only question is whether or not the respondent can be convicted of an attempt to sell meat in excess of the maximum price to each of these 21 customers, to whom he had the intention that the meat should go on the next day. In my opinion, he

[1] (1855) Dears.C.C. 376, 515.
[2] (1862) Le. & Ca. 140.
[3] [1952] 2 Q.B. 743; [1952] 2 T.L.R. 169; [1952] 2 All E.R. 306.
[4] (1930) 143 L.T. 311; 46 T.L.R. 401.
[5] [1943] 1 All E.R. 315.

1954

Hope
v.
Brown.

Lord Goddard C.J.

cannot. He had merely formed the intention to commit an offence and his acts were only those preparatory to the commission of that offence. The locus classicus on what amounts to an attempt is Reg. v. Eagleton [1] where Parke B. said [2]: "Some act is required, "and we do not think that all acts towards committing a mis-"demeanour are indictable. Acts remotely leading towards the "commission of the offence are not to be considered as attempts "to commit it, but acts immediately connected with it are." Here, what remained to be done before there could be an attempt was the affixing to the meat of the false tickets. Until that was done, in my opinion the matter remained simply in embryo and in intention. The girl would have affixed the ticket, no doubt, because she was delivering the meat on behalf of the respondent on his instructions, and what she was doing was the act of the respondent, but, until she had done that, one cannot say that an offence had been committed. The preparation of the false tickets and putting them in the drawer is too remote from the actual transaction which would be necessary to constitute the attempt. There might be a sudden change of heart, or an intervention by the master, which would have prevented any attempt being made to sell this meat to the customers. In all these cases where it has been held that there has been an attempt; the court has always found that the crime would have been committed but for the intervention of someone. The crime here would not have been committed until, at any rate, the meat had got the false ticket on it and it had been sold with that false ticket on it to the customer. Therefore, the mere fact that the respondent prepared a false ticket is not enough.

No doubt this charge was preferred because of Gardner v. Akeroyd,[3] in which a butcher's manager was doing exactly the same thing as was done in the present case, but in those days it was an offence not merely to attempt to commit an offence in breach of the regulations, but it was also an offence to do an act preparatory to committing an offence. There the court was considering whether the doctrine of vicarious liability could attach to a master whose servant had done an act preparatory to the commission of, but which did not amount, to an attempt, and we held that the doctrine of vicarious liability could not be extended to that extent. Giving judgment in that case, I said [4]: "Now, applying the doctrine laid down in Reg. v. Eagleton,[5] "I should have no hesitation in holding that the servant in this "case was guilty of and could properly have been charged with "an attempt . . ." But in that case the false tickets had already been applied to the meat. In the present case the false tickets had not got on to the meat. For these reasons I think that the enforcement officers struck too soon, or did not think of a simpler way by which the respondent could have been prosecuted.

[1] (1855) Dears.C.C. 376, 515.
[2] Ibid. 538.
[3] [1952] 2 Q.B. 743.
[4] Ibid. 750.
[5] Dears.C.C. 515.

In my opinion, the justices came to a right decision in point of law and this appeal fails.

BYRNE J. Mr. Ashworth has drawn our attention to the definition of an attempt which is to be found in Stephen's Digest of the Criminal Law, 9th ed., p. 24: "An attempt to commit a "crime is an act done with intent to commit that crime, and "forming part of a series of acts, which would constitute its "actual commission if it were not interrupted." When one examines the facts in the present case, it appears to me that the respondent's acts were not interrupted because the time had not arrived for their completion. His acts, in my opinion, were for that reason too remote; they certainly indicated an attempt, but were not sufficiently connected with the offence with which he was charged as to constitute an attempt. I am of opinion that the justices were right, and that this appeal should be dismissed.

PARKER J. I agree with both judgments which have been delivered.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Treasury Solicitor; Gregory, Rowcliffe & Co., for Frank Platt & Fishwick, Wigan.

J. D. P.

[PRIVY COUNCIL.]

* HENRY CHARLES CHRISTIAN (OTHERWISE KNOWN AS KOFI AMPAH) . . . . APPELLANT;

AND

SAMUEL TAWIAH INTSIFUL . . . RESPONDENT.

†J. C.
1953
Dec. 14.

ON APPEAL FROM THE WEST AFRICAN COURT OF APPEAL.

West Africa—Will—Blind testator—Whether "by what appears on "the face of the will . . . he had . . . knowledge of its contents"—Court entitled to take cognizance of elaborate provisions of will—Courts Ordinance, Laws of the Gold Coast, 1936 Rev., c. 4, Sch. 3, Ord. 49, r. 29.

Will. "Blind."

By Ord. 49, r. 29, in Schedule 3 to the Courts Ordinance, c. 4 of the 1936 Revision, Laws of the Gold Coast: "Where the testator "was blind or illiterate, the court shall not grant probate of the "will, or administration with the will annexed, unless the court "is first satisfied, by proof or by what appears on the face of the "will, that the will was read over to the deceased before its "execution, or that he had at that time knowledge of its contents."

An elderly testator, whose eyesight was defective, handed a document to a man who had been a solicitor's clerk who, at the † Present: LORD PORTER, LORD OAKSEY, and MR. L. M. D. DE SILVA.

---

J. C.

1953

CHRISTIAN (ORSE. AMPAH) v. INTSIFUL.

testator's request, typed it out for him. It was then signed by the testator and witnessed as his will without it having been read over to him. The will was an elaborate one, leaving to a large number of parties, relations and friends of the deceased, various sums of money, and it was never suggested to the solicitor's clerk that he had any such knowledge of the testator's relationships and friendships. The evidence did not establish that the testator was incapable of reading the document:—

Held, that, if it could be shown plainly that the testator was incapable of reading, that would be sufficient proof that he was "blind" in this context; but that, even assuming that he was blind, the court, in determining under Ord. 49, r. 29, whether it was satisfied "by what appears on the face of the will . . . that he had at "that time"—when the will was made—"knowledge of its contents," was entitled to take cognizance of the elaborate nature of the contents of the will, which was not a document which one who was not intimately acquainted with the testator's life could possibly have devised. Taking that matter into consideration, as well as the question of the testator's eyesight, it appeared that the testator in fact understood what he was doing and intended to do it, and the will was accordingly valid.

Judgment of the West African Court of Appeal affirmed.

APPEAL (No. 7 of 1953) from a judgment of the West African Court of Appeal (December 21, 1951) which reversed a judgment of the Supreme Court of the Gold Coast (March 12, 1951).

In the proceedings out of which this appeal arose the respondent, as plaintiff, claimed as one of the executors of the last will, dated November 20, 1944, of John Intsiful, who died on June 18, 1950, to have the will established, alleging its due execution on November 20, 1944. The present appellant (defendant) denied the respondent's claim, averring that on that date the testator was totally blind and could not have executed the will as alleged.

At the trial no serious question of due execution of the will or of the testator's testamentary capacity arose, but the dispute centred around the question whether the testator, whose eyesight was admittedly impaired, knew and approved of the contents of the will.

The trial judge (Dennison J.) found against the respondent's claim, and held that the testator had died intestate. On appeal by the respondent the West African Court of Appeal (Foster-Sutton P., Coussey and Korsah JJ.) unanimously allowed the appeal, holding that when he executed the will the testator was fully aware of its contents, knew what he was doing and wished to make his last will.

The defendant appealed.

1953. Dec. 14. T. B. W. Ramsay and Sirimevan Amerasinghe for the appellant.

James Petrie and Gilbert Dold for the respondent, were not called upon.

The following cases were cited in argument: Battan Singh v. Amirchand [1]; Tyrrell v. Painton [2]; Fincham v. Edwards [3]; In the Estate of Wallace, Decd. [4]

Dec. 14. The judgment of their Lordships was delivered by LORD PORTER. This case is one which in certain aspects has raised matters of difficulty for their Lordships' consideration. In making this statement their Lordships do not mean that, having regard to the evidence adduced in the courts in Africa, it presents difficulty as to the decision which they must reach. The difficulty rather occurs because certain matters which might have been elucidated in those courts were not dealt with, and consequently their Lordships are obliged to come to a conclusion upon the case as presented and to give their advice accordingly.

The case has been fully, accurately and impartially presented to their Lordships by Mr. Ramsay, who has said everything that could be said on behalf of the appellant, but their Lordships are not persuaded that it is a case in which they ought to advise Her Majesty to allow the appeal.

The facts are brief, and may be stated in a few sentences. The testator was at the time of his death in 1950, an old man of 93. The question at issue is whether a will which purports to have been, and indeed was, executed in 1944, represented the true and last will and testament of the testator, and in particular whether he understood the contents of the will as then executed.

It might be convenient at this moment to state that in consonance with the ordinary practice in this country, a provision is made in Ord. 49, r. 29, of the Courts Ordinance of the Gold Coast, c. 4, which runs in this way: "Where the testator "was blind or illiterate, the court shall not grant probate of the "will, or administration with the will annexed, unless the court "is first satisfied, by proof or by what appears on the face of "the will, that the will was read over to the deceased before "its execution, or that he had at that time knowledge of its "contents."

The actual question which their Lordships have to determine does not lie in the first part of the rule. The will in fact was, according to the evidence of a Mr. Arthur, who had been a solicitor's clerk but was not then acting on behalf of a solicitor, typed out by him. Some dispute took place as to what actually occurred when the will was made. The final evidence of Mr. Arthur is that it was made sometime after he had left a previous employer, which could not be earlier than 1943 and might be 1944, and that what occurred was this. He was called to the side of the testator, handed a document and asked to type it. He did so, and then gave it back to the testator, and the document was afterwards signed by the testator and witnessed by

[1] [1948] A.C. 161; [1948] 1 All E.R. 152.
[2] [1894] P. 151.
[3] (1842) 3 Curt. 63.
[4] [1952] 2 T.L.R. 925, 928.

J. C.
1953
Christian (orse. Ampah) v. Intsiful.

two witnesses, and then on the instructions of the testator placed in an envelope and put into the custody of the court in order to ensure that it was as regular as possible.

A good deal of discussion took place as to whether that was an accurate account of what had occurred. Apparently, by some mistake, the solicitor acting for the executor in the case who was propounding the will, had obtained what was not an accurate description of what had occurred at that interview. The inaccurate account was that the testator had dictated his wishes to the solicitor's clerk who took them down, and made a copy. The solicitor's clerk was called a second time in the course of the case, said that the proof taken by the solicitor was inaccurate, and, as their Lordships understand his evidence, adhered to the story which was first put forward. It is on that evidence that their Lordships have to decide the case.

It is admitted on all sides that the will was not read over to the testator by the solicitor's clerk, nor is there any evidence that it was read over to him by anyone else, and therefore their Lordships are thrown back upon the question whether by proof or by what appears on the will the testator had at the date of its signing knowledge of its contents. It is upon that matter that the dispute between the parties now turns. The first court thought that he was blind within the meaning of the relevant Order, and that as the document had not been read over to him there was not sufficient evidence to show that he knew of its contents. The Court of Appeal, on the other hand, took the view that there was sufficient evidence to show that he knew its contents, and unless the appellant can dispose of that finding their Lordships would not be entitled to alter the decision of the West African Court of Appeal.

The first problem is this: was there evidence that the testator in fact was blind? That is by no means clear; on the contrary, the onus being on the appellant to show that the testator was blind, in their Lordship's view that onus has not been discharged. The solicitor's clerk, Mr. Arthur, did not suspect him of blindness, nor is such a view necessarily inherent in the evidence given by the two persons who witnessed the will. They certainly thought that the testator understood what he was doing, and, if the evidence which they gave is looked at, the first witness, Mr. Hammond, said on p. 6: "The deceased was not totally blind, "but his eye-sight had been bad for some time before he died— "how long I cannot say." That deals with the question of the eye-sight of the testator at the time he died, but does not deal directly with his eye-sight in 1944 when the will was executed. The second witness, another Mr. Arthur, said: "I "cannot say if the deceased was totally blind; he was groping "with things on his table." From that, and from other evidence, it is plain that the testator's eye-sight was impaired, but that he was unable to read or unable to see what was on the document is not proved.

Their Lordships, on the whole, are inclined to agree with Mr. Ramsay that if it could be shown plainly that the deceased was incapable of reading, that would be sufficient proof of blindness because the word "blind" occurs in collocation with the word "illiterate." Apparently both matters are meant to be put on the same basis, namely, was the man incapable of reading the document which he had signed. In their Lordships' view that has not been sufficiently established.

Even supposing he were blind, there still remains the question whether he understood the document which was put before him. So far as the witnesses were concerned they obviously thought that he was capable of understanding what he had done. But the matter does not rest there. Their Lordships have had presented to them the will, which is marked "P.1", and have read it through in order to see what result was to be deduced from that reading. In reaching a conclusion as to the decision at which they should arrive, their Lordships find that in Ord. 49 one matter for their consideration is whether by what appears on the face of the will the testator "had at that time," that is, at the time of making it, "knowledge of its contents." The will is an elaborate one, leaving to a large number of parties, relations and friends of the deceased, various sums of money, and it is not a document which one who was not intimately acquainted with the testator's life could possibly have devised.

Their Lordships are entitled, in their view, to take cognizance of this fact. It was never suggested to Mr. Arthur, the solicitor's clerk, that he had that or any such knowledge of the testator's relationships and friendships, and their Lordships are entitled to take that matter into consideration, as well as the question of his eye-sight, in making up their minds as to what advice they should humbly tender to Her Majesty.

It is true that there has been some difficulty owing to the production of two documents, both of which are signed and purport, as Mr. Ramsay quite rightly says, to be witnessed by the same persons. If their Lordships had to speculate upon the matter they would be inclined to say that one was meant to be a copy of the other, one to be the will and the other to be a copy for the testator to keep, but there is no reason why they should have to speculate in this matter. Except for the omission of a certain gift, which might well occur in a case where there is a long list of persons to whom gifts were given, for all practical purposes the two documents are similar. That the one which has been numbered P.1. is the true will, appears from the fact that it was by the express wish of the testator deposited with the court, and therefore was meant to be the formal document which should bind the estate.

None of the cases cited throws light upon the decision to which their Lordships have come. Their Lordships think that the judge of first instance in Africa probably took too much cognizance of the fact that the man was somewhat blind, and did not pay enough consideration to all the other circumstances which appear to their Lordships to show that in fact the deceased man understood what he was doing and intended to do it.

J. C.
1953
Christian (orse. Ampah) v. Intsiful.

In those circumstances, their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty that the appeal should be dismissed. The appellant must pay the costs of the appeal.

Solicitors: Burchells; A. L. Bryden & Williams.

C. C.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

C. A.
1954
Jan. 15, 18.
Somervell, Birkett L.JJ., and Vaisey J.

* MONTGOMERY v. A. MONK & CO. LD.

[1951 M. No. 4280.]

Building — Safety regulations — Secure handhold and foothold — Flat roof under construction—Inapplicability of statutory regulations—Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948 (S.I. 1948, No. 1145), reg. 97.

Regulation 97 of the Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948, provides: "If the special nature or circumstances of any part of the work render impracticable compliance with the provisions of these regulations designed to prevent the fall of any persons engaged on that part of the work, then those provisions shall be complied with so far as practicable and except for persons for whom there is adequate handhold and foothold either there shall be provided suitable safety nets or safety sheets or there shall be available safety belts or other contrivances which will so far as practicable enable such persons who elect to use them to carry out the work without risk of serious injury."

The plaintiff, a workman in the employ of the defendants, while engaged in erecting a flat roof over the defendants' premises, by placing concrete tiles on concrete cross-runners, stepped backwards and fell over the edge of the roof, a distance of some 18 feet, and sustained injury. He could with safety have stepped on to the tiles already laid in place. He claimed damages from the defendants, alleging (inter alia) a breach of regulation 97:—

Held that, there being no provisions to be complied with which were rendered impracticable of compliance by the circumstances of the case, regulation 97 did not apply and the defendants were not liable.

Per Somervell L.J.: I do not think that the words of regulation 30 [guard rails for openings in a roof] are apt to describe the construction of a roof such as that with which we are concerned. I should have thought that it was concerned with openings in a roof and not with its construction. I do not think that any of the safety regulations apply to this case.

Appeal from a decision of Commissioner Goodman Roberts Q.C. at Liverpool Assizes on June 16, 1953.

The plaintiff, a man aged about 28 years, was employed by the defendants on a flat roof which was being constructed on the defendants' oil refining premises. The roof consisted of concrete cross-runners, over which tiles were being placed from one runner to another and fitted into grooves, and ultimately concrete was to be poured over the tiles. In the normal course the roof would be a solid structure on which it would be possible to walk. It happened that when the rows had been laid, one row of tiles was found to be about three inches out of adjustment, and the tiles had therefore to be taken up and adjusted. While this was being done by the plaintiff, assisted by another workman, who was replacing the tiles, it became necessary for the plaintiff to move from where he was standing. Instead of moving on to other tiles, which he could have done with safety, the plaintiff stepped backward on to the edge of the roof and fell to the ground, a distance of some 18 feet, and suffered injury. In the present action the plaintiff claimed damages from the defendants, basing his claim on negligence at common law and a breach of the Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948. The commissioner dismissed the action, and the plaintiff appealed.

Edward Wooll Q.C. and A. D. Pappworth for the plaintiff.

Fenton Atkinson Q.C. and Jacques Antelme for the defendants.

The following cases were cited in argument: Roberts v. Dorman Long & Co. Ld.[1]; Hutchison v. Cocksedge.[2]

SOMERVELL L.J. [having stated the facts]: It was not suggested that there was any difficulty about the plaintiff stepping in other directions on to tiles, when he would have been safe. On work of this kind, whether on making the readjustment which was being made or while the roof was being constructed, there is, of course, the possibility, if a man does not bear in mind that there is an edge in the area on which he is standing, to step off or fall over the edge as one might if standing on a railway platform.

The plaintiff based his claim on negligence at common law and also he alleged there was a breach of the Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948. It is to the latter point that the argument on the appeal was in the main directed. With regard to negligence at common law, the learned commissioner, after citing a passage from Lord Normand, citing Lord Dunedin, in Morton v. William Dixon Ld.,[1] said: "I am satisfied that the "plaintiff has not shown a breach of duty, any failure to provide "a safe working place, in the sense of not providing guards or "scaffolding or nets to prevent the plaintiff from falling as was "pleaded." With that finding I agree. It would, of course, have

[1] [1953] 1 W.L.R. 942; [1953] 2 All E.R. 428.
[2] [1952] 1 All E.R. 696n.
[1] 1909 S.C. 807.

C. A.

1954

Montgomery v. A. Monk & Co. Ld.

Somervell L.J.

been quite impossible to provide guard rails, as they would have to be moved as the work proceeded. It seems to me that it was one of those cases where, although the work was at a height, one cannot say that it was an unsafe place because if those working there did not remember there was an edge off which they could fall they might meet with an accident.

With regard to the Building Regulations, in the statement of claim the plaintiff relied on regulation 5, to which the sidenote is: "Provision of scaffolds and means of access." That provides that there shall be "suitable and sufficient scaffolds for all work "that cannot safely be done on or from the ground or from part "of the building." Reliance on that regulation was not really pressed in this court, and I think the finding to which I have referred as to negligence indicates that the work could be safely done from part of the building. Then there was reliance on regulation 30, which is concerned with openings in roofs, floors and walls, coupled with regulation 97. Paragraph 1 of regulation 30 provides: "every accessible opening in a roof . . . through which "any person is liable to fall a distance of more than 6 ft. 6 ins., "shall be provided with—(a) a suitable guard rail. . . ." Mr. Wooll agrees that regulation 30 is inapplicable, and that, he submits, brings in regulation 97, which reads, "If the special nature "or circumstances of any part of the work render impracticable "compliance with the provisions of these regulations designed to "prevent the fall of any persons engaged on that part of the work, "then those provisions shall be complied with so far as practicable "and except for persons for whom there is adequate handhold "and foothold either there shall be provided suitable safety nets "or safety sheets or there shall be available safety belts or other "contrivances which will so far as practicable enable such "persons who elect to use them to carry out the work without "risk of serious injury."

In answer to that allegation, the defendants relied on paragraph 5 of regulation 30, which provides: "Guard rails . . . "required by paragraphs 1, 2, 3 or 4 of this regulation may be "removed or remain unerected—(a) where and when this is or "becomes necessary in order to proceed with any . . . covering ". . . of the opening." The commissioner said that he assumed that, prima facie, paragraph 1 applied. He said, having regard to the work which was being done, paragraph 5 was in the nature of a proviso excepting the operation which was being done here from the regulation altogether and, therefore, that there was no room for the operation of regulation 97; that there were no provisions to be complied with which would have been rendered impracticable by the foregoing regulation, because the regulation itself excused or excluded compliance with its earlier provision. As a matter of construction I think that is right but, speaking for myself, I do not think that the words of regulation 30 are apt to describe the construction of a roof such as we are concerned with in this case. I should have thought that it was concerned with openings in a roof and not with its construction.

Mr. Wooll referred us to various other regulations not relied on in the statement of claim, namely, 22, 24, 26 and 31. I do not think that any of them are applicable, so the question whether the plaintiff should be allowed to rely on them does not arise. I did at one time in the course of the argument wonder if it could be said that it was a working place within regulation 24, but having regard to the nature of the work and the provisions of the regulation with regard to guard rails, I do not think that it could.

That being so, I agree with the commissioner, though for slightly different reasons. I do not think that regulation 30 or any of the regulations apply at all. It is not a case therefore where there are prima facie regulations which have to be, as it were, modified by the operation of regulation 97. I therefore think the plaintiff fails on that basis of his claim. The commissioner did go on to consider whether it could be said that he had adequate handhold as well as foothold within regulation 97. I would have felt a difficulty about saying he had an adequate handhold, but I do not want to suggest any opinion about that, because as I have come to the conclusion that that regulation does not apply I think that it would be wrong to do so. For these reasons, I think that this appeal fails and must be dismissed.

BIRKETT L.J. I agree.

VAISEY J. I agree.

Appeal dismissed. By consent no order as to costs.

Solicitors: Mawby, Barrie & Letts, for Silverman & Livermore, Liverpool; Laces & Co., Liverpool, for James Chapman & Co., Manchester.

A. W. G.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

* DALY v. CANNON.

1954
Jan. 19, 20.

Lord Goddard C.J., Byrne and Parker JJ.

Public Health — Prevention of disease — Rags — Collection — Sale or delivery of article to person under 14—Whether goldfish an article —Public Health Act, 1936 (26 Geo. 5 & 1 Edw. 8, c. 49), s. 154. "Article." "Article or thing." Statute—Construction—Penal Act—Doubt—Act to be construed against imposition of penalty.

By section 154 (1) of the Public Health Act, 1936: "No person "who collects or deals in rags, old clothes or similar articles, and "no person assisting, or acting on behalf of, any such person as "aforesaid, shall—(a) in or from any shop or premises used for,

[Reported by Miss C. J. ELLIS, Barrister-at-Law.]

1954

DALY
v.
CANNON.

"or in connexion with, the business of a dealer in any such "articles as aforesaid; or (b) while engaged in collecting any such "articles as aforesaid,

"sell or deliver, whether gratuitously or not, any article of food "or drink to any person, or any article whatsoever to a person "under the age of fourteen years."

A goldfish is not an "article" within the meaning of section 154 (1) of the Act of 1936, and the delivery of a goldfish to a boy under the age of 14, by a rag and bone man, while engaged in collecting rags, is not an offence against the section.

CASES STATED by Essex justices.

The appellant Sidney Richard Daly, chief sanitary inspector for Ilford preferred an information against William James Cannon, charging that he "on April 29, 1953, being a person who collected "rags and was then engaged in collecting such articles in a "certain street called Uphall Road in the Borough of Ilford . . . "did deliver a certain article namely a goldfish to Lesley Cullen ". . . the said Lesley Cullen being a person under the age of "fourteen years contrary to the Public Health Act, 1936, "s. 154. . . ."

The following facts were proved or admitted before the justices: The respondent, being a person who collected rags, was so engaged on the date and at the place specified in the information when he delivered a live goldfish to Lesley Cullen who was a person under the age of 14 years.

The justices being of the opinion that a live goldfish was not an "article" within the meaning of section 154 of the Public Health Act, 1936, dismissed the information.

The prosecutor appealed.

A. E. Holdsworth for the appellant.

The respondent did not appear and was not represented.

The following cases were cited in argument: Llandaff and Canton District Market Co. v. Lyndon [1]; Rex (Urban District Council of Portadown) v. Armagh Chairman and Justices [2]; McIntyre v. M'Intee [3]; Attorney-General v. Brown [4]; West Ham Corporation v. Markham. [5]

LORD GODDARD C.J. stated the facts and continued: The question which we have to decide is whether a goldfish is an article within the meaning of section 154 (1), and although the case has been susceptible of a good deal of argument and, in some respects, is not easy, I cannot contend that our judgment will add a great deal to the jurisprudence of this country. [His Lordship read section 154 (1) of the Act of 1936, and continued:] That section replaced section 73 of the Public Health Act, 1925, in which it was made an offence to give to a person "in connexion

[1] (1860) 8 C.B.(N.S.) 515.
[2] [1931] N.I. 209.
[3] 1915 S.C.(J.) 27.
[4] [1920] 1 K.B. 773; 36 T.L.R. 165.
[5] (1953) 107 J.P. 24.

"with, the business of a rag and bone merchant any article of "food or any balloon or other toy." In the Public Health Act, 1936, section 154 appears in Part V of the Act, which is headed "Prevention, notification and treatment of disease," and no doubt the object of the legislature was to prevent as far as possible infected articles being passed from hand to hand so that disease might be spread. It is not what I may call a police section, introduced to prevent the receiving of stolen goods or matters of that sort. It is simply dealing with prevention of the spreading of disease.

It seems that in this case a boy under the age of 14 years took some rags to the respondent and received in return a live goldfish. We are told that goldfish are found to be an inducement to boys to bring rags; if, of course, the rag and bone man gave them a goldfish in a bowl, the bowl would no doubt be an article. There can be no question about that, and therefore persons collecting rags and bones, with the ingenuity of their trade, now insist on small boys bringing gallipots or bowls into which they put the goldfish.

The respondent wrote a letter to the court and said that he was sorry if he had done anything wrong, but he understood that a magistrate had held that it was not wrong and a goldfish was not an article. Mr. Eddy, the stipendiary magistrate at West Ham on December 11, 1952, had given a considered decision in West Ham Corporation v. Markham [1] on this point, and I may say at once—and I am speaking in this respect for Byrne and Parker JJ. as well as myself—that I think the decision is exceedingly sensible. This is a penal statute, because there is a penalty of £5 for breach of the section, and it is a very well-known canon of construction that if one has an ambiguity one always applies the construction which is most favourable to an accused person and a construction which will not involve the imposition of a penalty.

Would anybody in ordinary common parlance talk about a goldfish as an article? I do not think that they would. If the statute had said "article or thing," as some statutes have said, there could be no doubt, I think, that a goldfish would be a thing. That was a point which came before the High Court of Northern Ireland in Rex (Urban District Council of Portadown) v. Armagh Chairman and Justices,[2] where Moore C.J., having to construe a section which dealt with "article" and "thing," said he thought that "article" was applicable to something inanimate, and "thing" to both live and dead matter. I think that it is a difficult point in some respects and, if it is thought that goldfish spread disease—I do not know whether they do or not—it would be quite easy for Parliament to alter the law on this point; but bearing in mind that if there is a doubt as to the construction, we ought to prefer the construction which is against the imposition

[1] (1953) 107 J.P. 24.

[2] [1931] N.I. 209.

1954

Daly v. Cannon.

Lord Goddard C.J.

of a penalty, I think that it is a straining of language to say that a goldfish is an article.

Accordingly, I think Mr. Eddy's judgment, to which I have referred, was quite right; in fact, I should be quite prepared to adopt it as my own. In these circumstances, I think the justices in the present case came to a right decision in point of law, and accordingly this appeal is dismissed.

Byrne J. I agree.

Parker J. I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: K. F. B. Nicholls, Town Clerk, Ilford.

[LEEDS ASSIZES.]

1953 Nov. 12; Dec. 19.

Glyn-Jones J.

* WRAITH v. NATIONAL COAL BOARD.

Mines and Minerals—Coal—Regulations—Breach of statutory duty—Reconstruction of disused roadway—Roof insecure—Injury to workman engaged on reconstruction—Coal Mines Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 50), ss. 49, 51, 52 (1), 102 (8)—Coal Mines General Regulations, 1913 (S.R. & O. 1913, No. 748), reg. 8.

"Travelling road." "Working place."

By the Coal Mines Act, 1911, s. 49: "The roof and sides of "every travelling road and working place shall be made secure, "and a person shall not, unless appointed for the purpose of "exploring or repairing, travel on or work in any travelling road "or working place which is not so made secure."

Section 51: "Where the work of erecting supports of the roof "and sides of working places is done by the workmen employed "therein, a sufficient supply of timber or other materials suitable "for supports shall be kept at or within ten yards of every working "place where, in pursuance of this Act, supports are required to be "erected. . . ."

Section 52 (1): "In any part of a mine where any work is being "carried out which necessitates the removal of roof supports, "temporary supports shall, in all cases, be set so as to secure the "safety of the persons employed."

The plaintiff was employed by the defendants in their mine in the reconstruction of a disused roadway which had fallen into disrepair so that over much of its length there had been falls of roof which had almost buried the crumpled steel arches which had formerly supported the roof, and there was an almost continuous cavity in the roof. The system of work was to clear a short length of roadway of debris and then fix a new arch-girder. Above the new arch-girder and projecting about 18 ins. to 2 ft. beyond it were placed pieces of timber which protected a workman in the roadway from a fall of roof from immediately above him. The workmen next cleared the roadway sufficiently to make room for the next arch-girder which was placed about 3 ft. from the first and then the old distorted arch or arches, which by this time carried no weight, were removed. While the plaintiff was engaged in clearing debris before removing one of the old arches, a large stone fell from the roof about six or seven feet from the last new arch-girder and rolled on to his hand which was crushed. In an action against the defendants for breaches of the above sections:—

---

[Reported by G. M. Smailes, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Held, (1) if a roadway had fallen into disrepair because it was not used and was no longer needed it ceased to be a travelling road within the meaning of section 49; in the present case only so much of it as had been reconstructed became a roadway and there was, therefore, no travelling road at the point where the stone fell;

(2) section 49 drew a distinction between a roadway and a working place, but, although the roof was not secure, the place where the plaintiff was injured was not a working place; a roadway did not become at any given point a working place merely because at that place men were employed to repair it;

(3) even if the material place was a working place, section 49 did not in the circumstances impose on the defendants any duty to make the roof secure, as the section permitted workmen to be sent to a road or place which was insecure for the purpose of repairing it.

Dictum of Lord Asquith of Bishopstone in Stapley v. Gypsum Mines Ld. [1953] A.C. 663, 685; [1953] 3 W.L.R. 279, 293; [1953] 2 All E.R. 478 applied;

(4) if (contrary to the above findings) the defendants were in breach of section 49, the burden was on the defendants under section 102 (8) of the Act to prove that it was not reasonably practicable to make the roof secure, which burden the defendants on the evidence had not discharged;

(5) section 51 contemplated circumstances such as those which existed when colliers, who worked in the getting of coal at the coal face, were required to put in props, and, even if it had been proved (which it was not) that there was not a sufficient supply of timber within 10 yards of the working place, it was doubtful whether that section had any application to the facts of the present case;

(6) the work was not such as necessitated the removal of roof supports under section 52 (1), as, when the time came for the removal of the old arches, they were no longer serving as roof supports;

(7) if (contrary to the above findings) there had been a breach of duty by the defendants, no material responsibility should be allocated to the plaintiff for his breach of duty to withdraw from the working place under reg. 8 of the Coal Mines General Regulations, 1913.

ACTION.

The following statement of the facts is taken from the judgment: On June 6, 1952, the plaintiff Stanley Wraith, suffered injury by an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment as a coal miner by the defendant Board at their Houghton Main Colliery, when a large stone fell on the back of his right hand and crushed it against a steel arch-girder. There was a roadway connecting the colliery with certain workings, no longer in use, forming part of the neighbouring Grimethorpe Colliery. The roadway had not been used for a considerable time and had fallen into disrepair in two respects.

1953

Wraith
v.
National Coal Board.

First, as the result of the pressure of the surrounding earth, the steel arches supporting the roof and side of the roadway had been forced inwards and were crumpled. Secondly, over much, probably most, of the length of the roadway there had been falls from the roof which had almost buried the crumpled arch-girders so that not only was the roadway impassable, but also, above the heaps of debris, there was an almost continuous cavity in the roof. In many places, and particularly at the spot where the stone which injured the plaintiff fell, the heap of debris on the floor reached above the height of the old arches.

Some three or four months before the accident the defendant board began to reconstruct this roadway, and during one shift each day two miners called Shone, who were father and son, were employed thereat. The system of work was that first, a short length of roadway was cleared by loading the fallen debris into tubs; next the roof and sides were ripped down sufficiently to make room for a new arch-girder or ring which was fixed in position. Above the arch-girder were two pieces of timber known as runners, one end of each of which was wedged above the arch-girder so that the runners lay horizontally along the length of the road. They were set not quite parallel to each other, but diverging a little as they ran forward. Across them were placed side by side pieces of timber about 3 ft. to 4 ft. long so as to form a continuous strip of covering timber which would protect a man standing or working in the centre of the roadway from a fall of roof from immediately above him. Taking advantage of the protection of this strip of timber which projected beyond the newly fixed ring towards the point where the next ring was to be fixed, the men next cleared the roadway sufficiently to make room for the next ring which was placed about 3 ft. away from the first. Once the second ring was in position the next task was to remove and carry away the old distorted ring or rings which by this time carried no weight and were mere obstructions in the roadway.

In each shift the two men at work would not normally do more than put up one ring or arch-girder, clearing and ripping the roof and sides as far as was necessary for this purpose, removing the old ring and leaving, after they had finished, the last two runners projecting forward with or without covering timber across them. The distance between the rings varied as did the lengths of the timbers used for runners; thus the extent to which the runners projected beyond the last ring to be fixed varied, though as a rule it was about 18 ins. to 2 ft.

On the day of the accident the plaintiff was ordered to work with Arnold Shone, whose father, who had been in charge of this work on that shift, was away sick. That day was the first on which the plaintiff had been employed in this roadway, but he was an experienced miner and had done somewhat similar work elsewhere. When the two men, Arnold Shone and the plaintiff, reached the place they found that the men working on the previous shift had not removed the old crumpled ring which stood beneath the last pair of new rings. Surrounding this ring was a quantity of debris and, projecting beyond the last ring, were the ends of the last two runners with one or two pieces of covering timber across them. Arnold Shone placed more covering timbers across the runners so as to form a strip projecting about 18 ins. to 2 ft. beyond the last ring.

The two men then set to work under the protection of the roof of the last completed section of new roadway to shovel up the debris and load it into tubs and also to remove the old ring which the night shift had left. The plaintiff, who had been kneeling while shovelling rubble, placed his right hand on the top of the crumpled arch next beyond the last fitted ring to help himself to his feet, and, as he did so, a large stone fell from the roof some 6 or 7 ft. away from the last ring, rolled down a heap of debris, which at this point rose to a height above the crumpled arch, on to the back of the plaintiff's hand and crushed it against the arch-girder, causing the injury of which he complained.

The plaintiff brought this action claiming damages from the defendants for negligence at common law and breaches of statutory duty under sections 49, 51 and 52 (1) of the Coal Mines Act, 1911.

G. R. Hinchcliffe Q.C. and R. Withers Payne for the plaintiff.
Geoffrey Veale Q.C. and A. B. Boyle for the defendants.
Cases cited are referred to in the judgment.

Cur. adv. vult.

December 19. GLYN-JONES J. stated the facts and considered the evidence of negligence at common law. He found that it was not possible to take steps to ensure that the roof of the disused roadway was supported beyond the point to which it had been reconstructed nor was there evidence of any safe means by which temporary protection could have been provided to support the next few feet of roof beyond the point to which the reconstruction had gone. His Lordship continued: In my opinion, the defendant board is not guilty of negligence at common law.

I turn to the alleged breaches of statutory duty. It is said first, that the roof from which this stone fell was the roof of a travelling road or working place within the meaning of section 49 of the Coal Mines Act, 1911; secondly, that by that section there is imposed upon the coal owner an absolute duty that such a roof should be secure and that the fact that the stone fell is of itself proof that the roof was not secure; and, thirdly, that the duty created by the statute was owed as well to the plaintiff and Shone as to any other workman, even though they, the plaintiff and Shone, were the very men employed by the board in the performance of the board's duty to make the roof secure. To this the board reply, first, that the roof from which the stone fell was not the roof of a roadway or working place; secondly, that on its true construction section 49 does not create a duty owed by the board to men actually appointed for the purpose of repairing and making secure an insecure roof; and, thirdly, that in any event the board had established the defence provided for it by section 102 (8) of the statute, namely, that it was not reasonably practicable to prevent the breach or breaches, if any.

1953

Wraith v. National Coal Board.

Glyn-Jones J.

I am of opinion that if a roadway in a mine has ceased to be used as a roadway and has been allowed to fall into disrepair because it is no longer needed, it ceases to be a roadway within the meaning of section 49 and there is no duty on the board to keep the roof and sides of a disused roadway secure. So much of it as had been reconstructed, but only so much, became a roadway, and the board then came under a duty to keep the roof and sides of that much of it secure; but the point from which the stone fell was beyond the point at which the reconstructed roadway ended. It follows that in my opinion there is no breach of the duty resting on the board to keep the roof and sides secure at the point where the stone fell on the ground that there was at that point a travelling road.

I have to consider whether this place may have been a "working place" within the meaning of section 49. If the spot where the plaintiff and Shone were working is to be called a working place rather than a roadway, it seems to me that the expression, "the roof of a working place" cannot be limited to the reconstructed roof but must be construed as extending at least to that area of roof above and beyond the spot where the plaintiff was working, from which a fall might put the plaintiff in peril. In my opinion, the section does draw a distinction between a roadway and a working place. I do not think that a roadway becomes at any given point a working place merely because at that place men are employed to repair it. If I am wrong and the place where the plaintiff and Shone were was a working place then I am of opinion that the point from which the stone fell was part of the roof of the working place and the roof had not been made secure.

The next question is whether or not the Board owed to the plaintiff any duty under section 49 to make the roof of this working place secure Stapley v. Gypsum Mines Ld.[1] was a case in which the House of Lords was invited to discuss the construction of article 7 (3) of the Metalliferous Mines General Regulations, 1938, an article in similar terms to section 49 of the Coal Mines Act, 1911. Lord Asquith of Bishopstone in his speech said[2]: "There was in this case, in my opinion, no breach "by the company, by itself or any servant or agent, of the "Metalliferous Mines Regulations (S.R. & O. 1938, No. 630), "made under section 86 of the Coal Mines Act, 1911. The "company carried out its obligations under regulation 7 (3) to "the letter, if the first line and a half of that regulation be read

[1] [1953] A.C. 663; [1953] 3 W.L.R. 279; [1953] 2 All E.R. 478.

[2] [1953] A.C. 685; [1953] 3 W.L.R. 293.

"with the last two and a half lines. If the company detail X "and Y to repair a defect in the walls or roof to restore safety, "they cannot possibly, it seems to me, be told that they are "breaking the regulation by permitting the repairers to work in "a working place which, pending the completion of the repair, "is insecure."

The actual decision of the House in that case turned upon other considerations and Lord Porter, Lord Reid and Lord Tucker each stated that he thought it unnecessary to decide the question on which Lord Asquith had expressed his opinion, while Lord Oaksey made no reference to it. I do not think, therefore, that I can treat this question as having been determined by the House of Lords, but I humbly state my agreement with the view expressed by Lord Asquith and I hold that in the circumstances of the present case section 49 does not impose upon the Board a statutory duty owed to the plaintiff to make the roof of this working place secure.

Mr. Hinchcliffe, for the plaintiff, argued that the duty imposed on the board by the first line and a half of the section was absolute and universal and that the last two and a half lines did not in any way limit the generality of what came before them, but were intended merely to cast upon individual workmen a duty not to travel along or work in a road or in a working place, the roof or sides of which were not secure. It may be that these last two and a half lines do cast such a duty upon individuals, but I am satisfied that they also cast upon the board a duty not to permit workmen, other than those appointed for the purpose of exploring or repairing, to go along or into a road or working place which is not secure, and thus by implication the statute, in my view, does permit the board to send workmen to a road or place which is insecure for the purpose of repairing it.

I am mindful of the fact that in Edwards v. National Coal Board [3] Tucker L.J. said [4]: "There is no dispute that the . . . "effect of section 49 . . . is to impose on the mine-owner the abso-"lute duty to make the roof and sides of every travelling road "secure"; but in that case the point which I have to decide did not arise, for the injured plaintiff was a man who was not employed to repair a roadway which had become insecure, and to such a man, that is to say, a man who has not been employed to repair an insecure roadway, the board clearly does owe a duty to make the road or working place secure, and that is qualified only by the defence provided by section 102 (8). I prefer not to hold, unless I am bound by authority, that the statute provides that there is a duty on the coal owner to make secure the roof of a working place before he sends repairers in to make secure the roof of the working place, but I am fortified in this conclusion by the fact that Lord Asquith, whose opinion I have cited, was a member of the Court of Appeal which decided Edwards' case.

[3] [1949] 1 K.B. 704; 65 T.L.R. 430; [1949] 1 All E.R. 743.

[4] [1949] 1 K.B. 704, 708.

1953

WRAITH
v.
NATIONAL COAL BOARD.

Glyn-Jones J.

Assuming, however, that I am wrong and that the board was in breach of a statutory duty owed to the plaintiff under section 49, I have further to find whether or not it has been shown that it was not reasonably practicable to prevent or avoid the breach. I take the definition of "reasonably practicable" from the decision of the Court of Appeal in Marshall v. Gotham Co. Ld.,[5] and in particular from the judgment of Jenkins J. If, in the reconstruction of this roadway, the defendant board has done all that is capable of being done to make the roof and sides secure within the limits of what it is reasonable to do according to the best assessment of what is necessary and sufficient that could have been made at the relevant time, then the board has done all that is reasonably practicable.

The plaintiff has not called evidence to satisfy me that there were other means whereby the system of work could have been made safer so as to prevent or limit the risk of a fall from the roof. Here, however, the burden is on the defendant board to prove that it is not reasonably practicable to make this roof secure. I assume, of course, that contrary to my finding, there was a duty owed to the plaintiff upon them to make it secure. The board has called only one witness, the deputy, Wilkinson. I have no evidence from any mine manager or mining engineer that no better system of preventing falls could have been devised according to the best assessment which could have been made at the relevant time. If the point arises, I am bound to find, I think, that the board has not discharged the burden of proving that it was not reasonably practicable to avoid or prevent a breach of section 49, if, contrary to my view, there was such a breach.

I next consider the alleged breach of section 51 of the statute. I doubt whether this section has any application to the facts of this case. If the section had been intended to mean that, wherever the work of erecting supports of the roof and sides of a working place was being done, a sufficient supply of timber should be kept at or within 10 yards of the working place, it would have been easy to say so. The section provides however that the requirement that a supply of timber is to be kept at or within 10 yards applies only where the work of erecting the supports is done by the workmen employed at the working place. Obviously, in one sense, it is true that a workman who erects supports at a working place is working at the working place while he is erecting the supports. In my opinion, however, the section contemplates circumstances such as those which exist when colliers who work in the getting of coal at the coal face are required, as the coal is removed, to put in props to support the roof over the space from which the coal has been removed. I do not think the section applies to repairers in fixing arch-girders and timber supports to a roadway in course of reconstruction. The danger against which the section is intended to guard is that workmen, to whose work the setting of supports is merely incidental, may neglect to put in sufficient support if there is not timber close at hand, for if they are employed on contract work it is unremunerative to spend their time searching further afield for timber. If a repairer, whose work consists primarily in setting arch-girders and timber supports, has no arch-girders or timber, his work comes to an end. Assuming, however, that the section applies, I am not satisfied that there was any breach of it, for I am disposed to accept Wilkinson's evidence that there was timber by the side of the reconstructed roadway within 10 yards of the place where the plaintiff was working; in any case an adequate supply need not have included 8 ft. runners, and any shorter runners would not have prevented this accident.

[5] [1952] W.N. 535; [1952] 2 T.L.R. 941; [1952] 2 All E.R. 1044.

Lastly, as to the alleged breach of section 52 (1), I am of opinion that the work was not such as necessitated the removal of roof supports, for the old crumpled arch-girders were doing little to support the roof, and, in any event, when the time came for their removal the roadway had been reconstructed above them and by that time they were no longer serving as roof supports.

I now turn to another matter. By their defence the defendant board charged the plaintiff with a breach of statutory duty in that, if there was not sufficient timber or other suitable material, then it was the plaintiff's statutory duty under regulation 8 of the Coal Mines General Regulations, 1913, to withdraw from the working place and report the circumstances to the deputy in charge, and that it was the plaintiff's own breach of statutory duty in not withdrawing that caused this accident. Since I find that there was no breach by the defendant board, it follows that there could not have been a breach by the plaintiff of this statutory duty; but if, contrary to my view, there was a breach by the defendant board, it follows that there was a corresponding breach by the plaintiff of his duty to withdraw, but I should not be disposed to allocate to the plaintiff any material responsibility for the injury which he suffered on the ground of this breach. For these reasons my judgment must be for the defendant board.

Judgment for defendants.

Solicitors: Raley & Pratt, Barnsley; C. M. H. Glover, Doncaster.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

*RABIN v. MENDOZA & CO.

C. A.
1954
Jan. 12.
Denning and Romer L.JJ.

[1952 R. No. 1060.]

Practice and Procedure — Discovery — Privilege — Without prejudice negotiations to avoid litigation—Whether reports made for purpose of negotiations privileged from production—R.S.C., Ord. 31, r. 18.

C. A.

1954

Rabin
v.
Mendoza
& Co.

Before the plaintiff started an action for damages against the defendant firm for negligence in the surveying of a property, his solicitor had an interview with a member of the defendant firm with a view to avoiding litigation. At that interview, which was without prejudice, it was arranged that the defendants should make inquiries to ascertain whether a policy of insurance could be obtained to cover the risk in question; and as a consequence of the interview, the defendants obtained a report from a surveyor. No settlement having been reached, the plaintiff started proceedings and the defendants in their affidavit of documents claimed privilege from production for the letters and report prepared as a result of the without prejudice discussions:—

Held, that if documents came into being under an express or a tacit agreement that they should not be used to the prejudice of either party, an order for production should not be made; that the report was entitled to the protection of the without prejudice quality which characterized the interview; and that this was not accordingly a case where production should be ordered.

Observations of Lord Langdale M.R. in Whiffen v. Hartwright (1848) 11 Beav. 111, 112, considered and applied.

Decision of Croom-Johnson J. affirmed.

Appeal from Croom-Johnson J.

The defendants, a firm of surveyors, disclosed in Part II of the schedule to their affidavit of documents a surveyor's report and certain correspondence for which they claimed privilege from production. These documents were made as the result of certain without prejudice discussions which had taken place between the plaintiff's solicitor and a member of the defendant firm before the action was started. Master Burnand held that the documents were privileged from production and Croom-Johnson J. affirmed this decision. The facts are fully stated in the judgment of Denning L.J.

The plaintiff appealed.

Harry Lester for the plaintiff.

T. M. Eastham for the defendants.

Denning L.J. This appeal raises an interesting point on discovery. The plaintiff has brought an action against a firm of surveyors alleging negligence in the surveying of a property. Before the action was started the plaintiff's solicitor called on a partner in the defendant firm (who has since died) and told him that the plaintiff had had trouble about the survey which the defendants had made, because a building society had refused to lend money on the house. The interview was without prejudice. At that interview an understanding was reached that the defendants would make inquiries about the possibility and the cost of obtaining insurance cover with a view to an insurance company giving an indemnity against any possible risk of damage to the house, so that any litigation could be avoided entirely. After that interview, the defendants instructed another firm of surveyors to make a report, with a view to putting up a proposition to the insurers so as to obtain cover. The report was obtained but no settlement was reached. The question is whether the defendants are bound to produce the documents, particularly the report, passing between this other firm of surveyors and themselves. The defendants have scheduled the documents in their affidavit of documents, but they claim privilege from production of all the letters and reports on the ground that "all of the said letters and reports were prepared "and made as a result of and in pursuance of to the best of my "knowledge and belief a without prejudice discussion between "the plaintiff's solicitors and" the partner in the defendant firm.

The question for us to decide is whether that claim for privilege from production is a good claim. This is not an ordinary case of legal professional privilege. The documents were not prepared for the purposes of litigation or for the purposes of obtaining the advice of the solicitors. They were prepared in order to avoid litigation. It is said, however, that, apart from legal professional privilege, there is a separate head of privilege on the ground that the documents came into existence on the understanding that they were not to be used to the prejudice of either party. "Without prejudice" does not appear as a head of privilege in the White Book; but in Bray on Discovery at p. 308 it is stated: "The right to discovery may "under very special circumstances be lost by contract as where "correspondence passed between the parties' solicitors with a "view to an amicable arrangement of the question at issue in the "suit on a stipulation that it should not be referred to or used "to the defendant's prejudice in case of a failure to come to "an arrangement."

That proposition is founded on Whiffen v. Hartwright,[1] where Lord Langdale M.R. refused to order the production of letters which passed "without prejudice," observing that he "did not "see how the plaintiff could get over this express agreement, "though he by no means agreed, that the right of discovery was "limited to the use which could be made of it in evidence." The Master of the Rolls there affirms the undoubted proposition that production can be ordered of documents even though they may not be admissible in evidence. Nevertheless, if documents come into being under an express, or, I would add, a tacit, agreement that they should not be used to the prejudice of either party, an order for production will not be made.

This case seems to me to fall within that principle. This report was clearly made as a result of a "without prejudice" interview and it was made solely for the purposes of the "without prejudice" negotiations. The solicitor for the plaintiff himself says in his affidavit that at the time of the interview it was contemplated that steps such as these should be undertaken. I find myself, therefore, in agreement with the decision of [1] (1848) 11 Beav. 111, 112.

C. A.
1954
Rabin
v.
Mendoza
& Co.

Master Burnand and the judge that this is not a case where production should be ordered.

The appeal, therefore, should be dismissed.

Romer L.J. I agree, and I have only a word to add. On the first question whether the report is entitled to the protection of the without prejudice quality, if I may so describe it, which characterized the interview which took place, it is in my opinion abundantly clear that it is. The affidavit of the solicitor, who attended the conference with Mr. Mendoza, a partner in the defendant firm, states: "The interview terminated upon the "understanding that Mr. Mendoza would make inquiries of the "possibility and cost of obtaining insurance cover and then "come and see me again and let me know what he was pre-"pared to do, after which I would take my client's instructions."

It appears from the evidence that it was in pursuance of the understanding that was arrived at at that interview that the defendants gave instructions for an independent survey for production to the insurance company.

It seems to me perfectly plain in those circumstances that the only object of obtaining the report was to implement the understanding which was arrived at during the interview which was without prejudice; therefore, in my judgment, the protection extends to the report which was obtained in pursuance of that understanding.

The question then arises whether, notwithstanding that protection, it ought to be produced. I think that there is no question that it ought to be disclosed in the affidavit of documents, because it relates to a matter in question in the proceedings, and the defendants have rightly disclosed it; but they have disclosed it in Part II of the Schedule to their affidavit and they claim immunity from production and inspection. I quite agree with what my Lord has said, that this is a justified claim, partly on the ground on which Lord Langdale M.R. decided Whiffen v. Hartwright,[1] and partly because it is a matter for the discretion of the judge under Order 31, r. 18. It seems to me that it would be monstrous to allow the plaintiff to make use—as he certainly would make use—for his own purposes as against the defendants of a document which is entitled to the protection of "without "prejudice" status.

In those circumstances I agree with what my Lord has said, and this appeal fails.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Manches & Co.; William Charles Crocker.

B. A. B.

[1] 11 Beav. 111, 112.

* PRACTICE DIRECTION (COSTS AGAINST AIDED PERSON).

1954

Lord Goddard C.J., Evershed M.R.

Legal aid—Costs—Order against aided person—Form of order—Payment by instalments—Legal Aid and Advice Act, 1949 (12 & 13 Geo. 6, c. 51), s. 2 (2) (e)—Legal Aid (General) Regulations, 1950 (S.I. 1950, No. 1359), reg. 17.

Where an order for costs is made against an assisted person; by regulation 17 and in accordance with section 2 (2) (e) of the Act a judge is required to assess the amount which the assisted person is to pay and may give a direction for that amount to be payable by instalments. The successful litigant in such a case may thereafter make a subsequent application to the court under a proviso to regulation 17 for the order to be varied on the grounds that there has been a change in the assisted person's circumstances.

Where the judge at the trial orders the assisted person to pay, whether in one sum or by instalments, a sum which must be less than the full amount of the costs, the order should direct that the costs are not to be taxed and judgment be entered without further order for the amount of costs which has then been determined; otherwise the judgment must direct taxation and this will involve the successful party in extra and unnecessary expense.

If the judge orders payment by instalments, he should be asked also to direct that on failure to pay any instalment the whole sum should become due; otherwise there is no means of enforcing payment until the time has elapsed for the whole of the instalments to be paid owing to the rule that there can be only one execution on a judgment. So, supposing an order is made for £5 a month for six months, if a default is made in paying the first or second instalment no execution could issue until the six months had elapsed.

Fresh forms for the drawing up of orders to embody these directions are being prepared.

GODDARD, C.J.
EVERSHED, M.R.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

* JOZWIAK v. SADEK AND OTHERS.

1953 Dec. 4.

Ormerod J.

Evidence — Libel and slander — Identification of plaintiff with person defamed—Article in newspaper alleged to be fiction—Statements made at public meetings—Anonymous telephone messages to plaintiff — Admissibility to prove plaintiff identified with fictitious character.

Libel and slander.

[Reported by Mrs. E. M. WELLWOOD, Barrister-at-Law.]

1953

JOZWIAK
v.
SADEK AND OTHERS.

In an action for libel arising out of the publication in a Polish newspaper of an article which purported to be fiction, the plaintiff, in order to prove that he had been identified with an individual referred to in the article, sought to tender evidence (1) of statements made by persons present at meetings of the Polish community in London showing that they did so identify him; and (2) of anonymous telephone messages accusing him of being a murderer received by him after the publication of the article. The defendants objected on the ground that the evidence was hearsay and therefore inadmissible:—

Held, (1) that evidence of the statements made at the meetings was admissible to identify the plaintiff with the libel.

Cook v. Ward (1830) 4 M. & P. 99 and Du Bost v. Beresford (1810) 2 Camp. 511 applied.

Held, (2) that evidence of the telephone conversations was admissible since they contained similar statements to those made at the meetings.

ACTION.

The plaintiff, Stanislaw Jozwiak, sued the defendants, the author of an article in a newspaper, "The Polish Daily," and the proprietors, the editor, the printers and publishers of the newspaper, for damages for libel which he alleged was contained in a story written by the first defendant and published on February 20 and 21, 1953. The article which on the face of it was fiction told of the suicides of two people who had hanged themselves because of financial difficulties, and the article suggested that their difficulties had been caused indirectly by the actions of a man who was the chairman of an association. There had in fact been two suicides in those circumstances in the Polish community some time before the article appeared. At the time the suicides took place the plaintiff was and still remained the chairman of an association in the Polish community which was formed to bring members of the community together for business reasons.

The plaintiff alleged that the libel was intended to refer to him as the person responsible for the financial downfall and suicide of those two persons. The issue before the court was whether or not the person referred to in the article would be identified as the plaintiff in the minds of any persons knowing the circumstances.

Counsel for the plaintiff sought to tender evidence of statements made at public meetings of the Polish community to show that persons present at the meetings did in fact identify the plaintiff with the individual referred to in the article; and also evidence of anonymous telephone messages accusing him of being a murderer which the plaintiff had received after the publication of the articles.

Counsel for the defendants objected on the ground that the evidence was hearsay and was therefore inadmissible.

Helenus Milmo for the plaintiff.

H. Heathcote-Williams Q.C. and L. I. Stranger-Jones for the defendants.

Cases cited in argument are referred to in the judgment.

ORMEROD J. stated the facts set out above and continued: I have come to the conclusion that the evidence should be admitted, and I base that conclusion upon the authorities which have been cited to me by Mr. Milmo. In the first place he referred to Hough v. London Express Newspaper Ld.,[1] in which the question was whether the plaintiff could be identified with the alleged libel. It was there held that the evidence of persons who lived in the same street and in the same district as the plaintiff could be admitted, as it was necessary for the plaintiff to prove that they were persons who knew the special circumstances and might understand the words as having the meaning alleged.

There are two older authorities which are probably more in point. One of them is Cook v. Ward,[2] a libel action where, in order to identify the plaintiff with the libel, evidence was called of laughter and statements which had been made at a vestry meeting. It was held that that evidence was admissible on that ground, that is to say, on the ground that it identified the plaintiff with the subject of the libel.

Equally, in Du Bost v. Beresford,[3] which was not a libel action, the question arose whether the subject of a particular picture was libellous, and it was held that evidence about remarks made by persons who saw the picture when it was exhibited was admissible to show that those persons had identified the subject of the libel with the plaintiff. The report is a short one, with this note: "In the course of the trial, Lord Ellenborough held upon "argument, that the declarations of the spectators, while they "looked at the picture in the exhibition room, were evidence "to show that the figures portrayed were meant to represent "the defendant's sister and brother-in-law."

On the authority of those decisions and on the application of the ordinary principles of evidence, I feel that I ought to admit the evidence of statements made at meetings of the Polish community, or sections of the Polish community, which took place after the publication of this article; and if that be so, I fail to see how I am extending the principle if at the same time I hold that evidence of telephone messages with the plaintiff, in which similar statements were made, is admissible in evidence. It may be that that evidence is of no great value, and quite clearly the jury will have to be warned to treat it with the caution which is is necessary. I rule that the evidence is admissible.

Evidence admitted.

Solicitors: H. Davis & Co.; George & George.

[1] [1940] 2 K.B. 507; 56 T.L.R. 758; [1940] 3 All E.R. 31.

[2] (1830) 4 M. & P. 99.

[3] (1810) 2 Camp. 511.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

C. A.

1954
Jan. 12.

Denning and Romer L.JJ.

* KRAKAUER v. KATZ.

[1941 K. No. 298.]

Practice and Procedure—Dismissal of action for want of prosecution—Long delay—Effect of plaintiff's twelve years' delay in prosecuting action—Notice of change of solicitors served with summons to dismiss for want of prosecution. Rules of the Supreme Court—Waiver—R.S.C., Ord. 7, r. 2 (1) and (6) not complied with—Irregularity waived—Proceedings not void—R.S.C., Ord. 70, r. 1. Court of Appeal—Evidence—Fresh evidence—Interlocutory matter—Affidavit evidence—Discretion of court as to admissibility of further evidence. Evidence.

In 1941 the plaintiff served on the defendant a writ claiming damages for breach of contract to which appearance was entered on the defendant's behalf by a firm of solicitors. The plaintiff took no further steps in the action until October, 1953, when his solicitors wrote to the defendant stating that it was proposed to revive the action. The defendant then went to new solicitors who filed notice of change in the Central Office and at the same time issued a summons to dismiss the action for want of prosecution. In so acting they were in error, since under R.S.C., Ord. 7, r. 2 (1) and (6) a copy of the notice ought to have been served on the plaintiff's solicitors before the summons was issued. No point was taken on this irregularity before the master, who dismissed the action for want of prosecution. Croom-Johnson J. reversed the master's decision. On appeal the defendant asked the court to admit in evidence certain further affidavits:—

Held, (1) that by analogy with the Statute of Limitations if a plaintiff allowed an action to go to sleep for six years the court in its discretion would usually dismiss the action for want of prosecution, unless the plaintiff could show good reason why he should be allowed to go on with it; and the plaintiff should not be allowed to proceed with the action;

(2) that as no point was taken before the master with regard to the irregularity resulting from the non-compliance with R.S.C., Ord. 7, r. 2 (1) and (6), it was not open to the plaintiff to avail himself of this irregularity on appeal. Order 70, r. 1, showed that non-compliance with the rules did not render the proceedings void, but would be dealt with as the court thought right;

(3) that an appellant in an interlocutory matter had no right to adduce further evidence by affidavit: it was a matter for the discretion of the court whether such further evidence should be admitted.

Decision of Croom-Johnson J. reversed.

APPEAL from Croom-Johnson J.

The defendant Laszlo Namenji Katz on November 26, 1953, took out a summons asking that the action which was started by the plaintiff Alexander Krakauer by writ issued on June 19, 1941, should be dismissed for want of prosecution, the plaintiff not having delivered a statement of claim. The facts are fully stated in the judgment of Denning L.J. Croom-Johnson J., reversing the decision of Master Diamond, dismissed the summons.

The defendant appealed. At the hearing of the appeal counsel sought to read certain further affidavits which had been filed in support of the defendant's application and in answer to affidavits filed on behalf of the plaintiff which had been read at the hearing before Croom-Johnson J. The judge at the time asked the defendant's counsel whether he wished for an adjournment to answer the plaintiff's evidence. Counsel then stated that he did not want to answer this evidence. On the appeal he sought to adduce further evidence, contending that on an interlocutory matter an appellant had a right to adduce such evidence.

John Marnan for the defendant.
Harry Lester for the plaintiff.

DENNING L.J. A preliminary point has arisen whether in an interlocutory matter this court can or should admit further affidavits on behalf of the defendant. It was suggested that an appellant on an interlocutory matter had a right in this court to adduce further evidence by affidavit. I am clearly of opinion that he has no such right. It is a matter of discretion in this court whether or not further evidence by affidavit should be admitted.

In exercising our discretion in this case, there is an overwhelming obstacle in the way of the defendant. At the hearing below the judge in chambers asked his counsel whether he wanted to answer the affidavit of the plaintiff and whether he wanted an adjournment so to do, and counsel said that he did not. Counsel thus took his stand on the evidence as it then stood before the judge; and it would be contrary to the right exercise of our discretion if we were to allow counsel for the defendant to go back on that position and to introduce further evidence in this court.

We must therefore proceed with the case on the evidence as it stood before the judge.

The court proceeded to hear argument on the appeal.

DENNING L.J. The facts in this case are somewhat striking. On June 19, 1941, the plaintiff issued a writ against the defendant claiming damages for breach of contract, or alternatively an account. The writ was served upon the defendant and an appearance was entered on his behalf on July 25, 1941, by his then solicitors, and the plaintiff's solicitors ought to have delivered a statement of claim within ten days thereafter. Time may not have run during the vacation, but at all events the statement of claim ought to have been delivered in due time after entry of appearance.

In point of fact the plaintiff did nothing for over 12 years, and in October, 1953, by his solicitors, he wrote to the defendant intimating that this claim was being revived, and eventually his solicitors gave notice of their intention to proceed with the action. The defendant went to new solicitors, who gave notice of change and took out a summons to dismiss the action for

C. A.
1954
KRAKAUER v. KATZ.
Denning L.J.

want of prosecution. The summons came before Master Diamond, who took the view that after 12 years the action should be dismissed for want of prosecution. The plaintiff appealed to Croom-Johnson J. who took the opposite view and said that the action was not to be dismissed.

The judge was much influenced by a technical point. When the new solicitors filed notice of change at the Central Office, they at the same time issued the summons to dismiss for want of prosecution; whereas in truth they ought to have served a copy notice of change on the plaintiff's solicitors before they issued the summons, because under Order 7, r. 2 (1) and (6), it is quite plain that the copy notice ought to be served before the change is effective. There was, therefore, an irregularity, but it caused no injury to anyone, it was merely a day wrong in the order of procedure.

When the summons to dismiss came before the master no point was taken on this irregularity; the matter was argued on the merits and the master dismissed the action. I am clearly of opinion that thereafter it was not open to the plaintiff's solicitors to avail themselves of this irregularity. Order 70, r. 1, shows that non-compliance with the rules does not render the proceedings void, but they can be dealt with as the court thinks right. It is the right thing for the court to ignore that irregularity.

The real point is whether the plaintiff, having done nothing for 12 years in this action, should now be allowed to revive it. An affidavit was put in on his behalf in which he said that his solicitors' offices were destroyed by enemy action and could not proceed with the case; but when inquiries were made, it turned out that his solicitors' offices were destroyed before the writ was issued. They were destroyed on May 10, 1941, and the writ was issued on June 19, 1941. There was no difficulty in proceeding with the action: the defendant's solicitors were on the record all the time. Even if the plaintiff could not proceed with the claim during the war owing to various difficulties, there was no reason why he should not have pursued it during the eight years since that time. I am disposed to agree with what Mr. Marnan suggested, namely, that by analogy with the Statute of Limitations, if a plaintiff allows an action to go to sleep for six years, the court, in its discretion, will usually dismiss the case for want of prosecution unless the plaintiff can show some good reason why he should be allowed to go on with it. In this case it is not six but twelve years, and I am quite clear that this plaintiff ought not, after that length of time, to be allowed to go on with the action.

I think that the appeal should be allowed and the order of the master restored.

ROMER L.J. I agree. The plaintiff in the affidavit which he swore in these proceedings on December 11, 1953, made a considerable point about his alleged ignorance of the whereabouts of the defendant throughout a long period of years; but it appears that it was not until some months after the writ was issued (and after he should have delivered his statement of claim) that he heard that the defendant was interned in the Isle of Man. He knew then where the defendant was and also he apparently knew in 1952, because he had an offer, so he says, from a man who knew the defendant. In any event, the plaintiff's knowledge of the personal whereabouts of the defendant during the whole time was a matter of little consequence, because the defendant had entered an appearance by a well-known firm of solicitors who were still carrying on their business—but that is what he says. It does not appear to be the reason which his solicitors gave in the letter which they wrote to the defendant on October 2, 1953, stating: "We understand that you have full "details of our client's claim and our client has delayed pressing "you because at the time your financial circumstances were such "that it would have been impossible for you to pay. He now "understands that you are in a far easier financial position. . . ." There is not a word there about not having proceeded before because he did not know where the defendant was. There may be some cases where it would be right to allow an action to proceed, even though there has been nothing done for 12 years, and where it would be right to make no order on a summons taken out by the defendant to dismiss the action for want of prosecution; but I am abundantly clear in my mind that this is not one of them. This is a case where apparently the real cause of the plaintiff not having proceeded with the action before is that he thought that the defendant was not worth pursuing; and the action only came to life again when he apparently discovered that the defendant's financial position had improved. I think that this is a clear case where the action should be dismissed.

On the question of practice which my Lord has decided, I entirely agree with what he says. It seems to me quite plain that the requirements of Order 7, r. 2 (6), which was the only provision of the rules which was not complied with in strictness in the present case, was one which it is open to the other side to waive; and I am clearly of the opinion that the plaintiff's solicitors, by appearing before the master after they had received the notice which sub-rule (6) requires to be given and having argued the case before the master, must be taken to have waived the strict compliance with that sub-rule.

Accordingly, I agree that this appeal should be allowed.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Simmons & Simmons; Charles Caplin & Co.

B. A. B.

[HOUSE OF LORDS.]

H. L. (Sc.)† * INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS . APPELLANTS;

1953 Nov. 11, 12, 16. 1954 Jan. 25.

AND

WILSONS (DUNBLANE) LD. . . . . RESPONDENT.

Revenue—Income tax—Wear and tear allowance—Plant—Partnership converted into limited company—Plant sold at market value—Calculation of allowance—Income Tax Act, 1945 (8 & 9 Geo. 6, c. 32).

The Income Tax Act, 1945, enacts (inter alia) by section 59, in relation to the recovery of wear and tear allowances based on capital cost: "(1) The provisions of this section shall have effect in relation to sales of any property where . . . (a) the buyer is a body of persons over whom the seller has control . . . ; or (b) it appears with respect to the sale . . . that the sole or main benefit which, apart from the provisions of this section, might have been expected to accrue to the parties . . . was the obtaining of an allowance or deduction under any of the following enactments, that is to say, any of the provisions of this Act or of Rule 6 or Rule 7 of the Rules applicable to Cases I and II of Schedule D. . . . (2) Where the property is sold at a price other than that which it would have fetched if sold in the open market, then, subject to the succeeding provisions of this section, the like consequences shall ensue for the purposes of the enactments mentioned in subsection (1) of this section . . . in their application to the income tax of all persons concerned, as would have ensued if the property had been sold for the price which it would have fetched if sold in the open market. (3) Where the sale is a sale of machinery or plant . . . (b) . . . if the price which the property would have fetched if sold in the open market is greater than the limit of re-charge on the seller, the last preceding subsection shall have effect as if for the reference to the price which the property would have fetched if sold in the open market there were substituted a reference to the said limit of re-charge: . . . In this subsection the expression 'the limit of re-charge' means, in relation to a person who sells machinery or plant—(i) if he provided that machinery or plant for himself before the appointed day, the actual cost to him of the machinery or plant. . . ." ("The appointed day" for the Act to come into operation was April 6, 1946.)

On November 16, 1944, a partnership was formed to carry on a wool-spinning business. Subsequently the three partners formed a limited company, in which they were the shareholders, to take over the business and assets on November 16, 1945, and the partnership sold to the company the business and assets in accordance with an agreement of sale, under which the price paid for the plant and machinery was £17,554, the price which they would have fetched if sold in the open market at that date. From the coming into operation of the Act the wear and tear allowance made to the company on the plant and machinery was based on a figure of £8,000, which was the starting (written down) figure in the partnership's books for plant and machinery for the year commencing November 16, 1944, and was taken to represent the "limit of re-charge." The taxpayer challenged this basis of computation:—

† Present: LORD REID, LORD NORMAND, LORD MACDERMOTT and LORD KEITH OF AVONHOLM.

Held, that the words "as if for the reference to the price which "the property would have fetched if sold in the open market there "were substituted a reference to the . . . limit of re-charge" in section 59 (3) (b) did not direct the substitution in the initial condition of subsection (2) as well as at the end of the subsection; and that, accordingly, since the price paid by the company was that which the plant and machinery would have fetched in the open market and not "a price other than" that price, the condition for the application of subsection (2) was not satisfied and the company were entitled to an allowance calculated by reference to the price paid, viz. £17,554.

Decision of the First Division of the Court of Session (1952 S.C. 417) affirmed.

APPEAL from the First Division of the Court of Session.

This was an appeal from an interlocutor of the First Division of the Court of Session as the Court of Exchequer in Scotland answering in favour of the respondents, Wilsons (Dunblane) Ld., a question of law in a case stated by the Special Commissioners for the opinion of the Court of Session. The respondents were a limited company and carried on business at Dunblane, Perthshire. They appealed to the Special Commissioners against assessments to income tax made on them under Case I of Schedule D to the Income Tax Act, 1918, for the years 1946/47 to 1950/51 inclusive. They contended that they had not been allowed the deductions to which they were entitled in respect of wear and tear of machinery and plant in the said years under Rule 6 of the Rules applicable to Cases I and II of Schedule D. The issue turned on the proper construction of section 59 of the Income Tax Act, 1945, which contained special provisions regulating and restricting the amount of such deductions in certain circumstances and, in particular, in the event of the person or company claiming the deductions having bought the machinery or plant in the circumstances mentioned in the section, notably where the property was sold at a price other than that which it would have fetched if sold in the open market.

The facts are fully stated in their Lordships' opinions.

W. R. Milligan Q.C. (Solicitor-General for Scotland), Sir Reginald Hills (of the English Bar) and W. R. Grieve (of the Scottish Bar) for the appellants.

R. P. Morison Q.C. and Watson Q.C. (both of the English Bar, Q.C. of the Scottish Bar) for the respondent company.

Their Lordships took time for consideration.

January 25, 1954. LORD REID. My Lords, during the hearing by the Appellate Committee of this case and the cases following, which are to be decided by your Lordships this morning, Viscount Simon took the chair. It would be presumptuous on my part to seek to add to the tributes so recently paid to him in this House but I may perhaps be permitted to put on record our

H. L. (Sc.)
1953–54
INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS v. WILSONS (DUNBLANE) LD.
Lord Reid.

gratitude for his wise leadership in our discussions and our deep regret that he is not here to express the views which he had formed in each of these cases before his last illness. I desire further to express, on behalf of all Scots lawyers, our acknowledgment of the debt which Scots law owes to him for the many contributions which he has made in this House to the clarification and development of our law.

My Lords, after carrying on the business of wool spinning for many years, Mr. A. B. Wilson in 1944 took his two sons into partnership and brought into the partnership the whole assets of the business at the figures which then appeared in his accounts. The machinery and plant stood in his balance sheet at a written down value of £8,000. On November 16, 1945, the partners formed the respondent company to take over the business, all the shares being allotted to the partners. The company bought the machinery and plant for £17,554. It has been found by the Special Commissioners that this was the price which they would have fetched if sold in the open market at that date. The question in this case is whether allowances in respect of wear and tear of that machinery and plant from 1946 onwards should be calculated with reference to the sum of £8,000 or the sum of £17,554. It is admitted that before the Income Tax Act, 1945, came into operation the proper basis was the cost to the company, £17,554.

The Income Tax Act, 1945, contained a new and elaborate scheme for determining allowances: obviously this was designed at least in part to meet the situation at the end of the war when prices had risen steeply and new equipment was scarce. The Act covered other types of equipment besides machinery and plant, and various initial allowances, annual allowances, balancing allowances, and balancing charges were introduced: one difference between machinery and plant and other equipment is that allowances for other equipment are in general based on cost of construction, whereas allowances for machinery and plant are based on its cost to the trader seeking the allowances. In the case of a trader buying secondhand machinery or plant the cost to him might far exceed the original cost of construction. In that case he would get allowances much greater than those available to the trader who sold the plant or machinery to him. It was plain that this might possibly lead to arrangements between traders whereby machinery or plant changed hands in order to get increased allowances at the expense of the Revenue, and section 59 of the Act prevents this result in certain cases.

Section 59, so far as relevant to this case, is as follows: "(1) The provisions of this section shall have effect in relation "to sales of any property where either—(a) the buyer is a body "of persons over whom the seller has control, or the seller is a "body of persons over whom the buyer has control, or both the "seller and the buyer are bodies of persons and some other person "has control over both of them; or (b) it appears with respect to " the sale or with respect to transactions of which the sale is one, " that the sole or main benefit which, apart from the provisions " of this section, might have been expected to accrue to the " parties or any of them was the obtaining of an allowance or " deduction under any of the following enactments, that is to say, " any of the provisions of this Act or of Rule 6 or Rule 7 of the " Rules applicable to Cases I and II of Schedule D or of section " 19 of the Finance Act, 1941, or of Part IV of the Finance Act, " 1944. References in this subsection to a body of persons " include references to a partnership. (2) Where the property is " sold at a price other than that which it would have fetched if " sold in the open market, then, subject to the succeeding pro- " visions of this section, the like consequences shall ensue for " the purposes of the enactments mentioned in subsection (1) of " this section . . . in their application to the income tax of all per- " sons concerned, as would have ensued if the property had been " sold for the price which it would have fetched if sold in the open " market. (3) Where the sale is a sale of machinery or plant— " (a) no initial allowance shall be made to the buyer; and (b) " subject to the provisions of the next succeeding subsection, if " the price which the property would have fetched if sold in the " open market is greater than the limit of re-charge on the seller, " the last preceding subsection shall have effect as if for the " reference to the price which the property would have fetched if " sold in the open market there were substituted a reference to " the said limit of re-charge: Provided that this subsection shall " not apply in relation to a sale of machinery or plant which has " never been used if the business or part of the business of the " seller was the manufacture or supply of machinery or plant of " that class and the sale was effected in the ordinary course of " the seller's business; Provided also that where the sale is one " to which paragraph (a) of subsection (1) of this section applies " and took place before the appointed day, and the seller " acquired the machinery or plant on or after the sixth day of " April, nineteen hundred and forty-four, paragraph (a) of this " subsection shall not apply. In this subsection the expression " ' the limit of re-charge ' means, in relation to a person who " sells machinery or plant—(i) if he provided that machinery or " plant for himself before the appointed day, the actual cost to " him of the machinery or plant, including in that actual cost " any expenditure in the nature of capital expenditure on " machinery or plant by way of renewal, improvement or " reinstatement: (ii) if he provided the machinery or plant for " himself on or after the appointed day, the expenditure incurred " by him on the provision thereof. . . ."

This section only applies where either there was an ulterior object behind the sale (subsection (1) (b)) or the buyer and seller were not independent (subsection (1) (a)). There is no suggestion in this case of any ulterior object but the fact that the partners controlled the respondent company which bought

H. L. (Sc.)
1953–54
Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Wilsons (Dunblane) Ld.
Lord Reid.

from them admittedly brings the case within subsection (1) (a) and so brings the rest of the section into operation. Subsection (4) has no application to this case: the question at issue turns on the proper interpretation of subsections (2) and (3).

Subsection (2) applies to sales of all kinds of equipment dealt with in the Act, but subsection (3) only applies to sales of machinery or plant. The only part of subsection (3) which directly affects this case is subsection (3) (b), which provides that, if the price which the property would have fetched if sold in the open market (in this case £17,554) is greater than the limit of re-charge on the seller (in this case £8,000), subsection (2) is to have effect subject to a certain modification set out in the latter part of subsection (3) (b). In order to discover the meaning of this latter part of subsection (3) (b) it is necessary to examine closely both the terms of subsection (2) and the terms of subsection (3) (b). I think it helpful to begin by noting the structure of subsection (2). It begins by stating a condition which must be satisfied before the subsection can have any operative effect—the property must have been sold at a price other than the market price. If that condition is satisfied "then subject to the succeeding provisions" of the section certain consequences are to ensue. That structure, in my view, indicates that the initial condition must first be satisfied in every case and that only then are the "succeeding provisions" to be looked at: if they do not apply then the consequences set out in subsection (2) itself will follow, but if any of the "succeeding provisions" apply, then the consequences enacted by that provision will apply instead of the consequences enacted in subsection (2).

The modification of subsection (2) which is directed by subsection (3) is that the former subsection is to "have effect as if "for the reference to the price which the property would have "fetched if sold in the open market there were substituted a "reference to the said limit of re-charge." I turn to look for the reference to that price in subsection (2) and I find at the end of subsection (2) a clear reference to that price and at the beginning of subsection (2) words which might or might not be interpreted as a reference to that price. Neither the words at the beginning of subsection (2) nor the words at the end of it correspond exactly with the words in subsection (3). The words in subsection (3) are "the price which the property would have "fetched . . . ," those at the end of subsection (2) are "the "price which it would have fetched . . . ," and the words at the beginning of subsection (2) are "that which it would have "fetched . . ." But the words "it" and "that" in these contexts plainly represent "the property" and "the price" respectively, and I cannot regard these changes as of any importance. The difficulty about the first reference in subsection (2) is of a different character. What is there being denoted is "a price "other than that which it would have fetched if sold in the open "market," and it is, I think, a nice question whether a statement about a price other than X should be held to be a reference to X. The answer may depend on the context.

In subsection (3) the words used are not "as if for any "reference to the price," or "as if for references to the price," but are "as if for the reference to the price . . ." in the singular. When the draftsman of this section intended to refer to "references" in the plural he did so: at the end of subsection (1) I find "references in this subsection to a body of persons include "references to a partnership." So the change from the plural in subsection (1) to the singular in subsection (3) (b) must be taken to have been deliberate and therefore significant.

It is plain and not disputed that subsection (3) (b) directs the substitution of the limit of re-charge in one place—in the latter part of subsection (2). The question in this case is whether it also directs that substitution in another place—in the initial condition of subsection (2). If it does, it is agreed that the application of subsection (2) so altered reduces the sum on which the respondent company is entitled to allowances for wear and tear to £8,000 and the appeal succeeds. But if it does not, then, as the price paid by the company was the price which the machinery and plant would have fetched if sold in the open market and not "a price other than" that price, the condition for the application of subsection (2) is not satisfied, the price paid by the company stands, and the appeal fails. If the opinions which I have already expressed are correct there are two strong indications that subsection (3) (b) only directs the substitution of the limit of recharge in one place—in the latter part of subsection (2). These are the use of the singular "the reference" in subsection (3) (b) and the structure of subsection (2). And there is no real difficulty in holding that the phrase "a price other than "that which it would have fetched if sold in the open market" is not a reference to "the price which the property would have "fetched if sold in the open market." Therefore, simply taking the words which Parliament has used in section 59, the appeal must fail.

But the appellants found on more general considerations to show that the respondents' interpretation leads to results which are quite unreasonable and contrary to the general policy of the Act. I doubt whether section 59 is sufficiently ambiguous to make it right to take account of such matters, but I need not decide that because I cannot accept this argument on its merits. The argument in what seems to me its most attractive form is this. Subsection (2) in its unaltered form directs that if property is not sold at the market price consequences shall ensue as if it had been sold at the market price. If the respondent is right, subsection (2) in its altered form will direct that if property is not sold at the market price consequences shall ensue as if it had been sold for the amount of the limit of recharge. This is an unreasonable provision and the only reasonable provision would be that if property is not sold at the amount of the limit of

H. L. (Sc.)
1953–54
Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Wilsons (Dunblane) Ld.
Lord Reid.

recharge then consequences shall ensue as if it had been sold at that amount. This is the appellants' interpretation: the words of the section make it possible to adopt it and it should be adopted. I reject the argument because the result of the respondents' interpretation does not seem to me to be absurd or wholly inexplicable. When buyer and seller are at arm's length the purchase price which they agree to stands as the basis for allowances and that purchase price will normally be the market price. When buyer and seller are not at arm's length the sale is suspect and section 59 rejects the agreed purchase price, perhaps because it is likely to be something different from the market price. If that is so it would not be altogether unreasonable to say that although the sale is of the suspect class, yet if it is in fact made at the market price it shall be treated as a genuine sale. I am far from saying that that was in fact the intention: we are not concerned with intention except in so far as it can be deduced from the words of the Act. The argument I am dealing with is that the altered form of subsection (2) as the respondent would have it is so unreasonable that any possible alternative should be preferred, and it is enough to meet that argument to show that it is not impossible to suppose that it could have been intended.

I therefore move that this appeal should be dismissed.

Lord Normand. My Lords, before Lord Simon's lamented death I had intimated to him that I would concur with an opinion prepared and finally revised by him in this appeal. In these circumstances I am to deliver his opinion as my own. I shall thus have the privilege of preserving his judgment on one of the last Scottish appeals heard by him. Before I read it I may be allowed to associate myself with the words of my noble and learned friend on the Woolsack about Lord Simon. It is indeed true that Scottish lawyers share with their English brethren the grievous sense of loss that his death has brought to all of us. Here, then, is his opinion which I adopt as my own.

The Income Tax Act, 1945, provided for a series of "allowances" which could be claimed from the revenue authorities and enjoyed by taxpayers owning certain property (including machinery and plant) used in their business. These provisions were obviously intended to assist or give encouragement to trade after the war, and came into force on an "appointed day" which was April 6, 1946. These allowances were not deductions to arrive at assessable income, such as could be subtracted from gross income, but were treated separately and operated to reduce the taxpayer's liability to tax until the relief they gave from tax on the allowances was completely enjoyed. Thus, if assessable income in a given tax year was £5,000 and the allowances amounted to £2,000, income tax fell to be paid on £3,000. But if assessable income for the year was less than £2,000, while there would be no income tax to pay in that year, the balance of the allowance remained available to be used to reduce tax in a future year.

The statute provides for "initial allowances," "annual "allowances," "balancing allowances," and "balancing "charges," the last named operating to increase the total tax due above the tax on assessable income. This might arise, for example, if the value of second-hand plant rose and it was sold at a figure above the price paid for it when it was new, or above the price to which it had been written down by wear-and-tear allowances made by the revenue authorities for the purposes of income tax. In such a case the sum total of such allowances would manifestly be more than was justified. To take figures: if an item of plant cost £1,000 and sufficient annual allowances for depreciation had been given by the tax authorities to reduce the balance of cost to nil, and if the plant were then sold at a figure equal to or in excess of its original cost, the seller would have to bear a "balancing charge" which would result in his paying tax on the £1,000. If, however, the allowances had only amounted in all to £600, the balancing charge would be £600 and tax would be borne on this figure.

The question of law to be decided in the present appeal arises upon a case stated by the Special Commissioners sitting in Edinburgh. It is a question of construction of section 59 of the Act subsection (3) (b)—a question easy to state, but involving a close reading of the words to answer. The appeal is against the interlocutor of the Court of Session which reversed the decision of the Special Commissioners in favour of the Crown.

Section 59, so far as relevant, runs as follows: "(1) The "provisions of this section shall have effect in relation to sales "of any property where either—(a) the buyer is a body of persons "over whom the seller has control, or the seller is a body of "persons over whom the buyer has control, or both the seller and "the buyer are bodies of persons and some other person has "control over both of them; or (b) it appears with respect to the "sale or with respect to transactions of which the sale is one, "that the sole or main benefit which, apart from the provisions "of this section, might have been expected to accrue to the "parties or any of them was the obtaining of an allowance or "deduction under any of the following enactments, that is to say, "any of the provisions of this Act or of Rule 6 or Rule 7 of the "Rules applicable to Cases I and II of Schedule D or of section "19 of the Finance Act, 1941, or of Part IV of the Finance Act, "1944. References in this subsection to a body of persons "include references to a partnership. (2) Where the property is "sold at a price other than that which it would have fetched if "sold in the open market, then, subject to the succeeding pro-"visions of this section, the like consequences shall ensue for "the purposes of the enactments mentioned in subsection (1) of "this section . . . in their application to the income tax of all per-"sons concerned, as would have ensued if the property had been

H. L. (Sc.)
1953–54
Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Wilsons (Dunblane) Ld.
Lord Normand.

"sold for the price which it would have fetched if sold in the open "market. (3) Where the sale is a sale of machinery or plant— "(a) no initial allowance shall be made to the buyer; and "(b) subject to the provisions of the next succeeding subsection, "if the price which the property would have fetched if sold in "the open market is greater than the limit of re-charge on "the seller, the last preceding subsection shall have effect as if "for the reference to the price which the property would have "fetched if sold in the open market there were substituted a "reference to the said limit of re-charge: Provided that this "subsection shall not apply in relation to a sale of machinery or "plant which has never been used if the business or part of the "business of the seller was the manufacture or supply of "machinery or plant of that class and the sale was effected in "the ordinary course of the seller's business; Provided also that "where the sale is one to which paragraph (a) of subsection (1) "of this section applies and took place before the appointed day, "and the seller acquired the machinery or plant on or after the "sixth day of April, nineteen hundred and forty-four, paragraph "(a) of this subsection shall not apply. In this subsection the "expression 'the limit of re-charge' means, in relation to a "person who sells machinery or plant—(i) if he provided that "machinery or plant for himself before the appointed day, the "actual cost to him of the machinery or plant, including in that "actual cost any expenditure in the nature of capital expenditure "on machinery or plant by way of renewal, improvement or "reinstatement; (ii) if he provided the machinery or plant for "himself on or after the appointed day, the expenditure incurred "by him on the provision thereof. (4) [not relevant] . . . (5) "As respects Rules 6 and 7 of the Rules applicable to Cases I "and II of Schedule D, the provisions of this section shall have "effect as respects tax for the year of assessment in which the "appointed day falls and any subsequent year of assessment."

The precise question is as to the proper interpretation and application of the words in subsection (3) (b).

The facts which give rise to this question are as follows.

For some thirty years up to November 15, 1944, the business now carried on by the respondent company had been conducted by Mr. Alexander B. Wilson as sole proprietor, trading as Alexander Wilson & Co. On November 16, 1944, Mr. Alexander Wilson took his two sons into partnership, himself taking a one-half share and each son taking a one-quarter share in the profits. Mr. Alexander Wilson brought into the partnership firm on November 16, 1944, the whole assets of the business, including the machinery and plant then belonging to him which had been acquired by him from time to time in the course of his business. These assets were taken into the accounts of the partnership firm at the figures at which they appeared in the accounts of Mr. Alexander Wilson immediately before the partnership firm acquired them. The aggregate figure for these assets was £28,764 15s. 8d. At November 15, 1944, in the balance sheet of Mr. Alexander Wilson's business, the machinery and plant appeared at a written down figure of £8,000, and this formed a starting figure in the firm's books for machinery and plant for the partnership year commencing on November 16, 1944. Following the transfer of Mr. Alexander Wilson's business to the partnership, application was made under section 32 of the Finance Act, 1926, requiring that the tax payable for all years of assessment should be computed as if the trade carried on by Mr. Alexander Wilson had been discontinued at November 16, 1944, and a new trade had then been set up or commenced. The assessments on Mr. Alexander Wilson down to November 15, 1944, and those on the partnership from November 16, 1944, were respectively dealt with under the "cessation" and "new business" provisions of the Income Tax Acts. On November 16, 1945, the business of the partnership was transferred to the respondent company, which had been incorporated for this purpose on October 4, 1945; the whole of the issued shares of the company being allotted to the former partners in the proportion of 50 per cent. to Mr. Alexander Wilson and 25 per cent. to each of his sons. The assets of the partnership as at November 16, 1945, were bought by the respondent company in accordance with an agreement of sale, under which the price paid for machinery and plant was £17,554. This was the price which the machinery and plant would have fetched if sold in the open market on that date. The buyer, i.e. the respondent company, was "a body of persons "over whom the seller, i.e. the partnership, had control" and therefore section 59 of the Income Tax Act, 1945, could apply in relation to the sale. The actual question, however, now to be decided between the parties is whether subsections (2) and (3) of section 59 can, on a sound construction, be held to apply to the circumstances of this case. The Commissioners held that they could so apply. The Court of Session held that they could not. If the Commissioners' view were right, the annual allowance would be calculated on a figure of £8,000: if the Court of Session is right, the calculation would be on a figure of £17,554.

It will be seen that the expression "the limit of re-charge" is defined as meaning in relation to a person who sells machinery or plant, if he provided it for himself before the appointed day (which is this case), the actual cost to him of the machinery and plant plus expenditure upon it in the nature of capital expenditure. The Revenue authorities contend that the limit of re-charge was £8,000, but even so the application of subsection (3) (b) to subsection (2) is a question of some nicety.

Subsection (3) (b) directs us to look at subsection (2) to find in it "the reference to the price which the property would have fetched if sold in the open market" and to substitute a reference to the limit of re-charge. Where then do we find in subsection (2) a reference to the price which the property would have fetched if sold in the open market? There is plainly a reference to this

H. L. (Sc.)
1953–54

Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Wilsons (Dunblane) Ld.

Lord Normand.

price in the concluding words of subsection (2), but the Solicitor-General contends that there is also a reference to this price in the opening words of subsection (2) and that the phrase in that subsection, "where the property is sold at a price other than "that which it would have fetched if sold in the open market" is such a reference. This amounts to saying that a reference to a figure which is greater or less than x is a reference to x. I do not think that this is so. Moreover, the direction in (3) (b) is to search for "the reference" to the open market price, which is to be found in the previous subsection, and the inference from the language is that this is to be found in one place only in subsection (2) and not in two, for subsection (3) (b) speaks of "the reference," not "any reference" or "references." At the end of subsection (1), there is a contrasting phrase, "References "in this subsection to a body of persons include references to a "partnership," and in subsection (1) (a) there are no less than three references to "a body of persons."

There is a further consideration. When the structure of subsections (2) and (3) is considered, it is to be observed that subsection (2) lays down the condition that it applies "where the "property is sold at a price other than that which it would have "fetched if sold in the open market," and it is only if this condition, which I will call condition A, is satisfied that subsection (2) has any application at all. "Property" is not limited to plant and machinery, but would include buildings. Subsection (3), on the other hand, is limited to the case where the sale is a sale of one kind of property, viz., "machinery or plant," and subsection (3) (b) can only have an application in this case. Moreover, subsection (3) (b) only applies if the price which the machinery or plant would have fetched if sold in the open market is greater than the limit of re-charge on the seller. This I call condition B. It seems to me that the proper application of (3) (b) is therefore limited to the case where both condition A and condition B are satisfied, and subsection (2) cannot have effect unless this is so. In the present case condition B is satisfied, but condition A is not.

For the above reasons, I have come to the conclusion that the contention of the Crown fails and that the view taken by the Court of Session is right.

The statutory provisions under consideration, including the awkward and obscure modification of what is in subsection (2) by what is in subsection (3) (b) are copied into the consolidating Income Tax Act, 1952, without alteration (section 327 and Sch. XIV). And so the problem of interpretation remains. But your Lordships are not engaged in framing income tax proposals. That is the task of the legislature. We, as a judicial tribunal, are concerned only with the proper interpretation and application of the language which Parliament has employed. If the result is unsatisfactory, it is for the legislature to correct it.

At that point the judgment prepared by Lord Simon ends. I add only that I have had the advantage of reading the opinions of the other learned and noble Lords who took part in the hearing of the appeal and that I agree with their reasoning as well as with their conclusion that the appeal fails.

LORD MACDERMOTT. My Lords, the question for determination is whether section 59 of the Income Tax Act, 1945, applies to the computation of the wear and tear allowances of the respondent company in respect of certain plant and machinery for the fiscal years 1946–47 to 1950–51. This turns entirely upon the true construction of subsections (2) and (3) of that section which, omitting what is not material, read thus: "(2) Where the property is sold at a price other than that which it would have fetched if sold in the open market, then, subject to the succeeding provisions of this section, the like consequences shall ensue for the purposes of the enactments mentioned in subsection (1) of this section (other than the said section nineteen) in their application to the income tax of all persons concerned, as would have ensued if the property had been sold for the price which it would have fetched if sold in the open market. (3) Where the sale is a sale of machinery or plant . . . (b) . . . if the price which the property would have fetched if sold in the open market is greater than the limit of re-charge on the seller, the last preceding subsection shall have effect as if for the reference to the price which the property would have fetched if sold in the open market there were substituted a reference to the said limit of re-charge:"

On the facts as found, the sale relevant to this appeal was the sale to the respondent company of machinery and plant, the price paid therefor was £17,554, and this was the price which the said machinery and plant would have fetched if sold in the open market. The "limit of re-charge" mentioned in subsection (3) was, in the circumstances and according to the statutory definition of the term, the sum of £8,000, that being the actual cost to the sellers of the machinery and plant sold.

In the course of the debate three different ways of reading subsections (2) and (3) of section 59 were canvassed before your Lordships in relation to a sale of machinery and plant in which (as in this case) the open market price exceeds the limit of re-charge and the condition of paragraph (b) of subsection (3) is therefore satisfied. For brevity I shall refer hereafter to these facts—that is to say, the fact that what was sold was machinery and plant and the fact that the open market price was more than the limit of re-charge—as "the relevant facts."

The substance and effect of these three constructions may be stated as follows:—

Construction I. On the relevant facts, paragraph (b) of subsection (3) directs the application of subsection (2) after modification at two points, so that (i) its opening and conditional

H. L. (Sc.)
1953–54

INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS v. WILSONS (DUNBLANE) LD.

Lord MacDermott.

words are changed from "where the property is sold at a price "other than that which it would have fetched in the open "market" to "where the property is sold at a price other than "the limit of re-charge," and (ii) its concluding and operative words are changed from "the like consequences shall ensue . . . "as would have ensued if the property had been sold for the "price which it would have fetched if sold in the open market" to "the like consequences shall ensue . . . as would have ensued "if the property had been sold for the limit of re-charge." This construction was placed by the appellants in the forefront of their case. If it is sound, the appeal succeeds as section 59 then applies to the annual wear and tear allowance of the respondent company, with £8,000, the limit of re-charge, and not £17,554, the sale price, as the amount by reference to which such allowance should be calculated.

Construction II. On the relevant facts, paragraph (b) of subsection (3) directs the application of subsection (2) after modification at one point only, namely, by substituting a reference to the limit of re-charge for the reference to the open market price in the concluding and operative part of that subsection. This is the same as the second of the modifications required by construction I, the difference between these two constructions being that in II the opening and conditional words of subsection (2) remain unaltered. This construction was submitted on behalf of the respondent company and was upheld by the First Division. If it is sound, the appeal fails and section 59 is inapplicable, as the facts then take the case outside the opening words of subsection (2).

Construction III. This construction was advanced by the appellants as an alternative to construction I. It accepted the view that the only modification worked by subsection (3) (b) in the text of subsection (2) was that of construction II, namely, the substitution of the limit of re-charge for the open market price in the operative and concluding part of subsection (2); but it added that, on the relevant facts, the words "the last pre-"ceding subsection shall have effect," in subsection (3) (b), were mandatory and amounted to a direction that subsection (2) as so modified was to become operative regardless of the terms of its condition. On this interpretation the whole emphasis is placed on the expression "shall have effect." The relevant facts having occurred the operative part of subsection (2) is to come into force with a reference to the limit of re-charge inserted in lieu of the reference to the open market price. If this construction is sound, the appeal succeeds and £8,000 becomes the material "starting" figure instead of £17,554.

My Lords, these three constructions appear to cover the possibilities of the situation and it is now necessary to choose between them. I must confess that in this task I find no guidance in the general policy or intendment of the Income Tax Acts or in the scheme of the Act of 1945. That is not to say that guidance of this kind is never available in this particular legislative field. For example, if, of two possible constructions, one would impose a tax on income and the other a tax on capital, the golden rule that income tax is a tax upon income and not upon capital would supply a solution. But the complicated subject of allowances for wear and tear does not seem to present any certain aid of this nature, at all events as respects the present question. Here I find no current of legislative purpose capable of carrying the issue one way or the other. Nor is any one of the possible interpretations to be preferred on the ground that it, unlike the others, avoids some manifest absurdity, some palpable injustice, or some gross anomaly. Speculation is possible but it leads nowhere. At the end of the day there remains, so far as I can discern, no good reason for asserting that any of the constructions enumerated would conflict with the general scheme and purpose of the legislation. In these circumstances all one can do is to take the statute and see what it says according to the ordinary and everyday meaning of the language used.

Proceeding thus, my choice falls at once on construction II. More than the others it seems to me to reflect the natural meaning of subsection (3) (b). Given the relevant facts, what that paragraph says is that subsection (2) shall have effect as if for "the "reference" to the open market price there were substituted "a "reference to the said limit of re-charge." Now that, with its use of "the reference" in the singular, appears to me to be an apt way of altering the concluding and operative part of subsection (2) but not of altering both that part and the opening and conditional part as well. And that aptness is, I think, emphasized by the way in which subsection (2) is drafted, for the expression "subject to the succeeding provisions of this section" which occurs therein qualifies only the concluding and operative part, and suggests that it, rather than the opening part, may be subject to later modification.

Construction I, on the other hand, involves applying "the "reference" to the open market price to both parts of subsection (2) and reading the words in the opening part of that subsection "at a price other than that which it would have fetched if sold "in the open market" as including a reference to the open market price. "Reference" is a comprehensive expression, and modifying enactments which operate, not by substituting one set of words for another set of words, but by substituting a reference to one subject-matter for a reference to another subject-matter, will not necessarily be ineffectual merely because of some descriptive variation, as a pronoun for a noun, the plural for the singular, or such as may be entailed by the use of shortened forms. I do not, therefore, say that construction I is bound to fail because the word "reference" is used in the singular in subsection (3) (b) or because the subject-matter of "open market price" cannot be spelt out of the wording of the opening part of subsection (2);

H. L. (Sc.)
1953–54
Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Wilsons (Dunblane) Ld.
Lord MacDermott.

what I hold is that, when every aspect is considered, this construction is markedly less apt and rests less easily on the language of the statute than construction II. Moreover, the position of the words "subject to the succeeding provisions of this section" in subsection (2) points as much against construction I as it points in favour of construction II. If construction I had been the intention of the legislature, I cannot but think that these words would have been found at the very beginning of that subsection.

Construction III must, in my opinion, also be rejected, though on somewhat different grounds. The words "shall have effect" do not appear to have a constant meaning when used in relation to statutory provisions. They may signify that the provision to which they relate is to apply and become operative, or they may be used to signify that if and when it becomes applicable it is to operate in a particular way. When used, as they are in subsection (3) (b), with respect to a conditional enactment, the latter seems to be the appropriate meaning. To read these words in that subsection according to construction III would be to ignore the condition in subsection (2) altogether. I cannot believe that such a drastic treatment of the text was ever intended. To hold that it was would be to disregard completely a condition depending on the facts of the actual sale and to substitute a condition which related only to open market value and the limit of re-charge and had nothing to say to the price obtained on the sale with which section 59 is primarily concerned.

For these reasons I am of opinion that the First Division was right and that the appeal should be dismissed.

Lord Keith of Avonholm. My Lords, the respondents are entitled to allowances in respect of machinery and plant used by them in their business of wool spinners, under rule 6, as amended by subsequent legislation, of the Rules applicable to Cases I and II of Schedule D of the Income Tax Act, 1918. The question raised in this appeal by the Revenue is what is the figure on which these allowances are to be calculated. This depends on whether or not section 59 of the Income Tax Act, 1945, in some of its provisions, applies to the circumstances in which the machinery and plant were acquired by the respondents.

Section 59 of the Income Tax Act, 1945, is a section hedged round by conditions and qualifications. To bring the section into operation at all it is necessary that either subsection (1) (a) or subsection 1 (b) shall apply to the transaction in question here. It is common ground that subsection (1) (a) does apply. We are entitled thus to look at subsections (2) and (3) of the section and see whether these subsections are applicable in the circumstances of the present case.

The material facts are that on November 16, 1945, the respondents in the present appeal (whom I shall call "the "company") took over from a partnership the business of wool spinners carried on by the partnership and the whole assets of the business. The assets included machinery and plant for which the price of £17,554 was paid and this price, it is found, "was "the price which the machinery and plant would have fetched "if sold in the open market on November 16, 1945." The Income Tax Act, 1945, did not come into operation until the appointed day, which was later fixed as April 6, 1946, and the present case is concerned with what are the proper allowances to be made to the company in respect of wear and tear of machinery and plant subsequent to the Act of 1945 coming into operation. The company says that the wear and tear allowances should be made on a cost to it of £17,554, paid for the machinery and plant. The Revenue say that these allowances should be made on a figure of £8,000, which they say was the cost to the seller (the partnership) of the machinery and plant at the date of the sale and which according to them becomes "the limit of re-charge" as that phrase is defined in subsection (3) of section 59 of the Income Tax Act, 1945. The exact significance of this phrase will become clearer when I come to refer more particularly to the language of subsection (3).

To succeed in their appeal the Revenue must show that subsection (3) of section 59 can in some way be invoked as applicable to the circumstances of this case. It is conceded that subsection (2) taken by itself cannot assist them. To make the position clear I quote subsection (2): "Where the property is sold at a "price other than that which it would have fetched if sold in "the open market, then, subject to the succeeding provisions of "this section, the like consequences shall ensue for the purposes "of the enactments mentioned in subsection (1) of this section . . . "in their application to the income tax of all persons concerned, "as would have ensued if the property had been sold for the "price which it would have fetched if sold in the open market."

My Lords, I said at the outset that the provisions of section 59 were hedged round with conditions. The condition in subsection (2) is that the property is sold at a price other than that which it would have fetched if sold in the open market. That is not this case, for it is agreed that the machinery and plant were sold at the open market price. Accordingly it is recognized that subsection (2) by itself does not help the Revenue's case. But it is said the subsection is substantially modified and, as so modified, fits the present case by invocation of the language of subsection (3) (b). I quote subsection (3) (b) so far as relevant: "Where "the sale is a sale of machinery or plant . . . (b) subject to the "provisions of the next succeeding subsection, if the price which "the property would have fetched if sold in the open market is "greater than the limit of re-charge on the seller, the last pre-"ceding subsection shall have effect as if for the reference to the "price which the property would have fetched if sold in the open "market there were substituted a reference to the said limit of "re-charge: . . . In this subsection the expression 'the limit of "'re-charge' means, in relation to a person who sells machinery

H. L. (Sc.)
1953–54
INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS v. WILSONS (DUNBLANE) LD.
Lord Keith of Avonholm.

"or plant—(i) if he provided that machinery or plant for himself "before the appointed day, the actual cost to him of the "machinery or plant, including in that actual cost any expendi-"ture in the nature of capital expenditure on machinery or plant "by way of renewal, improvement or reinstatement; . . ."

The learned Solicitor-General submitted two separate and, I think, mutually exclusive arguments as to the effect of this provision. First, by a process of substitution of words from subsection (3) (b) he sought to read subsection (2) as if it commenced: "Where the property is sold at a price other than the limit of "re-charge, etc." Starting thus, he would be well on the road to invoking subsection (2) in his favour, because if £8,000 is the limit of re-charge, there is no doubt that the machinery and plant were sold to the company at a price greater than the limit of re-charge. But I have come to reject this contention because, in my opinion, the opening words of subsection (2) are not a reference to "the price which the property would have fetched if sold in "the open market" but the very opposite, a reference to a price which the property would not have fetched in the open market. There is a reference in the concluding words of subsection (2) to the price which the property would have fetched if sold in the open market, but if "limit of re-charge" is substituted here, it does not aid the Revenue for the whole subsection is still qualified by the opening words of the subsection.

The second contention for the Revenue is more subtle and, I think, more difficult. Their first contention involved taking subsection (2) and modifying it by the substitution of words taken from subsection (3) (b). Their second contention proceeds rather on taking subsection (3) (b) and reading into it words taken from subsection (2). It is to be noticed that subsection (3) (b) is again dependent on a condition, namely, "if the price which the "property would have fetched if sold in the open market is greater "than the limit of re-charge on the seller." This the Revenue say is the case here. The sum of £17,554, the open market price, is greater than the sum of £8,000, the limit of re-charge. They then say this is a new and independent condition which takes the place of the condition precedent with which subsection (2) opens. They accordingly ignore this condition in subsection (2) and on a combined reading of subsection (2) and subsection (3) (b) read the statutory provision as if it ran as follows: "(3) Where the "sale is a sale of machinery or plant— . . . (b) subject to the "provisions of the next succeeding subsection, if the price which "the property would have fetched if sold in the open market is "greater than the limit of re-charge on the seller, the like conse-"quences shall ensue for the purposes of the enactments men-"tioned in subsection (1) of this section . . . in their application "to the income tax of all persons concerned, as would have ensued "if the property had been sold for the limit of re-charge."

My Lords, this reading is attractive, but it takes certain liberties in the matter of rewriting the terms of the statutory provisions. It assumes, for instance, that the opening condition of subsection (2) falls to be deleted, or at least ignored. But that is not to give subsection (2) effect with the substitution merely of limit of re-charge for open market price. It may be that the legislature intended both the opening condition of subsection (2) and the condition precedent of subsection (3) (b) to operate. To illustrate. It might be that machinery or plant was sold at a price greater or less than the open market price. This would satisfy the condition in subsection (2). The open market price then becomes the datum line for the purposes of subsection (2). But assume that the open market price is greater than the limit of re-charge on the seller. Under subsection (3) (b) this introduces a new datum line, viz., the limit of re-charge. To say, however, that, if the machinery or plant is in fact sold at the open market price and this is greater than the limit of re-charge, the limit of re-charge is to be substituted for the open market price seems to me to be pure speculation as to the intention of the legislature. The statute nowhere says so. The words in subsection (3) (b) "if the price which the property would have "fetched if sold in the open market" are, I think, important. They seem to be a reference back to the concluding words of subsection (2) and these in turn are dependent on the opening words of the subsection: "Where the property is sold at a price "other than that which it would have fetched if sold in the open "market."

My Lords, I think I have said enough to show that in any event the meaning of this statutory provision is surrounded with much doubt and confusion. It is impossible, in my opinion, to say that there is any of the relevant and material provisions of section 59 which clearly and unambiguously operates to deprive the taxpayer, in the circumstances of this case, of the right to have his wear and tear allowances based, as would normally be done, on the cost to him of his machinery and plant. That is in this case on the sum of £17,554. I draw no distinction between a statutory provision invoked as a taxing provision and a statutory provision said to deprive, or restrict, the taxpayer in the matter of some established taxation allowance or relief. In each case the impact of the statute on the taxpayer must be clear on a fair reading of the statute. The language of Rowlatt J. in Cape Brandy Syndicate v. Inland Revenue Commissioners,[1] as approved by my late noble and learned friend Lord Simon in Canadian Eagle Oil Co. Ld. v. The King,[2] is, in my opinion, here very apt. I would only say that when Rowlatt J. says "There is no room for any intendment" I think he means there is no room for any presumption of intention and I would go no further than this. It may often be the case that from a reading

[1] [1921] 1 K.B. 64, 71; 37 T.L.R. 33.

[2] [1946] A.C. 119, 140; 61 T.L.R. 577; [1945] 2 All E.R. 499.

H. L. (Sc.)
1953–54

INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS v. WILSONS (DUNBLANE) LD.

of the language of a statute, or a particular provision of a statute, it is not difficult to extract the policy or intention of the legislature. But that is not so in this case. I agree that the appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Solicitor of Inland Revenue; Peacock & Goddard for Fraser, Stoddart & Ballingall, W. S., Edinburgh, and Tho. & J. W. Barty, Dunblane.

Jan. 27. 1954

Lord Goddard C.J., Byrne and Parker JJ.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

* PERCIVAL v. STANTON AND ANOTHER.

Fishery—Salmon—"Fixed engine"—Use of—Net with light anchors attached acting as brake—Whether offence committed—"Secured by "anchors"—"Stationary"—Salmon and Freshwater Fisheries Act, 1923 (13 & 14 Geo. 5, c. 16), ss. 11 (1), 92 (1).

Three light anchors were attached to a net which was placed in the sea to catch salmon. The anchors were not intended to fix the net to the sea-bed, but to act as a brake or drag on the net when it drifted with the tide:—

Held, that the net was not "secured" by anchors or "made "stationary" within section 92 of the Salmon and Freshwater Fisheries Act, 1923, and, therefore, was not a "fixed engine" of which the use was a breach of section 11 of the Act. A "fixed "engine" must be fixed, i.e., stationary.

CASE STATED by Northumberland justices.

On September 5, 1953, an information was preferred by the prosecutor, John Percival, against the defendants, William and George Robert Stanton, charging them that they on July 30, 1953, did unlawfully use a fixed engine, namely a net secured by anchors, for taking salmon in tidal waters, namely the sea, south of Alnmouth, contrary to the Salmon and Freshwater Fisheries Act, 1923, s. 11.[1]

The following facts were found by the justices: On the date in question the defendants were fishing for salmon in the open sea off the Northumberland coast. They were using a net which was shot from a fishing coble in the form of a letter "T," and was suspended in the water by means of cork floats. The

[1] Salmon and Freshwater Fisheries Act, 1923, s. 11: "(1) No fixed "engine of any description shall be "placed or used for taking or facili-"tating the taking of salmon . . . or "for detaining, or obstructing the free "passage of, salmon . . . in any "inland or tidal waters."

S. 92 "(1) . . . The expression 'fixed "'engine' includes—(a) stake net, "bag net, putt, putcher; and (b) any "fixed implement or engine for taking "or facilitating the taking of fish; "and (c) any net secured by anchors "and any net or other implement for "taking fish fixed to the soil, or made "stationary in any other way, not "being a fishing weir or fishing mill "dam."

headpiece measured 100 yards, and the tailpiece 200 yards. The approximate weight of the net when wet was 8 cwts. The end of the tailpiece was close to the water's edge, and the headpiece was some 200 yards out to sea, lying approximately parallel with the water's edge. At the place in question strong tidal currents ebb and flow. To keep the net in formation the defendants attached a bundle of metal quoits to the end of the tailpiece and three anchors to the headpiece. The three anchors were made of iron and were of conventional two-fluked pattern, each weighing about three pounds. The effect of the anchors was to act as a drag or brake on the drift and movement of the net, and they did not act so as to secure the net to the sea-bed as a stationary object. The sea-bed consisted of smooth, soft, shingly sand and the net drifted substantially with the currents. Without some means of keeping the net in formation, the action of the wind and currents would reduce the net into a shapeless tangle. The defendant, William Stanton, had followed this method of fishing for upwards of thirty years.

The prosecutor contended that the three anchors made the net a "fixed engine" within section 11 of the Act inasmuch as it thereby became "a net secured by anchors" within section 92, and that it was not necessary for the court to find that the net, by reason of the anchors, became affixed to and stationary on the sea-bed. The defendants contended that the phrase "secured by anchors" in section 92 meant moored to the sea-bed as a fixed and stationary object, and that, inasmuch as the anchors in the present case did not have that effect, but merely acted as a brake or drag and allowed substantial drift the anchors did not "secure" the net and make it a "fixed engine." Further, that the words "secured by anchors" should be construed ejusdem generis with the words "or made stationary in "any other way." Finally, it was contended that the Act of 1923 was a penal Act, and the words "secured by anchors" must be read in their ordinary meaning of making fast, and that a wider meaning should not be attached to the phrase.

The justices, being of the opinion that the net was not a "fixed engine" within section 11, dismissed the charge. A further issue as to whether the sea at the place in question was "tidal waters" within the section was raised before the justices, but was not dealt with by the Divisional Court.

The prosecutor appealed.

J. P. Widgery for the prosecutor.
C. D. Aarvold and R. A. Percy for the defendants.

The following cases were cited in argument: Thomas v. Jones [2]; Olding v. Wild [3]; Gore v. English Fisheries Commissioners. [4]

[2] (1864) 5 B. & S. 916.
[3] (1866) 14 L.T. 402.
[4] (1871) L.R. 6 Q.B. 561.

1954

Percival
v.
Stanton.

Lord Goddard C.J. stated the facts and continued: The definition of "fixed engine" in section 92 of the Act of 1923 is not an absolute one. It states what a "fixed engine" includes, but I do not see how, whatever the definition clause says that it is to include, that could remove the necessity of a "fixed "engine" being fixed, and if a thing is fixed, it seems to me, it must be stationary. The words of that definition are: ". . . "any net secured by anchors and any net or other implement "for taking fish fixed to the soil or made stationary in any "other way . . ." I confess that, applying the ordinary canons of construction, I think that the words "secured by anchors" show, in view of the words which follow, that it is meant to be secured so that it is fixed and stationary. That is supported by the history of these Acts. The Act of 1923 is a consolidating and amending Act, and it is obvious that, being a consolidating Act, it has borrowed the words of the definition from the previous Acts which it consolidated. The Salmon Fisheries Act, 1861, by section 2 provided: "'Fixed engine' shall include stake nets, "bag nets, putts, putchers and all fixed implements or engines "for catching or facilitating the catching of fish." There again I emphasise the word "fixed." By section 11 of that Act, the definition is somewhat expanded. That section, which prohibited the placing of "fixed engines" in any inland or tidal waters, provided: "A net that is secured by anchors or other-"wise temporarily fixed to the soil shall be deemed to be a "fixed engine."

While that was the state of the law, Thomas v. Jones[1] came before a court of the Queen's Bench Division, in which the facts were that a net was used on the River Tiefi, near Cardigan, by a fisherman who had got his net secured at one end, but the court held that it was not a "fixed engine" because, being unsecured at the other end, directly the salmon hit the net the net rolled round the salmon. I doubt whether I would have decided that case in the same way as the Court of Queen's Bench decided in 1864 if I had been alive and sitting then. But that was a decision which was not open to appeal and accordingly, by the Salmon Fishery Act, 1865, an amending definition of "fixed engine" was introduced by section 39, which provided: "'Fixed Engine' shall in this Act and the Salmon Fishery "Act, 1861, include any net or other implement for taking fish "fixed to the soil, or made stationary in any other way." Therefore, first, one gets the definition in the Act of 1861 of "a net that is secured by anchors or otherwise temporarily "fixed"; then under the Act of 1864 one gets "a net or other "implement fixed to the soil or made stationary in any other "way"; and finally, by the consolidating Act of 1923 the legislature naturally incorporates both of these definitions in section 92. I do not think that that means that one ought to contrast

[1] (1864) 5 B. & S. 916.

"secured by anchors" with "made stationary in any other "way." The history of the section makes it clear that Parliament has used the words which it has used in 1923, because it has had the words "secured by anchors" standing since 1861 and it has incorporated them into this Act together with the extended definition that was put in because of Thomas v. Jones.[2] But it seems to me that in all these cases to some extent it must be a question of degree, and therefore a question of fact for the justices, and the justices have found that this was not a "fixed engine" because it was not fixed.

I do not want it to be said that, if one can show that a net has been let down and some anchors attached to it, it ceases to be a "fixed engine" merely because the anchors have dragged, as they might in a storm. If they are put down with the intention of anchoring the net to the sea-bed, then I think it becomes secured by anchors; but if, as the justices found in the present case, these light anchors were not used for that purpose, but were merely used to act as a brake or a drag upon a net which was intended to drift with the tide, it seems to me that one cannot say that it is a "fixed engine," first, because it is not "fixed," and secondly, because it is not "secured by anchors." Nor is it "made stationary in any other way," because it is not stationary; it moves. It is partly a question of fact and partly a question of construction, but I have come to the conclusion that we cannot interfere with the decision of the justices in this way. Indeed, I think they were right.

BYRNE J. I agree.

PARKER J. I also agree.

Appeal dismissed

Solicitors: Sharpe, Pritchard & Co. for N. H. Thomas, Newcastle-upon-Tyne; Crossman, Block & Co. for Adam Douglas & Son, Alnwick.

J. D. P.

[2] 5 B. & S. 916.

[HOUSE OF LORDS.]

H. L. (Sc.)†

1953 Nov. 17, 18, 19, 23, 24; 1954 Jan. 25.

* ANDERSON . . . . . APPELLANT;

AND

LAMBIE AND ANOTHER . . . . . RESPONDENTS.

[PRACTICE NOTE.]

Legal Aid—Costs—House of Lords—Assisted person in court below—Appeal to House of Lords—Former assisted person unsuccessful respondent—Appearance not in forma pauperis.

† Present: LORD MORTON OF HENRYTON, LORD MACDERMOTT, LORD REID AND LORD KEITH OF AVONHOLM.

H. L. (Sc.)

1954

ANDERSON v. LAMBIE.

APPEAL from the First Division of the Court of Session.

The pursuer and appellant, James Alastair Anderson, in this action sought to have a disposition which he granted to the defenders and respondents, Samuel Milligan Lambie and Mary Ferguson Lambie, reduced on the ground that more land was conveyed by it than had been agreed to be conveyed by the missives which preceded it. The appellant maintained that a discrepancy between the disposition and the missives occurred "through essential error on the part of both the pursuer's agents "and the defenders' agents" and he further maintained that, of the two documents, it was the disposition that was wrong. The missives were dated December 15 and 16, 1948. The disposition was dated January 22 and 26, 1949, and was recorded in the General Register of Sasines on February 2, 1949. The alleged error was not discovered until the end of 1949. The First Division of the Court of Session, reversing the decision of the Lord Ordinary, having given judgment for the respondents, the appellant appealed to the House of Lords. In the Inner House, though not in the Outer House, the respondents were assisted persons under the Legal Aid Scheme. In the House of Lords they did not appear in forma pauperis.

Hector M'Kechnie Q.C. and R. Smith Johnston (both of the Scottish Bar) for the appellant.

W. I. Fraser Q.C. and R. Taylor (both of the Scottish Bar) for the respondents.

Their Lordships took time for consideration.

January 25, 1954. The House allowed the appeal. On the question of costs their Lordships made the following observations.

LORD MORTON OF HENRYTON. My Lords, Having regard to all the circumstances of the case, I am of opinion that the respondents should pay to the appellant three-quarters of the costs of his appeal to this House and of the proceedings in the Outer House and the sum of five guineas in respect of his expenses in the Inner House.

LORD REID. My Lords, On the questions of costs your Lordships are confronted with a difficult situation. In the Inner House (though not in the Outer House) the respondents were assisted persons. One must presume therefore that they are persons of such modest means that they could not properly be expected to bear the full expense of litigating in the Court of Session. Under the Legal Aid Scheme in its present form there is no provision for legal aid in this House even for a respondent who has been successful as an assisted person in the Court of Session or the Court of Appeal. In the present case we are deciding against such respondents, and, if the usual order as to costs were made, they would be ordered to pay the whole costs of the appellant in this House. Costs in this House may far exceed expenses in the Court of Session yet the scheme operates to relieve such a litigant from part at least of the lesser liability in the Court of Session and does nothing to protect him against a greater liability in this House which he can in no way avoid. Even if he failed to appear and the appeal were heard ex parte he would normally be ordered to pay the costs of the successful appellant; and in this important and difficult case it would have deprived us of much assistance if the respondents had failed to appear by counsel. I can quite understand that it may be good policy to refuse assistance to one who seeks to appeal to this House, but it may be that the position of a respondent who had been an assisted person was not specially considered when the present scheme was made. Of course a respondent who is sufficiently poor can be allowed to appear in this House in forma pauperis but it would seem probable that this was not open to the present respondents. So in a case like the present both that privilege and the protection of legal aid must be refused to a respondent in this House who has had protection in the court below and has been brought here against his will. I realize that if we do not make the usual order in favour of the appellant in this case we would be discriminating against him for no fault of his, but it seems to me that the facts which I have stated ought not to be entirely neglected, and I think that the situation might properly be met by ordering the respondents to pay only a part of the appellant's costs in this House.

I agree with my noble and learned friend, Lord Morton of Henryton, as to expenses in the Court of Session and I also agree that the respondents should be required to pay three-quarters of the appellant's costs in this House.

LORD KEITH OF AVONHOLM. My Lords, In the matter of costs in this House I agree with my noble and learned friends, Lord Morton of Henryton and Lord Reid. The position is anomalous. There is no suggestion that the respondent financially is any better off than he was when he received legal aid in the Inner House. It may be that so long as legal aid is not available generally in connexion with proceedings on appeal from the Court of Session to this House the special position of a respondent who has received legal aid in the Court of Session and is brought here on appeal could be met by a regulation under section 12 (3) (c) of the Legal Aid and Advice Act, 1949, or some other provision of that Act, but that is for the appropriate authority to consider.

Solicitors: William Charles Crocker for Hunter, Harvey, Webster & Will, W.S., Edinburgh; Shaen, Roscoe & Co. for Robert White & Co. S.S.C., Edinburgh.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

1954
Jan. 25.

Lord Goddard C.J., Byrne and Parker JJ.

* FARRIER v. WARD.

Education—School—Attendance—"Walking distance"—Direct route not safe for children unless escorted—Meaning of "nearest available "route"—Question of safety—Education Act, 1944 (7 & 8 Geo. 6, c. 31), s. 39 (5).

Section 39 (2) of the Education Act, 1944, provides that a child under eight years of age shall not be deemed to have failed to attend school regularly if his parent proves that the school is not within walking distance of the child's home. By subsection (5): ". . . the "expression 'walking distance' means, in relation to a child who "has not attained the age of eight years two miles . . . measured "by the nearest available route."

The words "nearest available route" in section 39 (5) of the Act refer only to measurement of the distance between the child's home and the school; if a route fulfils the requirements of that section as to distance, the fact that it may be unsafe is not material.

CASE STATED by Kent justices sitting at Canterbury.

On July 13, 1953, informations were preferred by Francis George Ward, the County Education Welfare Officer, against Bertie Herbert Harold Shaxted and Albert George Farrier, charging that each, being the parent of a child of compulsory school age, was guilty of an offence in that the child who was a registered pupil at Preston county primary school failed to attend regularly thereat between April 21 and August 26, contrary to section 39 (1) of the Education Act, 1944.

At the hearing of the informations the following facts were proved or admitted. Each defendant was the parent of a child of compulsory school age who was under eight years of age and a registered pupil at the Preston school and who failed to attend during the material period. Each child lived in the hamlet of West Stourmouth and the route from his home to the school was under two miles. These routes were safe for the children to use, if escorted. Both children had to travel by a bit of road near the school where an escort would be desirable for small children. It was usual and the duty of parents to provide escort for their children but nevertheless the education authority arranged for an omnibus which took children from Stourmouth to and from Preston school during the period in question. On the return journey the bus reached Preston school at 4.45 p.m. to collect the children, the children at that school having finished their lessons at 3.45 p.m. The defendants wanted a special omnibus from school and would not provide any escort for their children.

It was contended for the defendants (a) that the direct routes were not safe for their children to use when returning from school in a party; (b) that the afternoon bus provided by the education authority was not suitable transport for the return journey; and (c) that for those reasons they were prevented by unavoidable cause within the meaning of section 39 (2) (c) of the Act from sending their children to school. They also contended that the words "in relation to a child" in section 39 (5) referred not merely to the words "walking distance" appropriate to the respective ages specified in the subsection but to the later words "nearest available route," limiting them to such routes only as were safe for a child of the ages specified to use, and that the nearest available safe route was more than the distance specified in the section.

[Reported by Mrs. E. M. WELLWOOD, Barrister-at-Law.]

The prosecutor contended that "available route" meant a route which could be followed without committing trespass.

The justices were of opinion that the direct routes were safe for children when escorted; that there was no unavoidable cause within the meaning of section 39 (2) (c) because the direct routes were safe if the parents had escorted the children or arranged for their escort; and that in the circumstances the bus provided was suitable. They considered, therefore, that the suggested interpretation of the words "available route" was irrelevant, but that if it were relevant the defendants' interpretation of the words "available route" would be strained and unnatural. Accordingly, they held that the Preston school was within "walking distance" of the home of both appellants, who were not entitled to transport for their children. The justices convicted the defendants.

The defendant Farrier appealed.

M. D. Van Oss for the appellant.
Gerald A. Thesiger Q.C. and K. Jupp for the prosecutor.

Hares v. Curtin [1] was cited in argument.

LORD GODDARD C.J. The short point that arises is this: The justices found that the route which these children had to travel was "safe for these children to use, if escorted. The bit "of road near the school, where an escort would be desirable for "small children, was common to both the children in question." I think that the justices recognized that it would be desirable for children to be escorted or in some way conducted along or across a certain piece of road where there was probably a good deal of traffic. They found that it was usual for parents to provide escort for their children to and from school, when necessary.

The real question is whether the school is within walking distance of the children's home because section 39 of the Education Act, 1944, provides that it is a reasonable excuse for the

[1] [1913] 2 K.B. 328.

1954

FARRIER
v.
WARD.

Lord Goddard C.J.

parent to prove "that the school at which the child is a registered pupil is not within walking distance of the child's home, "and that no suitable arrangements have been made by the "local education authority either for his transport to and from "the school or for boarding. . . ." By section 39 (5): "walking "distance" means "in relation to a child who has not attained "the age of 8 years two miles, . . . measured by the nearest "available route." The justices have to find whether the school is within walking distance; and it is said that the route which the children took, which was under two miles, was not the "nearest available route" because part of it was said to be dangerous for children to walk along unescorted. I cannot read the word "available" as meaning necessarily safe, because we can see how these words came to be included in the Act.

By section 74 of the Elementary Education Act, 1870, the excuse was if "there is no public elementary school open which "the child can attend within such distance, not exceeding three "miles, measured according to the nearest road from the residence "of such child, as the by-laws may prescribe." In section 49 (6) of the Education Act, 1921, the reasonable excuse was "that "there is no public elementary school open which the child can "attend within such distance, not exceeding three miles, measured "according to the nearest road from the residence of the child, "as the by-laws may prescribe." There is no difference in the words in those Acts.

Before the Act of 1921, it was suggested in Hares v. Curtin,[1] which was decided in 1913, that a cart track could not be the nearest road because the walking distance had not been measured according to the nearest road; and Lord Alverstone, giving judgment, said[2]: "It does not mean a road of any particular class, "but simply a route from the residence of a child to the nearest "school."

In the Education Act, 1944, the words used are two miles "measured by the nearest available route." I do not think that it was meant to make any change in the law at all, except that it omits a number of somewhat unnecessary words and substitutes the expression which was used in this court in Hares v. Curtin.[2]

To some extent I sympathize with the views of the parents in this case, and it may be that they would like to bring pressure upon the Kent County Council to have a person on the road to see that "this bit of the road," as the justices call it, is safe for the children to cross. Those, however, are matters for the education authority to consider and to put into operation if they think fit. I can only say that, if there is a road which measures not more than two miles or a route along which a child can walk and its measurement does not exceed two miles, that is the nearest available route. It may sometimes be unsafe; sometimes the route might be flooded, and, if that happened and the person could not walk along the road, that might be a reasonable excuse for not using it on that particular day, but we are not concerned with that but with a case where the parents think that the route is not safe. Parliament has not substituted safety as the test but the distance. Any question with regard to safety must be, and I have no doubt will be, taken into consideration by the education authority. In my opinion, therefore, the justices came to a right decision and the appeal fails.

[1] [1913] 2 K.B. 328. [2] Ibid. 331.

BYRNE J. I agree. Mr. Van Oss contends that the meaning of the word "available" is that there is no sound reason why that route should not be used by children. I am bound to say that I cannot read that meaning into the word but, as it appears in the Act of 1944, all that is meant by the "nearest available "route" is the method by which the two miles are to be measured from the child's house to the school in order to ascertain whether it is a walking distance.

PARKER J. I agree with both judgments which have been delivered.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Jaques & Co. for Girling, Wilson & Bailey, Margate; Sharpe, Pritchard & Co. for Gerald Bishop, Maidstone.

[CHANCERY DIVISION.]

* In re GOOD'S LEASE.
GOOD v. TRUSTEE OF THE PROPERTY OF W., A BANKRUPT, AND W.

1954
Jan. 19, 20.
Harman J.

[1953 G. 2631.]

Landlord and Tenant — Forfeiture of lease — Mortgage — Relief for underlessee—"Underlessee"—Agreement to execute legal charge—Whether mortgagee an "underlessee" — Assignment of lease — Guarantee for sum lent by bank to assignee—Deposit of documents relating to the property by assignee with guarantor—Bankruptcy of assignee — Action by landlord against trustee in bankruptcy and assignee for forfeiture—Intervention in action by guarantor—Application under Law of Property Act, 1925, for order vesting property in guarantor—Law of Property Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 20), ss. 87 (1), 146 (4) (5) (d).
Mortgage. "Underlessee."

A lessee, with the lessor's permission, assigned a lease of certain premises to an assignee, who subsequently became bankrupt. Before the assignee was adjudicated bankrupt, his bank account was guaranteed and, in consideration of the guarantee, he deposited the lease and the assignment with the guarantor, together with a document under hand, whereby he undertook, in the event of the guarantor being called on to pay any sum under the guarantee, to execute a proper legal charge or mortgage of the property to secure all moneys for the time being paid under the guarantee.

1954

Good's Lease, In re.

In view of the rent being in arrear and of the bankruptcy of the assignee, the lessor commenced an action against the trustee of the property of the bankrupt and the bankrupt, claiming possession, arrears of rent and mesne profits.

The bank having called on the guarantor to pay a sum of money under the guarantee, the guarantor applied, under section 146 (4) of the Law of Property Act, 1925, by summons in the lessor's action, for an order vesting the premises in him for the residue of the term of the lease:—

Held, that the guarantor was a person entitled to ask for relief as underlessee within section 146 (4) of the Act; and that, if he was able and willing to pay all arrears of rent payable up to the time when the new instrument was executed, and to execute a proper instrument putting on himself all the covenants in the lease in so far as the lessor required them, it would be right to give him the relief for which he asked.

Procedure summons.

On November 16, 1945, Leslie Thomas Good granted a lease of certain property to a limited company. On April 19, 1950, the company, with the lessor's permission, assigned the term to W. Harold Tussell, the applicant, guaranteed to Barclays Bank Ld. repayment by W. of £1,000, lent by the bank, and he deposited with the guarantor the deeds and documents of the property set out in the schedule thereto, being the lease and assignment, and by an instrument under hand undertook, in the event of the guarantor being called on to pay any sum under the guarantee, to execute at his own cost, when called on, a proper legal charge or mortgage of the property to secure all moneys for the time being paid by the guarantor under the guarantee.

By a letter dated June 15, 1953, the bank made a formal demand on the guarantor for payment of the amount of his liability under the guarantee on June 8, 1953, the date on which a receiving order in bankruptcy was made against W. Since the date of that letter the guarantor had paid to the bank £300 on account of the guarantee and had agreed with the bank to discharge the balance by monthly instalments.

On November 3, 1953, an action was commenced (by a specially indorsed writ) by the lessor against the trustee of the property of W. and W., in which the lessor claimed possession, arrears of rent and mesne profits.

The applicant by summons in the action under section 146 (4) of the Law of Property Act, 1925, sought an order vesting the property in him for the residue of the term of the lease on such terms as the court might deem fit including the execution by him of a deed covenanting to perform during the residue of the term all the lessee's covenants and conditions contained in the lease.

M. J. Roth for the applicant.

B. L. A. O'Malley for the respondents.

Case cited in argument: Warden, etc., of Sir Roger Cholmeley's School at Highgate v. Sewell.[1]

HARMAN J. This is an application by summons in an action for possession by the landlord against one W., a permitted assign of a lease created by the landlord, but who had been adjudicated bankrupt. The action was brought against the trustee as the person in whom the term had become vested, and against the bankrupt as being the person in occupation or possession of the property. [His Lordship stated the facts and continued:]

The defendant W. had an overdraft at Barclays Bank, and they, on June 15, 1953, called on the applicant, as guarantor, to pay them a sum of money under that guarantee. He has paid them a sum of £300 on account and has therefore become entitled under the instrument of charge, if he calls on W., to have executed a proper legal mortgage, which, if called on, W. and his trustee would be bound to execute. The applicant now applies by summons in the lessor's action to have relief against the forfeiture. He asks for an order vesting the leasehold premises in him for the residue of the term of the lease in reliance on section 146 (4) of the Law of Property Act, 1925, which repeated section 4 of the Conveyancing Act, 1892, by which later enactment for the first time underlessees were given a right to relief in forfeiture actions. Subsection (4) of section 146 of the Act of 1925, provides: "Where a lessor is proceeding by action or "otherwise to enforce a right of re-entry or forfeiture under "any covenant, proviso, or stipulation in a lease, or for non-"payment of rent,"—here the action is on both counts—"the "court may, on application by any person claiming as under-"lessee any estate or interest in the property comprised in the "lease or any part thereof, either in the lessor's action (if any) "or in any action brought by such person for that purpose, make "an order vesting, for the whole term of the lease or any less "term, the property comprised in the lease or any part thereof "in any person entitled as under-lessee to any estate or interest "in such property upon such conditions as to execution of any "deed or other document . . ." as the court thinks fit.

"Underlease" is defined by subsection (5) as including "an "agreement for an underlease where the underlessee has become "entitled to have his underlease granted." It is comparatively familiar law that relief under that section or its predecessor, the Act of 1892, has been given to mortgagees by sub-demise. That is not surprising, because a mortgagee by sub-demise, of course, has a term vested in him. But, so far as I know, there is no authority—none has been called to my attention—for similar relief being given to a person not having a legal term or any term vested in him and therefore having no estate in the property, though in a sense he has an interest in it, as having a right to a charge on it.

[1] [1893] 2 Q.B. 254.

1954

Good's Lease, In re.

Harman J.

But the definition does include in the word "underlease" "an "agreement for an underlease." That must mean that the legislature intended a person having not only an underlease but having an agreement for an underlease to be included in the scope of the section.

The right of the applicant is a right to call on the debtor to execute a proper legal charge or mortgage. It is said that that right is a right to have a charge by way of legal mortgage such as is envisaged by section 87 of the Law of Property Act, which, as is well known, does not demise a term or do anything but charge property by way of legal mortgage. But the effect is that (subsection (1)) "the mortgagee shall have the same protection, "powers and remedies . . . as if (b) where the mortgage is a "mortgage of a term of years absolute, a sub-term less by one "day than the term vested in the mortgagor had been thereby "created in favour of the mortgagee." Therefore, as between him and his mortgagor, he is in the same position as if he had a mortgage by sub-demise. I think, on the whole, that it cannot make any difference that the equitable chargee is entitled under the covenant to have a charge by way of legal mortgage. He is in the same position as though he were entitled to have a mortgage direct by sub-demise.

Apart from that, the words of this charge are "a proper legal "charge or mortgage," and I think that the mortgagee could choose which form his security should take, and could ask for a mortgage of a sub-demise of the term from W. or his trustee. But he has not made that demand, and another point taken is that he does not come within the definition because by definition an underlessee is a person having an agreement for an underlease only where he has become entitled to have his underlease granted. In my judgment, he became entitled to have his underlease granted, in effect, directly he paid the money to the bank, and the fact that he did not make a formal demand cannot make any difference to his position. It appears to me, therefore, that the applicant is a person in a position to come as underlessee within section 146 (4) and ask for relief.

But that is not the end of the matter, because the giving of such relief is a discretionary matter. The applicant offers to pay up all the arrears of rent and to enter into direct covenants with the landlord in terms which correspond, so far as the landlord requires it, with those of the lease itself. It is true that there was in the lease a covenant by the lessee binding him not to assign or underlet without permission, but there is no suggestion that Mr. Trussell, the applicant is not a respectable and responsible person. If the landlord had wished to take the point that he was not bound to permit an assignment to the applicant or to allow him to become an underlessee because he was not a responsible party, it was for the landlord to take that point, but he has not done so. It appears to me that, if the applicant is able and willing to pay all the arrears of rent payable up to the time when the new instrument is executed, and to execute a proper instrument putting on himself all the covenants in the lease of November 16, 1949, in so far as the landlord requires them, it would be right to give the applicant the relief that he asks.

1954
GOOD'S LEASE, In re.
Harman J.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors: Albin, Hunt & Stein; Cartwright, Cunningham, Haselgrove & Co.

J. L. D.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

 STUDHOLME v. SOUTH WESTERN GAS BOARD.

[1951 S. No. 4156.]

1954
Jan. 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 20.
Lynskey J.

Gas—Nationalization—Liabilities transferred—Agreement by solicitor with gas undertaking—Undertaking vested in area board—Reference to undertaker in agreement to be read as if reference to area board—Remuneration to be calculated on the basis of undertaker's share and loan capital—Whether board's share and loan capital to be substituted—"Loan capital"—Meaning—Gas stock—Finance Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 9), s. 8 (5)—Gas Act, 1948 (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 67), s. 17 (3) (b).
Company. Revenue—Stamp duty.

By a service agreement made between the plaintiff and the Severn Valley Gas Corporation Ld. the plaintiff was appointed solicitor to the corporation. Clause 2 provided that the plaintiff was to do all routine legal and administrative work, for which he was to be paid a general retaining fee calculated at £600 per annum per million on issued share and loan capital of the corporation at end of each financial year. Clause 3 provided that the plaintiff was to be given the refusal of parliamentary and legal work for the corporation's subsidiary companies to be charged to the party concerned at professional rates. By virtue of the Gas Act, 1948, on May 1, 1949, the corporation and six of its 26 subsidiaries vested in the defendant board. The plaintiff claimed the balance of his remuneration from April 1, 1949, to March 31, 1951. He claimed that by virtue of section 17 of the Gas Act any reference in his agreement to the corporation, whether express or implied, should be read as if the name of the defendant board were substituted for that of the corporation and, therefore, that his retaining fee should be calculated by reference to the issued share and loan capital of the defendant board, and that the services to which the agreement related were to be reasonably equivalent services under the defendant board:—

Held that, section 17 (3) (b) only required a reference in the agreement to the undertaker [the corporation] to be substituted for that of the appropriate area board "as respects anything falling "to be done on or after the vesting date." The agreement only required the undertaker to pay the retaining fee fixed by the agreement; it did not require it to issue shares or create loan capital and, therefore, paragraph (b) did not operate to substitute a

---

[Reported by Miss C. J. ELLIS, Barrister-at-Law.]

1954

Studholme
v.
South
Western Gas Board.

reference to the defendant board's issued share and loan capital for that of the corporation's. Since the corporation was dissolved on May 1, 1949, by virtue of section 17 (9), there was no share or loan capital existing at the end of the financial year on which the plaintiff's retaining fee could be calculated; accordingly, the board's obligation to pay the fees in accordance with clause 2 of the agreement became impossible of performance and the agreement became frustrated from the vesting date.

Held also that, although the board might have been able to find services reasonably equivalent to those which the plaintiff should have performed for the subsidiary companies, since the fees were to be paid by the subsidiary companies concerned, 20 of which were allocated to other area boards, the defendant board had no power to remunerate the plaintiff in accordance with the terms of clause 3 of his agreement, and in this respect also the agreement became impossible of performance and frustrated as from the vesting date.

If, contrary to the first holding, the plaintiff was entitled to have his retaining fee calculated on the basis of the issued share and loan capital of the defendant board, it having been admitted that the board had no issued share capital, the question arose as to what was the board's loan capital, if any:—

Held that, loan capital, adopting the definition in section 8 of the Finance Act, 1899, meant any funded debt and any capital raised by any corporation, company or body of persons which was borrowed or had the character of borrowed money; that the ultimate responsibility of the area board to the gas council for meeting obligations of gas stock issued by the council for the purpose of satisfying any right to compensation, the responsibility for which was allocated to the area board, was a statutory debt owed by the board to the council and was the loan capital of the board; and that money raised by the gas council by the issue of stock for general purposes permitted by the Act and actually lent to the defendant board was loan capital.

Action.

The plaintiff, Richard Home Studholme, claimed the balance of his remuneration from April 1, 1949, to March 31, 1951, under an agreement for service made between him and the Severn Valley Gas Corporation Ld., which he alleged was due to him from the South Western Gas Board. As a result of the Gas Act, 1948, the plaintiff claimed that his agreement with the corporation became vested in the defendant board on May 1, 1949, and that by virtue of section 17 [1] of the Act the agreement

[1] Gas Act, 1948, s. 17: "(1) Subject to the provisions of this Part of this Act, all property, rights, liabilities and obligations which, immediately before such date as may be appointed by order of the Minister (in this Act referred to as 'the vesting date'), were property, rights, liabilities and obligations of an undertaker to whom this Part of this Act applies, shall on the vesting date vest by virtue of this Act and without further assurance in such area board as may be determined by order of the Minister: . . . (3) Subject to the provisions of this Part of this Act, every agreement to which any undertaker to whom this Part of this Act applies was a party immediately before the vesting date, whether in writing or not, and whether or not of such a nature that rights, liabilities and obligations thereunder could be assigned by the undertaker, shall, unless its terms or subject matter make it impossible that it should have effect as modified in manner provided by this subsection, have effect as from the vesting date as if—(a) the appropriate board had to be construed as if made with the defendant board and any reference however worded, and whether express or implied, to the corporation had to be read as if the name of the defendant board were substituted in the agreement for that of the corporation.

The following statement of facts is taken from the judgment: The plaintiff was admitted a solicitor in 1929. In 1934 a Major Day and a Colonel Dawnay formed the Severn Valley Gas Corporation Ld., a holding company formed with the object of obtaining control of various gas undertakings by acquiring the majority holding of their shares or stock. A second company, known as Gas Consolidation Ld., was later formed, which was also a holding company with similar objects to those of the corporation. The two companies operated from the same office, using notepaper bearing both their names. They employed the plaintiff at a joint salary of £1,000 a year to do legal, administrative, technical and financial work for both the companies. At a meeting of the directors of the Severn Valley Gas Corporation Ld. held on June 7, 1938, the plaintiff's position with both companies was defined in the following resolution: "That Mr. "Studholme be appointed solicitor to the corporation and to its "subsidiary companies and that for such services as outlined "in a memorandum dated June 7, 1938, he be paid a retaining "fee at the rate of £400 per annum per million pounds of issued "share and loan capital of the corporation to the nearest "£100,000, such fee to date from 1st April, 1938." The memorandum there referred to was described as "Summary of "arrangements with Mr. R. H. Studholme" and headed "Severn "Valley Gas Corporation Ld." It provided: "(1) Mr. Stud-"holme to be appointed solicitor to the company. (2) General "had been a party to the agreement; "(b) for any reference (however "worded and whether express or im-"plied) to the undertaker there were "substituted, as respects anything fall-"ing to be done on or after the vesting "date, a reference to the appropriate "board; . . . (e) in the case of an "agreement for the rendering of per-"sonal services to the undertaker, "the services to which the agreement "relates were, on and after the vest-"ing date, any services under the "appropriate board, to be selected by "that board, which are reasonably "equivalent services; and (f) save as "provided by the three last preceding "paragraphs, for any reference (how-"ever worded and whether express "or implied) to the undertaking of "the undertaker or any part of that "undertaking or to the limits of "supply of the undertaker or any "part thereof there were substituted, "as respects anything falling to be "done on or after the vesting date, a "reference to so much of the business "carried on by the appropriate board "as corresponds to the undertaking "or part of the undertaking of the "undertaker or, as the case may be, "a reference to the area comprised in "the said limits immediately before "the vesting date or part thereof. "(4) Every agreement, whether in "writing or not, and every document "(not being an agreement or a docu-"ment to which the last preceding "subsection applies or an enactment) "which refers whether specifically or "generally to any such undertaker "shall be construed in accordance "with the provisions of the last "preceding subsection, so far as "applicable. . . . (9) Subject to the "next following section, every under-"taker to whom this Part of this Act "applies, being a body corporate, "shall be dissolved on the vesting "date."

1954

Studholme v. South Western Gas Board.

"work for retaining fee. Minor professional work for the company and for all its subsidiary companies present and future advising on legal, Parliamentary and secretarial questions, drawing service agreements, simple public lighting agreements (not drafting complicated agreements or disposing of differences with other parties), routine drafting such as tariff contracts, forms, notices, resolutions, etc., operation of insurance scheme, watching Parliamentary Bills and Orders, attending board meetings as hitherto, acting as director of subsidiaries as required and for Mr. Dawnay when on holiday, all to be covered by a general retaining fee calculated at £400 p.a. per million on issued share and loan capital at end of each financial year (plus travelling expenses), payable half yearly, or as otherwise arranged. (3) Other work. Parliamentary or legal work not covered by retaining fee, such as special orders, bills, special agreement, incorporation of companies, trust deeds, prospectuses, new articles, etc., and conveyancing, all to be charged to the party concerned at or below normal professional rates. Mr. Studholme will be given the refusal of the legal and Parliamentary work of the subsidiary companies. (4) Office accommodation, staff, etc. Office accommodation will be provided by Dawnay Day & Co. Ld. as part of their secretarial services. Mr. Studholme pays his own office staff. (5) Generally. (a) Work covered by the retaining fees from Dawnay Day & Co. Ld. and the gas holding companies is to be given precedence over other work so far as reasonably possible, and other work must not include litigation, unless otherwise agreed. (b) These arrangements have effect from 1st April, 1938. (c) Unless otherwise agreed, the arrangements would be subject to twelve months' notice by either side expiring on any 31st March." That document was signed by the plaintiff. A similar resolution was passed by the directors of Gas Consolidation Ld.

In August, 1939, the plaintiff was called up and remained with the Armed Forces until 1946, when he returned to the employment of both companies. On March 5, 1946, he became a director of the Severn Valley Gas Corporation and was also appointed general manager of the associated gas companies at a salary of £2,000. On July 1, 1947, the plaintiff's retaining fee for the Severn Valley Gas Corporation was increased to £600 per annum per million pounds of issued share capital and loan capital for routine legal work for the corporation and its subsidiaries.

On July 31, 1948, the Gas Act was passed, by which 12 area gas boards were created, being geographically divided throughout the country, each board being responsible for the supply of gas in its particular area. A gas council was also established. Section 5 set out the constitution of the area boards and the gas council and by subsection (1) provided: "Every area board and the gas council shall be a body corporate. . . ." Section 15 included as undertakers holding companies having one or more subsidiary companies which were undertakers on certain conditions.

The vesting date under the Gas Act, 1948, was May 1, 1949. At that date the Severn Valley Gas Corporation had 26 subsidiary companies in various parts of the country. Of those 26, six were vested in the defendant board and the other 20 in three other area boards. The Gas Consolidated Co. Ld. undertaking was vested in the West Midland Gas Board and its subsidiaries were also divided amongst that and other boards.

For three years prior to the vesting date the plaintiff's remuneration from the Severn Valley Gas Corporation averaged by way of retaining fee under clause 2 of the agreement £754 8s. 11d. a year, and under clause 3 £1,310 14s. 7d. a year, a total remuneration under the agreement of £2,065 3s. 6d. a year. The remuneration under clause 3 was paid in part by the Severn Valley Gas Corporation and in part by its 26 subsidiaries.

Gilbert Paull Q.C. and Maurice Lyell for the plaintiff.
John Megaw Q.C. and Michael Kerr for the defendant board.

The following cases were cited in argument: John Hudson & Co. Ld. v. Kirkness[2]; Attorney-General v. South Wales Electrical Power Distribution Co.[3]; Drive Yourself Hire Co. (London) Ld. v. Strutt[4]; Atlantic Maritime Co. Inc. v. Gibbon[5]; Barnsley District Coking Co. Ld. v. East Midlands Gas Board[6]; The Glamorganshire[7]; Cox v. Hawkes[8]; Nokes v. Doncaster Amalgamated Collieries Ld.[9]; Shepherd v. Henderson[10]; Hirji Mulji v. Cheong Yue Steamship Co. Ld.[11]; In re Dominion Students' Hall Trust[12]; Branca v. Cobarro.[13]

Cur. adv. vult.

Jan. 20. LYNSKEY J., having stated the facts as set out above, continued: The agreement which I am considering is an agreement for rendering personal services. If it had not been for the provisions of subsection (3) of section 17 it would be impossible of performance (Nokes v. Doncaster Amalgamated Collieries Ld.[1]) as the contract was only to render personal services to the Severn Valley Gas Corporation. By the provisions of section 17 (9) that corporation, being a body corporate, was dissolved on the vesting date. The question I have to consider is whether,

[2] [1954] 1 W.L.R. 40; [1954] 1 All E.R. 29.
[3] [1919] 2 K.B. 636; 36 T.L.R. 126.
[4] [1953] 3 W.L.R. 1111; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1475.
[5] [1953] 3 W.L.R. 714; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1086.
[6] Unreported decision of Roxburgh J. dated June 27, 1952.
[7] (1888) 13 App.Cas. 454.
[8] (1890) 15 App.Cas. 506; 6 T.L.R. 465.
[9] [1940] A.C. 1014; 56 T.L.R. 988; [1940] 3 All E.R. 549.
[10] (1881) 7 App.Cas. 49.
[11] [1926] A.C. 497; 42 T.L.R. 359.
[12] [1947] Ch. 183; 63 T.L.R. 90.
[13] [1947] K.B. 854; 63 T.L.R. 408; [1947] 2 All E.R. 101.
[1] [1940] A.C. 1014, 1023.

1954

Studholme v. South Western Gas Board.

Lynskey J.

assuming the contract is modified as provided by subsection (3), it would still be possible of performance. So far as the plaintiff's services are concerned, subsection (3) (e) enables the board to substitute for the contractual services, reasonably equivalent services selected by the board, and although the services may be varied under paragraph (e) of subsection (3), there is no express power given by the section (or indeed any part of the Act) to vary the remuneration for those services. The scheme of the whole section appears to be that persons contracting with the undertakers shall retain the rights they had as against the undertakers with the substitution of the board as the party liable.

It is said, however, in this case on behalf of the plaintiff that, as his retaining fee was to be calculated at £600 per annum per million on issued share and loan capital at the end of each financial year, the section requires that "the issued share and "loan capital of the Severn Valley Gas Corporation" must be read as "the issued share and loan capital of the South Western "Gas Board" which, according to the statement of claim, means substituting £16,713,032 for £1,382,971 as the figure on which the £600 per million per annum has to be calculated. I feel sure that this result was never envisaged by those who drafted or passed the Act.

The defendants did not avail themselves of the plaintiff's services. They sought to give him notice shortly after the vesting date, but he insisted on notice in accordance with the terms of his agreement to expire on March 31, 1951. The notice was given on March 20, 1950, to expire on March 31, 1951. The defendants, or those representing them, appear to have thought the agreement was binding on them, but there is no plea of estoppel and no point was made as to this before me.

It seems to me that the real issue in this case is what is the proper construction of section 17 (3) (b). Section 17 (3) (a) enables the board to be treated as a party to the agreement: but (b) sets out the extent to which the board as from the vesting date is to become liable under the agreement. Paragraph (b) does not provide that for any reference in the agreement to the undertaker there shall be substituted a reference to the appropriate board. The words are limited. The substitution is only to be made "as respects anything falling to be done on or after "the vesting date." The words "falling to be done" means falling to be done under the agreement, but by the board in substitution for the undertaker. What falls to be done by the board here is to pay the plaintiff the retaining fee fixed by the agreement. That fee was fixed in relation to the undertakers' issued share and loan capital of the Severn Valley Corporation. The issued share and loan capital was the yardstick by which the basis of the retaining fee was fixed. There is nothing in the agreement which called on the undertaker to issue shares or acquire loan capital. The agreement was made on the basis that shares had been issued and might vary from time to time, but there was no obligation on the undertaker to issue such shares in the future or acquire such loan capital. In fact, the Severn Valley Gas Corporation had no loan capital. The issue of shares or the creation of loan capital was not something falling to be done under the agreement with the undertakers, and paragraph (b) therefore, in my view, does not operate to substitute a reference to the board's issued share and loan capital at the end of each financial year for that of the Severn Valley Gas Corporation.

As by the Gas Act the Severn Valley Gas Corporation was dissolved on May 1, 1949, there was thereafter no issued share or loan capital existing at the end of each of the succeeding financial years and nothing therefore on which the plaintiff's retaining fees could be calculated. The obligation of the Area Gas Board to pay the retaining fee assessed in accordance with clause 2 of the plaintiff's agreement became impossible of performance. Under paragraph 3 of his agreement the plaintiff was to be given the refusal of the legal and Parliamentary work of the subsidiary companies and was to charge his professional fees for such work to the party concerned, that is, in the proper case, to the subsidiary company. At the date of the vesting order there were some 26 of these subsidiaries and 20 of these had been allocated to other area boards. It might have been possible for the area board under section 17 (3) (e) to direct the performance by the plaintiff of reasonably equivalent services, but they had no power to remunerate him under the terms of his agreement for such services in place of the services he would previously have rendered the subsidiary companies. The result was that this part of the plaintiff's agreement also became impossible of performance by the board. A basic part of any agreement for the rendering of personal service is the remuneration the employer is to pay under the agreement for such service. Applying the modifications provided for in section 17 (3) as I understand them, the board would not be able to pay the retaining fee called for under clause 2 of the plaintiff's agreement as the basis on which it was calculated had ceased to exist after the vesting date. They would not have been able to procure the giving of the offer to the plaintiff of the work of some 20 of the subsidiary companies or procure payment by such companies for such work as those companies had ceased to exist on the vesting date and their property, rights and obligations vested in other area boards.

In my view, therefore, the agreement between the plaintiff and the Severn Valley Gas Corporation by its terms and subject-matter even when modified as set out in section 17 (3) made it impossible that it should have effect. Although the agreement between the plaintiff and the Severn Valley Gas Corporation may have vested in the defendants, as it was not possible of performance even as modified under section 17 (3) the agreement became frustrated as from the vesting date.

1954

Studholme v. South Western Gas Board.

Lynskey J.

By their defence the defendants, while denying that the plaintiff is entitled to any remuneration under or by virtue of his agreement with the Severn Valley Gas Corporation, admit that he is entitled to reasonable remuneration for the period from May 1, 1949, to March 31, 1951, and they admit that the reasonable remuneration for such period would be £3,958 5s. 1d., and after taking credit for £635 19s. 9d. already paid to the plaintiff admit that there is due and owing to the plaintiff the sum of £3,322 5s. 4d. In view of this admission, the plaintiff is entitled to judgment for this sum against the defendants.

This is enough to dispose of this case, but in view of the arguments addressed to me by counsel for both parties I propose to deal with the further question debated, although, of course, it can have no effect on the result which I have already indicated.

If I am wrong in the view I have taken of the construction of section 17, and the plaintiff is entitled to have his retaining fee calculated on the basis of the issued share and loan capital of the board, the question then arises as to what was the issued share and loan capital of the board on March 31, 1950, and March 31, 1951—if, indeed, there was any such capital. It is common ground that there was no issue of share capital by the area board. The plaintiff, however, contends that the amount of gas stock for which the ultimate responsibility for meeting the obligations in respect of such stock is allocated to the area board under a scheme under section 44 of the Gas Act, is capital loan of this area board.

I was referred to section 8 (5) of the Finance Act, 1899, as to what is a capital loan for the purposes of the Finance Acts, and "loan capital" there means (inter alia) any funded debt by whatever name known and any capital raised by any corporation, company or body of persons which is borrowed or has the character of borrowed money.

Section 52 of the Finance Act, 1946, exempts from the stamp duty imposed by section 8 of the Finance Act, 1899, documents connected with nationalization schemes and loan capital issued to raise money required to be paid as consideration for the transfer to the nationalized body of an undertaking. But for this exemption it would seem that money so raised would have attracted this duty as loan capital.

The scheme of the Gas Act, 1948, is to create a gas council as a body corporate and 12 area gas boards, each again being a body corporate. The gas council by section 43 is to issue stock to be known as British Gas Stock. It is empowered to issue such stock for the purpose of exercising its powers under section 42 and required to create and issue such stock for the purpose of satisfying any right to compensation which under the Act is expressly required to be satisfied by the issue of stock. By section 25 of the Act every holder of securities of any undertaker not being an undertaker to which section 18 of the Act applies shall be entitled to be compensated by the issue to him by the gas council of British Gas Stock. The British Gas Council become responsible to the stockholder for the redemption of the stock and payment of the interest on it, and the stockholders are given no rights directly against the area gas boards. On the other hand, by section 17 (1) all property, rights, liabilities and obligations of the undertakers vest in such area board as the Minister may determine. Under section 44 (2), however, a scheme is to be settled by the gas council and the Minister to determine the shares in which the ultimate responsibility for meeting the obligations in respect of the issue of stock is to be borne and the scheme must provide for allocating to the area boards ultimate responsibility for any stock issued for the purpose of satisfying rights to compensation having regard to the extent to which the assets in respect of which the compensation is payable vest by virtue of the Act or are subsequently transferred to the respective boards.

By section 44 (3): "Each area board shall, at such times as "may be directed by the Gas Council, pay to the council—(a) "such sums as may be necessary to enable the council to make "any payments, or to refund to themselves any payments made, "in respect of interest on or the redemption of British Gas Stock, "including payments into a sinking fund, so far as the payments "are attributable to stock for which the area board are ultimately "responsible under this section; and (b) such contributions "towards the expenses incurred by the Gas Council in issuing "any British Gas Stock and in managing that stock as bear to "the total expenses so incurred the same proportion as the "amount of the stock in respect of which the area board are "ultimately responsible under this section bears to the total "amount of the stock. Any sums paid by an area board under "this subsection to enable the Gas Council to make payments in "respect of interest on British Gas Stock shall be deemed to be "annual payments, and any sums so paid to enable the Council "to make payments in respect of the redemption of such stock "shall be deemed to be capital payments."

Section 45 provides for a Treasury guarantee and the gas council are the body responsible for meeting any liability incurred by the Treasury in implementing the guarantee.

By section 46 a central guarantee fund is to be created and by subsection (1) of that section the gas council's solicitors shall maintain "a fund, which shall be known as the central "guarantee fund, for the following purposes—(a) in the event of "any area board or the Gas Council being unable temporarily to "discharge their obligations in respect of the payment of interest "on, or the redemption or repayment of, any British Gas Stock "or any temporary loan, or in respect of any payment by way "of compensation to a local authority, for enabling those pay-"ments to be made out of the fund; (b) for repaying to the Studholme v. South Western Gas Board.

1954

Lynskey J.

"Treasury any payments made by them for the purposes of ful"filling any guarantee given by them under the last preceding "section; and the moneys in the central guarantee fund shall "be applied by the Gas Council for those purposes only."

No scheme was settled by the council and the minister under section 44 until July 31, 1952, but the council had made provisional allocations of stock for such purposes to the South Western Gas Board on March 31, 1950, of £11,376,595, and on March 31, 1951, of £12,714,188 to the South Western Gas Board in respect of compensation stock. There was no direct obligation of the area boards to the stockholders. The obligation imposed by the statute on the area boards is to be the ultimate responsibility of the gas council for the payment of interest on and the redemption of that gas stock. The payments are to be made under that obligation at such times as may be directed by the gas council, who are given complete control as to rate of interest and amounts of repayments made under the Act, namely, the Gas (Stock) Regulations, 1949 (S.I. 1949, No. 751).

The British Gas Stock issued by the gas council consisted of British Gas 3 per cent. Guaranteed 1990/95 and British Gas 3½ per cent. Guaranteed Stock 1969/71. This stock, as far as the gas council is concerned, was clearly a funded loan. The question I have to decide is whether the area board's ultimate responsibility to the gas council for meeting obligations of the stock, the responsibility for which was allocated to the area board, can properly be described as loan capital as being a funded debt or capital raised which is borrowed or has the character of borrowed money.

I have come to the conclusion, although I must say with considerable reluctance, on the facts of this case that the statutory debt owed by the area board to the gas council is a funded debt and, having regard to the provisions of section 44 (2) (a), the credit obtained has the character of borrowed money. Payments required to be made by the area board to the gas council to enable the council to make payments for the redemption of the gas stock are by section 44 (3) deemed to be capital payments. If the ultimate responsibility had been allocated by the gas council and the Minister under the scheme on March 31, 1950/51, that responsibility would be a funded debt and loan capital of the area board. The fact that only a provisional allocation had been made at those dates would not, in my view, prevent the credit thereby obtained being loan capital. Those entitled to such compensation by way of gas stock were entitled to such compensation at the vesting date or at the conversion date and the area board's obligation when the final allocation is made dates back to the vesting date.

In addition to issuing the gas stock required for compensation, the gas council under section 43 (1) (a) may create and issue any stock required for the purpose of exercising their powers under section 42. Section 42 reads: "(1) Each area board and the "Gas Council may, with the consent of the Minister and with "the approval of the Treasury or in accordance with the terms "of any general authority issued by the Minister with the "approval of the Treasury, borrow temporarily, by way of over-"draft or otherwise, such sums as the board or council, as the "case may be, may require for meeting their obligations or "discharging their functions under this Act. (2) The Gas "Council may, with the consent of the Minister and the approval "of the Treasury, borrow money by the issue of British Gas "Stock, for all or any of the following purposes, that is to say— "(a) the redemption of any British Gas Stock; (b) the provision "of money for meeting any expenditure incurred by any area "board or by the Gas Council in connection with any works "the cost of which is properly chargeable to capital account; "(c) the provision of any working capital required by any area "board or by the Gas Council; (d) the provision of money "required for the payment of compensation by area boards "under this Act, except payments to local authorities in respect "of loans and advances; (e) any other purpose for which capital "moneys are properly applicable by any area board or the Gas "Council, including the repayment of any money temporarily "borrowed under the last preceding subsection for any of the "purposes mentioned in this subsection; and (f) any other "payment which any area board or the Gas Council are autho-"rised to make and which ought in the opinion of the Gas "Council to be spread over a term of years. (3) The aggregate "of the amounts outstanding in respect of the principal of any "stock issued by the Gas Council, otherwise than for the purpose "of paying compensation under Part II of this Act whether in "stock or in cash, and in respect of any temporary loans raised "by the Gas Council or any area board, shall not at any time "exceed the sum of two hundred and fifty million pounds: "Provided that nothing in this subsection shall prevent the Gas "Council from borrowing in excess of the said sum for the "purpose of redeeming any British Gas Stock which they are "required or entitled to redeem, or of repaying any money "temporarily borrowed under subsection (1) of this section. "(4) Save as aforesaid, neither an area board nor the Gas "Council shall borrow any money."

It is quite clear that the powers given by section 43 for the issue of gas stock for carrying out the gas council's powers under section 42 constitute borrowed money. It is not stock issued for the purpose of compensation but stock issued for the purpose of borrowing money from stockholders to be applied for the purposes set out in section 42.

In this case the gas council borrowed money on issued gas stock and the money was actually lent to the defendant gas board, and whatever view may be taken of the allocation of responsibility for compensation gas stock, it seems to me reasonably clear that stock issued for borrowing money and the loan

1954

STUDHOLME v. SOUTH WESTERN GAS BOARD.

Lynskey J.

of that money to the area board for what obviously are mostly capital purposes, in any event which called for a funded debt, must be treated as loan capital. According to the reports, the defendant board received £3,500,000 from the gas council under section 42 of the Act, and that, in my view, whatever may be said about the rights or wrongs of my decision with regard to the compensation stock, must clearly be loan capital. The ultimate result is that there will be judgment for the plaintiff for the admitted amount set out in the earlier part of my judgment.

Judgment for the plaintiff for the amount admitted by the defendants.

Solicitors: Beaumont & Son; Slaughter & May.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

C. A.

1954
Jan. 18, 19.

Singleton, Jenkins and Hodson L.JJ.

* HARRISON v. METROPOLITAN-VICKERS ELECTRICAL CO. LD. SAME v. SAME.

[1952 H. No. 1682.]

Factory — Floor — Opening — Meaning of "floor"—Statutory duty to fence—Foundry with sand bed—Unfenced hole in sand—Whether "opening in floor"—Injury to workman through falling into hole —Liability of employer—Contributory negligence—Workman walks backwards into hole—Principles applicable—Factories Act, 1937 (1 Edw. 8 & 1 Geo. 6, c. 67), s. 25 (3).

Statutory Duty—Contributory negligence.

The sand bed of a foundry on which casting operations are carried out is the "floor" of a factory within the meaning of section 25 (3) of the Factories Act, 1937, and consequently, if an excavation is made in the sand, it is the duty of the employer of men working on the sand bed to see that the opening is securely fenced.

Decision of Stable J. affirmed.

APPEAL by the defendants and cross-appeal by the plaintiff from Stable J., sitting at Manchester Assizes.

The plaintiff, John Alfred Deakin Harrison, was employed by the defendant company as a coremaker in a foundry carried on by the company at Trafford Park, Manchester, the premises in question being a factory within the meaning of the Factories Act, 1937. On November 27, 1951, the plaintiff, with another man, was carrying a ladle of molten metal for the purpose of pouring it into a mould. The ladle was slung from a shank 7 ft. 3 ins. long, and the men were walking backwards when, on coming to the edge of an iron gangway, the plaintiff fell into a pit which had been excavated in the sand bed of the foundry immediately adjoining the edge of the gangway and was injured. He brought an action for damages against the defendants, basing his claim (1) on alleged negligence at common law, (2) for breach by the defendants of their statutory duty under section 25 (3)[1] of the Factories Act, in failing securely to fence the hole in the sand, on the ground that it was an opening in the floor within the meaning of section 25 (3), and (3) under section 26 (1) of the Act for failing to provide a safe means of access for the plaintiff to his work. The defendants denied negligence and that they had committed a breach of duty under section 26 (1). With regard to the plaintiff's second head of claim, they contended that the sand bed of the foundry was not a floor within the meaning of section 25 (3) and that consequently they were under no obligation to fence it. They also alleged that the plaintiff had been guilty of contributory negligence.

Stable J. held that there had been no negligence by the defendants at common law and no breach by them of their statutory duty under section 26 (1) of the Act. With regard to the plaintiff's second head of claim, he held that the sand bed of the foundry was a "floor" within section 25 (3) and that the defendants were consequently under a duty to fence it securely. As they had failed to do so, the plaintiff was entitled to damages under that head of claim, which he assessed at £112 2s. 8d. He was of opinion, however, that the plaintiff, by reason of his contributory negligence, was responsible for the accident to the extent of 50 per cent., and he therefore gave judgment in his favour for £56 1s. 4d.

The defendants appealed, and the plaintiff cross-appealed against the finding of contributory negligence.

N. J. Laski Q.C. and Fenton Atkinson Q.C. for the appellants.

R. Marven Everett Q.C. and John Ritchie for the respondent.

The following cases were cited in the argument: Barrington v. Kent Rivers Catchment Board[2]; Hopwood v. Rolls Royce Ld.[3]; Hutchinson v. London and North Eastern Railway Company[4]; Unwin v. Hanson.[5]

SINGLETON L.J. The defendants have a large factory at Trafford Park, Manchester, where they make castings of various kinds and sizes.

The plaintiff, John Alfred Deakin Harrison, was employed in the factory as a coremaker, and on November 27, 1951, he met with an accident when he was working for the defendants. He, and a man named Hatton, had to fill core moulds with molten metal. The molten metal was carried to the mould in a ladle

[1] Factories Act, 1937, s. 25 (3): "All openings in floors shall be "securely fenced, except in so far as "the nature of the work renders such "fencing impracticable."

[2] (1947) 64 T.L.R. 35; [1947] 2 All E.R. 782.

[3] (1947) 176 L.T. 514.

[4] [1942] 1 K.B. 481; 58 T.L.R. 174; [1942] 1 All E.R. 330.

[5] [1891] 2 Q.B. 115; 7 T.L.R. 488.

C. A.
1954
Harrison v. Metropolitan-Vickers Electrical Co. Ld.
Singleton L.J.

which was suspended on a double-handled shank, and one of the men was at each end of the shank. The time came when the contents of the ladle became too cool, or too stiff, for the operation of pouring to be continued successfully, and it was necessary for the men to return to the supply ladle. That meant that one of them had to walk backwards down a narrow way on to a 6-ft. wide steel-flagged gangway, which was at a right-angle to the course they had been taking. The one who walked backwards on this occasion was the plaintiff Harrison. The shank was 7 ft. 3 ins. in length, so that there was not much room for the turn towards the supply ladle across the gangway, and at the edge of it there was a pit, part of which formed the bed of another casting. There was a sheer drop from the gangway of at least 3 ft. 4 ins. As the plaintiff was backing he stepped a shade beyond the gangway and into this space; some of the metal went on his face and he received injuries. There was no warning of any kind, no guard, and the fact that the space was flush with the gangway deprived the plaintiff of the warning which he might have had if the space or the casting had been further from the gangway, as was usually the case.

The plaintiff brought this action claiming damages for negligence, and also for breach of statutory duty under the Factories Act, 1937. The important part of the case arises under section 25 (3) of the Act which provides: "All openings in floors shall "be securely fenced, except in so far as the nature of the work "renders such fencing impracticable."

The plaintiff's case is that the space down which he fell was an opening in the floor. The defendants' reply is that the space was not an opening in the floor in that the space was not in the floor. It is not disputed that it would have been practicable to fence the space; indeed, that was done after the accident. Thus we are face to face with the question as to what is a floor within the meaning of section 25 (3).

The defendants' factory at ground level was mostly sand. The photographs show castings and the like on portions of what appears to be the floor. In certain parts of the factory there are steel-flagged gangways which, according to the defendants' argument, constitute the floor for the purposes of the section. I find it difficult, if not impossible, to say that by constructing gangways, such as they did, the defendants took away the character of the ground level of the factory so as to make that which would normally be considered to be the floor something other than the floor. It is true to say that portions of the sand floor are used for castings, but the normal level of sand is the same as the level of the gangways. A floor may be of stone, or concrete, or wood, or steel, or earth, or sand, or it may be a combination of several substances. The making of a gangway does not mean that the remainder of the ground level ceases to be part of the floor.

Mr. Marven Everett drew our attention to the proviso to regulation 10 of the Grinding of Metals (Miscellaneous Industries) Regulations, 1925. The regulation, which, as Jenkins L.J. pointed out, in (b) makes use of the word "floor," provides: "In "every room, or part thereof, in which cleaning of castings is "done— . . . (b) all accessible parts of the floor shall be properly "swept or otherwise cleaned at least once every day and for this "purpose the floor shall be maintained in a smooth and firm con-"dition so as to permit of such proper sweeping or cleaning." The proviso reads: "Provided that this regulation shall not apply "to—(i) cleaning of castings done upon the foundry floor at or "near the place where metal for the said castings is poured."

The foundry floor in the present case was mostly sand, and parts of the foundry floor were used from time to time for the making of castings, which meant interference with the floor. The floor at the ground level, though it was sand, was still the floor of the factory, and, in my view, it was a floor for the purposes of section 25 (3) of the Act.

The word "floor" was used during the evidence, and, furthermore, on a plan which was made for the defendants the place where the sand is is described as "floor level." I think the ordinary level of the factory, though it was of sand, constituted the floor of the factory; in the floor there was an opening down which the plaintiff stepped backwards and fell. In my view, the judge rightly held that that unfenced opening in the floor constituted a breach of section 25 (3), and that the defendants were responsible in damages.

There were two further heads of claim. One, based upon section 26 (1) of the Act: "There shall, so far as is reasonably "practicable, be provided and maintained safe means of access "to every place at which any person has at any time to work." Stable J. came to the conclusion that the plaintiff could not succeed under that subsection if there was safe means of access. That point has not been argued in this court, though Mr. Marven Everett said he desired to keep it open.

The other claim was that the defendants were negligent in that they had an open space so close to a gangway that a man going backwards, as the plaintiff was, might fall into it, and thus might suffer damage; and it was said that in having such a space the defendants were not taking reasonable care to see that their workmen were not exposed to unnecessary risk. Upon that claim Stable J. held that negligence was not proved. He said: "So far as the evidence goes, Harrison was an experienced "man and so was the one with him. They had both been "working in this factory for a matter of 12 years and each "agreed that during the whole of that time he had never known "a case in which one of these temporary pits had been fenced. "Mr. Beech, the Assistant Superintendent, with 30 years' "experience, told me that in the whole of his experience, neither "in this foundry nor in any other foundry, had he found it to be

C. A.
1954
HARRISON v. METROPOLITAN-VICKERS ELECTRICAL CO. LD.
Singleton L.J.

"the practice, or indeed had he found an example of fencing a "temporary pit. Mr. Gardner, the expert called on behalf of "the plaintiff, agreed with that, but he said in this particular "case, inasmuch as this particular pit was flush with this 6 feet "gangway, he thinks there was an additional risk which should "have been countered by putting up a fence. If this were a "matter of common law liability I should not myself think, and "I should not hold, in view of the overwhelming body of testi-"mony that in these foundries throughout the years it has "never occurred to anybody to fence a pit of this kind, that "there was any common law negligence whatever."

The witness Gardner had referred to the unusual proximity of this space to the gangway, and I gather from the evidence of Beech that there was a departure from the ordinary practice in this case. Normally, as he said, and as the plaintiff's witnesses agreed, temporary holes for castings are not fenced, though permanent holes are. Temporary holes are not, in the ordinary case, right up to the gangway; they are some 12 inches away. If there was a space of 12 inches between the gangway and the hole if a man was backing, when he got to the edge of the gangway and his heel came down upon sand he would know that there was danger. In this case there was no such gap and no temporary rail or anything of that kind.

The judge found that there was no negligence on behalf of the defendants, and in my judgment, this court ought to accept that finding. I am not sure that I should so readily have reached that conclusion if it be right to say that there was a departure from the ordinary practice in that the hole was much closer to the gangway than is normally found. I am not sure that that was present to the judge's mind, though he did refer to the evidence of Gardner.

One further matter has to be considered. There is a cross-appeal on behalf of the plaintiff that the judge ought not upon the evidence before him to have found that the plaintiff was guilty of negligence when he stepped backwards into the hole. Upon that question Stable J. said: "The next matter I have to consider is "the question of contributory negligence and I agree whole-"heartedly with the proposition that acts of omission, of inad-"vertence, of forgetfulness, absence of mind and lack of "concentration are constantly occurring, but to attribute to them "the rather grim description of contributory negligence is like "using an elephant rifle to shoot a rabbit. But this was far "beyond, in my view, a momentary inadvertence or carelessness. "This man, with his mate, was handling this pot of hot metal "and it obviously required the greatest possible care to see that "he did not stumble, or fall, or upset the thing and in the result "burn himself or somebody else, and to step backward without "looking where he was going over 6 feet of metal gangway "straight into a hole which had been there for days, which he "had seen over and over again, and which he knew perfectly "well was not fenced, is in my view the clearest possible example "of what contributory negligence is as contrasted with momentary "carelessness, inadvertence and things like that, or fatigue, or "matters of that kind. I attribute the responsibility in the "proportion of 50–50."

Again, I am not clear that it was present to the judge's mind when he came to that conclusion that there had been a departure from normal practice, in that it was not usual that there should be a hole or a space immediately alongside the gangway, as there was in this case. I do not think that I should have found this man guilty of contributory negligence. I regard it, however, as being primarily a matter for the trial judge. It follows from what I have said that, in my judgment, the judge was right in holding that the plaintiff was entitled to succeed on the basis that there had been a breach by the defendants of the duty they owed to him under section 25 (3) of the Act, and it follows, too, that the cross-appeal ought to be dismissed.

JENKINS L.J. I agree. In my view there is no sufficient reason for holding that the so-called sand floor of the foundry in this case was not a floor within the meaning of section 25 (3) of the Factories Act, 1937. It is true that it was a floor made of sand as distinct from materials such as timber or cement, but, nevertheless, it seems to me that it was a floor, and a floor of such a kind that pits or openings could be made in it and refilled at will as the exigencies of the work demanded. I think, therefore, that the pit into which the plaintiff fell was an opening in a floor within the meaning of section 25 (3) of the Act. It is not disputed that it would have been perfectly practicable to protect this opening by means of a fence, and, accordingly, in my view Stable J. was right in holding that there was in this case a breach of the statutory duty imposed on the defendants.

As to the claim based on common law negligence, speaking for myself, I am not wholly satisfied that there were not materials here on which the judge might have held that a case of common law negligence had been made out. The pit into which the plaintiff fell, placed as it was, might, as it seems to me, have been regarded as an unusual hazard, and it might have been said that the test which the judge applied, and in effect found conclusive, namely that it was not the general practice in foundries to fence pits of this kind, did not necessarily preclude a finding of negligence, because so much depends upon the position and nature of the particular pit, and especially the position in relation to a gangway such as the 6-ft. way in the present case. But the judge, having considered the whole matter, came to the conclusion that the claim based on liability at common law had not been made out, and although, speaking for myself, I feel that I might, sitting as a judge of first instance, have formed a different view, I do not think it is for us to disturb the conclusion to which the trial judge came.

C. A.
1954
Harrison v. Metropolitan-Vickers Electrical Co. Ld.
Jenkins L.J.

In view of our decision on section 25 (3) of the Act, I do not propose to add anything to what my Lord has said on the claim under section 26 (1) as to safe means of access, which the judge rejected.

The point in the case on which I have felt most difficulty is the matter of contributory negligence. Mr. Marven Everett for the plaintiff urged that where, as here, a statutory duty is imposed for the benefit of workmen, and a workman is injured through a breach of that statutory duty, the court should be slow to nullify or counteract the benefit of the enactment by holding him guilty of contributory negligence. In a sense it is true to say that regulations such as these are made to protect workmen against themselves, against carelessness and inadvertence in the course of their work and other natural shortcomings which, if regarded as amounting to contributory negligence would greatly cut down the benefit to workmen of the statutory provisions.

Mr. Marven Everett referred us to Hutchinson v. London and North Eastern Railway Company,[1] where Goddard L.J. said[2]: "It is only too common to find in cases where the "plaintiff alleges that a defendant employer has been guilty of "breach of a statutory duty, that a plea of contributory negli-"gence has been set up. In such a case I always directed "myself to be exceedingly chary of finding contributory negli-"gence where the contributory negligence alleged was the very "thing which the statutory duty of the employer was designed "to prevent."

Mr. Everett also referred us to a passage in the judgment of Lord Greene M.R. in Hopwood v. Rolls Royce Ld.,[3] in which he said: "There remains only the question of contributory "negligence, and I can deal with that quite shortly. Con-"tributory negligence does not mean mere error of judgment, "nor does it mean that sort of, shall I say, degree of inattention "which a workman in a factory may in the ordinary course of "his work be expected to show in circumstances that are "familiar to him. All that the plaintiff here was guilty of, it "seems to me, was an error of judgment. He knew that the "blocks were there, and he thought, no doubt, that he was "avoiding them. In fact he made a slight mistake of an inch "or two caused by something the effect of which he was not "able to appreciate. He could not see the two cylinder blocks "himself as he said in evidence; he knew they were there, but "he could not see them. Walking backwards as he was, and "having his direction affected by the movement of his mate "swinging round the end of the two blocks, he could quite "naturally make a slight mistake and get too near to them. "That cannot, in my opinion, be regarded in any way as "contributory negligence on his part." That passage refers to the facts in Hopwood v. Rolls Royce Ld.,[3] which give it some resemblance to the present case. It might be said similarly that the plaintiff in the present case, who was walking backwards, knew that the pit was there, but, being unable to see it, made a slight mistake, got too near the pit, and fell into it.

[1] [1942] 1 K.B. 481.
[2] Ibid. 488.
[3] (1947) 176 L.T. 514, 520.

Bearing in mind the principles stated in those two cases, speaking for myself, I very much doubt whether, if I had been trying the present case, I should have found the plaintiff guilty of contributory negligence. But it does not follow that it is right on appeal to disturb the judge's conclusion, which was the other way. It will be noted that he took into account the principles to which I have referred in the passage in his judgment where he said: ". . . I agree wholeheartedly with the proposition " that acts of omission, of inadvertence, of forgetfulness, absence " of mind and lack of concentration are constantly occurring, but " to attribute to them the rather grim description of contributory " negligence is like using an elephant rifle to shoot a rabbit. " But this was far beyond, in my view, a momentary inad- " vertence or carelessness. . . ."

Thus, Stable J., having the proper principles in mind and with all the facts before him, came to the conclusion that the plaintiff's conduct in the case before us did amount to contributory negligence. I think that conclusion is rather hard on the workman, and, as I have said, I very much doubt whether I should have arrived at it myself, but it was essentially a question for the judge, and he having formed the view he did, I do not think it would be right for us to disturb his decision. Accordingly, I agree with my Lord that both the appeal and the cross-appeal should be dismissed.

HODSON L.J. I think that this appeal fails for the reasons which have been already sufficiently given by my Lords. The only question which has caused, I think, any of us in this court any real difficulty is the question whether or not the cross-appeal ought to be allowed on the ground that there was not sufficient material upon which a finding of contributory negligence could be based.

I have come to the conclusion that there was material upon which the judge could so find in the passage which has just been read where he indicated that the facts which had made the greatest impression upon him were that the man concerned walked backwards into a hole which had been there for days—it is true only a few days—which he had seen over and over again, and which he knew perfectly well was not fenced. Mr. Marven Everett put his argument in the strongest way when, relying upon the observations of Goddard L.J. in Hutchinson v. The London and North Eastern Railway Co.[4]—a case in which a breach of statutory duty was involved—he said that if the statutory duty had been carried out in the present case, it would have prevented

[4] [1942] 1 K.B. 481.

C. A.
1954
Harrison v. Metropolitan-Vickers Electrical Co. Ld.
Hodson L.J.

the accident for a reason which was made plain by the evidence of the plaintiff himself, because if this hole had had a fence, or even the slightest protection cutting it off from the gangway on which the man was walking, the least touch of that fence on the man's back would have warned him that there was something behind him. While recognizing the force of that argument, I still think that the judge was entitled to take the view that the plaintiff had known perfectly well for a material time that the hole was there, and to come to the conclusion that in those circumstances a proportion of blame for the accident must be attributed to him. I have nothing further to add. The appeal must be dismissed, and the cross-appeal also, with the usual consequences.

Appeal and cross-appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Church, Adams, Tatham & Co. for Cobbett, Wheeler & Cobbett, Manchester.

P. B. D.

[CHANCERY DIVISION.]

1954
Jan. 29.
Wynn-Parry J.

* In re DEANS, DECD.
WESTMINSTER BANK LD. v. OFFICIAL SOLICITOR.

[1953 W. No. 207.]

Administration of Estates — No personal representative constituted — Vesting of estate in probate judge—Securities deposited by deceased to secure a debt—Application by creditor for order vesting securities in official solicitor—Whether probate judge a trustee—Trustee Act, 1925 (15 Geo. 5, c. 19), s. 51 (1)—Administration of Estates Act, 1925 (15 Geo. 5, c. 23), s. 9.
Trust and Trustee. Probate. Official Solicitor.

D. executed letters of guarantee and deposit in favour of the plaintiff bank, and deposited certain securities with them as a guarantee of the account of L. D. died in 1951, but no personal representative was constituted. In 1953, when the bank called on L. to make good his overdraft, he absconded.

The bank, who were unwilling themselves to take out letters of administration of D.'s estate, applied for a declaration that the deposited securities were vested in a trustee within the meaning of section 51 (1) (v) of the Trustee Act, 1925, and contended that they so vested in the probate judge by reason of section 9 of the Administration of Estates Act, 1925. They also asked for an order under section 51 (1) (v) of the Trustee Act that the right to transfer and to receive dividends from the deposited securities should vest in the official solicitor.

The purpose of the application was that transfers of the securities might be executed in favour of the bank, which would be binding on the persons responsible for their registration:—

Held, that the probate judge was not a trustee for the purposes of section 51 (1) (v) of the Trustee Act, 1925; and that property vested in him by virtue of section 9 of the Administration of Estates Act, 1925, remained so vested until a grant of administration was made, so that there was no jurisdiction to make the order prayed.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS.

The facts are sufficiently set out in the judgment.

John Mills for the plaintiff bank.
W. F. Waite for the Official Solicitor.

No cases were cited in argument.

WYNN-PARRY J. This summons is of a distinctly novel character, and it comes before me in these circumstances: One William Deans executed a letter of guarantee and a letter of deposit, and deposited with the Westminster Bank certain shares and securities as one of a number of people who were guaranteeing the account of one Gilbert Loughlin. In December, 1948, he deposited 300 " B " shares of £1 each fully paid in Barclays Bank Ld. In April, 1949, he executed a further letter of guarantee and deposited with the bank £175 10s. 0d. of 3 per cent. guaranteed British Transport stock and £50 worth of 2½ per cent. Defence Bonds. He died on November 11, 1951, and no personal representative has been constituted to his estate. There is owing to the bank by Gilbert Loughlin (who has apparently found it discreet to take himself to Canada) a sum of nearly £2,500; so that it is clear that, on the realization by the bank of their securities, there must remain a deficit.

What the bank wishes to do—and, of course, one has sympathy with their view—is to realize these securities. It is perfectly clear that they can achieve that end by obtaining a grant in the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division of this court and then taking the necessary steps pursuant to that grant. They desire, however, to avoid taking that course because, as was said by their counsel, they do not wish to be involved in an administration action in this division if there is any shorter, less troublesome and less expensive, way of achieving that object.

In those circumstances, the ingenuity of those advising the bank has produced the present summons. That summons, which was originally addressed to the Treasury Solicitor as defendant, now has as defendant the Official Solicitor; and what is sought is an order appointing the Official Solicitor to represent the estate of William Deans, under Ord. 16, r. 46; but, of course, an order made pursuant to that Order would not of itself be sufficient, because it appears clearly on the face of r. 46 that an order made thereunder will only bind the estate of the deceased person, whereas in this case it will be necessary to bind other persons, such as the Bank of England and the Postmaster-General, if the object which the bank has in view is to be achieved.

1954

Deans, decd., In re.

Wynn-Parry J.

The summons originally asked, by way of relief, for a declaration that the securities to which I have referred are charged under the relevant documents in favour of the bank with the payment of all moneys owing by William Deans. It also asked for an account of what is due to the plaintiff bank under and by virtue of the deposits and letters of deposit and for its costs of the action, a sale of the shares and the stock and the defence bonds.

The point having been appreciated that an order under Ord. 16, r. 46, would not of itself be sufficient, two further paragraphs were added to the summons, praying "A declaration that the said "shares, the said stock and the said defence bonds are vested in "a trustee within the meaning of section 51 (1) (v) of the Trustee "Act, 1925," and "an order pursuant to section 51 (1) (v) of "the Trustee Act, 1925, that the right to transfer the said "shares, the said stock and the said defence bonds and to "receive any dividends or income now due or to accrue due "thereon do forthwith vest in the Official Solicitor."

In order to obtain, or to be entitled to obtain, a declaration that the shares, stock and defence bonds are vested in a trustee, reliance was placed on section 9 of the Administration of Estates Act, 1925, which provides: "Where a person dies "intestate, his real and personal estate, until administration "is granted in respect thereof, shall vest in the Probate Judge "in the same manner and to the same extent as formerly in the "case of personal estate it vested in the ordinary." It is urged upon me that, as the senior judge of the Probate Division can have no beneficial interest whatsoever in property which vests in him under that section, he must be regarded as a trustee thereof; and, not only that, he must be regarded as a trustee within the meaning of that word as used in section 51 of the Trustee Act, 1925. That section provides, so far as material: "(1) In any of the following cases, namely:— . . . (v) where "stock or a thing in action is vested in a trustee whether by way "of mortgage or otherwise and it appears to the court to be "expedient; the court may make an order vesting the right to "transfer or call for a transfer of stock, or to receive the divi-"dends or income thereof, or to sue for or recover the thing in "action, in any such person as the court may appoint: ".

In my view, the senior judge of the Probate Division cannot be said, by virtue of the language of section 9 of the Administration of Estates Act, 1925, to be a trustee within the meaning of that word for any of the purposes of the Trustee Act, 1925. He has no duties whatsoever to perform. No obligations fall upon him. It is a mere matter of necessary convenience and protection which has led to the introduction of section 9 in the Administration of Estates Act; and, although reference is made to the ordinary, the position of the senior judge of the Probate Division appears to me to be different from the position of the ordinary, in that, whereas the ordinary had, at any rate in later times, thrown upon him the obligation to discharge debts before holding the balance to pious uses, no such obligation is thrown on the senior judge of the Probate Division. The whole operation of that section is that where the condition is fulfilled of a person dying intestate, his estate, real and personal, vests in the senior judge of the Probate Division, and that property remains vested in him until the second condition is fulfilled, namely, that administration is granted in respect of that property. That appears to me to be plain language and to provide the only method by which the senior judge of the Probate Division can be divested of the property which vests in him under the section.

For those reasons, it appears to me that I have no jurisdiction whatsoever to make the declaration and the order asked under paragraphs 6 and 7 of the summons. But I am not desirous of leaving the matter there. As I have said earlier, there is open to the bank a clear procedure, namely, that of obtaining a grant of administration in the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division of the court. Nothing stands in the way of their following that course. All they can urge in favour of the making of an order under Ord. 16, r. 46, assuming that I had jurisdiction to make such an order, is saving of trouble and costs. The Official Solicitor, through Mr. Waite, has made his position perfectly clear. That is, that although he fully recognizes that it is his duty on all proper occasions to help and not to hinder, he sees no reason why he should do the work of the bank where there is this clear course open to the bank. He tells me, through his counsel, that had I had jurisdiction to make the order, he would not have consented to that order unless I had held a strong view that he ought to consent, in which case he would have done so. I think it perhaps may be helpful if I say this, in case the matter should go further; that even if I were wrong on the first point as regards jurisdiction, I should not have regarded this a case in which I would have put any pressure whatsoever on the Official Solicitor to consent to an order being made under Ord. 16, r. 46.

In those circumstances, I make no order on the summons.

Solicitors: Alfred Bright & Sons; Official Solicitor.

F. R. D.

[CHANCERY DIVISION.]

1954
Feb. 2.

Harman J.

* In re POWLES, DECD.
LITTLE v. POWLES AND ANOTHER.

[1953 P. No. 3011.]

Will—Construction—Protected life interest—Trustee's power to "resort "to and spend any part of the capital . . . and apply the same for . . . [beneficiary's] maintenance and general benefit . . ."—Beneficiary's claim for entire capital rejected—Transfer of capital subject to trustee's discretion.

Trust and Trustee.

A testatrix provided that her trustees should set aside out of her residuary estate, inter alia, "investments sufficient to yield the "clear annual income of £375 upon trust to use the same for the "maintenance and general benefit of my son Francis during his "life" on a protective trust.

By clause 15 the testator directed: "My trustees may in their "uncontrolled discretion resort to and spend any part of the capital "of the annual sums hereinbefore bequeathed or appointed in trust "for my . . . son Francis and apply the same for his maintenance "and general benefit during his life or until the cesser of his "interest."

The son Francis claimed that he was entitled under clause 15 to have the whole of the capital of his trust fund transferred to him. On a summons to determine whether the trustees were entitled to transfer the whole of the capital to the son without regard to the use which he would make of it, or whether the application of the capital was limited to his maintenance or to a specific purpose which the trustees considered to be for his benefit:—

Held, that the trustees were not entitled to hand over the capital without inquiry as to the purpose for which the son required it; but that their discretion should not however be fettered, and they could pay capital of the fund to the son provided that they considered that such payment of it would be for his general benefit.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS.

Marianne Elizabeth Annie Powles, by her will dated March 8, 1929, provided that three funds should be set aside out of her residuary estate for her three sons, all of whom survived her, there being marked differences between the three funds.

Clause 13 contained directions: "(a) To set aside and "transfer to my . . . son John Copley Powles . . . invest-"ments which shall be sufficient to yield after all death "duties thereon shall have been paid the clear annual income "of one hundred pounds and I hereby bequeath the said invest-"ments to my said son absolutely. (b) To stand possessed of "investments which shall be sufficient to yield the clear annual "income of three hundred and seventy-five pounds upon trust "to use the same for the maintenance and general benefit of "my son Francis Brooksbank Powles during his life or until "he shall have committed or suffered any act default or "process of law whereby such income or any part thereof

"if belonging absolutely to him would become vested in "or payable to any other person or persons or after his "decease and upon the determination of this trust during his "lifetime the sum so invested shall fall into and form part of "my residuary trust fund and I declare it to be my wish that "the said sum shall be applied by my trustees as follows:—For "the board lodging and clothing of my said son three hundred "pounds and as an allowance to him seventy-five pounds per "annum. (c) To invest such sum as will yield an annual income "of three hundred pounds and to cause such sum to be paid . . . "to . . . my son Robert Cowley Powles during his life . . . and "from and after the decease of my said son such investments ". . . . shall be held upon such trusts as my said son shall by "his will or codicil appoint." The son had exercised this power.

The testatrix bequeathed her residuary estate subject to the above trust funds to her sons John and Robert in unequal shares.

By clause 15 of her will she directed: "My trustees may in "their uncontrolled discretion resort to and spend any part of "the capital of the annual sums hereinbefore bequeathed or "appointed in trust for my said son Francis Brooksbank Powles "and apply the same for his maintenance and general benefit "during his life or until the cesser of his interest."

The testatrix died on June 16, 1929. She was survived by her three sons, two of whom, John and Robert, were now dead. The whole estate had been distributed except the fund set aside under clause 13 (b) for the son Francis. He was now 70, and claimed that he was entitled under clause 15 to have the whole of the capital of his trust fund transferred to him.

The plaintiff, one of the present trustees of the will, took out this summons to ascertain whether, on the true construction of the will, the trustees were entitled to transfer the whole of the trust fund set aside under clause 13 (b) to the defendant Francis Brooksbank Powles for his own use and benefit absolutely without regard to the purpose for which it might be required, or whether the payment or application of the capital was limited to the maintenance of the defendant, or to some specific purpose which the trustees considered to be for his general benefit.

H. E. Francis for the plaintiff, a trustee of the will.
G. G. Robb for the defendant, Francis.
B. G. Burnett-Hall for persons interested in remainder

The case cited in argument is set out in the judgment.

HARMAN J. having stated the facts:—The difficulty here arises under clause 15 of the will, which provides: "My trustees "may in their uncontrolled discretion resort to and spend any "part of the capital of the annual sums hereinbefore bequeathed "or appointed in trust for my said son Francis and apply the "same for his maintenance and general benefit during his life

1954

POWLES, DECD., In re.

Harman J.

"or until the cesser of his interest." I assume for this purpose that the proper sum was set aside. The income from the fund has been paid to Francis, and the trustees in the exercise of their discretion have also paid him £10 a month, that being, in their view, an application or expenditure of the capital for his maintenance or general benefit; but I am not told for which of those purposes. He has now reached the age of 70, and wishes the trustees to hand the fund over to him so that he can do as he likes with it, without giving them any reason beyond the fact that he would be better off with £7,000 in his pocket than if the money remained in trust; and the trustees hesitate to act in that way. Mr. Burnett-Hall on behalf of those interested in remainder, not all of whom are present on the summons, has argued that it is not within the power of the trustees to hand over the fund, and that they can only pay the capital or resort to capital (which are the words used in the will) if its application will to their satisfaction be for the general benefit of the son Francis.

Mr. Burnett-Hall has drawn my attention to In re Vestey's Settlement[1] where the Court of Appeal held that income which trustees might at their discretion apply for the benefit of infants was well applied by handing the income over to the infants. This was a mere device to avoid surtax and I have held in those circumstances that the trustees had not applied the income at all because they had gone on to direct its accumulation on the ground that the infants did not need it. The Court of Appeal held nevertheless, that although the infants did not need it, payment of the income to them was an application of it, they held that there was no power to accumulate, and so in another way, defeated the device to avoid tax. But that case does not help me at all; there being there an entirely different and a very special power, and nothing which, in my view, illustrates any principle.

The testatrix was quite clear as to what she wanted paid to her son Francis and what she wanted handed over to him, that much is apparent from the rest of clause 13. Clause 15 is not the clause which is common in wills allowing capital to be handed over on the attainment of years of discretion; it is a carefully-guarded power. The trustees have a power to spend capital or to have resort to capital if they think that the application of it will be for the general benefit of Francis, remembering always that Francis has only a protected life interest, which if he anticipates his income he will forfeit. If, therefore, he created a charge the trustees, in my view, would have no power to pay capital to him because he would have forfeited under the previous words of the will.

The trustees cannot in the circumstances hand over the money without making any inquiry as to his objects or wishes for its use. On the other hand, I am unwilling to fetter their discretion more than the words require. If they consider it to be for the general benefit of Francis to have this money, I think that they would be entitled to say "We think it better for him to have it "than that we should have it," and if they come to that conclusion who is to say to them "Nay"?—not I, certainly, because the testatrix has provided differently.

[1] [1951] Ch. 209; [1950] 2 All E.R. 891.

I propose therefore to declare that on the true construction of the will, the trustees may only resort to and spend or apply capital of the fund by paying it to the defendant Francis if they consider such expenditure or application will be for his general benefit. That gives scanty guidance, but it enables them to satisfy themselves not merely that he would like to have the money to jingle in his pocket, but that it will do him some good when he gets it.

Declaration accordingly.

Solicitors: Rowe & Maw for Clutterbuck, Trevenen & Mawson, Carlisle.

I. G. R. M.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

* PEOPLE'S REFRESHMENT HOUSE ASSOCIATION LD. v. JONES.

1954
Jan. 19, 20.

Lord Goddard C.J., Byrne and Parker JJ.

Catering wages — Minimum wage — Sum paid by worker for benefit — Licensed non-residential establishment—Manager—Two agreements — Service agreement under which manager entitled to statutory minimum wage—Catering agreement entitling him to run catering business and receive profits in consideration of weekly payment to employer—Whether deductions in respect of "benefits and advan-"tages received in connexion with employment" as manager — Catering Wages Act, 1943 (6 & 7 Geo. 6, c. 24), s. 10 (3).

Section 10 (3) of the Catering Wages Act, 1943, provides that "Where any benefits or advantages are provided in connexion with "any employment by the employer . . . then, whether or not the "benefits or advantages are authorized to be reckoned as payment "of wages in lieu of payment in cash, any sum paid by the worker "in respect of those benefits or advantages shall be deemed for the "purposes of this Act to have been deducted by the employer from "his remuneration."

The manager of a licensed non-residential establishment was entitled by a written service agreement made with his employers to a salary in accordance with the provisions of the Catering Wages Act, 1943, and the Wages Regulation (Licensed Non-residential Establishment) (Managers and Club Stewards) Order, 1952. By a separate agreement made on the same day the manager was entitled to carry on a catering business at the establishment and to receive the profits in consideration of his paying the employers £3 a week out of the profits of the business. That agreement was expressed to be subsidiary to the service agreement, to be read with

---

[Reported by Mrs. E. M. WELLWOOD, Barrister-at-Law.]

1954

People's Refreshment House Assocn. Ld. v. Jones.

it and to terminate with it. At the end of the manager's employment he received as his final month's net remuneration a sum which, if the £3 weekly paid by him to his employers under the catering agreement were deducted therefrom, reduced his salary below the statutory minimum:—

Held, that the catering agreement conferred benefits or advantages on the manager in connexion with his employment as manager; that the two agreements were not separate and independent agreements, but one agreement contained in two documents which must be read together; that by reason of the wording of section 10 (3) the weekly payments made by the manager to the employers must be deducted from his remuneration; and that, accordingly, the employers had failed to pay him the statutory minimum wage.

Case stated by Southampton justices sitting at Romsey.

On May 29, 1953, an information was preferred by the respondent, Freda Ellen Jones, a wages inspector employed by the Ministry of Labour and National Service, against the appellants, the People's Refreshment House Association Ld., that the Association unlawfully failed to pay to one Leonard Thomas Anderson remuneration not less than the statutory remuneration, clear of all deductions, contrary to section 9 (2) of the Catering Wages Act, 1943, and the Wages Regulation (Licensed Non-residential Establishment (Managers and Club Stewards) Order, 1952, made thereunder.

At the hearing of the information the justices found the following facts: Leonard Thomas Anderson was at all material times employed by the appellants as manager (category A) at the Horns Inn, Nursling, Southampton, which was a licensed non-residential establishment within the meaning of the Order. Anderson's wife was required by the appellants to assist in the work of the establishment and both he and his wife were provided with accommodation as defined in paragraph 26 of the Order, but not with full board. In respect of their employments, Anderson and his wife were workers to whom the schedule to the Order applied. Anderson had first been employed by the appellants at the Horns Inn as manager since April, 1946. On April 17, 1952, two agreements in writing were entered into: the first, referred to as the "agreement for service," was between the appellants and Anderson and his wife; and the second, referred to as the "catering agreement," was between the appellants and Anderson. Clauses 5 and 7 of the second agreement provided that it was subsidiary to the service agreement and was to be read with it and should terminate with it.

By clause 14 of the agreement for service the appellants settled with Anderson monthly in arrear, crediting him with his salary and other moneys due to him, the sum so credited in respect of his salary being in accordance with the scales laid down by the Act and Order. He was also entitled to one-half of the rent received from lodgers and 3d. per dozen on aerated waters sold, plus £1 15s. a week towards help. By clause 23 provision was made for Mrs. Anderson's wages in accordance with the Act and the Order, and if no part of the Act or Order provided for her wages, they were to be 30s. a week, payable to her by Anderson on behalf of the appellants.

By clause 4 of the catering agreement, in consideration of the appellants allowing Anderson to carry on a catering business at the Horns Inn and to receive and retain for himself the profits arising from such business (but not profits arising from the sale of mineral waters or packed goods) and in consideration of the appellants paying for the lighting and heating, providing the utensils and the use of the dining rooms, Anderson agreed to pay to the appellants the sum of £3 a week out of his profits from the catering business. According to the usual course of business between the parties, Anderson paid the sum of £3 a week by paying to the appellants a sum of £13 in respect of each month. He paid this sum at the same time as he paid the takings for the first week of the next following month.

Anderson's employment was terminated in December, 1952. The appellants sent him £46 0s. 8d. representing wages for himself and his wife and expenses for the month of November, and of that total sum £29 13s. 6d. represented the wages of himself and his wife after deductions for insurance and income tax. Before such deductions were made the minimum sum payable to him under the Act and Order was £24 7s. 6d. and the minimum sum payable to his wife under the Act and Order was £6 10s. Anderson paid to the appellants in accordance with the catering agreement the sum of £13 for the month of November in respect of the catering business, and if this sum could properly be set off against his remuneration, his remuneration would be reduced to £21 1s. 5d., thus being below the statutory minimum. Neither when making this payment nor at any other time did Anderson inform the appellants that it was not paid out of the profits of the catering business, nor did he inform them what were the profits thereof. On May 24, 1952, the respondent furnished the appellants with a statement setting out what she alleged to be the details of the remuneration due to Anderson, and received by him during November, 1952, and the statement showed that, if the sum of £13 had to be debited to Anderson in order to arrive at his wages for the purposes of the Act and Order, there was a deficiency of £3 6s. 1d., save as to any deductions properly to be made in respect of national insurance and income tax.

It was contended by the appellants (a) that the respondent's statement was incorrect in that the charge of £13 made under the catering agreement was incorrectly included in the calculation of "remuneration" because it was not a deduction from remuneration but a separate payment to be paid out of the profits of the catering business and was in fact paid separately and on a different date from the remuneration; (b) that the two agreements should not be read together but were separate agreements; and (c) that Anderson had received the remuneration due to him under the Act and Order in respect of November, 1952.

1954

People's Refreshment House Assocn. Ld. v. Jones.

For the respondent it was contended (a) that the object of the Act was to ensure that the net remuneration received by a worker from his employer was not less than the statutory minimum remuneration; (b) that in determining the remuneration paid to a worker one must have regard to the arrangement between the employer and worker as a whole and to its final effect; (c) that any system of payment which finally resulted in a worker receiving as wages a net sum less than that fixed by the appropriate Wages Regulation Order was a contravention of the Act; (d) that the arrangement between the employer and the worker in this case, though dual in form, was single in substance; and (e) that the sum of £13 a month which was in fact paid by Anderson and accepted by the appellants in respect of the catering agreement was, in the circumstances of this case, a sum which should be deducted in arriving at the net remuneration paid by the appellants in respect of Anderson's employment at the Horns Inn.

The justices were of the opinion that the two agreements should be read together; that the sum of £13 paid for November, 1952, in respect of the catering business should be deducted in arriving at the remuneration received by Anderson from the appellants; and that therefore Anderson had not received the remuneration due to him under the Act and Order. Accordingly, they convicted the appellants.

F. W. Beney Q.C. and C. J. Doughty for the appellants.
S. B. Cooke for the respondent.

The following cases were cited in argument: Long Eaton Co-operative Society Ld. v. Smith [1]; Harding v. Price. [2]

Lord Goddard C.J. stated the facts, read the relevant clauses of the two agreements and continued: The clause which is said to amount, in effect, to a breach of the Act provides that: "In "consideration of the Association allowing the caterer to carry "on the said catering business and receive and retain for himself the profits arising from such business (but not profits "arising from the sale of mineral waters or packed goods) and "in consideration of the Association paying for the lighting and "heating, providing the utensils and the use of the room or "rooms specified in clause 2 hereof the caterer agrees to pay "the Association the weekly sum of £3 for the said catering "business out of his profits therefrom. This agreement shall be "read with the principal agreement but is subsidiary thereto "and nothing in this agreement shall qualify or prejudice the

[1] [1949] 2 K.B. 144; [1949] 1 All E.R. 633.

[2] [1948] 1 K.B. 695; 64 T.L.R. 111; [1948] 1 All E.R. 283.

"provisions of clause 11 of the principal agreement," clause 11 of the principal agreement being the one under which the manager is obliged to keep proper books and accounts. It is then provided that "if for any reason the principal agreement becomes "determined this agreement shall immediately become and be "determined save only for the validity of acts done and obliga-"tions acquired during its currency."

At the end of his employment the manager sent the Association a cheque for £13 for November, although he said that he had not made £3 a week profit. He was only bound to pay £3 a week under the agreement if he made a profit. If he chose to pay them that sum, even though he had not made any profits, it would be very difficult to see, if it were otherwise permitted by the Act, that the Association would commit an offence, but that is not the point which we have to decide.

The point arises under section 10 (3) of the Catering Wages Act, 1943, which provides: "Where any benefits or advantages "are provided, in connexion with any employment, by the "employer or by some other person under arrangements with "the employer, then, whether or not the benefits or advantages "are authorised to be reckoned as payment of wages in lieu of "payment in cash, any sum paid by the worker in respect of "those benefits or advantages shall be deemed for the purposes "of this Act to have been deducted by the employer from his "remuneration."

One of the objects of the Act is to ensure that the payments shall be in cash; it is very similar to the provisions of the Truck Acts, and deductions may not be made from a man's remuneration except in so far as the Order may provide.

Our attention has been called to a provision that if board is provided a certain sum may be deducted in respect of that board, and I have no doubt that this subsection was put in by Parliament to prevent evasion. In this particular case, I do not think that there has been an attempt to evade the Act. It was provided that the manager should be paid a minimum wage and he was paid a minimum wage—in fact, he was generally paid rather more than the minimum wage; but it is said that what has happened here is caught by the words of the subsection; and if it is, we are bound to give effect to it.

In my judgment, it is impossible to say that this catering agreement did not confer on the manager a benefit or advantage. It gave him the benefit of carrying on a catering business and of retaining the profits less £3 a week. I cannot see that that benefit or advantage was not provided in connexion with the employment; it clearly was. The agreement under which he was appointed catering manager was not only made on the same day as the agreement which appointed him manager, but the principal agreement, that is to say, the agreement appointing him manager, is referred to in the catering agreement, where it is provided that the catering agreement is to be read with the principal agreement, although it is said to be subsidiary thereto. Under the catering agreement he is to pay £3 a week to his employer, not under any circumstances, but provided that he makes profits; and he did pay £3 a week.

1954

People's Refreshment House Assocn. Ld. v. Jones.

Lord Goddard C.J.

The words of section 10 (3) are: "... any sum paid by the "worker in respect of those benefits or advantages"—and the £3 was clearly for a benefit conferred on him for being a caterer —"shall be deemed for the purposes of this Act to have been "deducted by the employer from his remuneration." In this particular case this section, which was no doubt put in to prevent evasion, works a hardship on the employer, although there has been no evasion of the Act at all. Indeed, it was conceded by Mr. Cooke, and conceded rightly in my view—although I am not deciding this point since the Minister might take some different view and might consider it hereafter—that if this agreement had been differently worded to produce the same result, that is to say, if it had provided that the manager was to pay over all the profits of the catering business to his employers who were then to return the profits to him less £3, that would not be caught by the Act. If that is so, it seems a very unfortunate situation and one which possibly the Minister might think fit to remedy by altering the wages schedule. We are not criticizing the act of the Ministry because it is their duty to see that this Act is obeyed; neither are we criticizing the provisions of subsection (3) because it is very often necessary to include such a provision to prevent evasion; but in this particular case it seems that the manager was not only receiving his minimum wage in cash, but receiving more than his minimum wage. By reason of the wording of this section, however, the transaction is caught by the concluding words.

The test in such cases apparently would be whether or not the agreement such as the catering agreement was a separate and independent agreement, or whether the two documents can be looked at as entirely separate contracts. That was the view taken by the Court of Appeal in Long Eaton Co-operative Society v. Smith,[1] which was a case concerning agricultural wages, and where the words of the relevant Act were not so strong as they are in the Catering Wages Act, 1943. In that case an agricultural worker was engaged at a minimum wage, and was paid the right wage, but he also asked to be accepted by his employers as the tenant of a cottage which was not a tied farmhouse cottage in the ordinary sense, but a cottage quite independent of the farm. He agreed to pay £1 a week. The Court of Appeal held that that payment could not be looked upon as a deduction from his wages because they regarded the two contracts as entirely separate, there being a relationship of landlord and tenant so far as the cottage was concerned and a relationship of employer and workman so far as the employment was concerned.

[1] [1949] 2 K.B. 144; [1949] 1 All E.R. 633.

I cannot take that view of these two agreements. In my opinion they are really one and the same agreement although contained in two different documents which must be read together. Although it may be possible to have an independent caterer in a refreshment house of this type carrying on an independent business, I am clearly of opinion that in this case the manager was carrying on the business qua manager. He was the manager and as the manager he was given the benefit of providing food and taking the profits less £3 a week, but, by reason of the words of section 10 (3) the fact that he paid the £3 a week must, in my opinion, be treated as a deduction from his minimum wage.

In those circumstances, the magistrates came to a right decision, and this appeal fails.

Byrne J. I agree.

Parker J. I agree. The short point is whether the undoubted benefit with which the manager was provided by the employers was in connexion with his employment. It seems to me that whether in any particular case a benefit is or is not provided in connexion with the employment or forms part of an entirely separate bargain must be a question of fact.

In this case one of the contentions raised before the magistrates by the respondent was that, in determining the remuneration paid to a worker, one must have regard to the arrangement between the employer and the worker as a whole and to its final effect. It seems to me perfectly clear from the findings of the magistrates that they came to the conclusion that the two agreements were not separate bargains but part and parcel of one single transaction. Accordingly, that being a finding on a question of fact, it cannot be challenged unless it is shown that they have misdirected themselves in law or that there was no evidence on which they could so find. So far from that being the case, when one looks at these agreements and sees that the second catering agreement was made subsidiary to the principal agreement, when one sees that the employers were not content for this man to remain as caterer once he ceased to be manager, and when one appreciates that the offer of becoming caterer was really an inducement to this man to become manager, it seems to me quite impossible to say that the benefit provided was not in connexion with his employment.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Faithfull, Owen, Wright & Armstrong; Solicitor, Ministry of Labour and National Service.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

C. A.

1954
Jan. 12, 13, 25.

Somervell and Birkett L.JJ.; Vaisey J.

*NORRIS v. W. MOSS & SONS LD.

[1952 N. 306.]

Building—Safety regulations—Scaffold—Upright not vertical—Remedial work by plaintiff—Injured by own negligence—Causation—Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948 (S.I. 1948, No. 1145), reg. 10 (1) (a).

Causation.

The plaintiff, an employee of the defendants, had, together with another workman, been ordered by the foreman to ascend the tubular scaffolding already erected at a building for the purpose of adding another lift or platform. On reaching the top lift already erected the plaintiff noticed that one of the uprights was not vertical but was inclining away from the building, in breach of regulation 10 (1) (a) of the Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948.[1] He thought it his duty, as a competent scaffolder, to remedy the defect, but, as was found by the trial judge, he did so in a way which caused the putlogs that attached the scaffold to the wall to be drawn out and the platform on which he was standing collapsed, the plaintiff falling and suffering injury:—

Held, that the plaintiff's injury was caused solely by his own negligence and not by the defendants' breach of regulation 10 (1) (a).

Decision in Sexton v. Scaffolding (Great Britain) Ld. [1953] 1 Q.B. 153; [1952] 2 All E.R. 1085 considered.

Decision of Stable J. affirmed.

APPEAL from Stable J., sitting at Manchester Assizes.

The plaintiff was a scaffolder in the employ of the defendants, a firm of building contractors, who were engaged in erecting a new building and for that purpose had erected two lifts of tubular scaffolding, reaching a height of approximately 20 feet. On the day in question the defendants' foreman ordered the plaintiff and another workman to ascend the scaffold and add another lift of 5 feet. On reaching the top of the existing scaffolding the plaintiff noticed that the existing scaffolding did not comply with regulation 10, in that one of the uprights was not vertical but was inclining away from the building. The plaintiff, a competent scaffolder, considered it his duty (rightly, as the trial judge found) to remedy the breach, but proceeded to do so in such manner that the putlogs were pulled out from the wall of the building and the platform on which he was standing collapsed and he sustained injury. The plaintiff claimed damages from the defendants, alleging common law negligence and also a breach of regulation 10 of the Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948.[1]

Stable J. dismissed the action. He described the method used by the plaintiff to remedy the defect in the scaffolding as

[1] Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, reg. 10 (1): "Standards or uprights of scaffolds "should be—(a) Where practicable "vertical or slightly inclined towards "the building."

fantastically wrong, and held that the plaintiff's injuries were solely caused by his own negligence.

The plaintiff appealed.

Fenton Atkinson Q.C. and L. J. Antelme for the plaintiff.
R. S. Nicklin for the defendants.

Cur. adv. vult.

SOMERVELL L.J. This is an appeal from a decision of Stable J. in an action in which the plaintiff claimed damages against his employers for personal injuries. He alleged a breach of the defendants' duty at common law, and also a breach under the Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948. The case concerns scaffolding. The defendants were erecting a new building and put up their own scaffolding. There are a number of regulations concerning scaffolding and this was of the type which had to be rigidly connected with the building. There were vertical and cross pieces and the pieces affixed to the building were known as putlogs. The regulation relied on, or mainly relied on, is regulation 10 (1) (a), which provides that the standards or uprights of scaffolds shall be practically vertical or slightly inclined towards the building. [His Lordship stated the facts and continued:] There was on the judge's finding no difficulty about putting the scaffolding right and if the correct procedure had been followed there was no danger to anyone concerned.

The judge set out the proper procedure and continued: "Instead of that, before this safety strut was inserted, for some "inexplicable reason he unfastened the couplings of the first plat-"form, on which he was standing, and proceeded to try to pull "this strut back into the vertical without having unfastened the "couplings at the base and middle. The result was that as he "pulled it towards him inevitably there was created a sort of "bend in this stand and when the pull was released it shot back "dragging the putlogs out of the support of the brick wall, and "thus causing the platform to collapse and the plaintiff to fall." The judge describes this method as fantastically wrong.

When the trial judge was considering the issue at common law he referred to the fact that the foreman had noticed this upright on the previous day and had done nothing about it. He held that the foreman should have had the standard attended to before sending people up to raise the lift. "But this omission," he said, "on the part of the foreman, had nothing to do with this "accident, but it so happened that the plaintiff observed the "position of the standard and was proceeding to do that very "thing, though in the wrong way, which he would have been "doing had the foreman done his duty and directed him to do it." The judge was finding, and I agree, that the cause of the accident was the method by which the plaintiff set about this work and not the failure of the foreman to take steps.

The claim was based on an alleged breach of regulations, and I have recited the most important. The defendants' primary

C. A.
1954
Norris
v.
W. Moss
& Sons Ld.
Somervell L.J.

defence was based on causation. It was submitted that the departure from the vertical of the standard was not the cause of the accident for the purpose of liability: it was merely the occasion of the work which the plaintiff took upon himself to do. During the course of the hearing below reference was made to the decision of this court in Sexton v. Scaffolding (Great Britain) Ld.[1] In that case an accident had happened while some scaffolding was being dismantled and this court held that the regulation relied on did not apply to the work of dismantling at the time when the accident occurred. The principle is easily illustrated. Regulation 9 provides that all scaffolds shall be kept secure or placed in position so as to prevent accidental displacement so far as is practicable. An occupier clearly could not be convicted of a criminal offence on the ground that the scaffold or part of it had not been so secured if he was in process of erecting it and doing at the proper time that which the regulation provides is to be done. As Hodson L.J. put it, certain of the regulations are only applicable to a scaffold in use and cannot be applied to the process when it is being put up so as to comply with the regulations, or to dismantling. The judge thought that that case covered the present circumstances.

I have come to the conclusion that the claim fails on the point of causation. On the judge's findings of fact it seems to me plain that the sole cause of the accident was the method which the plaintiff unfortunately adopted in carrying out the work. With regard to the principle of Sexton's case,[2] it seems to be clear that it could and would apply in some cases to the process of keeping the scaffolding in accordance with the regulations in between erection and dismantling. I will assume—and this may be the case here—that scaffolding, properly erected, requires attention as a result of the weather or inevitable wear and tear in order to bring it back into a state in which it accords with the regulations. As soon as the defect appears men are no longer allowed to use it as a scaffold and a proper repairing squad is sent up to repair it. I cannot think that it could be said that a criminal offence had been committed.

I feel, however, some difficulty about the present case, and I therefore wish to make no concluded observations on the application of the principle in Sexton's case[2] to the circumstances here. If that had been the only point, I think that the fact that the foreman had noticed the defect and done nothing and knowing of the defect had sent the plaintiff up on a job on which he would have had to use this piece of scaffolding as a scaffold, might have been relied on, if I may put it in this way, as ousting the application of the principle in Sexton's case.[2] It was suggested that one sentence of Stable J.'s judgment indicated that apart from his application of Sexton's case,[2] he would have held the defendants liable to some extent, with a substantial contribution from the plaintiff due to his negligence. There is a sentence that supports that suggestion. On the other hand, having regard to what the judge said about the common law liability, I think that he would probably have come to the same conclusion as I have on the question of causation, if he had felt it necessary to decide the point with reference to the alleged breach of regulations.

[1] [1953] 1 Q.B. 153; [1952] 2 All E.R. 1085.

[2] [1953] 1 Q.B. 153.

I would therefore dismiss the appeal.

BIRKETT L.J. The plaintiff seeks to reverse the decision of Stable J., given in favour of the defendants in the plaintiff's action claiming damages for personal injuries suffered by him in the course of his employment by the defendants on August 15, 1950. [His Lordship stated the facts and continued:]

By regulation 10 (1) of the Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948, it is provided that "standards or "uprights of scaffolds shall be (a) where practicable, vertical or "slightly inclined towards the building." It is clear, therefore, that on August 15 there was a breach of the regulations on the part of the defendants. Indeed, it is also clear on the evidence that the foreman when making his weekly inspection had noticed that the standard was out of the vertical; but taking the view that it did not affect the safety of the scaffold in any way he did nothing about it; and it was with this knowledge that he instructed the plaintiff to add the extra platform or "lift" at the higher level. When the plaintiff reached the existing platform he too noticed that the standard was out of the vertical. He therefore decided for himself that he would correct the fault before going on to erect the higher platform. The judge found that this was a perfectly proper thing to do, and that he was quite competent to do it.

There was a perfectly safe way to carry out this work which the judge has described; but what the plaintiff did was described by the judge as "quite inexplicable, and nobody has given a "really satisfactory explanation, and indeed, he himself was "quite unable to provide an answer or an acceptable explanation "of the way he went to work." After describing the proper method of doing the work the judge said: "Instead of that, "before this safety strut was inserted, for some inexplicable "reason he unfastened the couplings of the first platform on "which he was standing, and proceeded to try to pull the strut "back into the vertical without having unfastened the couplings "at the base and middle. The result was, as he pulled it "towards him that inevitably there was created a sort of bend "in this standard, and when the pull was released it shot back "dragging the putlogs out of the support of the brick wall and "thus causing the platform to collapse and the plaintiff to fall ". . . that method of carrying out the operation was fantastically "wrong. Everybody agreed on that point. . . ."

C. A.
1954
Norris
v.
W. Moss
& Sons Ld.
Birkett L.J.

In this state of affairs the judge had to decide whether the defendants were liable to the plaintiff, either at common law or because of some breach of their statutory duty. He decided that there was no liability at common law because the foreman's omission to tell the plaintiff of what he had discovered a few days before August 15 had no bearing on the accident, and the plaintiff had discovered the same thing for himself. If the plaintiff had not discovered it and gone on to erect the higher platform, and an accident had occurred because of the leaning standard, then it would appear that the judge would have found the defendants to blame both at common law and because of breach of statutory duty. But the plaintiff, having discovered the fault for himself, was in fact engaged in repairing the fault, though in an improper way, when the accident occurred; and the silence of the foreman had nothing to do with the accident at all.

With regard to the alleged breach of statutory duty, the judge, on the authority of Sexton v. Scaffolding (Great Britain) Ld.,[3] decided that regulation 10, relied on by the plaintiff, did not apply; and he therefore dismissed the plaintiff's claim. He added: "I think in any event there was substantial negligence "on the part of the plaintiff in the way he set about this "particular job." It seems to me that this appeal can be decided if a clear answer can be given to the question: what was the cause of this accident? The evidence points unmistakably to the cause of the accident being the improper manner in which the plaintiff endeavoured to straighten the leaning standard. Had he performed that work in the natural and proper manner there would have been no accident at all.

If that is right, can it be said that the leaning standard, which constituted a breach of statutory duty, contributed in any way to the plaintiff's injury and damage? It is obvious, of course, that if the standard had not been out of place the plaintiff would never have attempted to set it right, and in that sense the leaning standard was concerned with the accident. But I cannot think that the leaning standard was in any sense or in any degree the cause of the accident; it was the act of the plaintiff, and that alone, which brought about the unfortunate injury. If it is to be said that there was here a breach of statutory duty (as there was) and because of its existence it must be regarded as a contributory cause, in the sense that without it the plaintiff would never have attempted to put it right, and would never have been injured, though had he acted prudently and properly there would have been no accident at all, then the liability of the defendants would be purely nominal in my opinion; but in my view the sole cause of this accident was the negligence of the plaintiff and the breach of statutory duty made no contribution. In these circumstances it is not necessary to discuss the question whether regulation 10 of the

[3] [1953] 1 Q.B. 153.

Building Regulations applies, although on the reasoning which governed Sexton's case [4] I should incline to say that it did not.

VAISEY J. I am of the same opinion. It is sometimes difficult to decide whether an antecedent act or event is the cause, or one of the causes, of a subsequent event; or whether, on the other hand, it is merely one of the surrounding circumstances in which, or part of the background in front of which, the subsequent event has taken place. Here it seems to me that the accident to the plaintiff was due entirely to his own negligence in doing a piece of work, well within his competence, in a manner which the judge described as "fantastically wrong." True it is that it was upon the leaning standard that the work in question had to be carried out, but the fact that the standard was in that condition cannot in my judgment be treated as being in any reasonable sense a cause of the accident. It is not, I think, admissible to construct chains of causation in a case such as this where a single cause, simple, obvious and amply sufficient to account for what happened is to be found in the inexcusably careless behaviour of the workman himself. The argument in the old fable in which the loss of a kingdom is traced back to an originating and ultimate cause in the loss of a single nail from a horse's shoe does not commend itself to me as adaptable to this case. I concur in the reasoning of my Lords following that of Stable J. and I agree that this appeal fails, and should be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Gibson & Weldon for John Whittle, Robinson & Bailey, Manchester; Theodore Goddard & Co. for Buckley, Pidgeon & Co., Liverpool.

A. W. G.

[4] [1953] 1 Q.B. 153.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

* FISHER v. BARNETT & POMEROY (BAKERS) LD.

1954
Jan. 20.

Lord Goddard C.J., Byrne and Parker JJ.

Food and Drugs—Act or default of third person—Practice—Sale of food unfit for human consumption—Proceedings against manufacturer—Effect of Food and Drugs Act, 1938 (1 & 2 Geo. 6, c. 56), s. 9 (2).

Section 9 (2) of the Food and Drugs Act, 1938, is purely procedural and does not create a substantive offence separate and distinct from that created by section 9 (1) (a). Accordingly, where manufacturers are prosecuted under section 83 (3) in respect of an offence against section 9 due to their act or default, the prosecutor cannot be put to his election whether he should proceed under subsection (1) (a) or subsection (2).

[Reported by Miss C. J. ELLIS, Barrister-at-Law.]

1954

FISHER v. BARNETT & POMEROY (BAKERS) LD.

CASE STATED by the chief metropolitan magistrate sitting at Bow Street.

The prosecutor, Stanley George Fisher, a sanitary inspector for the metropolitan borough of Holborn, preferred an information against the defendants under section 83 (3) of the Food and Drugs Act, 1938,[1] stating that Leigh Bakeries Ld. on June 24, 1953, sold to Eastern Carpets Ld., a roll which was intended for, but unfit for human consumption in that the roll contained part of a cigarette contrary to section 9, and that he was reasonably satisfied that the offence was due to the act or default of the defendants and that Leigh Bakeries Ld. could establish a defence under section 83 (1).

At the hearing before the magistrate, before the defendants were called upon to plead to the charge, it was contended on their behalf that the proceedings were brought under section 9, which contained two subsections, under either of which the proceedings could have been brought, and that as the course taken by the defendants might differ according to which subsection was being used, the prosecutor should elect whether he was proceeding under subsection (1) (a) or subsection (2). On behalf of the prosecutor it was contended that the prosecution was brought under section 83 (3) but that section 9 (1) (a) had to be relied upon as that was the one which created the offence.

The magistrate, being of the opinion that the prosecutor should elect and that his contention should be taken as an election to proceed under subsection (1) (a), heard the information and found the following facts: the defendants sold to Leigh Bakeries Ld. a bread roll, with others, which was unfit for human consumption in that it contained the end of a smoked cigarette. Leigh Bakeries Ld. sold the roll, with others, to Eastern Carpets Ld. Eastern Carpets Ld. had the roll in their possession for the purpose of preparation for sale at their canteen, but when they discovered that it was unfit for human consumption on completion of the preparation, they withdrew it from

[1] Food and Drugs Act, 1938, s. 9: "(1) A person who—(a) sells, or "offers or exposes for sale, or has in "his possession for the purpose of "sale or of preparation for sale; . . . "any food intended for, but unfit for, "human consumption shall, subject "to the provisions of this section, be "guilty of an offence. (2) Where "food in respect of which an offence "under paragraph (a) of the pre-"ceding subsection has been com-"mitted was sold to the offender by "some other person, that person also "shall, subject to the provisions of "this section, be guilty of an "offence."

S. 83 (3): "Where it appears to "the authority concerned that an "offence has been committed in "respect of which proceedings might "be taken under this Act against "some person and the authority are "reasonably satisfied that the offence "of which complaint is made was "due to an act or default of some "other person and that the first-"mentioned person could establish a "defence under subsection (1) of this "section, they may cause proceedings "to be taken against that other "person without first causing pro-"ceedings to be taken against the "first-mentioned person. In any "such proceedings the defendant may "be charged with and, on proof that "the contravention was due to his "act or default, be convicted of, the "offence with which the first-men-"tioned person might have been "charged."

sale. At all material times up to its withdrawal from sale the roll was intended for human consumption by an ultimate purchaser. At the end of the prosecutor's case it was submitted on behalf of the defendants that there was no case to answer. It was contended that the word "sells" in section 9 (1) (a) had to be interpreted to mean "sells by retail" or at least "makes a "sale other than the sale contemplated by section 9 (2)," since there was a presumption that Parliament enacted nothing in vain, and if a sale of the type described in section 9 (2) were an offence under section 9 (1) (a), then section 9 (2) would be otiose and unnecessary. Inasmuch as Eastern Carpets Ld. had the roll in their possession for the purpose of preparation for sale, and inasmuch as the relevant Food and Drugs authority had made no adjudication under section 83 (3) in respect of Eastern Carpets Ld., it must be taken for the purposes of the present proceedings that Eastern Carpets Ld. had committed an offence against section 9 (1) (a) in respect of the roll. In the premises the offence (if any), committed by Leigh Bakeries Ld., with which offence the defendants were charged by virtue of section 83 (3), was an offence against section 9 (2) and hence outside the provisions of section 9 (1) (a). The defendants were gravely prejudiced by being charged under section 9 (1) (a) and not under section 9 (2), in that they were deprived of putting forward a defence under section 9 (3), that defence not being available to persons charged with offences under section 9 (1) (a).

The magistrate dismissed the information, being of the opinion that in the premises, the prosecution was misconceived in that contrary to the intention of the Act, the proceedings were brought under section 9 (1) (a) instead of section 9 (2).

The prosecutor appealed.

Paul Wrightson for the prosecutor.
Brian J. P. Galpin for the defendants.

The following cases were cited in argument: Lindley v. Horner & Co. Ld.[2]; Reg. v. Industrial Disputes Tribunal, ex p. Technaloy[3]; Newman v. Jones.[4]

LORD GODDARD C.J. referred to the facts and continued: The sanitary inspector had to decide against whom to take proceedings in respect of the offence committed, and he took proceedings against the bakers who manufactured the roll. He did that under section 83 (3) of the Food and Drugs Act, which is generally called the third party section and which provides that where the appropriate authority is satisfied that the person who actually sold the bread would have a good defence under

[2] (1950) 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 1) 296; [1950] 1 All E.R. 234.
[3] [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1418; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1338.
[4] (1886) 17 Q.B.D. 132; 2 T.L.R. 600.

1954

Fisher v. Barnett & Pomeroy (Bakers) Ld.

Lord Goddard C.J.

the section—a defence, for instance, that he had been supplied with the goods by somebody else and had passed them on as supplied to him, and that he had not been guilty of any negligence or interference with the article—then the person who supplied the bread in the first instance is liable. As this was a cigarette end, it must have got into the roll in the course of manufacture. He therefore decided that he would prosecute the bakers.

Section 83 is the section which really matters in this case—and I think that the mistake which has been made is that much too much attention was paid to section 9 (1) (a). [His Lordship read section 83 (3) and continued:] This court has said on more than one occasion that in the case of a manufacturer or wholesaler, the mere fact that he sold the goods may be an act or default; it generally is. The offence which had been committed here by someone was selling bread which was unfit for consumption, and that is an offence under section 9 (1) (a). Therefore, having established that that is the offence, if the local authority are satisfied that some person other than the actual seller is in fact responsible for the condition of the goods, they can proceed against that person, as they did in this case. The only question, therefore, was whether the bread sold was unfit for human consumption and whether, in those circumstances, the defendants as the manufacturers were liable. That is exactly what the information charges.

At the hearing an application was made to the magistrate to put the prosecutor to his election whether he would proceed under section 9 (1) (a) or under subsection (2), and it was said that he ought to proceed under subsection (2) because if he did not he would deprive the defendants of a defence.

The prosecutor quite rightly, first of all, took the objection that he was not bound to elect, and I do not think that he was. I do not think that there was any question of election. The summons charged selling; that was the offence. Section 9 (2) is concerned with an entirely different matter. It is a procedural section. [His Lordship read section 9 (2) and continued:] That subsection simply means that where A is prosecuted for the offence of selling unfit food and that offence has been proved against him, the person who supplied that food to A may also be prosecuted, and all that it is necessary to show is that he supplied the food in respect of which A has been convicted. It is true that he is given a defence or may be given a defence if he can prove that the food when he sold it to A was in perfectly good order. Take, for instance, fish or game. The person who supplies fish to the fishmonger may have supplied it when it was in good order, but if it is not sold by the fishmonger until it has gone bad, then, of course, the person who supplied it would not be guilty; but that is not this case. I think that where the matter has gone wrong is that undue attention was paid to section 9 (2)—which has nothing to do with this case—and subsection (3), whereas all that mattered here was section 9 (1)

(a) and section 83 (3). The magistrate held that no offence had been committed. I think that the case must go back to him with an intimation that the information was a perfectly good information, that the offence was proved by the prosecution under the combined sections, and that it is therefore for him to proceed to hear any evidence the respondents wish to bring forward or any submissions they wish to make; and the appellant must have the costs of this argument.

1954

FISHER v. BARNETT & POMEROY (BAKERS) LD.

Lord Goddard C.J.

BYRNE J. I agree.

PARKER J. I agree.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: F. S. Chapple; Lethbridges.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

* HARTLEY v. MAYOH & CO. AND ANOTHER.

C. A.

1954 Jan. 14, 15.

Singleton, Jenkins and Hodson L.JJ.

[1951 H. No. 2884.]

Invitor and Invitee—Dangerous premises—Causation—Injury caused by concurrent causes—Factory—Fire—Failure to turn off main switch —Other switch turned off—Wires transposed unknown to occupier —Fireman electrocuted—Whether occupier liable—Relevance of statutory duty regarding switches.

Factory — Persons benefitted by regulations — "Person employed" — Fireman electrocuted in factory premises while fighting fire — Mains switch not conforming to regulations—Firemen not "persons "employed"—No right of action—Factories Act, 1937 (1 Edw. 8 & 1 Geo. 6, c. 67), s. 60 (as amended by Factories Act, 1948 (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 55), s. 12)—Regulations for the Generation, Transformation, Distribution and Use of Electrical Energy in Premises under the Factory and Workshop Acts, 1901 and 1907 (S.R. & O. 1908, No. 1312).

Factory—Electricity—Switch. Factory—Common law duty—Relevance of regulations. Fire Brigade. Causation. Regulations . . . 1907.

The Factories Act, 1937, s. 60, as amended by the Factories Act, 1948, s. 12, gives the Secretary of State power to make regulations where he is satisfied that the nature of the work or plant in factories is "of such a nature as to cause risk of bodily injury "to persons employed. . . ."

Fire brigade officers summoned to a fire in factory premises asked the factory manager to direct them to the main electric switch in order to cut off all current to the premises. This, unknown to the manager, consisted of two small tumbler switches, which both he and the firemen ignored; but he directed them to other master switches which were switched off, and which would have effectively cut off all current to that part of the premises where the fire was, had not two wires been transposed at a point in the wiring system, that transposition being the responsibility of the area electricity

C. A.

1954

Hartley
v.
Mayoh & Co.

authority. Accordingly the current remained in the wires throughout the circuit so long as the main switch was on. A fire officer was electrocuted in the fire.

In an action by his widow, Barry J. held the electricity authority liable as to 90 per cent. of the damages. He held the occupiers of the factory liable for the remaining 20 per cent. (1) as invitors at common law and (2) for breach of regulation 9 (relating to main switches) of the electricity regulations of 1908. On appeal by the occupiers:—

Held, first (affirming Barry J.) that that regulation showed that it was the duty of the occupier of a factory to know his main switch; that the manager ought to have known that the two tumbler switches constituted the main switch and the danger to firemen if all current was not cut off; that that constituted an unusual danger on the premises against which the occupiers as invitors ought to have protected or warned the firemen, as invitees; that though the manager neither knew nor ought to have known that the wires were transposed, his original negligence in relation to the main switch persisted to cause the fireman's death; and that the occupiers were accordingly liable at common law.

Held, secondly (reversing Barry J.) that, though the placing of the tumbler switches constituted a breach of the regulations, the deceased did not belong to the class of "persons employed" for whose benefit the regulations were enacted, and, therefore, the plaintiff could not maintain a civil action successfully against the occupiers for breach of statutory duty.

Appeal from Barry J.

On September 24, 1950, a Sunday morning, the Salford Fire Brigade was summoned to a fire which had broken out in the upper portion of the small factory premises of Mayoh & Co., pickle manufacturers, the first defendants. On arrival at the scene, Divisional Officer Reginald Dingle Hartley and sub-officer Bigland, following the invariable rule for members of fire brigades, went to locate the main electric switches in order to cut off the electric supply to the premises, and so avoid the risk of firemen in wet clothes being electrocuted. Bigland was directed to the main switchboard by the factory manager, Holland. The fire officer switched off two ironclad and obvious master switches on the left of the board, but paid no attention and was not directed to two small tumbler switches on the right of the board which were unconnected by any form of link-bar, but which were in fact the main switches for the whole premises. The fire officers next ensured that a master switch, which controlled the whole lighting circuit to that part of the factory where the fire was, was at the "off" position, and dealt similarly with two individual switches for that part of the building, so that in the normal course, there should have been no electric current in that part of the premises, even though the main switch had not been turned off.

Several of the firemen having received minor shocks, Bigland asked the manager whether there were any other switches, and the manager assured him that there were not, but went back to the switchboard with him to ascertain that the ironclad switches, which he believed to be the main switches, were off. Meanwhile Divisional Officer Hartley had entered a blazing room, and shortly afterwards was found, lying in the fire with an electric wire in his hand; he died almost at once.

His widow brought an action under the Fatal Accidents Act, 1846, and the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934, against the first defendants as occupiers, and the second defendants, the North-Western Electricity Board, as the electricity authority, claiming damages for negligence at common law and breaches of statutory duty under the Regulations for the Generation, Transformation, Distribution and Use of Electrical Energy in Premises under the Factory and Workshop Acts, 1901 and 1907 (S.R. & O. 1908 No. 1312, as amended by S.R. & O. 1944, No. 739), and the Electricity Supply Regulations, 1937, regulation 25 (a).

Barry J. found that the death was due to two causes, in the absence of either one of which the deceased would not have met his death: (1) that the electricity supply had not been cut off because no one had realized that the two tumbler switches controlled the circuit; he found, however, that the wires in the upper part of the building should have been "dead" as they should have been disconnected by the other switches which were all at the "off" position, but for the second cause of the accident which was (2) that certain connexions between the two tumbler switches and the electricity meter and the neutral phase wire on the switchboard—connexions for which the electricity authority was wholly responsible—had at some time unknown been transposed, with the result that the neutral wire remained "live" throughout the circuit. The judge found that the accident could not have happened if the tumbler switches had been in the "off" position, nor could it have happened if the current had not been flowing through the neutral wire.

Barry J. held that the occupiers of premises of this kind ought to have been aware of the way in which the main supply to the lighting and power circuits could be switched off, and that they were in breach of their duty at common law to warn the fire officer, an invitee, of that which constituted an unusual danger on their premises; alternatively, they should have rendered their premises free of that unusual danger by fitting a link-bar between the tumbler switches or fixing a notice nearby indicating that they were the main switches. The judge also held that the occupiers were in breach of the statutory regulations, in particular regulation 9, holding that, once an act or omission caused danger to "persons employed" on the premises, the right to protection given by the Factories Act, 1937, s. 60,[1] as amended by the Factories Act, 1948, s. 12,[1] extended to other persons lawfully on the premises.

[1] Factories Act, 1937, s. 60: "(1) "Where the Secretary of State is "satisfied that any manufacture, "machinery, plant, process, or de-"scription of manual labour, used in "factories is of such a nature as to

C. A.
1954
HARTLEY
v.
MAYOH & CO.

He held that the second defendants were also liable both at common law and under the Electricity Supply Regulations, 1937, regulation 25 (a), and gave judgment for the plaintiff for £10,049, apportioning the damages as to 10 per cent. against the first defendants and as to 90 per cent. against the second defendants. The occupiers appealed against that apportionment.

Neville J. Laski Q.C. and J. W. Da Cunha for the occupiers.

H. I. Nelson Q.C. and C. M. W. Elliott for the Electricity Board.

D. J. Brabin Q.C. and Philip Curtis for the plaintiff.

The following cases were cited in the argument: Yorkshire Dale Steamship Co. v. Minister of War Transport [2]; Davies v. Swan Motor Co. (Swansea) Ld. [3]; Stimpson v. Standard Telephones and Cables Ld. [4]; Groves v. Wimborne (Lord) [5]; Monk v. Warbey [6]; Glasgow Corporation v. Muir. [7]

SINGLETON L.J. stated the facts, and continued: The second defendants, the North-Western Electricity Board, have not appealed against the judgment which was given against them, and that is not surprising, for it is found by the judge that they were responsible for the transposition of the wires. The judge said: "I am, however, forced to the conclusion that, on a strong balance "of probability, the original crossing of the two leads from the "tumbler switches to the board's apparatus was the fault of "someone, some unknown employee of the board. This fault "was committed on some previous occasion which it is wholly "impossible to identify"; and he gave other reasons for the conclusion which he reached.

When any work of importance was done to the electricity system in this factory a representative of the board, or of their predecessors, carried out a test; and if there had been a proper test, this defect, which must have been of long standing, must have been found. The tumbler switches indeed constituted what ought to have been regarded as the main switch. A main switch ought to have an iron bar across it, so that it would be recognized as a main switch; but when one has merely two tumbler switches with the appearance these two had it is unlikely that they would "cause risk of bodily injury to per-"sons employed in connexion there-"with, or any class of those persons, "he may, subject to the provisions of "this Act, make such special regu-"lations as appear to him to be "reasonably practicable and to meet "the necessity of the case."

Factories Act, 1948, s. 12: "(1) "In subsection (1) of section 60 "of the principal Act after the word "'plant' there shall be inserted the "words 'equipment, appliance' and "for the words 'persons employed in "'connexion therewith' there shall "be substituted the words 'the per-"'sons employed'; . . ."

[2] [1942] A.C. 691; 58 T.L.R. 263; [1942] 2 All E.R. 6.

[3] [1949] 2 K.B. 291; 65 T.L.R. 278; [1949] 1 All E.R. 620.

[4] [1940] 1 K.B. 342; 56 T.L.R. 90; [1939] 4 All E.R. 225.

[5] [1898] 2 Q.B. 402; 14 T.L.R. 493.

[6] [1935] 1 K.B. 75; 51 T.L.R. 77.

[7] [1943] A.C. 448; 59 T.L.R. 266; [1943] 2 All E.R. 44.

be recognized by anyone, and certainly not by a fire brigade officer coming to the factory, as a main switch. From what I have said it is clear that an appeal on the part of the Electricity Board could have had no hope of success. The main responsibility, if not the whole of the responsibility, for this accident lies on the board or on its predecessors. There had been work done which should have been followed by a test some time in the late 30's, I think, again in 1946, and again in 1950. Witnesses from the board said that the system of having a main switch of this kind was obsolete, and that their practice was to point that out to occupiers. They had not pointed out anything of that nature to the occupiers of this factory, which is a matter for great regret.

Mr. Laski, on behalf of the first defendants, submitted to this court that the whole of the responsibility arising from the death of Hartley rested on the board, and that no negligence was proved against his clients, the occupiers of the premises, nor was there any breach of statutory duty by them. In any event, he said, if there was a breach of statutory duty, the officer who was killed was not a person for whose benefit the regulations were made, and an action for breach of statutory duty would not lie on the part of his widow.

The regulations for the Generation, Transformation, Distribution and Use of Electrical Energy in Premises under the Factory and Workshop Acts, 1901 and 1907, are preserved for present purposes by section 159 of the Factories Act, 1937. The power to make regulations now is given by section 60 of the Act of 1937: "(1) Where the Secretary of State is satisfied that any "manufacture, machinery, plant, process, or description of "manual labour, used in factories is of such a nature as to cause "risk of bodily injury to persons employed in connexion there-"with, or any class of those persons, he may, subject to the "provisions of this Act, make such special regulations as appear "to him to be reasonably practicable and to meet the necessity "of the case."

It is to be observed that the power to make the regulations is given when the Minister is satisfied that the work is of such a nature as to cause risk of bodily injury to "persons employed." Those words embrace the amendment made by section 12 of the Factories Act, 1948, prior to which time the power to make the regulations was given if the Minister was satisfied that the manufacture, etc., was of such a nature as to cause risk of bodily injury to persons employed "in connexion therewith."

I do not think that Hartley, who met with his death on this occasion, was a person for whose benefit the regulations could be made, or were made, and I do not think that an action lies for breach of statutory duty in this case.

A somewhat similar position arose in 1898 in Groves v. Wimborne (Lord),[1] and in each of the judgments in that case

[1] [1898] 2 Q.B. 402.

C. A.
1954
Hartley
v.
Mayoh & Co.
Singleton L.J.

the question was discussed as to whether the Factories Act, or a particular section of it, was passed in the interests of the public at large or of a particular class of persons. That appears from the judgment of A. L. Smith L.J.[2] and that of Rigby L.J.[3] and from that of Vaughan Williams L.J.[4] In my view Hartley was not one of the class of persons for whose benefit the regulations were made in that he was not a person employed. For that reason I do not think that any action for breach of statutory duty lies against the occupiers.

The regulation on which reliance was placed is regulation 9 of the regulations of 1908 which provides: "Where one of the "conductors of a system is connected to earth, no single-pole "switch, other than a link for testing purposes or a switch "for use in controlling a generator, shall be placed in such "conductor or any branch thereof."

It is agreed for the purpose of this appeal that the tumbler switches, as they were placed and as they were at that time, constituted a breach on the part of the occupiers of regulation 9. Though that breach does not, in my view, give the right to an action for damages for breach of statutory duty, I feel that regard must be had to it from another point of view. The occupier of a factory is in a different position from the occupier of a private house or flat. He is charged with certain duties under the Factories Acts, and under the regulations which are made under those Acts in so far as they affect factories. Regulation 9 put a duty in regard to a single-pole switch on the occupier of a factory. Thus it is clear that the occupier of a factory must know something about his switches; it seems to me that he ought to know where the main switch is. That is a matter for consideration when one has to deal with the claim made for damages for negligence at common law. It was said on behalf of the plaintiff against the first defendants: "You, Mayohs, are occupiers of a factory, the "premises on which the man Hartley went, and thus the ordinary "law with regard to invitor and invitee applies, and Hartley being "an invitee, using reasonable care on his part for his own safety, "was entitled to expect that you, the occupiers, should on your "part use reasonable care to prevent damage from unusual danger "of which you knew, or ought to have known"; and it was added that no warning was given of any unusual danger.

The unusual danger of which the occupiers knew, or ought to have known, was that their main switch, which consisted of two tumbler switches, was not indicated in the normal way. Holland, their manager, did not know that that was the main switch. The judge pointed out that if he knew that those switches did not serve any lighting points in the building, he was at least put on inquiry to see what they were. He had been there almost 20 years at the time of this fire; he did not know where the main switch in the building was, and when on the day of the fire the fire brigade

[2] Ibid. 407.
[3] Ibid. 413, 414.
[4] Ibid. 415, 416.

officers came on duty to the factory the manager, though he showed them the switches of which he knew, did not show them this main switch. For my part, I do not think that he can be heard to say that he was not negligent in that respect, for his duty as manager of the factory was to know where the main switch was.

Mr. Laski submitted that that did not matter; the real cause of this accident was the transposing of the two wires in connexion with the tumbler switches. That, said he, was what brought current into the neighbourhood of the fire and caused the death of Hartley; to which it was replied: Yes, but if the main switch had been indicated as a main switch, or if the fireman had been told it was the main switch, this accident would never have happened.

Barry J. said that he accepted the evidence of the many witnesses who told him that any fireman would assume that two unconnected tumbler switches controlled some lighting points, but not the main supply. There was no negligence, in other words, on the part of any officer of the fire brigade.

In dealing with the duty owed by an invitor to an invitee the judge said: "Stated at its very lowest, the duty of an occupier "of premises to his invitee is to use proper care to ensure that "his premises are free from any unusual danger, or, alterna- "tively, to give due warning of any unusual danger of which "he knows, or ought to know. With this standard in mind "I am quite satisfied that the first defendants failed to fulfil "their common law duties towards the deceased. It is, how- "ever, right to say this—I acquit them of any conscious default. "I am also far from satisfied that they ought to have known "that the polarity of the lighting system had been reversed by "the crossing of the leads between the tumbler switches and the "meter and neutral phase. On the other hand, I consider that "the occupiers of premises of this kind ought to have been "aware of the way in which the mains supply to the lighting "and power circuits could be switched off. I am fortified in this "view by the manager's evidence. He told me that he knew "that the two tumbler switches did not control any local light- "ing points. This should, I think, have put him on inquiry "as to their true function. Neither he nor anyone else in the "employment of the first defendants warned the deceased of "the unusual danger which existed in these premises for firemen "or other persons who might come into contact with the electric "wires, this unusual danger being, of course, the fact that the "lighting supply was controlled by a switch which was "not apparently a mains switch and that electric current could "circulate through the electric circuit when the only two "switches which appeared to be mains switches were turned to "the 'off' position. Put in another way, the first defendants "ought, I think, to have realized that the absence of any link- "bar between the two tumbler switches constituted an unusual

C. A.
1954
Hartley
v.
Mayoh & Co.
Singleton L.J.

"danger to persons in the situation of the deceased, against "which such persons clearly ought to have been warned. If "no warning was to be given, the first defendants should have "fulfilled their alternative duty; that is to say, they should "have rendered their premises safe and eliminated this unusual "danger by the very simple means of fitting a link-bar between "the two tumbler switches or fixing some label or notice in the "neighbourhood of the switches indicating that they controlled "the main lighting supply to the building." That is the way the judge put the case on the plaintiff's claim against the first defendants for negligence.

I was very impressed by the argument of Mr. Laski on this part of the case. It is extraordinarily hard on the occupiers, who may well have thought that they were entitled to rely on the visits from time to time of officers of the board, that they should be found guilty of negligence by reason of the fact that they had not pointed out the unusual danger which would have been avoided if the regulations had been carried out. The real danger was introduced by the transposing of the wires. I feel for myself that Barry J. might have reached a conclusion that, as the main responsibility was on the board, he might well have said that the whole fault was on them, as Mr. Laski submits.

[His Lordship considered the evidence and continued:]

I approach the matter in this way: Suppose that time had run in favour of the second defendants as a public authority before an action was brought, and the only defendants had been Mayoh & Co., and it had been proved that their manager did not know where the main switch was, but indicated to the fire brigade other switches as being the main switches: is it clear that an action against the occupiers in those circumstances would have failed? I do not think that it is. It would have been for the judge to make up his mind on the evidence whether negligence was proved or not. The judge arrived at the conclusion that he could not exonerate Mayoh & Co. entirely.

Mr. Laski reminded this court that this is a re-hearing, and that if we reach the conclusion that the judge was wrong we ought so to say. I am not satisfied that he was wrong in deciding that the occupiers of the premises were responsible to some extent. I have already said that I do not agree with the judge's finding that an action for damages for breach of statutory duty would lie in this case, but on the other part of the claim I feel that the appeal of Mayoh & Co. must be dismissed.

Jenkins L.J. I have found considerable difficulty in this case, but on the whole I have come to the conclusion that the judge's decision to the effect that the defendants, Mayoh & Co., are liable at common law to the plaintiff in respect of the accident to her husband ought not to be disturbed. I think that the defendant firm, in the person of their manager on the spot, ought to have known that the two tumbler switches in fact constituted the main switch for the lighting circuit in this building. The manager ought to have known that in his capacity as the manager of this factory, particularly in view of the statutory obligation to their own workpeople owed under the Electricity Regulations. Further, the manager, as representing the defendant firm, ought to have known that this was not a normal or modern type of main switch, and that the men of the fire brigade would be likely to overlook the fact that it was a main switch, and to consider that by turning off the two power circuit main switches adjacent to the switchboard they had turned off the whole of the electric supply to this factory. Further, I think that the manager must be taken to have known that it would be highly dangerous for the firemen to proceed to deal with the fire unless all current was cut off from the building so as to prevent the risk to them of injury by electric shocks. In these circumstances, it seems to me that the manager ought to have known that the firemen here were exposed to an unusual danger consisting of the risk that, owing to the unusual and obsolete character of the main switch relating to the lighting circuit, they might seek to deal with the fire on the mistaken assumption that by turning off the two power circuit main switches they had effectively made the whole of the electrical system in the factory dead. That being so, under the ordinary law of invitor and invitee it was the duty of the defendant firm through their manager to protect the firemen from damage arising from this unusual danger, or to warn them of it. In actual fact he did neither of these things, and the result was that the current in the lighting circuit was not cut off at the main switch. So far, it seems to me, it would be reasonably plain that the judge was justified in holding the defendant firm liable. It is, however, still necessary to consider the effect on that conclusion of the circumstance that the master switch controlling all the lights in the upper part of the building (which was the seat of the fire) was turned off, so that if all the wiring in connexion with this system had been in proper order no current would have reached the upper storey by reason of the omission to turn off the two tumbler switches which constituted the main switch for the lighting circuit.

Mr. Laski has forcefully argued that inasmuch as this master switch would have effectively rendered dead the electric wires in the immediate vicinity of the fire if the wiring had been in order, it cannot be said that the manager's omission to see that the firemen understood which were the main switches caused, or contributed to, the death of Hartley to any extent. The true cause, he said, was the reversing of the phase wire and the neutral wire at the switchboard, which prevented the master switch from effectively cutting off the current.

It will be remembered that the judge in effect found it impossible to hold that the defendant firm or the manager knew, or ought to have known, of this reversing of the wires, and,

C. A.
1954
Hartley
v.
Mayoh & Co.
Jenkins L.J.

accordingly, on Mr. Laski's argument, the true cause of the fatal accident to Hartley was an unusual danger of which it could not be said that the manager or the defendant firm knew, or ought to have known. I certainly would not differ from that finding. Nevertheless, in my view, the defendant firm cannot escape liability on account of the fact that the master switch was shut off.

I think that feature of the case should be looked at in this way: For the reasons I have endeavoured to state, there was negligence on the part of the defendant firm in the person of the manager, and that negligence had resulted in an omission to shut off the main switch of the lighting circuit. If the wires had not been crossed at the switchboard the circumstance that the master switch was shut off would have averted the consequences of that negligence, but inasmuch as the wires were crossed, or reversed, although that was not a circumstance of which the manager either knew, or ought to have known, nevertheless the result was that the consequences of the original negligence did operate; and accordingly, although, as I have said, I regard this as a difficult case and I think that it is very near the line, I am on the whole of opinion that the judge's conclusion on this aspect of it ought not to be disturbed.

I agree that the existence of the statutory obligation under regulation 9 of the Electricity Regulations of 1908 which provides: "Where one of the conductors of a system is connected to earth, "no single-pole switch, other than a link for testing purposes or "a switch for use in controlling a generator, shall be placed in "such conductor or any branch thereof" affords strong support for the view that one must conclude that the manager, and through him the defendant firm, ought to have known of the probability that the two tumbler switches would not be recognized as a main switch, inasmuch as it was the duty of the defendant firm to link those two switches by means of a bar or other device in order to satisfy the provisions of regulation 9. On the other hand, I agree with my Lord that Hartley was not a person belonging to the class of "persons employed" for whose benefit these regulations were enacted, and, accordingly, I agree that the plaintiff could not successfully maintain a civil claim based on breach of that statutory duty.

I have only to add that, in my view, the case would be clearer against the defendant firm if it was plain on the evidence that the report of Bigland or other members of the fire brigade that they were still receiving electric shocks after the main switches had supposedly been turned off had been made, and that the manager's assurance that all the main switches were turned off had been given, before the moment when Hartley met his death; but the evidence as to the order of events is not sufficiently definite to make it possible for me to form my conclusion on that. Even so, for the other reasons I have endeavoured to state, I think that the judge's judgment on the matter of common law liability should stand. Accordingly I agree that this appeal fails and should be dismissed.

HODSON L.J. I agree with both the judgments which have been delivered, and have very little to add. It is abundantly clear that the substantial cause of this accident was the negligence of the second defendants, who have been found 90 per cent. to blame. Mr. Laski has put his argument on behalf of the first defendants forcefully and shortly, basing himself on the language of Lord Wright in Yorkshire Dale Steamship Company Ld. v. Minister of War Transport [5]: "This choice of the real or efficient "cause from out of the whole complex of the facts must be made "by applying commonsense standards. Causation is to be under-"stood as the man in the street, and not as either the scientist "or the metaphysician, would understand it."

Mr. Laski said, looking at this matter from the commonsense point of view without endeavouring to be unduly scientific or metaphysical, that the cause of this accident was the fact that the wires from the main switch to the meter were transposed, so that the main switch not being in the "off" position, the electricity was running wild in the building along the neutral wires which should have been dead.

That is a very strong argument, but the judge has found that there was a subsidiary and less important cause of this accident, which was that the first defendants, the occupiers of the factory where the fire occurred and where the man met his death, were in breach of their common law duty, because if the main switch, which they ought to have known was a main switch, had been in the "off" position the accident would not have happened. That is sufficient to establish a causal connexion between the negligence and the accident. It is true that the manager had switched off another switch between the main switch and the premises where the man met his death, and two subsidiary switches, three in all, which would, if the wiring system had been in order, have prevented the accident. As Jenkins L.J. has pointed out, the wiring system not being in order, in my view it is open to the court to come to the conclusion that the consequences of the original negligence persisted, and it is not right to exclude from consideration the deficient knowledge of the first defendants of the inefficiency of their switch, and its situation.

I think that the way in which Lord Wright put it, that this is a matter for the man in the street and is not a matter of scientific investigation, leads one to the conclusion that on the question of causation this court should be slow to interfere with the conclusion of the trial judge. Mr. Laski said quite rightly that although the court should be slow to act, nevertheless it is open to the court to do so. I accept that, but difficult as this

[5] [1942] A.C. 691, 706.

C. A.
1954
Hartley v. Mayoh & Co.
Hodson L.J.

case is, I feel myself unable to say with any certainty—indeed I feel the reverse—that one can exclude from consideration in dealing with the position at common law the fact that the first defendants were in breach of the electricity regulations.

On the regulation itself, on which the plaintiff relied, I agree that it is not open to the plaintiff to found her cause of action upon that. Regulation 9 is in general terms and does not exclude the plaintiff from the class of persons who may bring an action; it leaves that wide; but the regulation is made under what is now section 60 of the Factories Act, 1937, which gives power to the Minister, on being satisfied that any manufacture, or machinery, or other matter, in a factory is of such a nature as to cause the risk of bodily injury to the persons employed, to make such regulations as appear to him to be reasonable and practicable, and to meet the necessity of the case. That involves this, that regulations can only be made within the limits of the powers conferred by section 60, and section 60 contains the words "persons "employed," which were substituted for the words "persons "employed in connexion therewith" in the earlier legislation. These words do not, in my opinion, extend the ambit of the Act far enough to include a fireman who comes on the premises to fight a fire, whether called by the occupier or anyone else.

I respectfully disagree with the judge's construction of the words "persons employed" as being wide enough to cover such a person, and as I have already made clear, I do not regard the regulations as being open to separate construction apart from the section of the Act under which they are made. I agree, therefore, that the appeal fails.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Hewitt, Woollacott & Chown, for Shaw, Smith & Co., Manchester; L. Bingham & Co., for James Chapman & Co., Manchester; Bower, Cotton & Bower, for George Davies, Manchester.

M. M. H.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

C. A.
1954
Jan. 14.
Evershed M.R., Denning and Romer L.JJ.

* WAKEHAM v. WAKEHAM.

Infant—Custody—Divorce Court—Removal by wife from jurisdiction—Decree against wife on ground of desertion—Right of husband to custody to enable him to bring proceedings in foreign court—Care and control.

Conflict of Laws.

In October, 1949, a wife deserted her husband taking with her the two children of the marriage, P. then two years of age and B. then about twelve months old. Shortly afterwards she promised her husband not to remove the children from the jurisdiction without informing him. The wife subsequently returned P. to the husband, but retained B. In December, 1950, the wife, without informing her husband and in breach of her promise, went to South Africa taking B. with her. She did not return to this country. On October 7, 1953, the husband obtained a decree nisi dissolving the marriage on the ground of the wife's desertion, and by that order the custody of both children was given to him. The wife applied to have the order as to custody varied. Collingwood J. varied the original order, giving the custody of B. to the wife on the ground that it would not be reasonable to order so young a boy, who had always been with his mother, to be returned to his father. The husband appealed:—

Held that, in the circumstances, it was not to B.'s advantage that the husband should be deprived of the legal custody and thus be under a disadvantage should he see fit to make an application to a South African court; and that the original order would be restored, but without prejudice to any question of care and control which should be left to be determined by the court of South Africa on any such application.

Decision of Collingwood J. reversed.

APPEAL from Collingwood J.

Ronald Walter Wakeham and Alexandra Catherine Wakeham were married in the Union of South Africa in 1943 where the husband was then serving in the Royal Air Force. The wife had been born in England, but had lived in South Africa from early childhood and all her family and friends were there. After the war the husband and wife returned to England where the two children of the marriage were born, the elder, Peter, being born in February, 1947, and the younger, Brian, in October, 1948.

In October, 1949, when Brian was a year old, the wife went to Broadstairs to stay with her mother and grandmother, who were then in England, ostensibly for a short holiday. The correspondence which passed at that time did not indicate any determination on her part never to return to the husband. The husband and wife were in fact apart from the period of the Broadstairs holiday.

In January, 1950, the wife, through her solicitors, asked the husband whether he would object if she went back to South Africa taking the two children of the marriage with her. The husband said plainly that he would object, and shortly afterwards the wife in writing promised the husband that she would not make any attempt to take the children away without first informing him and obtaining an order of the court. In May, 1950, the elder boy, Peter, was returned by the wife to the husband, but Brian, who was then only about 18 months old, remained with the wife. In December, 1950, the wife, without informing the husband, left for South Africa taking Brian with her. She gave instructions to her solicitors, contrary to their advice, that no information of what was on foot was to be given to the husband. After Brian was removed to South Africa the husband did little, if anything, to inform himself as to the welfare, or even the whereabouts, of Brian.

C. A.
1954
Wakeham
v.
Wakeham.

On October 7, 1953, the husband was granted a decree nisi of divorce on the ground of his wife's desertion. At the same time an order was made giving the custody of Peter and Brian to the husband. The wife was not represented at the hearing of the petition, but she had intended to ask the court that the custody of Brian should be given to her. Her advisers expected that the question would be adjourned into chambers. Subsequently, she took out a summons, which came before Collingwood J., asking that custody should be given to her. On December 10, 1953, he varied the order made on the petition and, so far as it related to the custody of Brian, gave his custody to the wife until further order, with leave to keep him out of the jurisdiction for an indefinite time. He made this order on the ground that it would not be right to order Brian to be taken away from his mother, who had brought him up, and returned to a father whom he probably would not recognize. The husband appealed.

R. D. Ranking for the husband.
D. J. C. Ackner for the wife.

Evershed M.R. stated the facts and continued: A point that struck me as a little unusual was the fact that, the wife in asking for a variation of the earlier order, made no offer to the effect that, if the court accepted her application, she would obey any further order about the child that the court might make. Indeed, the proceedings before Collingwood J. and the present appeal—although relating to Brian, and therefore the arguments have naturally been punctuated by assertions on both sides that the only concern of the two parties is his welfare—seem to me to be in the nature of manoeuvres by the husband and wife to gain tactical advantages. The result of Collingwood J.'s order is admittedly that the husband will be put at a substantial disadvantage if he ever should see fit to go to South Africa and ask for Brian to be returned to him.

Mr. Ackner contends that it is right that he should be at such a disadvantage, at any rate, if the court is satisfied, as Collingwood J. was, that for the moment it is in the best interests of Brian that he should remain in South Africa with his mother. It is indeed clear that the judge's mind was directed exclusively to the question whether it was better that Brian should remain, at any rate for the present, with the wife, or whether he should be transported back to England? The judge on that matter, after considering the somewhat serious conduct of the wife, and the fact that she was a deserter, and after considering also the father's apparent lack of serious concern about Brian during the past two years of his life, thought that the argument clearly was all in favour of Brian remaining where he is; that a young boy always with his mother, who would perhaps not even know his father, and not know his elder brother, ought not, decently and kindly, to be sent back to England.

But Mr. Ranking has made it clear that he is not asking this court now to express any view as to whether Brian now or at some future date ought to come back to England, and I confess that any view that we expressed would be largely futile, because it would be quite incapable of being made effective, unless the court in South Africa should take a similar view.

I feel the great force of Collingwood J.'s opinion that for the moment, at any rate, Brian is better where he is. Only one matter is not mentioned by him, which seems to me to be not without substance, and that is that Brian (who is, after all, English by birth) has an elder brother, and a matter which at some time will have to be considered is whether it is not right that he should be brought up to be aware of that fact, and to have the advantages of brotherhood as well as fatherhood made available to him. But more upon that topic I do not propose to say, for I have come to the conclusion that whatever be, now or hereafter, the right answer to the problem of the care and control of Brian, I am not satisfied that it was right to vary the order made when the decree nisi was granted and to give the legal custody to the wife, on the ground (for so it must be taken) that she, in fact, had possession of Brian, and took him out of England, has retained possession of him and has brought him up well.

I do not think, in the circumstances of this case, that it is right, or to Brian's advantage, that the husband should be put technically in that disadvantageous position, and therefore, with all respect to the judge, the proper course is to let the original order in this respect stand, namely: to let the husband have the legal custody of Brian, but to make it clear by express statement in the order that the order as to custody is without prejudice to any question as regards the care and control of Brian. If the husband chooses to make an application to the South African court, the matter will no doubt be considered by that court upon its merits; but the husband will not at any rate start with the unfair disadvantage of having an order of an English court giving the wife the legal custody of Brian. Therefore, I should allow this appeal, and restore, with the qualification that I have mentioned, the order originally made as regards the custody of Brian in the decree nisi.

DENNING L.J. Cases often arise in the Divorce Court where a guilty wife deserts her husband and takes the children with her, but the father has no means of bringing them up himself. In such a situation, the usual order is that the father, the innocent party, is given the custody of the child or children, but the care and control is left to the mother. That order is entirely realistic. By giving the father the custody, it recognizes that he, the innocent party, is at least entitled to a voice in the bringing up

C. A.
1954 Wakeham
v.
Wakeham.
Denning L.J.

of the child or children, and is entitled to the consideration of the court when any question arises as to what is to be done for the child.

Of course, the paramount consideration for the court is the welfare of the child. But that is not the only consideration. The father's views are also entitled to consideration, and that is why the order for custody should be given to him, although for practical reasons, and solely for practical reasons, the mother may have the care and control.

I think the judge erred in this case, because there can be no doubt, on the facts before us, that the husband was the innocent party, and the wife took a child of two years of age out of the country in breach of an undertaking which she had deliberately given, and, indeed, contrary to the advice of her then solicitor, who told her that she ought not to do it without communicating with the husband.

I am clearly of opinion that the custody ought to be given to the husband, without prejudice, as my Lord has said, to any question of care and control, which no doubt will be dealt with by the courts in South Africa. I agree that the appeal should be allowed accordingly.

Romer L.J. I also agree. It was suggested that if we interfered, as we are asked to do by the husband, with the order of Collingwood J., we should, in effect, be overruling the discretion which was vested in him, and which he exercised; but that is not so. The point that we are deciding today is quite different from the point to which Collingwood J. was addressing his mind when he said: "I cannot see any argument at all which would justify "me in saying that this little boy in his own interest should be "taken away from his mother and brought back to England," and he gave effect to that view without hesitation and said that he would not make the order. We are not being asked to make that order, but to put the husband into a position in which he can approach, on terms of equality with his former wife, the South African courts if any question in regard to the welfare or control of the boy Brian comes up for determination. As the matter stands at the moment, in my view, the wife, having the legal custody as well as the physical control of Brian, the husband would be gravely prejudiced if, in the face of that order, he made an application to the South African courts, which he might well make on some matter affecting Brian; and the only thing that we are doing today is to remove that disadvantage and to put him on equal terms with the wife in any application that may be made.

Mr. Ackner said that if we made the order which my Lord has indicated it would, in fact, be giving the husband an advantage over his wife, but I do not take that view. The words which are going to be put into the order, which my Lord has mentioned, "without prejudice to any question of care or control," will, and are intended to, leave the matter open, and will no doubt receive that interpretation in the South African courts. I accordingly agree that the appeal should be allowed.

C. A.
1954
WAKEHAM v. WAKEHAM.

Appeal allowed, custody of the child, Brian, granted to the husband without prejudice to any question as regards care and control.

Solicitors: Lewis, Holman & Lawrence; Braund & Hill for Walmsley & Barnes, Broadstairs.

B. A. B.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

* LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. TANN.

1954
Jan. 28.

Lord Goddard C.J., Byrne and Parker JJ.

Metropolis — Building — "Structure" — "Building or structure . . . "beyond the general line of buildings"—Erection of car shelter in forecourt of house—Tubular steel framework covered with canvas —Shelter fixed to gateposts in forecourt wall—Whether a "structure"—London Building Act, 1930 (21 & 22 Geo. 5, c. 158), s. 22.
Building. Statute—Construction—Meaning of word—View of man in Stoke Newington omnibus. Ejusdem generis rule.

By the London Building Act, 1930, s. 22 (1): "No building or "structure shall without the consent in writing of the Council be "erected . . . (a) beyond the general line of buildings . . ."

The defendant, without the consent of the London County Council, erected a car shelter, consisting of a tubular steel framework covered with a specially made canvas cover, in the forecourt of her house. The shelter was fixed to two wooden gateposts in the forecourt wall and had sliding canvas curtains at the entrance:—

Held, that, looking at it from the point of view of a man of the world and having regard to its purpose, the car shelter, which had been erected in order to provide the defendant's house with the garage which it had not otherwise got, was a "structure" within the meaning of section 22 of the London Building Act, 1930.

Per Lord Goddard C.J.: The term "structure" should not be construed ejusdem generis with the term "building" because there is no genus and because the Act is meant to include something wider than "building."

Per Parker J.: "Structure" in section 22 means a structure in the nature of a building, but in deciding whether something is constructed in the nature of a building it is proper to look at the intention with which it was constructed. The car shelter was a structure in the nature of a garage and it could not be said that it was not a structure merely because it was made of canvas.

Tests laid down by Lindley L.J. in Lavy v. London County Council [1895] 2 Q.B. 577, 582; 11 T.L.R. 525 and Vaughan Williams J. in London County Council v. Pearce [1892] 2 Q.B. 109, 112; 8 T.L.R. 531 applied.

CASE STATED by the North London stipendiary magistrate.

1954

London County Council v. Tann.

An information was preferred by the London County Council against the defendant for that she, within the six months immediately preceding the laying of the information, in the County of London and within the Metropolitan Police District, did unlawfully erect a structure (car shelter) in contravention of the provisions of section 22 of the London Building Act, 1930,[1] beyond the general line of buildings on the northern side of Paget Road, Stoke Newington, without the consent in writing of the council, whereby she became liable to a penalty under section 148 (2) (iii) of the London Building Acts (Amendment) Act, 1939, and to have an order made against her to demolish the structure.

The following facts were proved or admitted before the magistrate: Paget Road was a street within the meaning of section 22 of the London Building Act, 1930. Within six months prior to the laying of the information the defendant put a car shelter in the forecourt or garden of a dwelling-house on the north side of Paget Road, the car shelter having been erected or brought forward in front of the general line of buildings without the consent in writing of the council.

The car shelter in question consisted of a tubular steel framework, fixed together by pipe screw angles and joints, covered with a specially made canvas covering fastened to the framework by canvas tapes and small tie ropes. The shelter had sliding canvas curtains at its entrance from Paget Road, and was fixed to two wooden gateposts in the forecourt wall of the house by means of four metal fittings screwed to the gateposts. The width between the gateposts was seven feet and the overall width of the car shelter framework was seven feet nine inches. It had remained in situ since its erection and its purpose was to provide shelter for a car. The Stoke Newington Borough Council, at the defendant's expense, had made a vehicular crossing of the footway from the carriageway to the gateway in the forecourt wall.

On behalf of the council it was contended that the car shelter was a building or structure within the meaning of section 22 of the London Building Act, 1930, and that the defendant was accordingly liable to a penalty and an order to demolish pursuant to section 30.

On behalf of the defendant it was contended that the car shelter was not a structure or building within the meaning of section 22.

The magistrate was of the opinion that the term "structure," as used in section 22, must be construed ejusdem generis with

[1] London Building Act, 1930, s. 22 (1): "No building or structure shall "without the consent in writing of "the Council be erected . . . (notwithstanding that there are gardens "or vacant spaces between the line "of buildings and the highway)—(a) "beyond the general line of buildings "..."

S. 30: "Where any person has "erected . . . any building or structure in contravention of this part of "this Act . . . the court . . . may in "addition to imposing any penalty "make an order . . . directing the "... person to demolish the building "or structure. . . ."

the term "building"; that a structure to be within the mischief of the section must be something in the nature of a building; and that, applying those principles, the car shelter was not a structure within the meaning of section 22 but was something in the nature of a tent which in no way defeated or adversely affected the general objects of the Act, as specified in the preamble. He was confirmed in his opinion that a structure must be construed ejusdem generis with a building or a wall by the definition of structure in section 60 of the London Building Acts (Amendment) Act, 1939,[2] purporting to widen the ordinary meaning of structure for the purpose of that part of that Act. Accordingly, he dismissed the information.

The council appealed.

Percy Lamb Q.C. and William Scrivens for the council.
Charles Lawson for the defendant.

The following cases were referred to in argument: Lavy v. London County Council[3]; London County Council v. Illuminated Advertisements Co.[4]; London County Council v. Hancock and James[5]; London County Council v. Pearce,[6] and South Wales Aluminium Co. Ld. v. Neath Assessment Area Assessment Committee.[7]

Lord Goddard C.J. The defendant has a house in Paget Road, Stoke Newington, with a little garden in front of it, but, as she had no garage, she put up what I had better call a thing which is made of tubing, not very big tubing—somebody suggested in the course of the case that it was about the size of gas piping—and, having made a skeleton frame of that material, covered it with canvas. It is fastened by screws to the gateposts of the house, and it forms a convenient little garage.

[His Lordship referred to the facts found by the magistrate and continued:] The borough council altered the pavement for her to enable her to drive her car in and out, but of course that is a different local authority. One local authority seems to have encouraged her to put up this little erection, but the superior local authority alleges that she must take it down. I agree that it is not a very satisfactory position, but that is what has happened.

The magistrate found that this was not a structure and, if it were a mere question of fact, we should of course be bound by his decision, but it seems to me that he has not asked himself

[2] London Building Acts (Amendment) Act, 1939, s. 60 (a): "the "expression 'structure' includes any "building or wall or other structure "and anything affixed to or projecting "from any building or wall or other "structure."

[3] [1895] 2 Q.B. 577; 11 T.L.R. 525.

[4] [1904] 2 K.B. 886; 20 T.L.R. 527.

[5] [1907] 2 K.B. 45; 23 T.L.R. 417.

[6] [1892] 2 Q.B. 109; 8 T.L.R. 531.

[7] [1943] 2 All E.R. 587.

1954

London County Council v. Tann.

Lord Goddard C.J.

the proper questions. I think that the magistrate was wrong in saying that he must construe the term "structure" as ejusdem generis with the term "building." To start with there is no genus, but it is quite obvious that the Act is meant to include something wider than a building. If one had simply to construe the word "structure" ejusdem generis with the word "building" and say that structure meant a building, there would have been no necessity for the legislature to use both words. The real question is, leaving out "building" altogether: Is this a structure?

It seems to me that one of the convenient tests is that laid down by Lindley L.J., whose judgment on any subject is always helpful. In Lavy v. London County Council[1] he said: "We "must look at this case, and not at the effect of other cases. In "this case we must ask ourselves, as men of the world, whether "such a new wall"—he was dealing with a wall—"as this is "not a building, structure, or erection within the mischief of "section 75." I do not pretend that I know what the mischief is in these matters, but if I ask myself whether this is a structure, I confess I think that question only capable of one answer: that it is a structure. I am not saying that if it was a mere temporary thing which was put up, as a tent might be in the summer time, that that would be a structure; but the object of this thing was to provide the defendant's house with that which it does not at present possess, namely, a garage. She would certainly not be able to get permission to build a garage consisting of ordinary building material there, and the shelter was put there not as a thing to be put up one week and moved the next, but for the purpose of being permanently there.

Vaughan Williams J. said in London County Council v. Pearce[2]: "I do not mean to say that a man is to be allowed to "evade the Act of Parliament by building on wheels what he "intends to be a wooden structure, and then saying it is not "within the Act because it is on wheels. In all cases we must "be guided by what I may call the intentions of the structure, "and must inquire with what intention it was made." Applying that test, it seems to me obvious that this structure, whatever you like to call it, was put there for the purpose of permanently housing a car at a house where there was no other garage. I think, therefore, that it must be looked at as, I was almost going to say, a home-made garage, though I do not suppose it was made by the lady herself, or as a thing put there in place of a garage. I think, therefore, that we must hold that the magistrate did not direct himself properly in this matter. Had he asked himself, as a man of the world, as an ordinary citizen—the man on the Stoke Newington bus—whether it was a structure. I think that he must have come to the conclusion that this was a structure; and, therefore, this appeal must be allowed.

[1] [1895] 2 Q.B. 577, 582.

[2] [1892] 2 Q.B. 109, 112; 8 T.L.R. 531.

BYRNE J. I agree.

1954

LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. TANN.

PARKER J. I agree. Speaking for myself, I am prepared to accept the view that "structure" in this context means a structure in the nature of a building. That was the phrase used by Lord Alverstone C.J. in London County Council v. Illuminated Advertisement Co. Ld.[3] The same meaning was put upon that word, though in connexion with a different Act, by Atkinson J. in South Wales Aluminium Co. Ld. v. Neath Assessment Area Assessment Committee.[4]

It seems to me that in deciding whether the structure is something constructed in the nature of a building it is perfectly proper to look at the intention, as in the passage my Lord has referred to in London County Council v. Pearce,[5] where Vaughan Williams J.[6] expressly so states. Looking at the matter in that light and adopting the test laid down by Lindley L.J. in Lavy v. London County Council,[7] the question posed is this: as men of the world can we say that this thing, to use a neutral expression, is a structure constructed in the nature of a building? It is quite clear that it was intended to be a garage, and, looking at it in that way, and asking oneself the question: Is this a structure in the nature of a garage? the answer is clearly, yes. It seems to me that the magistrate misdirected himself first of all in seeking to apply the ejusdem generis rule and then in treating "structure" as in the nature of a building in the sense that if it was made of canvas it could not be a building because it was in the nature of a tent. It seems to me that the statement of facts admits of only one conclusion, that this was a structure within the meaning of the Act.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: J. G. Barr, Solicitor, London County Council; Thornton, Lynne & Lawson.

J. F. L.

[3] [1904] 2 K.B. 886, 892.
[4] [1943] 2 All E.R. 587, 592.
[5] [1892] 2 Q.B. 109.
[6] Ibid. 112.
[7] [1895] 2 Q.B. 577, 582.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

* STEPHENSON v. JOHNSON.

1954
Jan. 28.

Lord Goddard C.J., Byrne and Parker JJ.

Wages — Wages Council — Information — Sufficiency—Failure to pay "statutory minimum remuneration . . . contrary to section 11 of the "Wages Councils Act, 1945*"—Complexity of Order laying down statutory minimum remuneration—Insufficient information as to nature of charge—Wages Councils Act,* 1945 (8 & 9 Geo. 6, c. 17),

1954

Stephenson
v.
Johnson.

s. 11 — Milk Distributive Wages Council (England and Wales) Wages Regulation Order, 1952 (S.I. 1952, No. 986), Sch. — Magistrates' Courts Rules, 1952 (S.I. 1952, No. 2190), r. 77. Justices—Information.

Section 11 (2) of the Wages Councils Act, 1945, makes it an offence to pay to a worker remuneration less than the statutory minimum remuneration. The statutory minimum remuneration for a worker in the milk distributive trade is laid down in the Milk Distributive Wages Council (England and Wales) Wages Regulation Order, 1952; and the schedule to the order provides for minimum time rates calculated on a weekly basis and varying in amount according to the age and category of worker, and the hourly rate is to be ascertained by dividing the minimum time rate by the number of hours in the week.

An information was preferred against the defendant, who was engaged in milk distributive business and employed a workman for four and a half hours on a Sunday to wash bottles at her dairy, alleging that she did "unlawfully fail to pay remuneration "not less than the statutory minimum remuneration . . . contrary "to section 11 of the Wages Councils Act, 1945." On appeal against conviction by the defendant who had taken the point before the justices that the information was insufficient:—

Held, that where there was a schedule of such complication, an information which merely told a defendant that he was going to be charged with not paying the statutory remuneration to a particular worker did not give him reasonable information as to the nature of the charge; that it should have contained a reference to the particular paragraph of the schedule which it was alleged laid down the appropriate rate of remuneration for the worker concerned, and a statement of the amount actually paid and that which should have been paid; that it would have been advisable if it had also contained an allegation as to the nature of the worker's employment and his age; and that as the defendant had not been given sufficient information about the alleged offence, the information was bad.

Case stated by Northampton justices.

The following were among the facts proved or admitted before the justices:

The defendant, Mrs. Elsie Stephenson, carried on the business of a dairy in the course of which she was concerned in the retail sale of milk. On Sunday, December 21, 1952, the defendant employed at her dairy one, George Harry Tarry, as a washer of milk bottles, work incidental to her business of selling milk by retail, from 9 a.m. to 1.30 p.m. paying him for his work on that day the sum of 16s. 6d. George Harry Tarry was in the full-time employment of the Northampton Corporation for whom he normally worked on weekdays, and, when there was work for him to do, on Sundays. On other Sundays, when he wished, he went to the defendant's dairy and asked the foreman for work, but he was not bound to attend at the dairy on Sundays nor was the defendant bound to employ him. There was no agreement as to the rate at which he was to be paid but he was satisfied with the lump sum of 16s. 6d. which he received on each Sunday that he did work at the dairy.

A wages inspector under the Wages Council Act, 1945, preferred an information against the defendant for that she "being "an employer of workers to whom the Milk Distributive Wages "Council (England and Wales) Wages Regulation Order, 1952, "made under the Wages Council Act, 1945, applies, did on "December 21, 1952, at Anderston's Dairy . . . unlawfully fail "to pay remuneration not less than the statutory minimum "remuneration to George Harry Tarry one of the said workers, "contrary to section 11 [1] of the Wages Councils Act, 1945, and "the said Order made thereunder."

In answer to the defendant's request for the formulation of allegations as to what sum should have been paid and was alleged to have been the statutory minimum remuneration, and what sum was alleged to have been paid below the statutory minimum remuneration, the prosecutor referred her to paragraph 6 (2) of the Schedule to the Milk Distributive Wages Council (England and Wales) Wages Regulation Order, 1952.

On behalf of the defendant it was contended, inter alia, that the information was insufficient.

On behalf of the prosecutor it was contended, inter alia, that the information was sufficient as it gave reasonable information as to the nature of the charge.

The justices considered that the information was sufficient, and they refused to order the prosecutor to give any further particulars. They found that the worker should have been paid 18s. 11d., and convicted the defendant.

The defendant appealed.

John Hobson for the defendant.

S. B. R. Cooke for the prosecutor.

[1] Wages Councils Act, 1945, s. 10: "(4) Where the Minister receives any "wages regulation proposals, he shall "make an order (. . . a 'wages regu-"'lation order') giving effect to the "proposals. . . . (8) Remuneration ". . . fixed by a wages regulation "order is hereafter in this Act "referred to as 'statutory minimum "'remuneration.'"

S. 11: "(2) If an employer fails "to pay to a worker to whom a wages "regulation order applies remunera-"tion not less than the statutory "minimum remuneration . . . he "shall be liable on summary convic-"tion to a fine. . . ."

The Milk Distributive Wages Council (England and Wales) Wages Regulation Order, 1952 [made under s. 10 of the Wages Councils Act, 1945], 2 (1): "Effect is hereby given "to the . . . wages regulation pro-"posals set out in the Schedule here-"to." Schedule, Pt. III, para. 6: "Subject to the provisions of para-"graph 7 . . . the following minimum "remuneration is payable to any "worker for overtime:—. . . (2) In "the case of a seven-day worker or of "any other worker to whom sub-"paragraph (1) . . . does not apply "(b) on a Sunday . . . (i) for any "time worked not exceeding 6 hours: "Time-and-a-quarter for 6 hours." Part V, para. 11 (h): "Time-and-"a-quarter . . . mean(s) . . . one "and a quarter times . . . the hourly "general minimum time rate. . . ." Para. 1: "(2) . . . the expression "'hourly general minimum time "'rate' means the general minimum "time rate applicable to the worker "under . . . Part II of this Schedule "divided by the number of hours in "the week."

Paragraph 3 in Part II of the Schedule lays down the general minimum time rates calculated on a weekly basis and varying in amount according to the age and category of worker.

1954

Stephenson v. Johnson.

The following cases were referred to in argument: Robertson v. Rosenberg [2] and Hill v. Begg.[3]

Lord Goddard C.J. The first point taken by Mr. Hobson in this court and before the justices was that the information was defective in that it did not give reasonable information or sufficient particulars for the defendant to know what case she had to meet. In the opinion of the court, that is a good point, and this information does not give reasonable information of the nature of the charge.

Rule 77 of the Magistrates' Courts Rules, which replaces with no material difference the corresponding enactment in section 32 of the Criminal Justice Act, 1925, in force at the time the information was laid, provides: "Every information, summons, warrant or other document laid, issued or made for the purposes of, or in connexion with, any proceedings before a magistrates' court for an offence shall be sufficient if it describes the specific offence with which the accused is charged, or of which he is convicted, in ordinary language avoiding as far as possible the use of technical terms and without necessarily stating all the elements of the offence, and gives such particulars as may be necessary for giving reasonable information of the nature of the charge."

As is well known, the Criminal Justice Act of 1925 was designed so that informations before magistrates' courts should be substantially in the same concise form as indictments have been since the Indictments Act, 1915. Before that Act came into force indictments were very long, very prolix and very often had to contain a great number of averments which were not necessary for the purpose of knowing what the case was about. Now, an indictment simply contains, first of all, the statement of offence—for example, obtaining money by false pretences or burglary—put quite shortly, contrary to section so-and-so of such-and-such an Act; and the particulars inform the defendant of the nature and particulars of the offence and what he is actually charged with.

In this case we have had to consider, first, a section of an Act which at first appeared to the court somewhat difficult to understand, but which Mr. Cooke's argument has made clear. We have also had to consider the Milk Distributive Wages Council (England and Wales) Wages Regulation Order, 1952. The order itself is very short, but it is the schedule that matters. There is one schedule with several parts, several paragraphs and several definitions, and to find out what the employee has to be paid it is first necessary to find out what is his age, then the actual nature of his employment, then whether he is a seven-day worker or a six-day worker, as well as many other things.

[2] [1951] W.N. 97; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 417; 115 J.P. 128.

[3] [1908] 2 K.B. 802; 24 T.L.R. 711.

The prosecutor proved to the satisfaction of the justices that the employee should have been paid 18s. 11d. per week, whereas in fact he was only paid 16s 11d.; but it is most important that a defendant when summoned before a criminal court should know exactly what he is being charged with. When there is a schedule of this complication, it does seems to me that merely to inform a defendant that he is going to be charged with not paying the statutory minimum remuneration to some particular person is by no means giving him reasonable information as to the nature of the charge. As I pointed out in the course of the argument, many things have to be taken into account in order to find out what is the minimum remuneration. The employer in this case would no doubt know what she did pay to this man. It may be that by sitting down with the assistance of her solicitor or accountant or somebody else, she could work out what it is said that she should have paid, but one can very well understand the case in which an employer might say: "You are "saying that I did not pay this man enough. I say that I did. "Why do you say that I did not? What am I going to be "charged with when I get to the court? Why is it said that I "did not pay enough?" Supposing an information were to be laid in respect of say, a pasteuriser, and instead of being a pasteuriser, the man in fact was a roundsman at the material time, it might be that a different part of the schedule would apply and that a different sum, therefore, should have been paid.

In Robertson v. Rosenberg[1] this court emphasized the necessity in these cases of summary jurisdiction of letting defendants know exactly with what they were charged. Especially considering that rule 77 provides that "If the offence charged "is one created by or under any Act, the description of the "offence shall contain a reference to the section of the Act, or, "as the case may be, the rule, order, regulation, by-law or other "instrument creating the offence," it seems to me to be quite elementary that the information should contain, first of all, a reference to the particular section of the schedule or the order which it is alleged has been infringed. This information does not refer to any section or any rule, order or regulation, and yet when the defendant comes to court the order is produced and all these different paragraphs of the schedule have to be considered in order to find out exactly what remuneration it is said that the man should have been paid.

I think that informations such as this should contain, besides a reference to the particular paragraph of the schedule, information with regard to the particular nature of the man's employment. I am not sure that they ought not also to contain a statement of his age because the amount that he is entitled to receive depends on his age. At any rate, I am quite satisfied that in this case the defendant was not given sufficient information. The information was, therefore, bad, and the justices should not have entertained it. In my opinion they were wrong in a matter of law, and this appeal succeeds.

[1] [1951] W.N. 97; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 417; 115 J.P. 128.

1954

STEPHENSON v. JOHNSON.

BYRNE J. I agree that this information was defective. It should at the least have contained a reference to paragraph 6 (2) of the schedule to the Milk Distributive Wages Council (England and Wales) Wages Regulation Order, 1952, and it should also have contained a statement to the effect that the man in question was paid 16s. 6d. per week instead of 18s. 11d. for the work which he did. I agree that this appeal should be allowed.

PARKER J. I agree.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Sharpe, Pritchard & Co. for Becke, Green & Stops, Northampton; Solicitor, Ministry of Labour and National Service.

J. F. L.

[PRIVY COUNCIL.]

J. C.†

1954
Feb. 2.

*KESARMAL S/O LETCHMAN DAS AND ANOTHER . . . . . APPELLANTS;

AND

N. K. V. VALLIAPPA CHETTIAR S/O NAGAPPA CHETTIAR . . . . . RESPONDENT.

ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF APPEAL, SUPREME COURT OF THE FEDERATION OF MALAYA.

Malaya—Land—Claim to set aside transfer—Occupation period—Duress—Knowledge of duress in transferee to be established—Titles to Land (Occupation Period) Ordinance, No. 39 of 1949, s. 27 (1) (5) —Land Code of the Federated Malay States (F.M.S. c. 138), ss. 2, 42.

Duress—Transfer of land in Malaya—Transferee's knowledge of duress to be established. "Indefeasible"—Title to land—"Not indefeasible"—Does not mean void.

Before a transferor of land which is subject to the provisions of the Land Code of the Federated Malay States can claim to have the instrument of transfer, which has led to the registration of a proprietor under the Code, set aside on the ground that its execution had been obtained by duress within the meaning of section 27 of the Titles to Land (Occupation Period) Ordinance, 1949, of Malaya, it must be established, in addition to the fact that the instrument of transfer was procured by duress, that the transferee had knowledge of the duress.

The words "the title of a proprietor . . . shall not be indefeasible" in section 27 of the Ordinance of 1949 and in section

---

† Present: LORD TUCKER, LORD KEITH OF AVONHOLM, and MR. L. M. D. DE SILVA.

42 (ii) of the Land Code of the Federated Malay States (c. 138) mean only that the title of a proprietor is liable to be defeated.

Judgment of the Court of Appeal, Supreme Court of the Federation of Malaya, affirmed.

APPEAL (No. 26 of 1952) from a judgment of the Court of Appeal of the Supreme Court of the Federation of Malaya (March 21, 1952) affirming a judgment of the High Court of Kuala Lumpur (May 22, 1951) by which the present respondent was held to be entitled to have set aside an instrument of transfer of land executed by him on July 20, 1943, in favour of the appellants on the ground that it had been obtained by duress within the meaning of section 27 of the Titles to Land (Occupation Period) Ordinance, 1949.

The following introductory statement is taken from the judgment of the Judicial Committee: The courts in Malaya arrived at concurrent findings on the facts. It was found that the respondent had made a series of loans to one Tungku Musa Edin, referred to in the judgments as "the Klana," who was the eldest son of Sultan Suleiman of Selangor. For various reasons a younger brother was appointed heir-apparent to the throne and succeeded to it on the death of Sultan Suleiman in 1937. When the Japanese occupied the country in 1942 they deposed him and installed the Klana as Sultan. Prior to the Japanese occupation the Klana had on more than one occasion in 1941 borrowed money from the respondent and furnished him with security. He did that by the indirect method of transferring to the respondent certain land (with the buildings thereon) and obtaining at the same time an option to repurchase it for the amount repayable on the loan. That series of transactions came to an end on November 5, 1941, on which day, in consideration of the payment of a final amount of $5,000, the Klana, by a document ("P 3"), surrendered his right to repurchase the property. The respondent thereupon became the absolute owner of the property and the Klana ceased to be his debtor. After he had been installed as Sultan in 1942 by the Japanese the Klana made a series of attempts to recover the property, which were resisted by the respondent. Finally, on July 9, 1943, the respondent was summoned to the Klana's residence. The Klana was there with two Japanese officers. The appellants were also in the building. The Klana told the respondent that he (the respondent) must sign forthwith an agreement to transfer the property to the appellants. On the respondent showing some hesitation one of the Japanese officers told the respondent that he must obey the Sultan's orders. The respondent then signed the agreement. Eleven days later it was implemented by, among other things, the signing of the transfer impugned in this case.

In the suit out of which this appeal arises the respondent alleged that the execution of the transfer was procured by duress and he sought to have it set aside.

J. C.

1954

KESARMAL
v.
VALLIAPPA
CHETTIAR.

The trial judge (Taylor J.) and, on appeal, the Court of Appeal (Murray-Aynsley C.J., Charles Abbott and Wilson JJ.) found that duress was established and held that the respondent was entitled to have the transfer set aside.

The transferees appealed.

The material part of subsection (1) and subsection (5) of section 27 of the Ordinance of 1949, which were the only relevant subsections, were to the following effect:—

"27. (1) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (1) of "section 42 of the Land Code or the corresponding provisions "in the Land Enactment of any Malay State, the title of a "proprietor, chargee or lessee . . . under any instrument "executed during the occupation period shall not be indefeasible "if the execution of such instrument was procured by coercion or "duress: Provided that nothing in this subsection shall affect "the title of a subsequent proprietor, chargee, lessee or assignee "who has taken bona fide and for valuable consideration from "such first named proprietor, chargee, lessee or assignee or from "any person claiming bona fide through or under him."

"(5) Duress, for the purposes of any action brought to set "aside an instrument or the registration of an instrument "executed or effected during the occupation period on the ground "of duress, includes—(a) any force or injury applied or caused, "or threat of force or injury offered, by an official of, or person "on behalf of, the Occupying Power; and (b) a threat (other "than one ordinarily and lawfully made in the exercise of a legal "right or remedy) made by a party to the transaction to inform "an official of the Occupying Power of the refusal of the person "concerned to execute an instrument or effect a registration, "which caused the person concerned to execute an instrument "or effect a registration."

1953. Nov. 25, 26, 30; Dec. 1. Kenneth Diplock Q.C. and Rodger Winn for the appellants.

Sir Frank Soskice Q.C., Dingle Foot, and Biden Ashbrooke for the respondent.

1954. Feb. 2. The judgment of their Lordships was delivered by Mr. L. M. D. DE SILVA, who stated the facts and statutory provisions set out above and continued: For the purposes of this judgment it is necessary to consider three questions, two of fact and one of law, which were decided by the courts in Malaya. The two questions of fact are:—1. Was the execution of the instrument of transfer of July 20, 1943, by the respondent in favour of the appellants procured by duress within the meaning of section 27 of the Titles to Land (Occupation Period) Ordinance, 1949? 2. If so, were the appellants at the time when they took the transfer aware that its execution had been procured by duress? The question of law is:—3. If the second of the above questions be answered in the negative, is the respondent nevertheless entitled to have the instrument set aside if its execution had been obtained by duress?

For the purposes of the observations which they wish to make, their Lordships do not think it necessary to state the facts found [as set out above] in greater detail. Upon the first question the courts below arrived at the conclusion that the execution of the deed of July 20, 1943, had been procured by duress. In the argument before their Lordships it was not disputed that this conclusion is inevitable if the concurrent findings are allowed to stand.

The principles which guide the Board in dealing with concurrent findings on the facts have been set out in a judgment of the Board delivered by Lord Thankerton in Srimati Bibhabati Devi v. Kumar Ramendra Narayan Roy [1] and need not be repeated here. The Board declines to review the evidence for a third time unless there are special circumstances the nature of which are discussed in the case referred to. Counsel for the appellants sought to overcome this difficulty in relation to the question whether the execution of the deed had been procured by duress by asking their Lordships to take into consideration certain material which had not been adduced in evidence before the trial judge. The application was refused in the course of the argument. A similar application had been refused by the Court of Appeal, and their Lordships would, in any event, have been reluctant to disturb the order made by the Court of Appeal in the exercise of its discretion. It is stated by the trial judge that at the trial "it was accepted that his (the respondent's) accounts "are genuine, contemporary and well kept." The object of the evidence sought to be adduced was, according to counsel, to attack certain entries in the respondent's books of account which the trial judge had regarded as supporting his oral evidence that a sum of $5,000 had been paid in November, 1941, on the document P.3, referred to above, by the respondent to the Klana as consideration for the surrender by the Klana of his right to purchase the property.

The exceptional circumstances in which a party seeking to adduce fresh evidence at the hearing of an appeal is allowed to do so are well known. It is an essential condition that the evidence was not available at the trial and that reasonable diligence would not have made it available. It appears from the "Case for the appellants" (paragraph 14) that the material which is stated to be damaging to the respondent was discovered when the appellants' counsel in Malaya "after the conclusion "of the trial and shortly before the hearing of the appeal" examined one of the respondent's books "more thoroughly" than he had done before. Counsel for the appellants at the hearing before their Lordships was constrained to admit that there had been nothing which had prevented, or even impeded,

[1] [1946] A.C. 508; 62 T.L.R. 549.

J. C.

1954

KESARMAL
v.
VALLIAPPA
CHETTIAR.

an examination before the trial of the respondent's books on identically the same lines as that which is stated to have been made after the trial. Consequently the condition referred to had not been satisfied and the application was refused.

There was no other ground upon which the concurrent finding that the execution of the transfer of July 20, 1943, had been procured by duress, was or could have been attacked, and the finding must therefore stand.

The second question of fact which has to be considered is whether the appellants were aware at the time when they became the transferees on the transfer of July 20, 1943, that it had been procured by duress. On this question also there is a concurrent finding of the courts below answering it in the affirmative. It was submitted that there was no evidence on which this finding could be sustained and, further, that certain statements made by the trial judge in the course of arriving at it were contrary to the evidence given on behalf of the respondent.

Their Lordships are of the opinion that the facts which they have stated above and others deposed to by the respondent and his witnesses would, if accepted, furnish ample material from which the inference could be drawn that the appellants had knowledge of the exercise of duress. At the end of a passage in his judgment which begins "The next issue is whether the "defendants were aware of the duress," the trial judge arrives at the conclusion "on the evidence as a whole, I find that the "defendants personally knew of the duress." As there is evidence from which this conclusion can arise the main point of the appellants' submission fails.

Certain other statements in the passage referred to above have been the subject of criticism on the ground that they were contrary to the evidence. This criticism rests upon an interpretation, which is possible but not inevitable, of certain words in the evidence of one of the respondent's witnesses. Their Lordships do not feel disposed to deal with this criticism in detail because they are of the opinion that the contentions of the appellants on this subsidiary point, if accepted, would not be of weight sufficient to induce them to disturb the finding of the courts below.

It was not disputed that if both duress and knowledge of it by the appellants were established the respondent was entitled to succeed. It follows that upon what has been said so far the appeal should be dismissed.

The third question referred to above, namely, whether knowledge of duress on the part of the appellants was a necessary ingredient of the respondent's case, was argued fully before their Lordships. As it is one of importance in the application of the Titles to Land (Occupation Period) Ordinance of 1949 their Lordships have thought it would be useful to express an opinion upon it, although upon the view of the facts they have taken it does not arise.

The parties to this case are agreed that the land which is the subject-matter of this case is subject to the provisions of the Land Code of the Federated Malay States (F.M.S., chapter 138). Section 2 of the Code defines " proprietor " thus: " ' Proprietor ' " means the individual person, incorporated company or body " corporate for the time being registered as the owner of land " comprised in a grant or certificate of title or entry in the " mukim register or as the lessee of State land."

The Code embodies a system of registration of title. It provides for the registration as proprietor, after compliance with certain formalities, of a transferee of land from an existing proprietor. By reason of the events set out above the respondent became the duly registered proprietor of the land some time prior to the Japanese occupation. As the result of the impugned deed of July 20, 1943, the appellants became the registered proprietors. The first four subsections of section 42 of the Code are to the following effect:—" Section 42 (i) The title of a proprietor, " chargee or lessee shall be indefeasible except as in this section " provided. (ii) In the case of fraud or misrepresentation to which " he is proved to be a party the title of such proprietor, chargee " or lessee shall not be indefeasible. (iii) If the registration of any " proprietor, chargee or lessee has been obtained by forgery or " by means of an insufficient or void instrument such registration " shall be void. (iv) Nothing in subsections (ii) or (iii) shall affect " the title of a proprietor, chargee or lessee who has taken bona " fide for valuable consideration from any proprietor, chargee " or lessee whose registration as such was procured by any such " means or by means of any such instrument as aforesaid or of " any person claiming bona fide through or under him."

It is not necessary to refer to the remaining subsections for the purposes of this case. It will be seen that the ultimate effect of section 27 of the Titles to Land (Occupation Period) Ordinance, 1949, was to add to subsection (ii) of section 42 of the Land Code yet another set of circumstances on proof of which the " title of " a proprietor, chargee or lessee shall not be indefeasible."

The appellants and respondent were agreed that to set aside an instrument of transfer on the ground of duress it would be necessary to establish two elements: (i) duress and (ii) knowledge of duress on the part of the transferee except in special cases provided for otherwise by statute. It was argued that section 27 made such statutory provision and that proof of duress as defined in the section, operating in the circumstances stated in it, was sufficient to destroy the title of a transferee registered as proprietor even if he had had no knowledge of that duress. This argument involved as an essential part the view that the words " shall not be indefeasible " meant " shall be void." Their Lordships do not think that the words " shall not be indefeas- " ible " could in any case bear that meaning. Moreover, the words " shall not be indefeasible " occur both in subsection (1) of section 27 and in subsection (ii) of section 42 and have to be accorded the same meaning in both places. Subsection (iii) of section 42 says that in certain circumstances the registration of a proprietor "shall be void," and it would be most unusual if the totally different words "shall not be indefeasible" were used in subsection (ii) to mean identically the same thing as "shall "be void." Their Lordships are of the opinion that the words "the title of a proprietor . . . shall not be indefeasible" mean that the title of a proprietor is liable to be defeated. Once duress within the meaning of the section is established the barrier against attack placed by subsection (i) of section 42, which declares that in all but the excepted cases the title of a person registered as proprietor "shall be indefeasible," is lifted. His title is then vulnerable but has not been defeated. The Ordinance does not say how it can be defeated and consequently, to ascertain the way in which this can be done, recourse must be had to the ordinary law. Under that law knowledge on the part of the transferee is a necessary ingredient. Their Lordships are therefore of opinion that knowledge of duress on the part of the transferee must be established before a transferor can claim to be entitled to have an instrument of transfer which has led to the registration of a proprietor under the Land Code set aside on the ground of duress.

J. C.
1954
Kesarmal v. Valliappa Chettiar.

An argument was addressed to their Lordships based on the existence of the words "to which he is proved to be a party" in subsection (ii) of section 42, which deals with fraud and misrepresentation. The implications which have been suggested as arising from the presence of these words are not strong enough to persuade their Lordships that the words "shall not be "indefeasible" referred to earlier do mean "shall be void" or that they mean anything more than has been observed by their Lordships.

For the reasons given their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty that the appeal should be dismissed. The appellants must pay the costs of this appeal.

Solicitors: Lawrance, Messer & Co.; Barrow, Rogers & Nevill.

C. C.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

* EAD v. HOME SECRETARY.

1954
Jan. 25.

Lord Goddard C.J., Byrne and Parker JJ.

Police — Pensions — Police constable — Disablement — Application for pension—Decision by medical referee—Not the result of service—Appeal—Quarter sessions—Jurisdiction—Right of appeal limited by regulations—Police Pensions Act, 1948 (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 24), s. 5 (1) (3)—Police Pensions Regulations, 1949 (S.I. No. 1241), rr. 43, 44, 45.

[Reported by Mrs. E. M. Wellwood, Barrister-at-Law.]

The right of appeal to quarter sessions under section 5 (1) of the Police Pensions Act, 1948, from a refusal by the police authority to grant a pension is not a general one but is limited by the Police Pension Regulations, 1949, to an appeal on the ground that the medical referee had inadequate or inaccurate evidence on which to come to his conclusion.

MOTION.

The appellant, John Raymond Ead, a constable in the metropolitan police force, contracted a tubercular infection of the spine some time after having injured his back while acting in the course of his duty. He applied for a pension under the Police Regulations, 1949,[1] made under the Police Pensions Act, 1948, but his application was refused. He appealed to the [1] Police Pensions Act, 1948, s. 5: "(1) If any person . . . is aggrieved by—(a) the refusal of the police authority to admit a claim to receive as of right a pension, . . . under the regulations made under this Act; . . . he may appeal to a court of quarter sessions and that court, after enquiring into the case, may make such order in the matter as appears to the court to be just: Provided that—. . . (b) regulations made under this Act may provide, in relation to questions arising out of those regulations, for the reference of any such matter as is specified in the regulations, either by the police authority or by the court, to a medical practitioner, whose decision thereon shall, subject to such rights of appeal as may be provided by the regulations to such tribunal as may be constituted thereunder, be final on the matter so referred. . . .

"(3) An appeal shall lie on a point of law from any decision of a court of quarter sessions under this section to the High Court in accordance with rules of court and the decision of the High Court shall be final."

Police Pensions Regulations, 1949, reg. 43: "(1) Subject as hereinafter provided, the question whether a person is entitled to any and, if so, what awards under these Regulations shall be determined in the first instance by the police authority.

"(2) Where the police authority are considering whether a person is disabled they shall refer for decision to a duly qualified medical practitioner selected by them the following questions:—. . . (c) Whether the disablement is the result of an injury received in the execution of duty, and (d) the degree of the person's disablement, . . .

"(4) The certificate of the selected medical practitioner on the questions referred to him under the preceding provisions of this Regulation shall, subject to the provisions of Regulations 44 and 45, be final."

Reg. 44: "(1) Where a person has been informed of the determination of the police authority on any question which involves the reference of questions under Regulation 43 to a selected medical practitioner, he shall, if . . . he applies to the police authority for a copy of the certificate of the selected medical practitioner, be supplied with such a copy. (2) If the person concerned is dissatisfied with the decision of the selected medical practitioner as set out in his certificate, he may . . . give notice to the police authority that he appeals against the said decision, and the police authority shall notify the Secretary of State . . . who shall appoint an independent person or persons (hereafter in these Regulations referred to as the 'medical referee') to decide the appeal. (3) . . . the decision of the medical referee shall, subject to the provisions of Regulation 45, be final."

Reg. 45: "(1) A court hearing an appeal under s. 5 of the Act . . . may, if they consider that the evidence before the medical authority who has given the final decision was inaccurate or inadequate, refer the decision of that authority to him for reconsideration in the light of such facts as the court . . . may direct, and the medical authority shall accordingly reconsider his decision and, if necessary, issue a fresh certificate which, subject to any further reconsideration under this paragraph, shall be final."

1954

Ead
v.
Home
Secretary.

Secretary of State who, in accordance with regulation 44, appointed a medical referee, referring to him for decision the question whether the appellant's disablement was the result of an injury received in the course of duty. The medical referee came to the conclusion that the appellant's disablement was not the result of his service. From that decision the appellant appealed to quarter sessions under section 5 (1) of the Act. At the hearing he admitted that the ground of appeal was not that the evidence before the medical referee had been inadequate or inaccurate but that it was an appeal against the decision itself. The respondent took a preliminary objection of law to the court hearing any evidence, submitting that on a true construction of the Act and regulations it was not open to the court to review the decision of the medical referee since regulation 45 (1) limited their jurisdiction to considering whether the evidence before the medical referee had been inaccurate or inadequate. After hearing argument the court ruled that their jurisdiction was so limited, refused to hear evidence and dismissed the appeal. The appellant appealed to the court under section 5 (3) of the Act.

R. D. L. Du Cann for the appellant.
Mervyn Griffith-Jones for the respondent.

Lord Goddard C.J. Parker J. will deliver the judgment of the court.

Parker J. This case comes before the court under section 5 (3) of the Police Pensions Act, 1948, which provides that: "An appeal shall lie on a point of law from any decision of a court of quarter sessions under this section to the High Court in accordance with rules of court and the decision of the High Court shall be final."

It is unnecessary to go into the merits of the case. Quite shortly, the appellant had been refused a pension after having been invalided out of the police service, and the matter went through the various stages provided for in the Police Pensions Regulations, 1949, which are the relevant regulations for this purpose.

[His Lordship read regulations 43, 44, and 45, stated the facts relevant to this appeal, and continued:]

Mr. Du Cann has put forward an able argument on behalf of the appellant. He contended that by section 5 of the Police Pensions Act, 1948, a person in the position of the appellant has a general right of appeal from the refusal of the police authority to grant a pension, and that it must be remembered that the police authority has to be guided by, or to act on, the medical certificates. Accordingly he argues that the right of appeal is perfectly general except in so far as it has been expressly cut down by regulations. He agrees that there is power to cut down that right of appeal by regulations because of section 5

(1) (b). [His Lordship read the subsection and continued:] Mr. Du Cann says, however, that if one looks at regulation 45 it is clear that a general right of appeal has not been cut down and that regulation 45 merely states what the tribunal, which is quarter sessions, may do with such an appeal.

In my view, the answer to that argument is that section 5 of the Act gives no general right of appeal as such, in the sense that it exists except in so far as it is taken away by the regulations. Section 5 itself provides that in the regulations certain matters of medicine shall be decided by the medical practitioner or the medical referee, and it states in terms that the regulations may provide that the certificate of the medical practitioner shall be final subject to any rights of appeal that the regulation may give. Examination of the regulations shows that the certificate or the decision of the medical referee is final and that there is no right of appeal except in so far as regulation 45 provides it. I am satisfied that the only appeal provided by regulation 45 is one by an appellant who alleges that the medical referee had inadequate or inaccurate evidence from which to come to his conclusion, and not an appeal against the conclusion itself. In these circumstances, I would dismiss the appeal.

LORD GODDARD C.J. I agree.

BYRNE J. I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Ludlow, Head & Walter; Treasury Solicitor.

[LIVERPOOL ASSIZES.]

* PUGH v. MANCHESTER DRY DOCKS CO. LD.

1953
Nov. 10, 11, 12.

Donovan J.

[1952 P. No. 2250.]

Factory—Dangerous machinery—Fencing—Duty to fence even though rendering machinery unusable—Grindstone—Factories Act, 1937 (1 Edw. 8 & 1 Geo. 6, c. 67), s. 14 (1).

The plaintiff, who was employed as a blacksmith's striker at the defendants' factory, was engaged in taking the 'rag' end off a box spanner by holding it against the revolving wheel of a grinding machine when his finger came into contact with the wheel and he sustained injuries. There was a tool rest fitted to the grinding machine, but the plaintiff at the time he sustained the accident was holding the spanner against a part of the grinding wheel where there was no rest. The grinding machine had a guard of the type usually provided for such machines, i.e., a three-quarter fence which completely encased the grinding wheel save

[Reported by E. SOMERSET JONES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

1953

Pugh
v.
Manchester
Dry Docks
Co. Ld.

for a small exposed portion, without which the grinding machine would have been unusable:—

Held, that the defendants' duty was to fence securely the grinding wheel in accordance with section 14 (1) of the Factories Act, 1937 [1] and they had failed to discharge that duty; that the fact that, in the absence of regulations modifying the requirements of section 14 (1), compliance with that subsection rendered the machine unusable did not absolve the defendants from their duty to fence; and, therefore, the whole blame for the accident must be attributed to the defendants.

Davies v. Thomas Owen & Co. Ld. [1919] 2 K.B. 39 applied.

Per curiam. It is said that if the effect of section 14 is virtually to prohibit the use of grinders like these, it is very odd to find the Secretary of State legislating [2] on the basis that they are usable. I agree that it is, but I am bound by the authorities.

Action.

The plaintiff, Alfred Pugh, was employed as a blacksmith's striker at the defendant company's premises in Ellesmere Port. The duty of grinding articles had not been specifically allotted to him, but by custom extending over some 30 years it had come to be recognized as part of his work.

On June 29, 1951, the plaintiff was at work on a grinding machine which was fitted with a tool rest running across the front of the grinding wheel and at right angles along the right-hand side of the wheel. The grinding wheel which was 14 ins. in diameter was substantially encased by a fabricated steel guard which left exposed only the front of the grinding wheel. This opening in the guard was 4 ins. in width and $8\frac{3}{4}$ ins. in height measured from the tool rest. The plaintiff was engaged in taking the rag end off a box spanner and was working on the left-hand side of the machine where there was no tool rest when the spanner, which he was holding against the grinding wheel, slipped and his left index finger came into contact with the grinding wheel. As a result the plaintiff suffered a traumatic amputation through the middle phalanx of the left index finger.

The plaintiff brought this action against the defendant company claiming damages for breach of statutory duty and at common law.

Andrew Rankin for the plaintiff.

H. I. Nelson Q.C. and R. H. Forrest Q.C. for the defendants.

[1] Factories Act, 1937, s. 14: "(1) "Every dangerous part of any "machinery, . . . shall be securely "fenced unless it is in such a posi-"tion or of such construction as to be "as safe to every person employed "or working on the premises as it "would be if securely fenced:
"Provided that, in so far as the "safety of a dangerous part of any "machinery cannot by reason of the "nature of the operation be secured "by means of a fixed guard, the re-"quirements of this subsection shall "be deemed to have been complied "with if a device is provided which "automatically prevents the opera-"tor from coming into contact with "that part."

[2] Grinding of Metals (Miscellaneous Industries) Regulations, 1925 (S.R. & O. 1925, No. 904) as amended by the Grinding of Metals (Miscellaneous Industries) (Amendment) Special Regulations, 1950 (S.I. 1950, No. 688).

In addition to the cases referred to in the judgment, the following cases were cited in argument: Nicholls v. Austin (F.) (Leyton) Ld.[3]; Benn v. Kamm & Co. Ld.[4]; Mackay v. Ailsa Shipbuilding Co. Ld.[5]; Franklin v. Gramophone Co. Ld.[6]; Lewis v. Denyé.[7]

Cur. adv. vult.

November 12. DONOVAN J. delivered a considered judgment in which, after reviewing the evidence, he found that the defendants had failed to rebut the prima facie case that the plaintiff was acting in the course of his employment, and continued: The next question is whether there was a breach of section 14 of the Factories Act, 1937, on the part of the defendants. The grinding machine was obviously machinery. Equally obviously, to my mind, the grinding wheel, revolving at over 1,000 revolutions per minute, was a dangerous part of that machinery. To adopt the words of Lord du Parcq in Walker v. Bletchley Flettons Ld.,[1] it was a possible cause of injury to anyone acting in a way a human being might be reasonably expected to act in circumstances which might reasonably be expected to occur.

Here the plaintiff was grinding the spanner towards the left of the face of the grinding stone, and it appears that this was frequently done by persons from the blacksmith's shop. That being so, the tool being ground would not be supported by the metal rest, and the downward pull of the fast revolving stone might well be expected to carry the tool with it and cause some part of the hand of the operator to come into contact with the moving stone. That is what happened here.

On that view, the machine had to be securely fenced. That means that some barrier had to be erected which would prevent any employee from making contact with the dangerous part of the machine, i.e., the wheel: see Carroll v. Andrew Barclay & Sons Ld., per Lord Porter.[2] In the present case the machine clearly was not so fenced. To comply with section 14, I think that it is true that the fence would have to be such that the grinding machine would become quite unusable except for quite a few minor jobs. But that does not absolve the defendants from their duty to fence: see Davies v. Owen (Thomas) & Co. Ld.[3] and Miller v. Wm. Boothman & Sons Ld.[4] In the latter case there were regulations made by the Secretary of State which the Court of Appeal held modified the requirements of section 14 of the Factories Act, 1937, as regards the machine there in question because they specified what the fencing should be. Here,

[3] [1946] A.C. 493; 62 T.L.R. 320; [1946] 2 All E.R. 92; [1945] K.B. 50; [1944] 2 All E.R. 485.

[4] [1952] 2 Q.B. 127; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 873; [1952] 1 All E.R. 833.

[5] 1945 S.C. 414.

[6] [1948] 1 K.B. 542; 64 T.L.R. 186; [1948] 1 All E.R. 353.

[7] [1939] 1 K.B. 540; 55 T.L.R. 391; [1939] 1 All E.R. 310.

[1] [1937] 1 All E.R. 170, 175.

[2] [1948] A.C. 477; 64 T.L.R. 384; [1948] 2 All E.R. 386.

[3] [1919] 2 K.B. 39.

[4] [1944] K.B. 337; 60 T.L.R. 218; [1944] 1 All E.R. 333.

1953

Pugh v. Manchester Dry Docks Co. Ld.

Donovan J.

there are no comparable regulations. There are the Grinding of Metals (Miscellaneous Industries) (Amendment) Special Regulations, 1950 (S.I. 1950, No. 688), and these assume that grinding machines will be usable, but they contain no provisions as to fencing.

It is said that if the effect of section 14 is virtually to prohibit the use of grinders like these, it is very odd to find the Secretary of State legislating on the basis that they are usable. I agree that it is, but I am bound by the authorities I have mentioned, and no comparable escape from the impasse is provided for me such as the Court of Appeal found in the Woodworking Regulations under review in Miller v. Wm. Boothman & Sons Ld.[5] As the authorities stand, the deadlock can be resolved, in my opinion, only by the House of Lords or by Parliament.

I arrive, therefore, at the conclusion that there was a breach of section 14 and that the injury to the plaintiff was one of the consequences.

[His Lordship then considered the position at common law; found that the stone of the grinding wheel was unduly worn; that the tool rest, which should have come up to a distance of 1/16th inch from the stone, was adjusted as fully forward as possible but, nevertheless, left a gap of 5/8th inch; and continued:] It is clear that the plaintiff was working on the left-hand side of the machine as one faced it, where there was no rest. To do this is to court the danger that the object being ground will be carried downwards by the stone, which may then come in contact wtih the hand. This the plaintiff knew, but he was in a hurry and, as workmen who are in a hurry sometimes will, he took a risk. While, therefore, I think the stone was so worn as to be unsafe, I could not on the facts attribute the accident to this negligence.

I decide in favour of the plaintiff on the ground that the defendants were in breach of their statutory duty. If the machine had been securely fenced, the plaintiff would not have been doing any grinding on it at all for the reason, as I have stated, that he could not. I think, therefore, that I must attribute the whole blame for the accident to the defendants.

I assess the general damages at £300 and therefore give judgment for the plaintiff for a total sum of £369 11s., which includes the agreed special damage.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

Solicitors: John Whittle, Robinson & Bailey, Manchester; Laces & Co., Liverpool.

[5] Ibid.

[CHANCERY DIVISION.]

* In re A DEBTOR: Ex parte THE DEBTOR v. SCOTT AND THE OFFICIAL RECEIVER.

1954
Jan. 25.

Harman and Danckwerts JJ.

[No. 20 of 1953.]

Bankruptcy—Bankruptcy notice—Sum specified to be due excessive—Damages awarded to creditor in High Court action—Damages reduced on appeal—Effect on bankruptcy proceedings—Set-off of costs—Validity of bankruptcy notice—Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 59), ss. 2 (ii), 5.

In July, 1953, a petition in bankruptcy was presented by a creditor based on the sum of £200 damages awarded to her (together with costs) in an action in the Queen's Bench Division, in which judgment had been given on March 17, 1953. A bankruptcy notice had been issued on April 16, based on the damages alone.

The hearing of the petition was, on October 21, 1953, adjourned pending the hearing of an appeal in the action. On October 22, 1953, the Court of Appeal reduced the damages to £25 and allowed the debtor to set off one half of his costs in the Court of Appeal against the judgment against him in the court below.

On November 27, 1953, the petition was restored and a receiving order was made against the debtor.

On appeal by the debtor to the Divisional Court in Bankruptcy, on the grounds that the reduction by the Court of Appeal of the sum of £200 to £25 left a figure which was not a correct figure for bankruptcy proceedings, and that the registrar in the county court had wrongly proceeded with the hearing of the petition, as he did not know at what figure the costs awarded to the debtor which had not then been taxed, ranked:—

Held, that, taking into consideration (i) that at the date of the hearing of the petition there remained a debt sufficient to support a bankruptcy notice; (ii) that the debtor's cross-claim on costs was not in existence until the date of the order of the Court of Appeal; (iii) that by section 2 (ii) of the Act a bankruptcy notice is not invalidated by stating an excessive sum; and (iv) that after taxation of the costs there would clearly be a substantial sum owing by the debtor, it was just and equitable that the receiving order should be affirmed.

APPEAL from Brentford County Court.

On March 17, 1953, the plaintiff (Mrs. Suzane Scott), in an action in the Queen's Bench Division, obtained judgment against the debtor for £200 and costs. On April 16, 1953, a bankruptcy notice based on that sum of £200 (the costs not having then been taxed) was issued against and subsequently served on the debtor.

The debtor opposed the bankruptcy notice and the registrar dismissed his opposition. On June 17, 1953, the debtor appealed to the Divisional Court against the registrar's decision and his appeal was dismissed.

On July 28, 1953, a petition in bankruptcy was filed in the Brentford County Court for a receiving order against the debtor. The petition was presented by the creditor and stated that the debtor was indebted to her under the judgment in the Queen's Bench action in the sum of £426 9s. 9d., being £200 in respect of damages awarded by the court in the action and £226 9s. 9d. in respect of the taxed costs of the action. This petition came on for hearing on October 21, 1953, when the hearing was adjourned pending an appeal by the debtor from the decision in the Queen's Bench action. That appeal was heard by the Court of Appeal on October 22, 1953, and was allowed to the extent that the damages awarded were reduced to £25, the order as to costs being undisturbed, save that the debtor was allowed to set off one-half of his costs in the Court of Appeal.

1954

A Debtor, In re. Ex parte The Debtor v. Scott.

On November 27, 1953, the petition was restored and a receiving order in bankruptcy was made against the debtor by the registrar of the Brentford County Court.

On December 18, 1953, notice of appeal against the receiving order was given by the debtor, in which he put forward as grounds of appeal that in the events which had happened no available act of bankruptcy had been proved; and that when the petition (which was for £426 9s. 9d.) was before the registrar at the Brentford County Court, he proceeded with it before the appellant's costs in the Court of Appeal had been taxed.

On January 25, 1954, the appeal came on for hearing before the Divisional Court in Bankruptcy.

The facts are more fully stated in the course of the judgment.

Muir Hunter for the appellant.
Ian Fife for the respondent.

It was stated in argument that there was no authority. The following textbook was referred to in argument: Williams on Bankruptcy, 16th ed., pp. 34, 193.

Harman J. This case, like other cases brought before us concerning this particular debtor, raises one or two novelties. The petition is based on a judgment for £200 pronounced by Lynskey J. on March 17, 1953, in an action in the Queen's Bench Division brought against the debtor by the petitioner. In the ordinary way that judgment carried the plaintiff's costs of the action to be taxed. The judge was willing to grant a stay only on the terms that £200, the whole of the damages, were paid into court. The debtor was either unwilling or unable to do that. The result was that execution could be levied on the debtor, and on April 16 a bankruptcy notice was issued against him for £200, the costs not then having been taxed and therefore not being available for the bankruptcy notice.

The debtor gave notice of appeal on April 27, 1953, against the Queen's Bench decision and evaded service of the bankruptcy notice, with the result that an order for substituted service was made by the registrar at Brentford on May 6. At the same time, the bankruptcy notice was extended to June 16.

The bankruptcy notice having been served by post, the debtor filed an affidavit in opposition to it. That was eventually heard on June 8, when the registrar adjourned the hearing. Why he did so is a little obscure; he restored the matter for hearing on June 22; and reheard it on June 26, when he dismissed the debtor's opposition. There was an appeal against that to the Divisional Court on July 17, which was dismissed early in October. So the validity of the bankruptcy notice at that time is now beyond cavil.

The costs in the Queen's Bench action were taxed at £226. The allocatur for those was issued on July 16 and was in the manner customary in the Queen's Bench Division added at the end of the order, there being no taxing master's certificate.

On July 28 this petition was put on the file for the debt of £200 plus costs £226, making in all £426. It came on for hearing on October 21 when it was adjourned pending the hearing of the Queen's Bench appeal, which, in fact, was heard the next day when the appeal was allowed and the order of Lynskey J. was varied by reducing the judgment for damages from £200 to £25. The costs in the Queen's Bench action were left standing, but the appellant was given half his costs in the Court of Appeal and the right to set them off against what he owed on the judgment below.

The petitioner's solicitors then wrote a letter to the registrar applying to have the petition restored and arguing their case behind the respondent's back. That is not a practice which ought to be encouraged.

However that may be, the petition was further heard on November 27, when a receiving order was made. Although the facts do not clearly appear either from the petition or from the affidavit sworn to verify it, it does not seem that there was any miscarriage of justice, either from that hearing or from the fact that this undesirable letter had been written. The registrar seems to have been in possession of the right facts. He simply took the view that, as the costs to be taxed in favour of the debtor when taxed would admittedly not reduce the total debt of the petitioner below £50, there was a good petitioning creditor's debt and a receiving order ought to be made. Accordingly, he made a receiving order, and it is against that that this appeal is brought.

The first ground of appeal is this. Under section 5 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, the court is bound to require proof of the act of bankruptcy, and it is said here that it could not be satisfied in that respect because, as things had turned out, there was no proof of an act of bankruptcy. This appears bizarre, having regard to the facts above stated, but the argument goes in this way. The act of bankruptcy alleged was a debt of £200. The Court of Appeal reduced that to £25. £25 would be a good enough debt to avail as an act of bankruptcy. But it is further said that the debtor has the right to set off against the debt, that is the £25, his right to costs which may amount to £60 or so, and, therefore, having regard to the effect of the order of the Court of Appeal, there was no debt available as an act of bankruptcy, and, therefore, the condition of the statute was not complied with and the court cannot make an order.

1954

A Debtor, In re. Ex parte The Debtor v. Scott.

Harman J.

Secondly, it is said that, if one serves a bankruptcy notice on a man for a large sum which he cannot pay, and one follows it up by a petition admitting that the sum is very much smaller, an injustice has been committed; inasmuch as, though he could not pay the larger amount, he might have paid the smaller one, and, therefore, the court, in the exercise of the discretion conferred by section 5, should come to the conclusion that there is "other sufficient cause" why no order ought to be made.

In my judgment, neither of those points ought to prevail. I do not wish to canvass the larger contention of the respondent, which amounted to this, that if a sufficient act of bankruptcy was available at the time when the notice expired, it mattered not that there was no debt at all by the time the petition came on. That is a matter which can be decided when it comes necessarily into controversy. I am not bound to deal with anything so difficult today.

It seems to me that the true view is that there remained at the hearing of the petition a debt for £25, enough to support the bankruptcy notice. The right to set off the costs in the Court of Appeal in fact is not a present right, because those costs have not been quantified by taxation. Apart from that, it seems to me that the cross-claim created by the order of the Court of Appeal was never in existence before the date when the Court of Appeal made its order. It is not as if that were a matter which dated back, as does in some senses the variation in the damages claimed. So that, in my judgment, the bankruptcy notice remained a good bankruptcy notice, notwithstanding that it had been given for a larger sum than the £25, which turned out to be the true debt.

Section 2 of the Act provides: "A bankruptcy notice . . . "(ii) shall not be invalidated by reason only that the sum specified "in the notice as the amount due exceeds the amount actually "due," unless certain other conditions are satisfied which do not arise here. I do not see that any such injustice was done by the form of the bankruptcy notice as would induce us to say that in the exercise of our discretion we ought to refuse the petition. The substance of the matter is that this debtor owes the creditor the costs and £25, subject to a counterclaim which clearly will leave a very substantial balance in favour of the creditor. In those circumstances, neither justice nor equity demands that the usual consequences should not be visited on the debtor.

The appeal should be dismissed.

Danckwerts J. I agree and I will add my reasons in a very few words. When on November 27, 1953, the petition came before the registrar for further hearing, it seems to me that the view which he took was an entirely sensible one on the information which was given to him as regards the cross-claim. It appears plain that, taking the cross-claim or set off of the debtor at his highest figure of £100, at least £150 remained owing by the debtor to the petitioning creditor. It seems to me that either the debtor was in a position to pay that sum, or, if he was not in a position or was unwilling to do so, justice demanded that a receiving order should be made.

The answer which is given seems to me to be an entirely technical one, and, if that answer be a technical one, it appears to me that the debtor cannot very well complain if it is defeated on technical grounds.

It is true that the judgment of Lynskey J. for £200 damages was reduced by the Court of Appeal to the sum of £25, and therefore the bankruptcy notice. when it was issued, was demanding a sum which ultimately turned out to be larger that the proper sum. Presuming therefore that it is to be treated as stating too large a sum, and that Lynskey J.'s judgment must be treated as if it ought to have been from the beginning one for £25, it seems to me that that amount was a valid subject for a bankruptcy notice. As to the argument that it would be wiped out by the amount of costs which were recoverable by the debtor under the order of the Court of Appeal, I agree that, at the date of the bankruptcy notice, that right of the debtor could not possibly be operative. It was a claim which did not and could not arise until the Court of Appeal dealt with the matter on October 22, 1953. Therefore, there was at the date of the bankruptcy notice, if not a valid debt for £200, at any rate a valid debt enforceable by a bankruptcy notice for £25. In those circumstances, it seems to me that the notice is validated by the second proviso to the provisions of section 2 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914. Consequently, there was a perfectly valid bankruptcy notice on which a petition could effectively be founded, and it seems to me, therefore, that the receiving order was properly made.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Shelton, Cobb & Co.; Piesse and Sons.

J. L. D.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

C. A.

1954
Jan. 26.

Evershed M.R., Denning and Romer L.JJ.

*ISAACS v. TITUS.

[Plaint No. J. 1316.]

Landlord and Tenant—Rent restriction—Shared accommodation—Shared use of kitchen—One tenant vacating premises—Right of other tenant to remain in occupation—Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949 (12 & 13 Geo. 6, c. 40), s. 8.

Court of Appeal—Notice of appeal—Failure of respondent to appear—Desirability of delaying drawing up of order.

The defendant was the tenant of part of a dwelling-house within the protection of the Rent Restriction Acts with a right to share the use of the kitchen with another tenant. The defendant's fellow-tenant gave up possession and the landlord claimed possession of the part of the premises let to the defendant, alleging that, by reason of the other tenant having left, the landlord and no one else had a right to share the use of the kitchen with the defendant:—

Held, that the fact that one tenant had left did not result in the landlord becoming entitled to share the use of the kitchen with the defendant. The defendant was entitled to the protection of section 8 of the Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949, and the landlord was not entitled to possession.

Lockwood v. Lowe [1954] 2 W.L.R. 296 followed.

APPEAL from Judge Archer sitting at Brighton County Court.

The plaintiff, Alfred John Isaacs, in these proceedings claimed as landlord to recover possession from the defendant, Bridgid Teresa Titus of the rooms in No. 12 Norfolk Square, Brighton, which had been let to her.

The particulars of claim alleged by para. 1 that the defendant was the tenant of the front room and kitchen on the first floor of the landlord's property, No. 12 Norfolk Square. Paragraph 2 was as follows: "By the terms of the tenancy the defendant "shares the kitchen with the tenant or occupier of the other room "or rooms situate on the first floor." Paragraph 3 added by amendment: "The tenant with whom the defendant has hereto-"fore shared the said kitchen has vacated the premises and the "right of sharing the said kitchen has accordingly reverted to "the" landlord. The tenant in her defence relied on the Rent Restriction Acts.

No evidence was called, the solicitors, who appeared for the two parties, being apparently agreed about the facts. In the short note of his judgment, the judge said: "This is a very "doubtful point, but in the events which have happened the "landlord and no one else at present has any right to share "the kitchen with the defendant, and so I feel constrained to "hold that section 8 of the Act of 1949 does not protect the "tenant."

The tenant appealed contending that, notwithstanding the fact that the other tenant had left, she remained within the protection of section 8 of the Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control)

Act, 1949,* and further that the decision of the Court of Appeal in Lockwood v. Lowe † was conclusive in her favour.

Peter Elman for the tenant.
The landlord did not appear.

EVERSHED M.R. after stating the facts and reading section 8 of the Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949, continued: The effect of section 8 of the Act of 1949 was to alter the law as it had previously been laid down, which, in effect, provided that where there was a sharing of accommodation of the kind indicated—whether the sharing was with the landlord or anyone else—then there was no letting as a separate dwelling, and so no protection for the tenant.

Apart from one point, to which I will come back, it appears to me that had the judge had the advantage of having cited to him the decision of this court, delivered on March 31, 1953, in Lockwood v. Lowe,[1] he would not have felt constrained to hold, as he did, that the tenant had lost the protection of the Act. In that case, as in this, there had originally been a letting to two persons of separate accommodation, each having the right to share with the other an essential part of the habitation of each, namely, the kitchen and scullery and bathroom. In that case, as in the present, one of the two had gone and left his part of the premises vacant. The majority of the court (Denning and Morris L.JJ.), in deciding the case in favour of the tenant, came to the conclusion that the terms of the original letting, on the facts as found by the county court judge, remained as they had previously been notwithstanding the departure of one of the two original tenants—that is to say, they were of opinion that the right of the relevant tenant, Lowe, was, as it always had been, a right to the exclusive occupation of certain of the accommodation, plus a right to share with the other tenant Bartholomew, and with no one else.

* Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949, s. 8: "(1) Where "—(a) a tenant has the exclusive "occupation of any accommodation "(in this section referred to as 'the "'separate accommodation'), (b) the "terms as between the tenant and "his landlord on which he holds the "separate accommodation include the "use of other accommodation (in this "section referred to as 'the shared "'accommodation') in common with "another person or other persons, "not being or including the landlord, "and (c) by reason only of the circumstances mentioned in paragraph "(b) of this subsection, the separate "accommodation would not apart "from this section be a dwelling-"house to which the principal Acts "apply, the separate accommodation "shall be deemed to be a dwelling-"house to which those Acts apply, "and the following provisions of this "section shall have effect. . . .

(6) While the tenant is in possession of the separate accommodation "by virtue either of the contract of "tenancy or of the provisions of the "principal Acts, any term or condition of the contract of tenancy terminating or modifying, or providing "for the termination or modification "of, his right to the use of any of "the shared accommodation which is "living accommodation shall be of no "effect: . . ."

Subsection (8) gives to the court a right, on the application of the landlord, to modify the sharing provision.

† [1954] 2 W.L.R. 296.

[1] [1954] 2 W.L.R. 296.

C. A.
1954
Isaacs
v.
Titus.
Evershed M.R.

Romer L.J., who was the third member of the court, based his conclusion rather upon this: that since Bartholomew had gone, the practical effect was that Lowe had an exclusive right, on the facts as found, not only to the original accommodation, but also to that which he had formerly had to share with Bartholomew. But all three judges indicated that, unless there was some modification by mutual consent or alteration of the contract, or the making of a new contract, it could not be said that because one of the two tenants had gone, therefore the landlord had, so to speak, automatically stepped into the shoes of the old tenant, so as to produce the result, as a matter of law, that the tenant who formerly had the right to share with another tenant was now in the position of having a right to share with the landlord.

I come back then to the one point to which my brother Romer drew attention in this case, namely this: According to para. 3 in the particulars of claim, it is alleged by the plaintiff that because of the departure of the other tenant, the right of sharing the kitchen "has accordingly reverted to the plaintiff." The particulars of defence set up the Rent Acts generally as a defence, but do not in terms challenge that statement; but I construe it merely as an allegation that, because the former tenant has gone, therefore that tenant's former estate in the premises has no doubt come to an end, and in that sense the landlord is entitled to get possession of the room which the previous tenant formerly occupied. But it does not follow, as I think, that the tenant's terms of tenancy have undergone automatically some change. We are told by Mr. Elman, no doubt accurately, that it is not in any case the fact that the landlord is himself in occupation, and is himself sharing with the tenant the accommodation which she formerly shared with the other tenant.

In those circumstances, I cannot conclude that this particular paragraph in the particulars of claim, which is not challenged, serves to distinguish the present case on these facts from Lockwood v. Lowe.[2] On the contrary, as I have already indicated, the present case is in my judgment necessarily on its facts governed by the decision of this court in Lockwood v. Lowe,[2] and, had Lockwood v. Lowe[2] been cited to the judge, I have little doubt that his opinion would also have been to that effect. I therefore think that the appeal must be allowed and the order for possession set aside.

Mr. Elman has informed us, again I doubt not correctly, that those instructing him served the solicitors of the landlord with the notice of appeal, and that those solicitors accepted service of the notice. Whether after that the plaintiff thought fit to dispense with his solicitors, or for whatever other reason, the landlord has not appeared to support his judgment. Knowing as I do that the commonly used form of notice of appeal might well deceive an inexperienced person, I think it right to say that the present order should not be drawn up for seven days; and I would ask Mr. Elman to direct those who instruct him to take steps to see that notice of this judgment is forthwith given to the landlord with an intimation that, if he desires to be heard, he should so indicate to the court within seven days; in which case we will make arrangements to postpone further the drawing up of the order, so that he may have an opportunity of putting whatever points he wishes before us.

[2] [1954] 2 W.L.R. 296.

Subject to that, I think that the right order would be to allow the appeal and discharge the order made by the judge, dismissing instead the landlord's action with the usual consequences.

DENNING L.J. I agree that the appeal should be allowed.

ROMER L.J. I also agree. I am quite sure that the decision of the judge would have been different had the report of the decision in Lockwood v. Lowe [2] been brought to his attention at the time of the trial.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: A. & G. Tooth for Leslie Wilner, Brighton.

B. A. B.

[2] [1954] 2 W.L.R. 296.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

* POWELL v. BRAUN.

[Plaint No. 860.]

C. A.
1954
Jan. 28.
Evershed M.R., Denning and Romer L.JJ.

Master and Servant—Remuneration—Employee to be paid by salary and bonus—Method of assessing bonus never agreed—Service terminated—Right of employee to bonus—Quantum meruit.
Contract—Uncertainty—Sum payable not stipulated—Reasonable sum. Quantum meruit. "Bonus."

The plaintiff had been employed by the defendant as his secretary in his business for some two years when he wrote to her on March 18, 1946, expressing satisfaction with the services which she had rendered to him in the past and the wish that she should undertake additional responsibility in the future. He offered to pay to her, in recognition of her past services and such additional responsibility, a bonus on the net trading profits of the business instead of an increase in salary. The plaintiff wrote the same day accepting that offer. The manner in which such bonus was to be assessed was never agreed but the defendant did, in fact, pay to the plaintiff a bonus in subsequent years. The plaintiff's contract of service having been terminated, the defendant refused to pay any bonus to the plaintiff

C. A.

1954

Powell
v.
Braun.

in respect of her last two years' service contending that, on the true construction of his letter, there was no firm promise to pay the plaintiff anything; alternatively, that his letter was of so vague a character that it was incapable of forming the basis of a claim in contract. :—

Held, that on the true construction of the letters the parties did not intend the payment of a bonus to be purely in the discretion of the defendant; that the principle of quantum meruit was no less applicable when the remuneration was additional remuneration—that was remuneration over and above a fixed salary—than it was when it was the only remuneration; and that, accordingly, the plaintiff was entitled to be paid the sum which the parties had agreed to be payable if the defendant were liable to pay a bonus.

Taylor v. Brewer (1813) 1 M. & S. 290 considered.

Appeal from Judge Glazebrook sitting at Bromley County Court.

The plaintiff, Pamela Irene Powell, had been employed by the defendant, H. W. Braun, from 1944, as his confidential secretary. By letter dated March 18, 1946, the defendant wrote to the plaintiff: "You have now been with me for just two "years, both of them very eventful, and during the first you did "without question many things which were hardly within your "contract of engagement; I shall always remember with "particular gratitude everything you did for Mrs. Braun. As I "have mentioned to you on various occasions, it is my wish for "you to act and work on your own initiative rather than to feel "you must always refer matters to me; I am, of course, on hand "for any business problem which may arise, but now we have "two juniors it is more necessary than before that you are able "to handle matters yourself both from the business angle and "from your own personal prestige and authority as befits your "position. I have not hitherto mentioned to you the question "of a rise in salary, and with the added responsibility you now "have I feel that some recognition of this and of past service "is due to you. A stereotyped rise is all very well, but my "opinion has always been that a bonus on the net trading profit "is more interesting to anyone. I therefore propose to adopt "this with you and that, say, about May each year I shall pay "you an amount according to the trading results of the previous "financial year to the end of March; I cannot say at this "juncture what the amount will be, but I am sure you will not "be disappointed with it from year to year. I will conclude "with the hope that you may stay with me for many a day as "my confidential secretary and senior member of the staff even "if the latter be only small."

The plaintiff replied to that letter on the same date as follows: "Your letter of today was quite unexpected, but a very "pleasant surprise. Your idea of a yearly bonus is very con-"siderate, and one which I much appreciate. I do agree with "you that this is more interesting than an actual weekly increase, "and it is certainly very encouraging. You have always done

"everything possible to make my work happy and interesting, "and have assisted me in all ways, and I sincerely hope that I "shall be able to influence our juniors in a similar manner, and "that between us we shall build a really flourishing business. "There are very few people who would have included their "secretary as a member of the family as you and Mrs. Braun "included me during our stay in Ayr. Anything I did for Mrs. "Braun during her illness has been more than repaid in the "friendship and consideration you have both shown to me both "in Ayr and since we returned. I also hope that I shall have "the pleasure of working with you for 'many a day'."

The plaintiff relying on the defendant's offer continued in his employment undertaking additional responsibilities and was paid a bonus in 1946 and in each of the following years, the largest payment being £55 and the smallest £20. The plaintiff did not know on what basis these payments were calculated. She continued in the defendant's employment until April 27, 1953, when she left.

In these proceedings she claimed, first, two weeks' arrears of salary, as to which no question arose in the appeal; secondly, a declaration that she was entitled to be paid a bonus in respect of the two years ending March 31, 1952, and March 31, 1953; alternatively damages for breach of the agreement contained in the correspondence as a quantum meruit. By his defence the defendant denied that his letter of March 18, 1946, contained an agreement to pay an annual bonus.

The county court judge held that the defendant's letter of March 18, 1946, did contain a promise to pay a bonus, but the sum payable was left to his discretion and the contract was too vague to be enforced. He further held that since the plaintiff had undertaken additional work on the terms that she was to be paid a sum depending on the defendant's discretion, she was precluded from relying on a quantum meruit. He accordingly dismissed her claim to be paid a sum for bonus. He found that, if she were entitled to rely on a quantum meruit, the sum due was £25, which the parties had agreed to be the amount of bonus, if any, payable.

The plaintiff appealed.

Michael Scholfield for the plaintiff.
E. A. Bramall for the defendant.

The following authorities were referred to in argument: Broome v. Speak[1]; Bryant v. Flight[2]; Roberts v. Smith[3]; Taylor v. Brewer[4]; Loftus v. Roberts[5]; Way v. Latilla.[6]

EVERSHED M.R. stated the facts, read the relevant correspondence and continued: In this case I have taken a different

[1] [1903] 1 Ch. 586; 19 T.L.R. 187.
[2] (1839) 5 M. & W. 114.
[3] (1859) 4 H. & N. 315.
[4] (1813) 1 M. & S. 290.
[5] (1902) 18 T.L.R. 532.
[6] [1937] 3 All E.R. 759.

C. A.
1954
Powell
v.
Braun.
Evershed M.R.

view from the county court judge. The action was one brought for salary by the plaintiff, who was formerly employed by the defendant. The claim comprehended two heads: first, for a certain small sum for fixed remuneration, about which no question arises in this court; and, secondly, for a further sum alleged to be due by virtue of the letter of March 18, 1946, written by the defendant to the plaintiff and the plaintiff's reply. The question for determination turns on the true intention of the parties to be derived from this correspondence.

Unhappily the amiable and generous language in which the plaintiff and defendant addressed each other in March 1946 did not persist very long. Perhaps the moral is that it is highly desirable to be precise in matters of this kind. Certainly, within quite a short time, the defendant appears to have been somewhat grudging in implementing whatever he intended by his letter. I am bound to say that, to my mind, at the present time he cuts a somewhat unattractive figure. Mean to the plaintiff, he was obviously held by the judge to be an unreliable witness. I have no doubt, on the facts as found by the judge, that the plaintiff's continued service of the defendant would never have occurred had it not been for her reliance upon this promise; and, as the judge expressly said, she thenceforth undertook more responsible work than otherwise she had performed, or would have performed. Still, that is no necessary answer to the questions that are raised, whether, having regard to the vague and general terms of these letters, the plaintiff can now sue upon the letters for the sums which she claims.

Two answers to the plaintiff's claim are put forward: First, it is said that on the true construction of the letter of March 18, 1946, there was no firm promise to pay anything; that it was merely a statement that, if the plaintiff continued to serve and to undertake the more responsible work as suggested, the defendant would give her something or nothing as in his discretion he might from time to time think fit. Second, it is said that in any case the whole document is of so vague and general a character that it is incapable of forming the basis of a claim in contract; and further, that a claim based on quantum meruit or its equivalent in a case of this kind is a novelty which finds no parallel, or no exact parallel, in the decided cases.

Through the industry of counsel, we have had the advantage of looking at a number of cases in which this kind of question has been before the court, and it emerges, I think quite plainly, from these authorities that the first and vital question is that of the construction of the two documents which must be taken to represent and evidence the joint intention of the parties on March 18, 1946.

The judge, perhaps influenced particularly by the use of the word "bonus," concluded in his careful judgment that the true effect of this arrangement was that any further payment over and above the fixed salary—to quote the language of Bayley J. in Taylor v. Brewer[1]—should be in the breast of the defendant, whether he should pay anything or nothing. For my part, I am unable to accept that view. I think that the nature of the engagement, the service which the plaintiff had rendered, the circumstances in which the letter was written, the particular emphasis upon the defendant's own desire in his own business interest that the plaintiff should assume more responsibility and act more on her initiative—there having been two juniors engaged—all these matters make it quite plain that this suggestion for what was called a bonus meant an obligation to pay something in lieu of an addition to salary, and the conduct of both parties, to my mind, makes it plain that it was so understood by them both.

The plaintiff, whom the judge clearly regarded as a truthful witness, said: "I said I should not have accepted [this offer] "if I had known that the defendant claimed, as he did shortly "afterwards, that the arrangement did not operate for another "fourteen months"—making it clear, as I think, that she relied upon this promise as being something which she was accepting in lieu of increased salary and in consideration of continued service and greater responsibility. On the other side, there is not the smallest hint or suggestion on the part of the defendant that he was under no liability at all, if he chose not to pay, until the action is brought. When eventually the plaintiff left the defendant's service, the only point the defendant took was that there was only one year's so-called bonus "due" from him instead of two, as she claimed.

Assisted as I have been by the cases cited, which illustrate the approach which the court makes in cases of this kind, I conclude here, as a matter of construction, that the parties did not mean and intend the payment of a bonus to be purely discretionary.

That, however, leaves the further question whether the whole document is in its terms and character too vague and general to be capable of supporting a claim of this kind. Again I reject that view. Once it is concluded that this was not to be a reward in the discretion of the defendant, then inevitably it must mean, according to its terms, that the sum to be paid—unless the parties chose from time to time to agree some other figure—would be a reasonable sum; that is, a sum arrived at so as to bear a reasonable relationship to the trading profit. Of course, if there were no trading profit, no doubt there would be no so-called bonus; but, in any other event, then I think that the principle of a quantum meruit or of reasonable remuneration (which comes to the same thing) is no less applicable where the remuneration in question is additional remuneration—that is over and above the fixed salary—than it is to a case where it is the only remuneration.

[1] (1813) 1 M. & S. 290.

C. A.
1954
Powell
v.
Braun.
Evershed M.R.

That being so, the rest of the case is simple. The judge took the view—adopting what the defendant had said—that 12s. a week would be a fair sum to fix, since that would be the sort of additional salary, according to the defendant, which would have been paid if there had not been a bonus. But the parties themselves have seen fit to come to an agreement that, having regard to the trading profits as they in fact were during the two years ending March 31, 1952 and 1953, a reasonable remuneration on the basis of those profits would be £25 for the two years.

In those circumstances, and for the reasons which I have tried to state, I think that the plaintiff should have recovered judgment under this head for the sum of £25. I therefore think that the appeal should be allowed, and that judgment ought to be entered for the plaintiff for £25 in addition to the other sum for fixed salary.

Denning L.J. It was said in the course of the argument that no case has been found in the books where a quantum meruit has been awarded in a case like the present. I hope that this case will provide the deficiency.

The facts are quite simple: In lieu of a rise in salary, the defendant agreed to pay the plaintiff a bonus each year on the net trading profit. The defendant made trading profits, but he refuses to pay any bonus. He refuses to pay anything, whereas the agreement quite clearly contemplated that he should pay something. The judge said that it was a matter for the defendant in his discretion as to what he should pay, that is, whether he should pay something or nothing. I do not agree with that. I think the defendant plainly bound himself to pay something. The precise amount would not be an amount in his unfettered discretion. It would be an amount which a fair and just man would pay in the exercise of a reasonable discretion. That being so, I think that we should award to the plaintiff that sum, namely, £25. I agree that the appeal should be allowed accordingly.

Romer L.J. I also agree. This court is not a court of morals, but I am bound to say that I think that the attitude which the defendant has thought proper to adopt in this dispute reflects very little credit upon him. In March, 1946, he obtained an advantage for himself and his business, and he obtained that advantage from the plaintiff. He now seeks to adopt the attitude that he is under no liability over a period of two years to pay, on the ground that he never was under any legal liability to make any payment at all. When one looks at these two letters of March 18, 1946, setting out the promise from the defendant and the acceptance of that promise by the plaintiff, it seems to me clear that she naturally enough took the view that she was to get from the profits of the business, if there were profits, a bonus instead of an increased salary, and the consideration which, as the judge found, she was going to give for that increased emolument was her promise to undertake further responsibilities. It has not been suggested that she failed in the fulfilment of that promise but it appears to me clear that it never dawned on her (and there was no reason why it should, having regard to the reference in her employer's letter to the increase of salary) that she was going to take on this extra responsibility at a remuneration which rested solely in the discretion of the defendant himself. That indeed, as far as I can make out, was not the view of the defendant himself at one time because he admitted, as the judge found, that there was one bonus due, and, if he was under no liability to pay anything, then the word "due" would seem to be an inapt word to use.

I think that where the judge was in error was in finding that the intention of the parties was that the defendant should pay such portion of the profits as he in his discretion might decide. I do not think that is right. In my view, it was a matter of a legal bargain giving rise to a legal right, and the plaintiff was to get at all events something provided there were profits. That being so, I think the case is covered by the type of authority exemplified by Taylor v. Brewer,[2] and Way v. Latilla,[3] and I agree with my brothers that the plaintiff should be remunerated on a quantum meruit, or reasonable basis in the way that my Lord has indicated.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Woodroffes; Mealy & Co.

B. A. B.

[2] (1813) 1 M. & S. 290.

[3] [1937] 3 All E.R. 759.

[CHANCERY DIVISION.]

* In re ELSIE INGLIS (LONDON) MEMORIAL FUND.

1954
Jan. 19.
Harman J.

[1953 I. 013.]

Costs — Court fees — Petition under Romilly's Act — Stamp duty — Whether court fees chargeable—Charities Procedure Act, 1812 (52 Geo. 3, c. 101), s. 3.
Revenue—Stamp duty—Court fees. "Stamp duty."

It is enacted by section 3 of the Charities Procedure Act, 1812, that petitions presented under that statute shall not be "subject or "liable to the payment of any stamp duty whatever":—

Held, that the exemption does not extend to court fees, and that the ordinary fees are, therefore, payable on a petition presented under that Act.

PETITION.

This was a question, raised at the conclusion of the hearing of a petition presented by the Attorney-General under the Charities

1954

Elsie Inglis (London) Memorial Fund, In re.

Procedure Act, 1812 (the facts of which are not material for the purposes of this report), to obtain the decision of the court as to whether or not "court fees" were exigible in these cases.

By section 3 of that Act it is provided: "And be it further "enacted, that neither the petitions, nor any proceedings upon "the same or relative thereto, nor the copies of any such "petitions or proceedings, shall be subject or liable to the pay-"ment of any stamp duty whatever."

The question was, in effect, whether the phrase "stamp "duty" in that section included court fees.

Denys Buckley for the Attorney-General.
W. F. Waite for the Official Solicitor

No authorities were referred to in the argument.

Harman J. This is a curious point, not of very great importance nowadays, because proceedings under the Act in question are comparatively rare. I have been dealing with a petition entitled "In the matter of the Charities Procedure "Act, 1812." That was an Act passed under the tutelage, or, rather, under the advocacy, as I gather, of Lord Romilly, and has been known, of recent years anyhow, as Romilly's Act. The Act in question is entitled: "An Act to provide a "summary remedy in cases of abuses of trusts created for "charitable purposes." The object of the Act was to allow causes for breach of trust to be brought before the Lord Chancellor, the Master of the Rolls, or the Court of Exchequer in a summary manner by petition and to be heard on affidavit, and in order that it might be done quickly, as lawyers counted time in those days, an aggrieved person could have no more than two years to appeal to the House of Lords. The petition had to be signed by the persons preferring it and attested by the solicitor or the attorney for the petitioners and allowed by the Attorney-General's or Solicitor-General's fiat before it could be presented. Nowadays, the Attorney-General presents such petitions as come under the aegis of that Act. The last section is in these terms: "III. And be it further enacted, that neither the petitions, nor "any proceedings upon the same or relative thereto, nor the "copies of any such petitions or proceedings, shall be subject or "liable to the payment of any stamp duty whatever."

When I asked what stamp duty was then payable on the petitions or proceedings on the same or copies, I was referred to an Act of 1808, then comparatively recently passed (48 Geo. III, c. 149), which is entitled: "An Act for repealing the stamp "duties on deeds, law proceedings, and other written or printed "instruments, and the duties on legacies and successions to "personal estate upon intestacies now payable in Great "Britain, and for granting new duties in lieu thereof." That was a comparatively elaborate Act which altered various rates of duty including one familiar to us until quite recently, namely, stamp duty under the Legacy Duty Act of 1796.

There were then various stamped papers which had to be bought in order that documents might be copied on them, and it was in that way that the Commissioners of Stamps at that time collected a good part of their revenue. When one looks at the Schedule to the Act of 1808, Part II, it sets out the duties on law proceedings in the courts of law and equity at Westminster and other courts in Great Britain and before the Lord High Chancellor. Looking through those duties, one finds, inter alia, a fee of half a crown on a petition in any suit or action in any of the courts of equity at Westminster or before the Lord Chancellor in matters of bankruptcy and lunacy. That was a stamp duty, which quite clearly was remitted by Lord Romilly's Act.

There were at that time other fees payable by suitors, and the petitioner would have had to pay, so far as I can ascertain, to the clerks in Chancery certain fees by way of court fees for the assistance which they gave him and which they put in their pockets as their remuneration. It follows, then, that although in 1812 the stamp duty was remitted, the court fee was not.

There was a further Act of 1824 by which certain amendments were made in the duties, as they were called, in law proceedings, and also so-called duties on the parchment or vellum on which certain documents had to be copied, but I need not go into that Act.

In 1833, as I am told, though I have not been referred to the Act, there were some reforms of the Court of Chancery made under which the clerks in Chancery were no longer entitled to take such fees as they could obtain and put them in their pockets, but they had to account for the surplus of them over and above that which paid their salaries and pay that surplus into the Consolidated Fund.

At a later date, namely 1866, an Act was passed whereby many of the court fees could, if the Treasury thought fit, be paid by stamps instead of in cash. That Act was repealed by the Public Offices Fees Act, 1879, which shows the method of collecting fees in public offices at that time. Section 2 provided: "The fees payable in any public office shall be collected either "in money or by means of stamps, or partly in one way and "partly in the other way, according as may be from time to time "directed by order of the Commissioners of Her Majesty's "Treasury." The Treasury was empowered to make regulations regulating the manner in which the fees taken were to be accounted for and paid over and for determining the use of impressed or adhesive stamps and the mode of cancellation of adhesive stamps. Therefore, from that time onwards their Lordships of the Treasury could determine how fees payable, including court fees, could be discharged—whether in cash or by means of stamps.

By the Judicature Act, 1925, the power of regulating that sort of matter was vested in the Lord Chancellor with the concurrence of the judges. That is provided by section 213, which provides: "Subject to the provisions of this Act, the Lord "Chancellor, with the advice and consent of the judges of the "Supreme Court or any three of them, and with the concurrence "of the Treasury, may by order fix the fees and percentages to "be taken in the High Court" and so on. In accordance with that, the Supreme Court Fees Order of 1930 is now the regulating instrument, that having, by virtue of the Judicature Act, statutory force. The Lord Chancellor directs that the fees and percentages set out in the second column of the Schedule to the order are to be taken in the Supreme Court. By paragraph 5, "the fees and percentages described by this order shall, subject "to the provisions of this and the next following paragraphs, be "taken by impressed stamps." There are certain exceptions to that. For instance, some stamps are to be adhesive stamps. Curiously enough, paragraph 6 provides that in the district registries of the High Court, other than in Manchester, fees are to be taken in cash and not in stamps at all.

1954

Elsie Inglis (London) Memorial Fund, In re.

Harman J.

It is said, that being the position, that, as in the High Court fees on an originating petition, being, I think, 50 shillings, are payable by way of impressed stamps in the ordinary course, that is a duty payable in stamps—therefore a stamp duty, and within the very words of Romilly's Act "any stamp duty "whatever." In my judgment, that is not so. Stamp duties are one thing: court fees are another. It is notable that in the Stamp Act, 1891, which is now the code for all stamps, court fee stamps and judicature stamps are excluded. It seems to me that the fact that, for half a century after Romilly's Act was passed, it was ordained that certain judicature stamps were to witness the collection of court fees is irrelevant and does not enlarge the ambit of exemption which Lord Romilly's Act sought to confer. In my judgment the ordinary fees are payable on a petition under that Act.

Solicitors: Treasury Solicitor; Official Solicitor.

J. L. D.

[PROBATE, ETC., DIVISION.]

1954 Feb. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5.

Barnard J.

* GUNNER v. GUNNER.

Practice Note.

Husband and Wife — Divorce — Practice — Pleading — General cruelty allegation—No particulars—What may be proved—Need for notice.

A respondent in a defended divorce suit alleged, inter alia, on a charge of cruelty: "That the petitioner who is a man of foul "and abusive language has neglected the respondent and treated "her with cruelty." No particulars were requested of the answer and the respondent referred in her evidence to a specific allegation of neglect which had not been pleaded.

BARNARD J. rejected a submission that in the absence of a request for particulars allegations of specific occurrences might be made under the general charge, and, referring to Jewell v. Jewell,[1] said that the proper way to proceed on such a matter was to give notice of the allegation.

His Lordship gave leave for the following specific allegation to be made by notice at the hearing, no objection being taken on behalf of the petitioner: "That in or about the month of June, 1946, at a time when the respondent was confined, the petitioner gave the maidservant presents to the distress of the respondent."

D. Wacher for the husband.
John Syms for the wife.

Solicitors: Mossop Privett & Co.; Gard, Lyell & Co., for Theodore Bell, Sutton.

J. B. G.

[1] (1862) 2 Sw. & Tr. 573. The headnote reads: "Evidence to prove "a species of cruelty not pleaded in "the petition is not admissible; "though evidence of violent demeanour and language not pleaded, "but leading up to and making probable acts of violence pleaded, may "be admissible."

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

* HIGGINS AND ANOTHER v. NORTH WEST METROPOLITAN HOSPITAL BOARD AND BACH.

1954
Jan. 15, 18, 19, 29.

Pilcher J.

Limitation of Action—Public authority—Persons protected—National Health Service — Hospital — Specialist employed part-time by hospital—Injury to patient—Person acting on behalf of hospital board in execution of public duty — Limitation Act, 1939 (2 & 3 Geo. 6, c. 21), s. 21 (1).

Negligence—Hospital—Negligence of medical staff—Part-time specialist — Vicarious liability. National Health Service — Negligence — Vicarious liability.

A part-time specialist, acting in the ordinary course of his duties at a hospital for which a regional board constituted under the National Health Service Act, 1946, was the responsible authority, treated a patient at the hospital in a manner alleged to be negligent. He denied negligence and pleaded the protection of

---

[Reported by Miss ELAINE JONES, Barrister-at-Law.]

1954

Higgins
v.
North West
Metropolitan
Hospital Board.

section 21 (1) of the Limitation Act, 1939,[1] in respect of a writ issued some two and a half years after the cause of action arose. On the trial of this issue as a preliminary point:—

Held, whatever the precise relationship between the specialist and the hospital board, he was, at the material time, acting as an agent for the board in the execution or intended execution of a public duty, and was, therefore, entitled to the protection of the Act.

Nelson v. Cookson [1940] 1 K.B. 100; 56 T.L.R. 2; [1939] 4 All E.R. 30 applied.

Gold v. Essex County Council [1942] 2 K.B. 293; 58 T.L.R. 357; [1942] 2 All E.R. 237; and Cassidy v. Ministry of Health [1951] 2 K.B. 343; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 539; [1951] 1 All E.R. 574 considered.

Preliminary point of law.

On July 17, 1949, the second-named plaintiff, Mrs. Margaret Higgins, attended the Mount Vernon Hospital, a hospital for which the first defendants, the North West Metropolitan Regional Hospital Board, were the responsible authority, for treatment which was prescribed and given in the ordinary course of his duties by the second defendant, Dr. Bach. The plaintiffs alleged that the treatment, which consisted of an injection made into the left trapesius was negligently given, and that the needle consequently penetrated the pleural cavity and caused a traumatic pneumothorax resulting in serious illness and loss of work for over two years. As a result of the matter passing through the hands of several solicitors the writ was not issued until February 13, 1952.

The North West Metropolitan Regional Hospital Board by their defence denied negligence; Dr. Bach also denied negligence and pleaded the protection of section 21 (1) of the Limitation Act, 1939, as a person who "at all material times was acting in "pursuance or execution or intended execution of an Act of "Parliament, namely, the National Health Service Act, 1946, "and/or a public duty or authority." On May 11, 1953, the latter issue was ordered to be tried as a preliminary point.

It was admitted that Dr. Bach was, at all material times, employed by the hospital board as physician in charge of the physical medicine department of the hospital by virtue of and on the terms of a contract to be collected from a letted dated June 23, 1948, from the hospital board to Dr. Bach, and his acceptance thereof dated July 3, 1948, and letters from the hospital board to Dr. Bach dated February 28, 1949, and June 22, 1949.

G. G. Blackledge Q.C. and Andrew Rankin for the plaintiffs.
James Stirling for the first defendant.
J. R. Cumming-Bruce for the second defendant.

[1] Limitation Act, 1939, s. 21: "(1) "No action shall be brought against "any person for any act done in pur-"suance, or execution, or intended "execution of any Act of Parliament, "or of any public duty or authority, "or in respect of any neglect or "default in the execution of any such "Act, duty or authority, unless it "is commenced before the expiration "of one year from the date on which "the cause of action accrued."

The cases cited in argument are contained in the judgment.

Cur. adv. vult.

January 29. PILCHER J. read the following judgment, in which he stated the facts, and continued: Dr. Bach was called, and his evidence can be summarized as follows: "I specialise in "physical medicine. Before July 5, 1948, which was the "'appointed day' under the National Health Service Act, 1946, "I was the consultant physician in charge of the Physical "Medicine Department at the Mount Vernon Hospital. This "hospital then was and still is a general hospital with some "800 beds. Before the appointed day it was a voluntary "hospital. The hospital is organized in departments, of which "the Physical Medicine Department is one. The functions of "this department are to supply facilities for the rehabilitation of "patients by means of physiotherapy, remedial gymnastics, "occupational therapy, etc. Patients are referred to me by "members of the consultant staff of the hospital, and by medical "practitioners outside the hospital. As physician in charge of "the department, I was at all times responsible for the "organization and internal administration of my department, "the general supervision of patients presented to me for treat-"ment, the supervision of diagnoses and actual diagnosis in "cases which I considered to require my personal attention. "I also, myself, gave treatment in cases when I considered this "desirable.

"Immediately under me I had a medical registrar, a part-"time house physician for patients in the ward and a team of "medical auxiliaries qualified to give treatment prescribed by "myself. I myself was, at all material times, the hospital's "recognized specialist in physical medicine. I did not, before "the appointed day, and do not since, recognize the right of "anyone to control the way I do my work. Before the appointed "day I was paid a salary. I was supposed to work at the "hospital for seven hours a week, but, in fact, as a rule I "worked there considerably longer than this. After the "appointed day I entered into a contract with the Hospital Board "to carry on the same duties at the hospital as I had previously "performed. In fact, I worked considerably longer at the "hospital than I had before the appointed day. Under my "contract with the board, I was supposed to devote two "'notional half-days' to my work at the Mount Vernon Hospital, "and on this basis I was, at the material time, paid at the rate "of £400 per annum by cheque, monthly.

"My appointment at the Mount Vernon Hospital was that "of a part-time specialist. In July, 1949, I held similar appoint-"ments at other hospitals, and was devoting eight-elevenths of "my time to hospital work. The remainder of my time was "spent in attending to my private consulting practice in 1954

Higgins v. North West Metropolitan Hospital Board.

Pilcher J.

"Devonshire Place. I specialise in rheumatic diseases as well "as physical medicine. Under the terms of my contract with "the board, I can be required, within certain limits, to attend "at other hospitals in the region. If the board so desired they "would be entitled to criticize and control my work in so far as "it consists of internal hospital administration.

"Mrs. Higgins was an out-patient of the hospital. She was "referred to me for treatment. I diagnosed her case, prescribed "the treatment and, on July 17, 1949, gave her the injection "complained of. I do not recognize that any official of the "board had any right to control my actions in any way in regard "to the way in which I gave the injection. I have taken the "oath of Hippocrates to do my work as well as I can. I am "classed as an 'employed person' for the purposes of National "Health Insurance. I subscribe out of the salary which I "receive from the hospital board towards a superannuation "fund." I have thought it desirable to summarize Dr. Bach's evidence fairly fully in order that a reasonably clear view of his position and duties at the Mount Vernon Hospital may be presented.

On June 23, 1948, the hospital board sent a printed form of letter to Dr. Bach. This was headed: "North West Metropolitan "Regional Hospital Board. National Health Service Act, 1946. "Medical and Dental Staff of the Hospital and Specialist "Services: Arrangements from the Appointed Day." The letter then proceeds as follows: "By virtue of the provisions of the "Regional Hospital Boards, etc. (Functions) Regulations, 1948, "and Regulations to be made under section 14 (2) of the Act, it "will be for regional boards to appoint specialist staff including "staff senior to the grade of registrar—and for management "committees to appoint other medical and dental staff. "Specialists will be remunerated by the regional boards." I only propose to read short passages from this rather long document. "The invitation to take part in the service on the basis of the "remuneration and conditions now proposed is made for a "limited period only in order to allow of review and the sub-"stitution of firm contracts on a permanent basis as soon as "possible. Broadly, the position under the National Health "Service Act is that medical and dental staff engaged whole-time "in hospital, clinic, etc., work, will be transferable to the service "of the board and no new contract will be required; but that "part-time staff will not, in general, be transferable and a new "contract will be necessary in each case. The following para-"graphs set out the position in more detail." I merely pause there to say that Dr. Bach was a member of the part-time staff. Transferable staff and non-transferable staff are then defined in detail, and the necessity for making short-term arrangements is gone into.

The question of remuneration for specialists is referred to in the following terms: "The contract with each part-time

"specialist and the remuneration paid to him will cover all "services rendered to the board other than domiciliary visits "(which are referred to below). The scale of remuneration which "the Ministry of Health have directed the board to offer is set "out in the appendix, together with the conditions of service "which will be applied provisionally. To arrive at the appro-"priate remuneration, the average time given to the various "activities has been assessed and aggregated in terms of half-"days per week."

A number of further provisions follow with regard to the remuneration of medical officers acting under this form of contract, and in the schedule at the end of the form Dr. Bach is appropriated, if that be the correct word, to the Mount Vernon Hospital, and his duties are said to be the "Existing duties as "physician in charge of the Physical Medicine Department," two half-days per week. Now, Dr. Bach signed the form at the end of that letter and sent it back to the board, and, in substance, continued to perform his duties in exactly the same fashion as he had before he signed that document.

On February 28, 1949, a further letter was addressed to Dr. Bach which, in effect, provided that the interim arrangements arrived at under the document to which I have referred should be extended from the contemplated date of March 31, 1949, to July 4, 1949. On June 22, a further document of the same nature was addressed to Dr. Bach by the hospital board, which had the effect of continuing the provisional arrangement after July 4, 1949, on the same terms as had been entered into before. Finally, on March 14, 1950, a more permanent arrangement was arrived at with Dr. Bach on substantially the same terms, except as to remuneration, and it is quite unnecessary that I should say anything about that.

The matters out of which this case arises having taken place on July 17, 1949, it was whilst carrying on his duties at the hospital under the provisional arrangements set out in the board's original letter to which I have referred that Dr. Bach gave the treatment to Mrs. Higgins which gave rise to these proceedings.

It is common ground that the first defendants in the action, the hospital board, are a public authority. At one stage of the hearing before me, Mr. Blackledge, on behalf of the plaintiffs, developed an argument based upon an examination of sections 1, 3, 11 and 12 of the National Health Service Act, 1946, in which he contended that the Minister had only delegated to hospital boards the duty to "administer" the services provided under the Act and not the actual duty to "treat" patients. Mr. Blackledge submitted that the duty to "treat" remained in the Minister. Alternatively, he contended that if the Minister had purported to delegate to hospital boards the duty to treat, such delegation was ultra vires, and, in the circumstances, he submitted that the Minister should be joined as a defendant in the action. It is unnecessary that I should refer to this branch of Mr. Blackledge's argument in more detail, because, upon being given an assurance during the course of the case that the first defendants would not take the point that the Minister should be joined as a defendant, he did not pursue the matter.

1954

Higgins v. North West Metropolitan Hospital Board.

Pilcher J.

[His Lordship referred to section 21 (1) of the Limitation Act, 1939, and continued:] I am not now concerned as to whether Dr. Bach was or was not negligent in giving the treatment which he did to Mrs. Higgins; nor am I concerned as to whether the relationship of Dr. Bach and the hospital board was such as to render the board liable for the negligence, if any, of Dr. Bach upon the principle of respondeat superior. My only task is to determine whether, in the particular circumstances of this case, Dr. Bach is entitled to claim the protection of section 21 (1) of the Limitation Act, 1939.

It was not really in dispute that, in giving to Mrs. Higgins the injection which he did, Dr. Bach was acting in the ordinary course of his duty as a part-time specialist under the National Health Service Act, 1946, in charge of the Physical Medicine Department of the Mount Vernon Hospital. For the purposes of this case, I assume that the duty of treating patients within the region which they administer, as well as the duty of administering the health service provided under the Act, was upon the hospital board, which was itself a public authority and entitled to the protection of section 21 (1) of the Act of 1939. If Dr. Bach, who was a part-time specialist at the hospital, can properly be regarded as a servant of the hospital board, and if he was at the material time performing or purporting to perform, as the servant of the board, a public duty laid upon the hospital board by statute, it is not in dispute that he is entitled to the protection of section 21 (1).

The plaintiffs, however, contend that, in giving the treatment which he did, Dr. Bach was not the servant of the hospital board, but was in the position of an independent contractor in respect of whose negligence, if any, the board was not responsible upon the basis of respondeat superior. They contend that principals can only act through servants, for whose acts they are legally responsible, or through independent contractors, for whose acts they are not responsible. Admitting that the servants of a public authority, whilst performing a public duty on behalf of the authority, are protected by the section, they deny that persons in the position of Dr. Bach, who are, it is said, independent contractors in the sense that they are uncontrolled and uncontrollable in the exercise of their professional duties, are entitled to any protection.

The argument presented on behalf of Dr. Bach ran along these lines. In giving the treatment which he did, Dr. Bach was performing on behalf of the hospital board one of the very duties which it had been directed to perform by the Minister. This duty was a public duty and one which the board (on the assumption that the duty had been properly delegated to them) could only properly perform by the hand of an experienced doctor. Dr. Bach, in giving the treatment in question, was in no sense performing an act collateral to the duty of the board, as was the case in Bradford Corporation v. Myers.[1] I do not propose to spend time upon this branch of the argument advanced on behalf of Dr. Bach, because I am satisfied that it is correct. In support of this view, I need only refer to Griffiths v. Smith,[2] and in particular to the passages in the speech of Viscount Simon L.C.[3] I also refer to Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. (S.S.) v. Singapore Harbour Board.[4] The act of which the plaintiff complains in the present case was, in my view, clearly an act done by Dr. Bach on behalf of the hospital board in execution or intended execution of a public duty. It was an act in respect of which the hospital board, if they are responsible in law for the negligence of Dr. Bach, would have been entitled, had they thought fit, to claim the protection of section 21 (1) of the Act of 1939.

I was referred during the course of the argument to a long line of cases dealing with the responsibility in law of hospitals of different constitutions for the negligent acts of their "staff," using that word in its widest sense. This line of cases starts with Hillyer v. Governors of St. Bartholomew's Hospital.[5] Until Gold v. Essex County Council[6] came before the Court of Appeal, Hillyer's case was regarded as having decided that the only duty owed by the governors of a public hospital towards a patient was to exercise due care and skill in selecting their medical staff, that the relationship of master and servant did not exist between the governors and the medical staff and that the nursing staff, when assisting at an operation performed by a consulting surgeon, ceased to be the servants of the governors. Gold's case[7] in effect reversed what had hitherto been regarded as the effect of the decision in Hillyer's case,[8] and since the decision in Gold's case,[9] which concerned the negligence of a competent whole-time radiographer on the staff of a hospital, the law has been that a public hospital, whether administered by a local authority or by a board of governors, owes to a patient the duty to nurse and treat him carefully and is liable for the negligence of its whole-time staff with the possible exception of honorary physicians and surgeons.

Lord Greene M.R., in the course of his judgment in Gold's case,[10] said: "The question which presents itself in the present "case may, therefore, be formulated as follows: When a patient "seeking free advice and treatment such as that given to the "infant plaintiff knocks at the door of the defendant's hospital,

[1] [1916] 1 A.C. 242.
[2] [1941] A.C. 170; 57 T.L.R. 185; [1941] 1 All E.R. 66.
[3] [1941] A.C. 177–9.
[4] [1952] 2 A.C. 452; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 1625; [1952] 2 All E.R. 219.
[5] [1909] 2 K.B. 820; 25 T.L.R. 762.
[6] [1942] 2 K.B. 293; 58 T.L.R. 357; [1942] 2 All E.R. 237.
[7] Ibid.
[8] [1909] 2 K.B. 820.
[9] [1942] 2 K.B. 293.
[10] Ibid. 302.

1954

HIGGINS v. NORTH WEST METROPOLITAN HOSPITAL BOARD.

Pilcher J.

"what is he entitled to expect? He will find an organisation "which comprises consulting physicians and surgeons, presumably also house physicians and surgeons, a staff of nurses, "equipment for administering Grenz ray treatment and a radiographer, Mead, employed to give that treatment. So far as "consulting physicians and surgeons are concerned, clearly the "nature of their work and the relationship in which they stand "to the defendants precludes the drawing of an inference that "the defendants undertake responsibility for their negligent acts. "The same may be true of the house physicians and surgeons, "but their case is not relevant to the present inquiry and I say "nothing about it. The position of the nurses again, although, "no doubt, analogous, is not strictly relevant, but if the nature "of their employment, both as to its terms and as to the work "performed, is what it usually is in such institutions I cannot "myself see any sufficient ground for saying that the defendants "do not undertake towards the patient the obligation of nursing "him as distinct from the obligation of providing a skilful nurse. "Nursing, it appears to me, is just what the patient is entitled "to expect from the institution and the relationship of the nurses "to the institution supports the inference that they are engaged "to nurse the patients."

In Collins v. Hertfordshire County Council,[11] Hilbery J. found the hospital authority responsible for the negligence of a resident non-qualified junior house surgeon. In Cassidy v. Ministry of Health,[12] the Court of Appeal in effect decided that a qualified medical practitioner, in that case a whole-time assistant medical officer at Walton Hospital, Liverpool, was a person for whose negligence the hospital authority were responsible. Denning L.J., in an interesting judgment,[13] went further than this and clearly took the view that hospital authorities, in every case when the patient did not select his own physician or surgeon, were liable on the basis of respondeat superior for the negligence of part-time consulting staff as well as permanent full-time staff. This point was not necessary for the decision of Cassidy's case,[14] but it would seem that Denning L.J. would, in the present case, have been prepared to hold the hospital board responsible for any negligence proved against Dr. Bach. In Roe v. Minister of Health,[15] McNair J. took the view that the hospital authority would not be responsible for the negligence of a part-time consultant anaesthetist, who was, I suppose, a specialist in much the same position as Dr. Bach.

I hope that I have made it quite clear that I am not now concerned with the question as to whether or not the hospital board in the present case are vicariously responsible for any negligence which may be proved against Dr. Bach, and I have only

[11] [1947] K.B. 598; 63 T.L.R. 317; [1947] 1 All E.R. 633.

[12] [1951] 2 K.B. 343; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 539; [1951] 1 All E.R. 574.

[13] [1951] 2 K.B. 359.

[14] [1951] 2 K.B. 343.

[15] [1954] 1 W.L.R. 128.

referred to the line of cases dealing with the vicarious responsibility of hospital authorities for the negligence of their staff because these cases were cited to me in argument and tend to show the way in which the view of the courts has changed since the decision of the Court of Appeal in Gold's case [16] in regard to the vicarious responsibility of hospital authorities for the negligence of their staff.

I will now turn to cases which have a more direct bearing upon the point which I have to determine, starting with Nelson v. Cookson,[17] which was a decision of Atkinson J. The facts of the case can be taken conveniently from the headnote: "In "March, 1937, the infant plaintiff entered a county hospital "and was operated on for the removal of tonsils and adenoids "by the defendants, who, at the time, were assistant medical "officers of the institution. After the operation the second "defendant, who acted as anaesthetist, placed a gag in the "mouth of the patient to enable an examination of her throat "to be made, and by reason of the gag, which was taken from "a sterilizer, being too hot, the girl suffered severe burning of "her left cheek, which resulted in a permanent scar. It was "admitted that the hospital was an institution which the county "council were empowered by the Local Government Acts, 1888 "and 1929, to maintain for public health purposes, and, the "writ in the present action having been issued more than six "months after the act complained of, the defendants, while "denying negligence, pleaded that the action was barred by "section 1 of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893." It will be seen that this case raises very much the same point as I have to determine in the present case, there being no difference, for my purposes, between the terms of section 1 of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, and the terms of section 21 (1) of the Limitation Act, 1939.

It is to be observed that Nelson v. Cookson [18] was decided some three years before Gold's case [19] and at a time when the responsibility or lack of responsibility of hospitals for the negligence of their permanent staff was regarded as being settled by the decision in Hillyer's case.[20] This is clear from the argument advanced by Mr. Noakes,[21] and the fact that this was then the situation is referred to by Atkinson J. in his judgment in a passage which I will presently quote. Recognizing that, as the law then stood, a hospital was not in general terms vicariously responsible for the negligence of its permanent staff, Atkinson J. none the less came to the conclusion that two whole-time medical officers of the hospital in question were entitled to the benefit of section 1 of the Public Authorities Protection Act.

[16] [1942] 2 K.B. 293.
[17] [1940] 1 K.B. 100; 56 T.L.R. 2; [1939] 4 All E.R. 30.
[18] Ibid.
[19] [1942] 2 K.B. 293.
[20] [1909] 2 K.B. 820.
[21] [1940] 1 K.B. 100, 102.

1954

Higgins v. North West Metropolitan Hospital Board.

Pilcher J.

It was argued on behalf of the plaintiff in Nelson v. Cookson[22] that it was anomalous to confer upon medical practitioners, for whose negligence on the law, as then understood, the hospital was not responsible, the protection afforded to the hospital by the Act. It was submitted that the two defendant doctors in that case were in the position of independent contractors, and reliance was placed on Thomas Tilling v. Dick, Kerr & Co. Ld.,[23] where a firm of independent contractors, carrying on work on behalf of the London County Council under contract, were held not to be entitled to the protection of the Act. This argument was rejected summarily by Atkinson J.

Unless Nelson v. Cookson[24] can be distinguished from the case now before me on its facts or on principle, it is a decision which binds me and a decision with which, if I may say so with respect, I agree. The only distinction which is sought to be drawn between the facts of the case which I have to decide and the facts in Nelson v. Cookson[24] is that in the present case Dr. Bach was a part-time specialist, whereas the defendants in Nelson v. Cookson[24] were whole-time medical officers on the permanent staff of the hospital and, as such, more in the category of "servants" than was Dr. Bach. Even if it be assumed that Dr. Bach is now a person for whose negligence the hospital board are not vicariously responsible, the defendants in Nelson v. Cookson[24] were, at the time of the decision of that case, regarded as being in precisely the same position. This fact in itself does not, therefore, in my view, afford any distinction between the present case and Nelson v. Cookson.[24] I think, moreover, that the development of the law since the decision in Hillyer's case[25] in regard to the vicarious responsibility of hospital authorities for the negligence of their medical staff serves rather to support than to weaken the decision in Nelson v. Cookson.[26]

Mr. Blackledge, on behalf of the plaintiffs, submitted that, in so far as actions in tort were concerned, a person carrying out a duty on behalf of another must be either a servant for whose negligence the principal was responsible or an independent contractor for whose negligence the principal was not responsible. He submitted that Dr. Bach, who did not admit the right of the hospital board to control the way in which he carried on his professional work, should be regarded as an independent contractor. He submitted that there was no decided case in which the protection of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, or the Limitation Act, 1939, had been held to cover the deliberate act or negligence of anyone who could not properly be called a servant of the public authority. He referred to Greenwell v. Howell,[27] where the protection of the Act was

[22] [1940] 1 K.B. 100.
[23] [1905] 1 K.B. 562; 21 T.L.R. 281.
[24] [1940] 1 K.B. 100.
[25] [1909] 2 K.B. 820.
[26] [1940] 1 K.B. 100.
[27] [1900] 1 Q.B. 535; 16 T.L.R. 235.

granted to a county surveyor and a deputy clerk of a council who were in fact the servants of the council, although in the case they are referred to also as "officials" and "subordinates."

In this connexion the decision of Lord Goddard C.J. in Western India Match Co. Ld. v. Lock[28] is of some interest. In that case, three defendants, the representative at Basra of the Minister of War Transport, a sea transport officer and the divisional sea transport officer at Bombay, were held entitled to the protection of the Limitation Act, 1939, although the exact position of two of these officers in relation to the Minister of War Transport was never precisely defined and nowhere in the report are they referred to as servants.

Reverting to Nelson v. Cookson,[29] I respectfully adopt the reasoning of Atkinson J. in that case. He says[30]: "It is curious "that the precise point now raised never seems to have been "argued before, but it has been recognized as law for a long "time that if some duty or act is done in pursuance of a public "authority and is being carried out by a public authority through "a servant or agent, that servant or agent has the same right "to the benefit of this section as the public authority would "have. That was treated as being the law in Greenwell v. "Howell,[31] and common sense would indicate that that must "be the position, for a public authority must act by a servant or "agent, and it would be idle merely to protect the public "authority itself if the party complaining could still bring an "action against the actual person who committed the act com-"plained of. I do not gather that it is challenged in this case "that this as a general principle is undoubted law, but it is "said that it is equally clear law that, if local authorities are not "responsible in law for the negligence of their medical officers "and therefore cannot be sued, the medical officers individually "nevertheless can be sued. In such a case, that is, where "you have acts done by an agent or servant in circumstances "which would not render the authority liable to litigation it is "said that the medical officer or other person acting cannot claim "the benefit of the statute. That would be an interesting point "to discuss, and I do not know but that I might have been "disposed to give some weight to the argument if it were not "that the contrary seems to have been recognized as law in quite "a number of cases."

The judge then refers to Freeborn v. Leeming,[32] and Venn v. Tedesco,[33] in both of which it was conceded that medical officers on the staff, in the one case of a workhouse infirmary and in the other of a public hospital, were entitled to the protection of the

[28] [1946] K.B. 601; 62 T.L.R. 419; [1946] 2 All E.R. 227.
[29] [1940] 1 K.B. 100.
[30] Ibid. 103.
[31] [1900] 1 Q.B. 535.
[32] [1926] 1 K.B. 160; 42 T.L.R. 119.
[33] [1926] 2 K.B. 227; 42 T.L.R. 478.

1954

HIGGINS v. NORTH WEST METROPOLITAN HOSPITAL BOARD.

Pilcher J.

Public Authorities Protection Act. He goes on[34]: "In the circumstances, it is difficult to take a different view. When one finds that for a long time a certain view has been accepted as good law, it takes a great deal to convince one that it is a wrong view. I am not satisfied that it is wrong. Indeed, I think that it is right. It seems to me that these two defendants were exercising what was really a public authority, because it was an authority given to the Middlesex County Council to provide and maintain this hospital. The council could not exercise that authority by their own hands, but must act through other people, and on the relevant occasion their authority was being exercised by these two medical men. It seems to me idle to say that they were not acting in pursuance of a public duty and authority conferred on the Middlesex County Council. They were performing this public duty or authority, whichever you may like to call it, as agents or delegates for and on behalf of the council, and they are entitled to the benefit of the Act of 1893."

Dealing with Thomas Tilling v. Dick, Kerr & Co. Ld.,[35] Atkinson J. said[36]: "It seems to me hopeless to regard them [the defendants] as I am asked to do, as independent contractors. The case relied on in support of that contention is Thomas Tilling v. Dick, Kerr & Co. Ld.,[37] where it was held that the defendants were independent contractors. In that case Warrington J. said: 'It has been held that the protection of the (Public Authorities Protection) Act extends to the officers of a public body and to persons acting under their direct mandate'." Then he goes on[38]: "It seems to me an absurdity to ask me to regard the defendants in this case as independent contractors, and not as officers of a public body performing duties imposed on a public authority which it cannot discharge except through servants or agents."

I entirely agree with what is said by Atkinson J. in this last passage, and I would add that since the decision in Nelson v. Cookson[39] the development of the law along the line that a doctor's uncontrollability in the exercise of his professional functions does not take him out of the servant category to which the principle of respondeat superior applies tends to weaken any argument which can properly be advanced upon the authority of such cases as Thomas Tilling v. Dick, Kerr & Co.[40]

Whilst it is not binding upon me, Goodisson v. Byrne[41] is interesting. In that case, the Supreme Court in Ireland decided that the defendant, a house surgeon at the material time in the whole-time service of the county hospital at Wexford, which was a public authority, was entitled to the protection of the Public Authorities Protection Act. FitzGibbon J., delivering the [34] [1940] 1 K.B. 100, 105.

[35] [1905] K.B. 562.
[36] [1940] 1 K.B. 100, 105.
[37] [1905] 1 K.B. 562.
[38] [1940] 1 K.B. 105.
[39] [1940] 1 K.B. 100.
[40] [1905] 1 K.B. 562.
[41] [1938] 2 Ir.R. 580.

judgment of the court, held that any "person" to whom a public authority or the performance of a public duty has been lawfully delegated is entitled to the protection of the Act if the delegation be that of a master to a servant or of a principal to an agent, the words of the Act applying not only to bodies corporate but also to persons identifiable with them.

It is not necessary for me to ascertain precisely what Dr. Bach's position was in relation to the hospital board. He was certainly acting as an agent for the board at the material time. He would no doubt be properly described as an officer of the board. He may have been the servant of the board. At the material time I am satisfied that he was a person acting on behalf of the hospital board in the execution or intended execution of a public duty. The duty which he was performing or intending to perform was, moreover, one which, for the purposes of this case, I take to have been imposed upon the hospital board by the National Health Service Act, 1946, and the orders made under the Act. Dr. Bach is accordingly, in my view, entitled to the protection of section 21 (1) of the Limitation Act, 1939, and I determine the preliminary point submitted to me in his favour.

Judgment accordingly.

Solicitors: R. I. Lewis & Co.; J. Tickle & Co.; Hempsons.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

* MARSDEN v. REGAN

C. A.
1954
Jan. 28, 29.
Evershed M.R., Denning and Romer L.JJ.

[Plaint No. J. 336.]

Administration of Estates — Devastavit — Presumption — Action by landlord against executrix—No plea of plene administavit—Judgment for possession, mesne profits and costs—Execution—Return of nulla bona testatoris—Executrix carrying on business of testatrix—Assets exhausted—Second action brought by plaintiff against executrix—Plea of plene administavit—Whether presumption of devastavit rebutted—Whether executrix acted reasonably and ought fairly to be excused—Trustee Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 19), s. 61—County Court Rules, 1936, Ord. 32, r. 2.

County Court—County Court Rules—Whether affecting general law. Presumption.

A testatrix died in 1951 leaving an estate consisting of a second-hand clothes business carried on in premises held on a weekly tenancy. The goodwill of the business was valued at £150, stock-in-trade at £30 and miscellaneous items at £50, including furniture valued at £20, and there were no other assets. Her debts and funeral and testamentary expenses amounted to £78. The defendant proved her will in 1951 and took possession as executrix of the business and continued to carry it on first at a profit and later at a small loss. The defendant, having spent £2 in cleaning certain of the

C. A.

1954

Marsden
v.
Regan.

effects of the testatrix, gave all the furniture and effects away. The plaintiff, who had acquired the freehold reversion of the premises, took proceedings against the defendant as executrix to recover possession and mesne profits. The defendant did not plead plene administavit and on February 13, 1952, the plaintiff obtained judgment against her for possession and for the sum of £29 mesne profits and costs taxed at £21. The defendant did not then give up possession but applied under the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, for the grant of a new lease or compensation for loss of goodwill. That application was dismissed in November, 1952, but the defendant did not give up possession of the premises until May, 1953. The plaintiff tried to levy execution for the unpaid sums of £29 and £21 and in March, 1953, the sheriff made a return of nulla bona testatoris. The plaintiff then started these proceedings against the defendant as executrix to recover the £29 and £21 and a further sum of £55 in respect of mesne profits, alleging a devastavit. The defendant, who acted throughout on the advice of her solicitor, had paid all the creditors of the testatrix and of the business until it had been wound up and the legal expenses incurred in respect of the first action and of the proceedings under the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927: the only person unpaid was the plaintiff. The defendant pleaded plene administavit. The county court judge dismissed the action holding that the defendant had acted honestly and reasonably and ought fairly to be excused:—

Held, (1) that the effect of the judgment obtained by the plaintiff in the first action, in the absence of any plea of plene administavit by the defendant, together with the return of the sheriff of nulla bona testatoris, was that the defendant must be taken conclusively to have admitted assets in her hands at the date of the judgment sufficient to pay all debts then known to her; and that there was, as against the defendant, a rebuttable presumption that not now having any assets she had committed a devastavit.

Decision of Farwell J. in Batchelar v. Evans [1939] Ch. 1007; [1939] 3 All E.R. 606 approved;

(2) that the admission and presumption which flowed from the first judgment did not cover the sum of £21 for costs;

In re Marvin [1905] 2 Ch. 490; 21 T.L.R 765 distinguished;

(3) that Order 32, r. 2, of the County Court Rules was directed to procedure and was not intended to and had not altered or abrogated the general rule of law as to the presumption which arose when an executor failed to plead plene administavit; and that that presumption applied in county court proceedings;

(4) that the defendant had not rebutted the presumption with regard to the judgment debt for £29 and she was prima facie liable for that sum;

(5) that with regard to the claim for £55 the defendant had acted throughout on the advice of her solicitor in the administration and it was not clear that she had been guilty of a devastavit;

(6) that the defendant had no answer to the plaintiff's claim for the sum of £22, the value of the furniture of the testatrix which the defendant had given away, and the plaintiff was entitled to judgment for that sum; and

(7) that as to the balance of the claim the finding of the county court judge that the defendant had acted honestly and reasonably and ought to be fairly excused should not be disturbed.

Appeal from Judge Archibald sitting at Huddersfield county court.

In these proceedings Joe Marsden claimed against the defendant Mrs. Martha Annie Regan, as executrix of Jane Marsden, three sums, namely, £29 15s., £21 18s., and £55 5s., which he alleged was due to him. He alleged in his particulars of claim that the defendant had wasted assets forming part of the estate of the testatrix upwards of £200 in value. The defendant denied that she had been guilty of devastavit and pleaded plene administavit.

The county court judge dismissed the action holding that the defendant had acted honestly and reasonably and ought fairly to be excused. The facts are fully stated in the judgment of Evershed M.R.

The plaintiff appealed.

A. C. Sparrow for the plaintiff

R. W. Goff Q.C. and C. Raymond Dean for the defendant.

The following cases were cited in argument: In re Blow [1]; Batchelar v. Evans [2]; In re Wragg [3]; In re the Goods of Bryce [4]; McLean v. Weaver [5]; In re Kay [6]; In re Stuart. [7]

EVERSHED M.R. This was an action brought by the plaintiff against the defendant in her capacity as executrix of the mother both of the plaintiff and the defendant, one Jane Marsden deceased. It is unfortunately clear that the case, as not uncommonly happens, is one in which hostility has arisen between brother and sister. That is, of course, deplorable; but it is not the function of the court to express moral judgments in these matters and the question raised is one of the strict rights as between these two parties to the proceedings according to the law as I understand it to be.

The testatrix, Mrs. Jane Marsden, died on June 15, 1951. Her will, made some few years earlier, and proved after a little delay at the end of the year 1951, was short in form and incomplete in scope. By it, Mrs. Marsden appointed the defendant to be her sole executor, directed that her death and funeral expenses should be paid, and then confined herself to this one bequest: "I give and bequeath unto Martha Annie Regan the business "at 13 Northgate." No. 13 Northgate, Huddersfield, was the house in which the testatrix lived; she lived upstairs and carried on downstairs a business of a second-hand or old clothes dealer.

These facts, when taken in conjunction with the limited form of the bequest, gave rise to the problem whether the bequest of the business to the defendant carried with it any (and if so what) interest in the premises themselves. I find it unnecessary to decide that matter; indeed it is doubtful whether we have any materials sufficient to enable us to do so; but I think that

[1] [1914] 1 Ch. 233; 30 T.L.R. 117.
[2] [1939] Ch. 1007; [1939] 3 All E.R. 606.
[3] [1919] 2 Ch. 58.
[4] (1839) 2 Curt. 325.
[5] (1924) 41 T.L.R. 47.
[6] [1897] 2 Ch. 518.
[7] [1897] 2 Ch. 583.

C. A.
1954
Marsden v. Regan.
Evershed M.R.

it is not open to doubt that the question was a real question and not an easy one to answer.

According to the evidence before us, the assets of the estate were not considerable. They consisted, according to the probate valuation, of three items: goodwill—that is the goodwill of the second-hand clothes business—which was put at £150; stock-in-trade (presumably old clothes) £30; and miscellaneous, £50, the last mentioned figure including furniture, to which was set a value of £20.

The debts due at the date of the death, or immediately thereafter, consisted almost exclusively of funeral and testamentary expenses, and they amounted to not less than £78 or £79. The figure of £78 or £79 was stated to us, but I have said "not "less" because, according to the accounts which are before us, the Huddersfield Co-operative Society's funeral account was £61, the doctor's account was £13 11s., there was an item of £9 19s. 1d. for drink supplied for a funeral tea—which at one stage loomed somewhat significantly in the case, but has more or less disappeared from it—and finally a fee of £2 to the clergyman officiating at the burial service, items which together exceed the figure of £78 that I have mentioned. However that may be, I think that the point was well made by Mr. Goff that, as a practical matter, and paying regard to the circumstance that inevitably some costs would have to be incurred in obtaining probate, etc., and to the fact that the liquid assets consisted of only a small amount of stock and these miscellaneous items—obviously of somewhat dubious value in the market—the estate was, in fact, not solvent at the date of the testatrix's death.

The defendant, as executrix, took possession of the business. It may be that other members of the family continued, at any rate for a time, to live on the premises. The defendant, in fact, lived next door; but, as regards the business, she took possession of it and continued to carry it on. It is true that according to this will, she herself as legatee was beneficially interested in the business; but the will was not proved for some time, and the defendant's possession of the business, therefore, could not at that early stage have been certainly for her own benefit. I gather that there was in this matter, as in others, some dissension in the family, and some doubt about what will would ultimately be proved. I accept the argument of Mr. Goff that, in considering this matter, at any rate until we come to the difficult problems arising under section 61 of the Trustee Act, 1925, it is not strictly a relevant consideration that the defendant was herself beneficially interested in the business under the will which was eventually proved.

The first question for determination is: was the defendant justified as executrix, and having regard to the condition of the estate, in carrying on the business in the interest of the estate? It was obviously a most significant and important matter to the executrix, when carrying it on, that she should, if possible, be able to preserve for the benefit of all concerned, not only the goodwill of the business but also (and, of course, the goodwill of the business was closely connected with it) an interest in the premises themselves.

Very soon after the death of the testatrix, the plaintiff acquired, first by contract and later on completion, the reversion to the deceased's interest in the premises, and he then proceeded to bring an action against the defendant for possession of the premises, and for mesne profits. The defendant was carrying on the business and in possession, therefore, of this business and of its assets, and in possession of the premises in which the business was being carried on.

The action was not originally in the plaintiff's name. We are told that the issue of the proceedings was after the plaintiff had acquired the reversion by contract. However that may be, it is I think quite plain that the action could have been brought against the defendant personally to make her personally liable for the rent, as being the person in occupation, or substantially in occupation, of the premises.

But that course was not followed. The action was brought against the defendant in her capacity as executrix, as was the present proceeding. Whatever other remedies (and I think that there were others) were available to him, the plaintiff (I gratefully adopt Mr. Goff's phrase) ventured into the field of devastavit. Having so ventured, he has brought before this court for consideration points of a somewhat unusual character and not free from difficulty and interest; and I should like to say at the outset of my judgment how much we are indebted in this case for the very careful and thorough arguments which have been presented to us by Mr. Sparrow for the plaintiff, and by Mr. Goff for the defendant.

Having so ventured into the field of devastavit, the plaintiff proceeded along that path in a manner or direction which may, so to speak, have surprised him. Sued as executrix, the defendant of course had it open to her to make use of pleas which are available to executors, such as the plea of plene administavit or plene administavit praeter, or the general plea of no assets. The defendant, however, perhaps surprised by this action of her brother, failed to avail herself of pleas of that (no doubt to her) thoroughly unfamiliar character, and in the result on February 13, 1952, judgment was obtained against her; first for possession, second for the sum of £29 10s. mesne profits, and third for costs to be taxed.

The adventurous character of the plaintiff's litigious course may also have taken a little unawares those responsible for drawing up the orders in the county court, for they failed to draw up an order strictly in accordance with the action brought —that is to say, on the face of it the order which was made on February 13, 1952, was an order against the defendant without any qualification or reference to her position as executor; it was

C. A.
1954
Marsden
v.
Regan.
Evershed M.R.

an order against her personally. What the result of that may be hereafter is not for me to say. Obviously both parties have proceeded on the footing that the right form of order, having regard to the form of the proceeding, would have been an order against the defendant in her capacity as personal representative; and, as will presently appear, the stage later taken of levying execution and the present proceedings have followed the course which, had the form of order been that which was properly appropriate, it would have indicated. There was no plea of absence of assets or plene administavit.

The defendant appealed against the decision, and particularly against the order for possession. That appeal, which was presented under the advice of the experienced solicitor upon whom the defendant throughout appears to have relied, was eventually, also on his advice, abandoned. But the defendant, adhering, not unnaturally and I think not unreasonably, to her course of taking advice throughout while sailing upon what must have been somewhat uncharted waters, also proceeded to apply in July and August, 1951, under the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, for a new lease of the premises on the ground that the business which her mother had carried on had caused goodwill to adhere to those premises; or, alternatively, for compensation under this same Act. That application appears to have taken a long time to come on; the report of the referee, which resulted in the dismissal of the application, was not made until November, 1952.

At that time, just to appraise the situation, the matter stood thus: the appeal against the order for possession had been abandoned, and the attempt to get a new lease had failed; and clearly from that time the occupancy of the defendant of No. 13 Northgate, and the possibility of her carrying on this business from those premises, was in the highest degree precarious.

In February, 1953—that is a year after the original judgment had been obtained—the plaintiff proceeded to levy execution for the unpaid sum of £29 10s., and for the costs which had been taxed at £21 18s. In the following month of March, 1953, the sheriff made a return of nulla bona testatoris, that return indicating that he was proceeding on the view that the judgment was a judgment obtained against the defendant as executrix. In May, 1953, the defendant (whose tenure had become highly precarious) yielded up possession of No. 13 Northgate and removed herself, and no doubt anything that remained of the business assets, therefrom.

It was in that state of affairs that the present proceedings were brought. Again, they are brought not against the defendant personally but against her in her capacity as executrix of the testatrix; and what is sought in these proceedings is a further judgment in respect of the £29 15s. which was not recovered in the first action, a judgment for the £21 18s., unpaid costs, and finally a further sum for mesne profits from February 13, 1952—which is the date up to which the previous mesne profits had gone—to a date in May, 1953, which was the date when the defendant went out of possession, which amounted to £55 5s.; and the plaintiff claims that he should obtain an order against the defendant personally for those three sums.

In my judgment, different considerations apply to these three sums, and for convenience I will refer to them according to the amount of level pounds involved in each case, ignoring the shillings. There are thus the claims for £29 mesne profits, £21 costs, and £55 mesne profits.

As regards the subject-matter of the previous judgment, the law is in my opinion clearly stated in Batchelar v. Evans,[1] which came before Farwell J. in 1939. There is I think no question (and counsel has not argued to the contrary) that the effect of the judgment which was obtained by the plaintiff in the absence of a plea of no assets or plene administavit, together with the return, when the sheriff went to execute, of nulla bona testatoris, is, first, that the defendant must be taken to have conclusively admitted assets in her hands at the date of the judgment sufficient to pay all debts then known to her; and, secondly, that there is against the defendant in respect of the sums in question a rebuttable presumption that, as she now has no assets, according to her plea, she has committed devastavit.

After referring to older authorities, including Leonard v. Simpson,[2] in which the matter was fully considered by Tindal C.J., Farwell J. said[3]: "In my judgment, it is clear from that "case that in the Chief Justice's view the presumption that "arises from the fact of the sheriff's return of nulla bona is not "conclusive against the defendants, but that it is open to them, "if they can, to show why there had been this alteration in the "situation between the date of the judgment, when they "admitted assets, and the date of the return of nulla bona, and "to establish that it is not due to any devastavit committed "by them."

It is clear, however, to my view that the admission and the presumption which inevitably flow from the judgment obtained in the first action does not cover the sum of £21 for costs. Mr. Sparrow, in the course of a very formidable reply, drew our attention to In re Marvin, Crawter v. Marvin,[4] in which a judgment had been obtained under R.S.C., Ord. 14, for a sum of £5,000 and £7 for costs; and in that case, as Mr. Sparrow observed, the discussion went upon the basis that there was a single judgment for both the sum sued upon and costs, which by some means, which are not at all clear, had arrived at the net figure of £4,519; but having drawn our attention to the case, I think that Mr. Sparrow was not disposed to contend that it was authority for the view that the admission and the presumption

[1] [1939] Ch. 1007.
[2] (1835) 2 Bing.N.C. 176.
[3] [1939] Ch. 1007, 1012.
[4] [1905] 2 Ch. 490.

C. A.
1954
Marsden
v.
Regan.
Evershed M.R.

could relate to the costs of the proceedings, which had not been taxed, and therefore had not become due or even ascertained at the date when the judgment was obtained.

I therefore take the view that the sum of £21 for costs is for present purposes really out of the picture. In saying that, I am not indicating that the plaintiff is unable to recover it; so far as I can see, if he claims against the defendant personally for those costs, which the defendant has personally been ordered to pay, there would be no answer to the claim, and Mr. Goff, as I followed him, conceded as much.

That I think for the purpose of this judgment disposes of the £21 costs, and I do not propose to refer again to it. As regards the sum of £29, mesne profits, the effect of the first judgment amounted to a conclusive admission that the defendant had, at the date of the judgment, assets sufficient to pay that sum, and involves a rebuttable presumption that, not having the assets now (as she pleads and is the fact) she has committed devastavit.

A point was taken by Mr. Goff that, having regard to Order 32, r. 2, of the County Court Rules, it is not competent in a county court proceeding (for to such length I understand this point goes) for a plaintiff to rely upon the general law, and in particular upon the presumption which results from a judgment such as was obtained there in February, 1952. The terms of Order 32, r. 2, so far as relevant, are: "Where a plaintiff alleges that an "executor or administrator has had assets and has wasted them, "he shall make the allegation in his particulars"—that, of course, means in the points of claim—"and state the amount of "assets alleged to have been left by the deceased and the manner "in which they have been wasted."

The plaintiff's particulars of claim made particular allegations which, as Mr. Goff concedes, would meet the requirements of Order 32, r. 2; for paragraph 7 alleges: "The defendant has "received assets upwards of £200 and has wasted the same" in three particular ways which are thereafter stated. Accepting the correctness of the pleading, Mr. Goff says that the plaintiff in this matter can only rely upon such a plea, and cannot set up the admission and presumption that I have mentioned, although the preceding six paragraphs of the points of claim clearly plead the facts necessary to found an argument based on the admission and presumption.

I am unable to accept Mr. Goff's argument upon this point. To begin with, I am unable to accept the view that the rule-making body under the County Courts Act, 1934, either intended or had power by rules, which were directed to forms of procedure, to alter and indeed to abrogate in the county court part of the general law. And I add that, to my mind, the rule according to its language is not directed to such a case at all, but only to a case where the plaintiff has to allege, and does allege, that an executor has had assets—that is to say, when it is the case of the plaintiff (which the plaintiff proposes to prove in fact) that the executor had the assets at the relevant date. In this case (as regards the £29) the plaintiff has not so sought to allege or prove, for the defendant is estopped from denying that she had assets, and that is what the plaintiff relies upon. That therefore disposes of that point.

So far, however, as the £55 claim is concerned, it is plain that the plaintiff must both allege and prove assets—they having been denied by the defendant—and must allege and prove devastavit; and paragraph 7 of the particulars of claim which I have mentioned is particularly directed to that aspect of the case. So far, therefore, as the £55 claim is concerned, a separate question arises involving our determination whether the plaintiff can establish not only the existence of assets (as I think plainly he can from what I have already said) but also the devastavit. Assuming that those facts were established as regards the £55, then the position would be that the defendant is presumed to have wasted to the extent of the £29 and would be found to have wasted to the extent of the £55. There would still, however, remain (and this is the last point which I shall have to examine in due course) the plea of section 61 of the Trustee Act, 1925, namely, that in all the circumstances the defendant ought to be excused.

It is convenient at this stage to say that the judge came to the conclusion that the defendant ought in the circumstances to be excused, and so he dismissed the present action.

As regards the £29, the first question is: Has the presumption to which the form of the first judgment has given rise, been rebutted? Mr. Goff says that it has, and for this reason. He says that the defendant has shown that the most substantial asset of all, namely, the goodwill valued at £150, was lost not out of any waste or neglect on the part of the defendant, but because the plaintiff successfully claimed an order for possession of the premises, which automatically destroyed the goodwill; so that, although the asset has been lost, it has not been lost through any neglect on the part of the defendant who, indeed, over a period of time, by defending proceedings, appealing against orders, and applying under the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, did all that lay in her power to preserve that asset; and so, Mr. Goff says, if that premise is right, then this conclusion follows: It is not open to the defendant to give evidence inconsistent with the admission which is conclusively made, but she can give evidence consistent with it, and she can therefore plead that one of the assets which she had was the goodwill; and if she can show that that asset valued at £150 has not been wasted, then whatever may be the facts about other assets—as to which there is no evidence—she has discharged the onus upon her and rebutted the presumption.

I am not satisfied that Mr. Goff makes good that point. I am not satisfied that the whole goodwill was so closely and

C. A.
1954
Marsden
v.
Regan.
Evershed M.R.

intimately bound up with the premises that the mere loss of the premises alone destroyed the goodwill. In other words, I think that in order to satisfy and discharge this burden upon her, the defendant would have to show that some attempt at least was made by her to preserve this goodwill other than by trying to retain the premises. As she herself lived next door, it would appear obvious that she might have tried to translate the business and the goodwill to the premises next door, and thereby preserve them. I am not therefore for myself prepared to hold that the presumption to which the order has given rise is in this respect rebutted. Prima facie, therefore, in the result the defendant is liable for the sum of £29, but as I have already said not as regards the costs.

It is now convenient to deal with the £55. The evidence before the court includes certain accounts; they were subjected to some criticism in that they were not properly vouched; but they show, or appear to show, that for about a year—that is, up to June 21, 1952—the defendant's conduct of this business was not unsuccessful, since she made in actual fact a net profit of £175, according to the figures over that period. But I draw attention to the fact that June 21, 1952, although a convenient date for the purpose of accounting, has no other particular significance. The business, of course, was continuously carried on; and at that time the landlord and tenant proceedings were pending. The defendant, however, went on conducting the business until February, 1953, and during the second period it is not in doubt, according to the accounts, that the business was less successful, because in this second period she made a small net loss. But the third sheet before us shows, among other things (and it is a point to which Mr. Sparrow has drawn attention in another connection) that in fact the sum made out of this business went, by and large, in paying the costs of the solicitor who advised the defendant. Those costs in the earlier proceedings, including of course the costs in respect of acting for obtaining probate, amounted to something like £150. The defendant also paid various other items in connexion with the business, being payments to employees, payment of telephone and advertising accounts; and Mr. Sparrow naturally enough alluded to the item of travelling expenses which over the period amounted to some £27. In truth—although, as Mr. Sparrow said, this is a matter for consideration later on section 61—the conduct of the business enabled the defendant to pay everything and everyone, and she did pay everyone, with the one notable exception of the plaintiff, the landlord; he alone, so to speak, was left unprovided for and in the cold.

However, the first question is this: Is the defendant, who throughout, as she says, acted on advice, and carried on the business for most of the time successfully but for the latter part of the time unsuccessfully, to be found to have committed a devastavit?

That I think is by no means clearly established. I have already indicated that this matter must be judged not by harking back now from January, 1954, and looking at the material before us in the Court of Appeal, but must be judged by the situation in which the defendant found herself at Northgate in the town of Huddersfield as executrix of her own mother whose estate, when she first took over its administration, was insolvent. Mr. Sparrow has said, with considerable force, that although no doubt she would be justified (or at any rate might be justified) in carrying on the business for some time, the defendant ought to have paused in her tracks now and again to consider whether the game, if I may use the phrase, was really worth the candle; and that, had she so paused, she would or might have concluded —before the matter was forced upon her by possession being given—that the business could not and should not be further carried on; and that in so far, therefore, as she went on conducting the business, beyond the time when it was profitable and fruitful to do it, she committed a devastavit. As my brother Romer has observed, I think that that is, in all the circumstances, a somewhat harsh view to take of the defendant. For myself, therefore, I am not satisfied on this question, although, for reasons to which I will come, it is not necessary for me to express a final conclusion on this matter—for if the defendant did commit a devastavit, then the question still remains: Ought she to be relieved?

I now come to a consideration of section 61; and acknowledging, as I do, the formidable character of Mr. Sparrow's reply on this matter, I say at once that, on the whole, and bearing in mind that if I had been trying this case I am not saying that I should have wholly relieved the defendant, still I am not satisfied that, in a matter which is essentially within the judge's discretion, it would be right that we should interfere with his conclusion.

It is convenient at this stage again to see how the matter stands. Let me assume that the plaintiff has established a devastavit sufficient to entitle him to judgment for the £55. He would then be entitled, upon the presumption which the defendant has failed to rebut, to £29, and on the facts which he has proved to £55. But the section is equally available in both cases, and I think that it is impossible to distinguish between the two, for, if the defendant ought to be relieved at all, then she ought to be relieved in respect of the whole period. I can see no basis upon which we could relieve her upon the £29, and not the £55, or vice versa; although I can see that if I had been trying the case I might have held that she ought not to be wholly but partly relieved in respect of both items.

Before I discuss why I think that we ought not to disturb the judge's conclusion, I must first point out that, as to £22, it seems to me that there is no answer to the plaintiff's claim. It is clear that the defendant proceeded to give away furniture

C. A.
1954
Marsden
v.
Regan.
Evershed M.R.

which was comprehended in the miscellaneous items, and further that, before she gave it away, she improved or embellished some bedding by spending £2 of the estate money upon it for that purpose. So far as the value is concerned, there is no evidence, except that the defendant herself stated the sum of £20 for the purpose of obtaining probate; and since there can be no possible defence against a charge of devastavit by an executor who admits having given the furniture away, I do not think she can be heard to say that it was of less value than she herself swore it had for the purpose of probate.

The result is that as to £22, the plaintiff must be entitled to recover. Mr. Sparrow has not suggested that in the circumstances he could claim the £29 on the basis of the presumption that has not been rebutted, and the £22 in addition—in other words the defendant would be entitled to say that the £22 went towards the £29, which would leave a sum of £7 or £7 10s. to be considered in reference to section 61 on the first part of the case. But I do not think those arithmetical calculations much matter. The question (and it can be considered as a broad and single question) is: ought the defendant to be relieved, or ought this court to interfere with the judge's order relieving her as regards the payments of the £29 and the £55, that is to say, the balance of those values after allowing for the £22 for which the defendant is undoubtedly liable?

In approaching this matter, Mr. Sparrow rightly drew attention to the three-fold obligation on an executor or trustee seeking relief: he must show that he himself acted honestly and reasonably, and he must further satisfy the court that he ought fairly to be excused, which I take to mean, in fairness to the executor and to other people who may be affected. Mr. Sparrow made some suggestion (and I hope he will forgive me if I say that I regret it) that the defendant had not acted honestly. There was no such suggestion in the court below, and no such finding which could possibly justify such an inference; and no question, therefore, can possibly be raised in this court that the defendant acted otherwise than perfectly honestly.

But it is said that she did not act reasonably, and in any case ought not fairly to be excused; and it was to the last requirement that the most formidable part of Mr. Sparrow's argument, I think, was directed. For he showed that, in effect, the defendant had paid everybody (and used the business for the purpose) except the landlord, whose premises she had occupied throughout for the very purpose of carrying on the business. But first Mr. Sparrow contended that it was not sufficient to say, as the defendant did: "I acted throughout on solicitor's advice." That, he says, was a mere abdication of her duty as executrix; and however wise the solicitor, and however natural it is to seek a solicitor's advice, nevertheless that of itself cannot suffice. The mere fact that you take a solicitor's advice, natural and prudent though such a course be, will not automatically result in relief being given. With that last contention I do not disagree. But the judge, as I gather from the short note of his judgment which we have before us, did not proceed upon any such general view. As I apprehend, he had his attention drawn to the circumstance which I mentioned at the beginning of this judgment: that there was, to start with at least, the serious problem of who was entitled to what property, and, in particular, what was the beneficial interest in the premises apart from the business, and to the circumstance that, having regard to the financial state of affairs, it was obviously desirable in everyone's interest, if the business could produce some sort of return, that the defendant should try to preserve it; and she is not in any worse position because, when the will eventually was proved, it turns out that she herself was beneficially entitled.

In this court it is our unhappy lot sometimes to come across cases in which nothing is more deplorable than the fact that a person inexperienced in matters in which he is involved fails to take advice from solicitors, who could clearly have given advice, and have protected that person from the consequences of his rash conduct. I think that one must pay some regard to the kind of station in life of the people here concerned, the character of the business, and the difficulties with which they were confronted, including the unfortunate fratricidal strife.

If this court were to say that the defendant ought to have taken some further advice by way of going to counsel or applying to the judge, I think that it would shock the common sense of many people, and certainly be a most disturbing factor when other persons in like situation found themselves in the position of being personal representatives of their deceased relatives.

I therefore acquit the judge entirely from the view that merely taking advice, without more, is necessarily a passport to relief, but I think with him that, in all the circumstances of the case, and bearing in mind the grave difficulties with which the defendant was confronted, it was reasonable for her, having taken the advice, and paying regard to the advice which was in fact given, to act upon it as she did.

There still remains the question: Ought she fairly to be excused? That is the most difficult point of all. But it is essentially a matter within the discretion of the judge; and, although the judgment is a short one, I am not prepared to say that the judge failed to consider any of the points before him, although he may well not have had the advantage of having them so forcibly put to him as Mr. Sparrow put them to us. But having had all the material before him, I think that it would be wrong for this court to assume that in some way he had misdirected himself or left something out of account which he should have taken into account; and therefore I think that we ought not to disturb his conclusion.

Therefore, assuming against the defendant that she committed devastavit as to the £55, and holding that she must be presumed

C. A.
1954
Marsden
v.
Regan.
Evershed M.R.

to have committed it as to the £29, I still think that she is entitled to retain her judgment, save to the extent that she must be accountable for the £22. That matter seems to have been omitted from consideration in the court below; it is not referred to in the judgment, and I think must have eluded the memory or observation of the judge when he came to deliver his judgment.

Having been through the somewhat complex facts of the case, I hope at not too great length, but having considered to the best of my ability all the points raised, and once more acknowledging my debt to counsel for their very great assistance, I conclude that the plaintiff should have recovered judgment for £22, but no more; and that accordingly the appeal must be allowed but so only as to enable judgment for that sum to be substituted.

Denning L.J. This case ought to have been a simple one, but the lawyers have made it a very complicated one.

The testatrix, an elderly lady living in Huddersfield, carried on an old clothes business, and she died. By her will, she left the business to her daughter, the defendant. Her son, the plaintiff, bought the premises, and gave notice to quit to his sister, the defendant, and sought possession. She resisted the proceedings, and claimed before the appropriate tribunal under the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, for a new lease. The trouble was that she did not pay any rent to her brother throughout the time that she was there carrying on the business for the best part of two years, and he seeks in these proceedings to get the rent or the mesne profits from the defendant. I think that in the circumstances he could have sued her personally and said: "You "have carried on this business, and even though you did carry "it on as executrix, you ought to pay rent." But he did not bring proceedings against her personally; instead, he sued her as the executrix and obtained judgment for a portion of the rent, £29 15s., and for £21 costs against her.

The effect of that judgment is not in doubt. As executrix, the defendant, if she had had proper grounds, could have pleaded that she had used up all the assets, or that she had no assets with which to pay the debt. She did not plead any of those things, and judgment went against her. The effect of that judgment is that it is an admission in law that she had assets with which to pay this debt of £29 15s. for rent.

The first question that arises for determination is whether the defendant can rebut the presumption which the law raises against her. As to £22 she clearly had not rebutted the presumption, because she gave furniture away and some bedding of her mother's without getting anything for it, and in respect of that £22 she clearly has no answer to this claim.

As to the remainder, it is said that she has an answer. She says that she has not wasted the assets at all because she spent the money on the litigation. She appealed from the judgment against her for possession to the Court of Appeal. The appeal was not heard in that court because it was abandoned, but a bill of costs for £55 was run up with the solicitor on that account which she paid. It is said by the plaintiff that that was a devastavit, in other words, that she had wasted the assets in that way.

I am by no means sure that it was a devastavit, because she was carrying on that litigation for the benefit of the estate generally; but, in any event, I agree with my Lord that it is a matter on which, having taken legal advice and acted upon it, she ought fairly to be excused under the Trustee Act.

I was much impressed by Mr. Sparrow's argument on behalf of the defendant. He asked very pertinently why she should pay every other creditor and leave the defendant out in the cold. Why should she pay her solicitor in full? Why should she leave only the plaintiff unpaid? I think that there is much to be said for that view; but, on the other hand, this matter of relief is essentially one for the judge in his discretion; he hears the matter, and he having come to his decision upon it, I do not think that this court should interfere.

For these reasons, although the defendant has no defence as to the £22 in respect of which she wasted the assets, I feel that we cannot refuse to give relief against her in respect of the remainder; and I therefore agree with the order that my Lord proposes.

ROMER L.J. I also agree. I am not myself satisfied that there was a devastavit in respect of the £55, and I share the doubt upon that matter which my brethren have expressed. It seems to me that the plaintiff, seeking as he has done not to sue the defendant in her personal capacity, but in her capacity as executrix, has to prove that she wasted assets of the estate which would otherwise have been available for payment of debts, and that the plaintiff here has no such presumption to support him as he had in relation to the £29. The suggestion made on behalf of the plaintiff was that the defendant really looked more to the beneficiaries in continuing this business than to the creditors, and that that was wrong. But, as has already been pointed out, this estate was not a solvent estate; the defendant had to obtain money for the probate expenses and the testamentary expenses which would be incurred in winding up the estate, and she had not sufficient money for those purposes, so for my part I think that she was well justified in continuing to carry on this business for the purposes of raising some money —which indeed she did very successfully because the first year's accounts showed a profit of £175—from which it follows that she increased the assets of the estate to that extent, and thus raised funds which could be applied for the purpose of paying off the debts.

Apart from that, she was placed in further difficulties. She was advised that her brother and sisters would have an interest

C. A.
1954
MARSDEN v. REGAN.
Romer L.J.

in the lease of the premises on which the business was carried on, and she had to look after them. That, of course, is no answer to the suggestion that I have mentioned, that she ought to have first met the claims of the creditors; but she acted in accordance with the advice given to her by her solicitor, and I cannot see that she did anything wrong, except perhaps in carrying on the business for a rather longer period than she should have done. It was suggested with some force by Mr. Sparrow, on behalf of the defendant, that at all events she ought to have discontinued the business when she found in November, 1952, that she was not going to make a profit; but we do not know in fact that she did know this or what further loss was in fact incurred between November, 1952, and the time when she actually closed down the business.

Speaking for myself, and taking all the circumstances into account, I do not think that the defendant can be held guilty of a devastavit in the administration of the estate; but even if I am wrong on that, or partially wrong on that, nevertheless I quite agree with what my brethren have said as to the application of section 61 of the Trustee Act, 1925, and I do not desire to add anything to their observations on that part of the case.

Appeal allowed as to part of the plaintiff's claim.

Solicitors: Torr & Co. for Chambers, Tregoning & Robertshaw, Brighouse; G. E. Hutchinson, Huddersfield.

B. A. B.

[COURTS-MARTIAL APPEAL COURT.]

C.-M. A. C.
1953
Dec. 14, 15, 18.
Hilbery, Sellers and Barry JJ.

* REGINA v. MISKELL.

Criminal Law—Attempt—Indecency—Attempt to procure act of gross indecency—Criminal intention—Overt acts—Surrounding circumstances—Court-martial.
Fact or Law.

The defendant, a soldier serving in Germany, asked the way of a boy in the street and then treated him to beer and ice cream at a café. They went together to a park and while sitting down together the defendant said and did indecent things which manifested his criminal purpose of inducing the boy to commit an act of gross indecency with him. He arranged to meet the boy on the next night and at that meeting he suggested that they should go for a walk. On his appeal against his conviction by a court-martial for the offence of attempting to procure an act of gross indecency with the boy:—

Held, that the invitation and the meeting were overt acts and, when considered in the light of the circumstances in which the invitation was issued and the meeting took place, were in law capable of constituting attempts to procure the boy to commit an act of gross indecency; that, accordingly, it was for the court-martial to decide whether they in fact amounted to an attempt or not; and that the defendant had been rightly convicted.

Rex v. Cope (1921) 16 Cr.App.R. 77 applied.

APPEAL against conviction.

The appellant was a corporal serving in Germany. On the afternoon of May 16, a German boy was walking along a street in Hamburg when the appellant spoke to him. The appellant asked him to show him the way to the park. He then asked about a café and they went together to a café where the appellant gave the boy a beer and an ice cream. They then went to the park, and when in the park they sat on one of the seats for a few minutes. The appellant put his arm round the boy's shoulder, and with his hand dangling down his front, pointed at his private parts. The appellant asked if he had a little one down there and said that he had a big one. He also asked whether the boy had ever had sexual intercourse before, using the German word "gefickt." The appellant suggested that they might meet at some time at the station, and suggested the next day at 7 o'clock, and that they might sleep out together in the park or forest at some time. The boy said that he slept at home, but he agreed to meet the appellant, saying that he would ask his father. The next day the appellant kept the appointment which had thus been arranged, and when he met the boy looked at his watch and said: "It is too late to go to the cinema; we'll take a walk." The police then arrested the appellant, who later told them: "Well, what the boy said about Saturday night is all true, but I "only met him tonight in order to put him off. I had no "intention of doing what I suggested."

The appellant was convicted by a district court-martial at Hamburg of attempting to procure an act of gross indecency with a male person; and he was sentenced to 56 days' detention and to be reduced to the ranks.

He appealed.

Ian McLean for the appellant.
Garth Moore for the Crown.

The following cases were cited in argument: Dugdale v. Reg.[1]; Rex v. Eagleton[2]; Rex v. Cameron and Robertson[3]; Director of Public Prosecutions v. Rogers[4]; Fairclough v. Whipp[5]; Rex v. Barker[6]; Rex v. Woods[7]; Rex v. Cope[8]; Rex v. Robinson[9]; and Rex v. Roberts.[10]

Cur. adv. vult.

[1] (1853) 22 L.J.Mag.Cas. 50.
[2] (1855) Dears. 515.
[3] Unreported.
[4] [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1017; [1953] 2 All E.R. 644.
[5] [1951] 2 T.L.R. 909; [1951] 2 All E.R. 834.
[6] [1924] N.Z.L.R. 865.
[7] (1930) 22 Cr.App.R. 31; 46 T.L.R. 401.
[8] (1921) 16 Cr.App.R. 77; 38 T.L.R. 243.
[9] [1915] 2 K.B. 342; 31 T.L.R. 313.
[10] (1855) Dears. 539.

C.-M. A. C.
1953
REG.
v.
MISKELL.

Dec. 18. HILBERY J. (reading the judgment of the court). The accused was found guilty by district court-martial at Hamburg of attempted gross indecency with a male person and was sentenced to 56 days' detention and to be reduced to the ranks, and he appeals against that conviction by leave of the court. [His Lordship stated the facts as set out above and continued:] All those facts were unchallenged by the appellant, and no evidence was offered by him or on his behalf. It was submitted that the evidence only amounted at the most to evidence of acts of preparation for procuring the commission of the offence and did not amount to evidence of an attempt to procure the commission. The same contention has been argued as the ground of appeal. No criticism of the summing-up by the judge advocate was advanced by the appellant.

The sole question upon which this appeal depends is whether the act or acts of the accused could constitute as a matter of law an attempt to procure the boy to commit an act of gross indecency with the accused. It has long been established that whether an act or acts can amount to an attempt to commit a crime is a question of law. Once it is decided by the court that what the accused has done can be an attempt to commit the crime, it is a question of fact for the jury whether what was done should be decided to have been an attempt. Not all acts which are steps towards the commission of a crime can be regarded as attempts. Some may be too far removed from the commission of the crime to be regarded as attempts to commit the crime; but just where the distinction is to be drawn between preliminary acts of preparation and acts which are nearly enough related to the crime to amount to attempts to commit it, is often a difficult and nice question. This case indeed affords an example of the difficulty.

The principle to be applied by the court in deciding the question was stated by Parke B. in Rex v. Eagleton.[1] That statement of the principle was approved and followed in Rex v. Robinson[2] and in Rex v. Woods[3] in the following words: "The "mere intention to commit a misdemeanour is not criminal. "Some act is required, and we do not think that all acts towards "committing a misdemeanour are indictable. Acts remotely "leading towards the commission of the offence are not to be "considered as attempts to commit it, but acts immediately "connected with it are."

The difficulty lies in the application of the principle to the facts: per Lord Goddard C.J. in Rex v. Robinson.[4] But in Rex v. Cope,[5] where, as in this case, the charge was one of attempting to procure the commission of an act of gross indecency, Lord Trevethin C.J., in the considered written judgment of the

[1] (1855) Dears. 515.
[2] [1915] 2 K.B. 342; 31 T.L.R. 313.
[3] (1930) 22 Cr.App.R. 41, 44; 46 T.L.R. 401.
[4] [1915] 2 K.B. 342.
[5] (1921) 16 Cr.App.R. 77; 38 T.L.R. 243.

court, after pointing out that the letters in question which were said to be the acts constituting the attempt to procure did not contain an undisguised invitation to commit the offence, laid it down [6] that in order to see whether the letters did contain such terms that Price (the addressee) would see in them an invitation to commit an act of gross indecency with the appellant, the surrounding circumstances might and should be examined.

The circumstances here were that the appellant had spoken to this boy in the street, had taken him to a café and given him beer and an ice cream, had then gone into a park with the boy and there when sitting with him alone had said and done things which manifested his criminal purpose of inducing the boy to commit an act of gross indecency with him. After putting an arm round the boy and pointing to the boy's genital organ and asking if the boy had a little one there and saying that he had a big one, he had followed this by suggesting that they should sleep out together in a park or the woods and had asked the boy in coarse terms whether he had ever had sexual intercourse. He had then asked the boy to meet him the next night, promising him a reward of 10 marks if he did so, saying that they could then go to a cinema or for a walk. The next night he went to the suggested meeting place and met the boy, and then, making the excuse that it was too late to go to a cinema, invited the boy to go with him for a walk.

It is important to bear in mind that the question is not whether this invitation and meeting in the circumstances amounted to an attempt to commit an act of gross indecency. They could not be said to be that. The question is whether these acts of the appellant were acts to procure the commission of that offence. Applying the principle as stated, was there on these facts an act sufficiently proximate to procuring the boy to commit the offence to amount to an attempt to procure? It is not a question whether there was an act of procuring but whether there was an act which was an attempt to procure.

The conduct of the accused immediately before and at the time of the invitation, in our view, manifested his purpose in inviting the boy to meet him the next evening and in meeting him and inviting him to go for a walk. The walk which had already taken place had been used for making indecent overtures and suggestions. That conduct made manifest the purpose of the invitation and the meeting and the suggestion of another walk. That the appellant by his conduct and talk had intended to suggest to the boy that they should act indecently together can scarcely be doubted in view of the fact that the appellant himself said to the police after he was arrested: "Well, what the boy "said about Saturday night is all true, but I only met him tonight "in order to put him off. I had no intention of doing what I "suggested."

[6] 16 Cr.App.R. 77, 82.

C.-M. A. C.
1953
Reg.
v.
Miskell.

The law does not, however, punish a man for a guilty intention but for the overt act done as part of the carrying out of that intention. Now the intention of the appellant here was undoubtedly to procure an act of gross indecency with the boy. The invitation and the meeting were overt acts. When that invitation and meeting are considered in the light of the circumstances in which the invitation was issued and the meeting took place, it appears to us that those acts cannot be said to be incapable of being attempts to procure the boy to commit an act of gross indecency with the appellant. Once it is decided that they could be so regarded as a matter of law, then the question whether they were an attempt or not becomes one of fact for a jury or, as in this case, for the court-martial.

In Cope's case[6] the Lord Chief Justice said: "The letters "in the present case obviously do not contain an undisguised "invitation nor is a code suggested, but it is said that they do "contain terms which would have conveyed the invitation to the "mind of their intended recipient as unmistakenly as if it had "been set out in express terms and that the jury have by con-"victing found that this is so." He follows that observation by the passage which I have already quoted. Later on, he said: "We think there was enough (in the letter) to entitle the jury "to find that Price would have read into it an invitation to repeat "with the appellant the offence which he had committed with "Riley, and therefore that the sending of the letters was an "attempt to procure Price."

That invitation in that letter was no less remote from the procuring than the invitation given by the appellant in this case and the meeting in fulfilment of that invitation, coupled, as it was, with a further invitation to another walk. Here, as in Cope's case,[6] in the circumstances which had occurred, the invitation in question was understood to be an invitation to an act of gross indecency, and the boy's father and the police were informed, and it is not contended that an invitation however veiled which in the circumstances is an invitation to commit an act of gross indecency, is not an attempt to procure such an act. For these reasons, the appeal is dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Registrar, Courts-Martial Appeal Court; Director, Army Legal Services.

S. C.

[6] 16 Cr.App.R. 77, 82.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

* NATIONAL ASSISTANCE BOARD v. PRISK.

1954
Jan. 29.

Lord Goddard C.J., Byrne and Parker JJ.

Husband and Wife—Maintenance—Agreement—Maintenance inadequate — Wife receiving national assistance — Liability of husband to National Assistance Board—National Assistance Act, 1948 (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 29), ss. 42 and 43.
National Assistance.

A married woman, living apart from her husband by consent and receiving a sum under a maintenance agreement which was not, in all the circumstances, an adequate maintenance, was assisted by the National Assistance Board. On appeal by the board from a decision of justices that the board was not entitled to recover from the husband sums paid to the wife by way of assistance:—

Held that, since the existence of the agreement, and its due observance, was no answer to the husband's common law duty to maintain his wife as long as she had not committed a matrimonial offence (Tulip v. Tulip [1951] P. 378; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 1056; [1951] 2 All E.R. 91; Dowell v. Dowell [1952] 2 All E.R. 141), the National Assistance Board was entitled to an order, even though the justices had, in previous proceedings, wrongly decided that the husband was not guilty of wilfully neglecting to provide reasonable maintenance for the wife.

CASE STATED by West Penwith justices.

The following facts were proved before the justices: William Prisk was lawfully married to Elizabeth Moon Prisk in 1920. On March 11, 1938, the husband and wife had entered into a separation agreement by which the husband undertook to pay the wife maintenance at the rate of £1 a week, and these payments had been regularly made.

The wife became in need of and received assistance under the National Assistance Act, 1948. On December 17, 1952, on the advice of National Assistance officers, she complained to the justices that her husband had wilfully neglected to provide reasonable maintenance for her, but the summons was dismissed. The wife was not prepared to return to her husband, who was a road foreman employed by the Cornwall County Council with an average gross wage of £7 2s. a week.

On July 17, 1953, two complaints were preferred by the National Assistance Board under sections 42 and 43 of the Act of 1948,[1] applying for a summons to be served on the husband to

[Reported by Miss ELAINE JONES, Barrister-at-Law.]

[1] National Assistance Act, 1948, s. 42: "(1) For the purposes of this "Act—(a) a man shall be liable to "maintain his wife and children, and "(b) a woman shall be liable to main-"tain her husband and her children."

S. 43: "(1) Where assistance is "given or applied for by reference "to the requirements of any person "(in this section referred to as a per-"son assisted), the Board or the local "authority concerned may make a "complaint to the court against any "other person who for the purposes "of this Act is liable to maintain the "person assisted. (2) On a com-"plaint under this section the court "shall have regard to all the circum-"stances and in particular to the re-"sources of the defendant, and may "order the defendant to pay such "sum, weekly or otherwise, as the "court may consider appropriate."

1954

National Assistance Board v. Prisk.

show cause why he should not be ordered to repay a sum of £27 19s. given as assistance to the wife under Part II of the Act between January 19, 1953, and July 13, 1953, and why he should not be ordered to pay such sums as the court might consider appropriate in respect of assistance given at the weekly rate of £1 1s. 6d. on March 3, 1953, and divers other days, and which was continuing to be given.

For the National Assistance Board it was contended that, for the purpose of the Act of 1948, the husband was liable to maintain his wife unless she had committed a matrimonial offence, that the wife had committed no matrimonial offence, that the failure of the wife to obtain an order for maintenance on the ground of wilful neglect to maintain was not conclusive as against the National Assistance Board, and that the existence of the separation agreement was no bar to the board.

It was contended for the husband that the liability under section 43 of the Act of 1948 was subject to defences open to the wife at common law, that the existence of the agreement regularly complied with was such a defence and that the matter, having been determined by the justices on the hearing of the wife's complaint on the ground of wilful neglect to maintain, was no longer open to the National Assistance Board.

The justices held that the compliance of the husband with the separation agreement was a bar to the wife in her complaint and that, as the rights of the National Assistance Board were subject to defeasance by any defence open to the husband as against the wife, the board were also under a disability arising from the performance of the agreement. The husband was, therefore, not liable under section 43. The National Assistance Board appealed.

J. P. Ashworth for the National Assistance Board.
H. E. Park for the husband.

The following cases were cited in argument, apart from those contained in the judgment: Hyman v. Hyman *; Llewellyn v. Turner† and Aldritt v. Aldritt.‡

Lord Goddard C.J. It is now too late to argue that it is anomalous that a husband should be said to be wilfully neglecting to maintain his wife if he is paying money that is due under a deed. "Wilful," in the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, means deliberate, that is to say, the husband is deliberately refusing to pay, with no excuse except the deed. Tulip v. Tulip [1] and Dowell v. Dowell [2] have decided that the presence of a deed under which the husband has made payments

* [1929] A.C. 601; 45 T.L.R. 444.
† (1922) 126 L.T. 532.
‡ (Unreported) June 12, 1951.
[1] [1951] P. 378; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 1056; [1951] 2 All E.R. 91.
[2] [1952] 2 All E.R. 141.

is no bar to the wife taking proceedings in respect of maintenance, either before the justices under the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, or before the High Court under section 23 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950.

The reason why it has been held in those cases that the deed cannot be set up as an answer is that the husband, at common law, remains liable to maintain his wife unless she has committed a matrimonial offence. The fact that he has covenanted to pay her, as in the present case, £1 a week, may be shown not to provide her with adequate maintenance. One object of orders that are made against husbands in respect of their wives is to prevent the wives becoming a charge upon public funds—that is, in the old days becoming a charge upon the Guardians of the Poor and now becoming a charge upon the National Assistance Fund.

The courts have therefore held in the two cases which I have mentioned (which are binding on this court and which, if I may say so, seem to me to lay down most excellent law) that as long as the obligation remains on the husband to support his wife, the fact that the deed contains a clause under which the husband is bound to pay £1 a week to his wife does not prevent the court saying: "That is not now adequate maintenance, and as you are "bound to supply adequate maintenance, notwithstanding that "£1 a week has been agreed, we shall make an order against "you." It rests entirely with the justices to find what is a fair and adequate sum in all the circumstances of the case, taking into account the £1 a week and the husband's means.

Mr. Park, for the husband, has asked us to say that National Assistance Board v. Wilkinson [3] is authority for the proposition that if the husband would have had any defence at common law or under any statute, that remains open to him in proceedings taken by the National Assistance Board. Wilkinson's case [3] merely decided that a husband can always show, either against the National Assistance Board or against his wife, that his obligation to maintain his wife has ceased. From the earliest times our law has laid down that no husband is obliged to support his wife if she has committed adultery. In Wilkinson's case [3] I cited a well-known dictum of Littledale J. in Rex v. Flintan [4] that the wife "Having rendered herself unworthy of "her husband's protection, she returns to the same state as if "she were not married," and "If the husband is not obliged to "answer for the wife's contracts, or to receive her into his "house, it cannot be said that he is 'legally bound to maintain "'her'."

The law is different where the wife has deserted her husband. Jones v. Newtown and Llanidloes Union [5] laid down that the right to maintenance of a wife who has deserted her

[3] [1952] 2 Q.B. 648; [1952] 2 T.L.R. 11; [1952] 2 All E.R. 255.
[4] (1830) 1 B. & Ad. 227, 230.
[5] [1920] 3 K.B. 381; 36 T.L.R. 758.

1954

National Assistance Board v. Prisk.

Lord Goddard C.J.

husband is only suspended, and if she returns to her husband then she has a right to be maintained; but as long as she is in desertion the husband is under no obligation to support her. In Wilkinson's case [6] the wife was in desertion. The husband provided a perfectly proper and adequate home for the wife, but she wanted to live elsewhere and would not go and live with him. It was decided that in such circumstances the husband was not bound to support the wife, and it decided nothing else. Similarly, in the present case, if the husband could say that the wife had deserted him, he would be under no obligation to maintain her.

The only other question is whether the National Assistance Board, under these circumstances, can obtain an order against the husband for such amount of the relief which the board is giving to the wife as the court may think reasonable that the husband should, in addition to the sum under the deed, provide.

[His Lordship referred to section 43 of the National Assistance Act, 1948, and continued:] In my opinion the National Assistance Board is entitled to an order because the husband is clearly liable to maintain his wife. The wife was entitled to go to the justices as she did in December, 1952, and they, wrongly, in our opinion, felt that they could not order any maintenance because the husband was paying under the deed. The result was that the wife was left with £1 a week—and one has only to state the amount to show that she could not live on that. What was she to do? She had to go and get relief, her husband still remaining liable to maintain her.

The National Assistance Board having paid money to the wife can have recourse to the husband, who is liable to maintain his wife, and say: "You must repay us the money that we have "paid to your wife because you are in default. You are not "maintaining your wife by paying her reasonable maintenance; "you are only paying her the money under the deed. In spite "of the deed she is entitled to her increased maintenance. She "has not got that increase and we have had to pay her; we there-"fore ask that you should repay us that which we have paid "and shall have to pay her in the future."

Attention has been called to the presence in the deed of what I may call a set-off clause, that is to say, as long as the husband made his payment under the deed the wife was bound to discharge all her debts and liabilities out of that sum, and the husband was entitled to deduct from it any sum for which he had become liable by his wife's pledging his credit. We do not intend that this husband should be entitled to set-off against the £1 that he pays under the deed the amount that he may be ordered by the justices to pay to the National Assistance Board. We intend that the National Assistance Board shall inform the justices what they have paid to the wife and that the husband must pay that sum, or so much of it as the justices think reasonable, in addition to the £1 a week which he has been paying. If the justices find that the amount of £27 which was paid by the board between January and July, 1953, was a reasonable amount, they will make an order on him to pay that amount, and he will have to pay it and will not have the right to set-off. If the justices also say that in future he is to pay £1 a week in addition to the £1 he has paid under the deed then his obligation will be discharged by the payment of £2 a week. He may be entitled to set off any amount for which the wife has pledged his credit against the £2 a week, but not against the £1 a week.

[6] [1952] 2 Q.B. 648.

For these reasons I think the justices came to an erroneous conclusion in point of law, and the case must go back to them with a direction that they must find what sum the husband should reasonably pay, first in respect of the arrears, and second in respect of future payments.

BYRNE J. I agree.

PARKER J. I agree.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Solicitor, National Assistance Board; Jaques & Co. for Stephens & Scown, St. Austell.

[CHANCERY DIVISION.]

* RICHARDSON v. JACKSON.

1954
Feb. 3.
Danckwerts J.

[1953 R. No. 1460.]

Restrictive Covenant—Obsolete—Modification—Action to enforce covenants—Application to stay proceedings and for leave to apply to Lands Tribunal—Grounds required—Law of Property Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 20), s. 84 (9)—Lands Tribunal Act, 1949 (12 & 13 Geo. 6, c. 42), s. 1 (4).
Lands Tribunal.

In an action for enforcement of covenants application may be made under section 84 (9) of the Law of Property Act, 1925, by any person against whom proceedings are brought, for a stay of proceedings and for leave to apply to the Lands Tribunal for the modification of the covenants.

Such an application should normally be granted if the applicants can show a prima facie case, since the court has no power to modify covenants. The applicants must also have proceeded without unreasonable delay, although they are not obliged to apply before pleadings are delivered, as their advisers must have time in which to examine the circumstances and to decide whether an application to the tribunal has any reasonable chance of success.

Feilden v. Byrne [1926] Ch. 620 considered.

1954

RICHARDSON
v.
JACKSON.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS.

The plaintiff brought proceedings against the defendants for the enforcement of a covenant restricting them from using a shop for the sale of certain articles. The defendants did not deny that they were bound by the covenant, having bought the property with notice of the covenant, which was also registered under the Land Charges Act, 1925. They alleged that the covenant was obsolescent and no longer enforceable, and that if there had been any breach the plaintiff had acquiesced in it, and that in the circumstances it should be modified to permit the user of which the plaintiff complained.

The writ was issued on May 27, 1953, the statement of claim was served on June 6, 1953, and the defence was delivered on July 31, 1953. The present summons was taken out on December 15, 1953, in which the defendants asked for an order staying proceedings in the action in order to apply under section 84 of the Law of Property Act, 1925,[1] to the Lands Tribunal for modification of the covenant.

Maurice Berkeley for the applicants, defendants in the action.
R. O. Wilberforce for the respondent, plaintiff in the action.

Cases cited in argument: Feilden v. Byrne[2]; Knight v. Simmonds.[3]

DANCKWERTS J., having stated the facts: This is an application to stay the proceedings to enable the defendants to apply to the Lands Tribunal under section 84 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, for the purpose of obtaining a modification of a covenant. Under section 84 (9) the matter lies in the discretion of the court, but the section does not give any lead to the court as to the considerations which should affect its decision in regard

[1] Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 84: "(1) The authority hereinafter defined shall . . . have power from time to time, on the application of any person interested in any freehold land affected by any restriction arising under covenant . . . as to the user thereof or the building thereon, by order wholly or partially to discharge or modify any such restriction . . . on being satisfied—(a) that by reason of changes in . . . neighbourhood or other circumstances of the case . . . the restriction ought to be deemed obsolete, or that the continued existence thereof would impede the reasonable user of the land for . . . private purposes without securing practical benefits to other persons, or, as the case may be, would unless modified so impede such user. . . ."

"(9) Where any proceedings by action or otherwise are taken to enforce a restrictive covenant, any person against whom proceedings are taken, may in such proceedings apply to the court for an order giving leave to apply to the authority under this section, and staying the proceedings in the meantime."

Lands Tribunal Act, 1949, s. 1: "(4) The Lands Tribunal shall . . . exercise (a) the jurisdiction conferred on the authority under s. 84 of the Law of Property Act, 1925 (which relates to the discharge and modification of restrictive covenants). . . ."

[2] [1926] Ch. 620.

[3] [1896] 2 Ch. 294; 12 T.L.R. 401.

to such an application. The only reported case on the subject is Feilden v. Byrne,[1] a decision of Eve J.

The matter is not very clear, even when the decision of Eve J. is considered, and I feel some difficulty in deciding exactly the manner in which the discretion of the court should be applied. It is clear that the proceedings should not be stayed for the purpose of such an application if it is plain on the evidence that any application under the section would have no real chance of succeeding before the tribunal. But it seems to me that otherwise such an application should normally be acceded to, because modification of the covenants is not within the power of this court, and it would, therefore, be unfair to deprive the defendants of their chance to obtain a modification from the tribunal, if they can make out a case at all.

On the other hand, it is plain that the application should be made promptly when proceedings are brought. I do not think that it is necessary that the defendants should have applied before the proceedings were begun, because until the plaintiff has proceeded with his action, the defendants may well think that he will not attempt to enforce the covenants; but once the action has been started, the defendants, if they wish to take advantage of the procedure created by section 84 (9) of the Law of Property Act, 1925, should apply promptly to the court.

In the present case the writ was issued on May 27, 1953; the statement of claim was served upon the defendants on June 6, 1953, so that by then the defendants knew definitely what was the complaint against them; and the defence in the action was delivered on July 31, 1953. This present application was not made until December 15, 1953.

It is not possible to compare the present case with the procedure in Feilden v. Byrne,[1] because nowadays no order under a summons for directions is required for pleadings, whereas at the time of that case pleadings would not normally be delivered till the issue of the summons for directions and the hearing upon it.

I have felt some doubt whether I should not say that the defendants have not proceeded with due despatch. On the other hand, it must be recognized that the advisers of the defendants must have some time in which to examine the circumstances and obtain evidence, so that they can decide and advise the defendants whether an application to the tribunal under section 84 has any reasonable chance of success; and while I feel that the defendants may be open to some criticism—their application certainly would be free from objection, if, for instance, they had applied during the month of October—yet, on the whole, I do not think that it is a case in which I should deprive them of their chance to apply to the tribunal for possible modification of the covenant.

[1] [1926] Ch. 620.

1954

Richardson v. Jackson.

The proceedings will accordingly be stayed to enable the defendants to apply promptly to the Lands Tribunal under section 84 (9) of the Law of Property Act, 1925.

Application granted.

Solicitors: Collyer-Bristow & Co. for Hett, Davy & Stubbs, Scunthorpe; Bird & Bird for Sergeant & Collins, Scunthorpe.

I. G. R. M.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

C. A.

1954 Feb. 1.

Somervell, Birkett and Romer L.JJ.

* BAMPTON v. COOK.

[Practice Note.]

Legal Aid—Costs—Appeal—Security for costs—R.S.C. Ord. 58, r. 15 (2).

In an action for personal injuries by the next friend of an infant before Hilbery J. and a jury on December 2, 1953, a verdict was given for the defendant. At the hearing the plaintiff was an assisted person under the Legal Aid and Advice Act, 1949, paying a maximum contribution of £93 10s. on a disposable income of some £343. On notice of appeal being given, the defendant applied to the Court of Appeal under R.S.C. Ord. 58, r. 15 (2)[1] for an order that the plaintiff should give security for the costs of the appeal. At the time of the hearing of the application the plaintiff was not an assisted person for the purposes of the appeal, but it was clear from certain correspondence that legal aid would be granted.

Marven Everett Q.C. and Malcolm Morris for the applicant.
Rodney Bax for the respondent.

The following cases were cited in argument: Conway v. George Wimpey & Co.[2]; Murray v. Stewards & Lloyds Ld.[3]

Somervell L.J. Counsel for the plaintiff has asked this court to follow the decision in Conway v. George Wimpey & Co.,* and say that no security should be ordered. In that case the plaintiff was not an assisted person at the time of the application to the Court of Appeal for security for costs. In the

---

[Reported by Miss Elaine Jones, Barrister-at-Law.]

[1] R.S.C. Ord. 58, r. 15: "(2) The "Court of Appeal may in special cir-"cumstances order that such security "shall be given for the costs of the "appeal as the court may direct."

[2] [1951] 1 T.L.R. 215; [1951] 1 All E.R. 56.

[3] (Unreported) October 12, 1953.

* [1951] 1 All E.R. 56.

present case the plaintiff as an assisted person in the court below had been ordered to make a substantial contribution to the costs. This is, I think, a "special circumstance" taking the present case out of the general rule in Conway v. George Wimpey & Co.[1] Counsel for the defendant has drawn our attention to Murray v. Stewards & Lloyds Ld.,[2] in which the plaintiff had to make a maximum contribution of £95 towards the costs of the hearing in the court of first instance and was an assisted person at the time of the application to the Court of Appeal for security. This court, though differently constituted, ordered security to the extent of £25 to be paid by the plaintiff.

We propose to follow that decision in the present case and order the plaintiff here to give security to the extent of £20. This order is intended to cover the plaintiff when she becomes an assisted person whatever contribution she may be required to make towards the costs of the appeal.

Solicitors: Barlow, Lyde & Gilbert; Craigen, Hicks & Co.

[1] [1951] 1 All E.R. 56. [2] (Unreported) October 12, 1953.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

* CHARLES v. S. SMITH & SONS (ENGLAND) LD.

1954
Jan. 21, 22, 25, 26, 27.
Hilbery J.

[1952 C. No. 5136.]

Factory—Dangerous machinery—Fencing—Spindle moulding machine—Dangerous moving parts—Metal box guard with lid closed but not fastened—Lid raised by operative—Machine accidentally set in motion—Accident—Liability of employer—Liability of operative—"Wilfully interfere with or misuse"—Factories Act, 1937 (1 Edw. 8 & 1 Geo. 6, c. 67), ss. 14, 16, 119.
Factory—Duty on workman.

By subsection (1) of section 119 of the Factories Act, 1937, no person employed in a factory "shall wilfully interfere with or "misuse" any appliance provided for securing his safety; and by subsection (2) no person employed in a factory shall "wilfully "and without reasonable cause" do anything likely to endanger himself or others.

Certain dangerous moving parts of a hydraulically-operated mould press, requiring to be fenced under section 14 of the Factories Act, 1937, were covered by a metal box fitted with two glass-panelled lids. The lids were closed, but not fastened. The plaintiff, the operative attending the machine, in order to test certain locking nuts inside the box which controlled the position of the mould spindles, having first immobilized the machine by moving the starting handle into a neutral position, raised one of the lids of the box and inserted his hand therein. While doing so he inadvertently pressed his leg against the starting handle, causing

[Reported by Mrs. E. M. WELLWOOD, Barrister-at-Law.]

1954

Charles
v.
S. Smith &
Sons (England)
Ld.

the machine to spring into motion, and his hand was injured by a moving ramrod inside the box. He sued his employers, the defendant company, for damages alleging that they had been guilty of a breach of their statutory duty to fence and guard the dangerous parts of the machinery while the machine was in motion contrary to sections 14 and 16 of the Act. The employers denied any breach of statutory duty and contended that it was no part of the plaintiff's duty to test the locking nuts and that his actions in so doing had been in breach of section 119 of the Act in that he had wilfully interfered with or misused the guard provided for his safety and wilfully and without reasonable cause done something likely to endanger himself:—

Held, (1) on the evidence, that the plaintiff was impliedly licensed as part of his duty to test in the way he did the locking nuts.

Held, (2) that the metal box was an insecure guard when the lid was open, so that at the time of the accident the defendant company was in breach of section 14 and, as the plaintiff by his involuntary act had set the machine in motion while the dangerous parts of the machine were unguarded, the company was also in breach of section 16 of the Act.

Cummings v. Richard Thomas and Baldwins Ld. [1953] 2 Q.B. 95; [1953] 2 W.L.R. 1104; [1953] 2 All E.R. 43 applied.

Held, (3) that no breach of section 119 had been committed by the plaintiff since his actions did not amount to "wilful interference or misuse" within the meaning of section 119 (1), the words in the subsection being intended to mean "a perverse intermeddling" and not a mere "touching" or "misplacing" of an appliance provided for the safety of the worker; and further that the plaintiff had not, by inadvertently starting the machine while his hand was inside the box "wilfully and without reasonable cause" done anything likely to endanger himself.

Reasoning of Pilcher J. in Johnson v. Croggan & Co. Ld. [1954] 1 W.L.R. 195; [1954] 1 All E.R. 121 questioned.

Action.

The plaintiff, John Arthur Charles, a mould press operator employed by the defendant company, S. Smith & Sons (England) Ld., was required to attend an Edgwick injection moulding machine installed in the defendant company's factory at Waterloss Road, Cricklewood, London. The moulding machine was powered by a motor and the moulds were brought together by hydraulic pressure. Certain dangerous moving parts, including a ramrod which moved mechanically when the machine was in motion, were guarded by a metal box closed by two sloping metal lids opening towards the back and front of the machine. Each lid was fitted with a perspex glass panel on which was a small raised lip forming a handle by which the panels could be opened. When closed the panels were not fixed in any way. On the left of the metal box over the moving parts was a handle which controlled the hydraulic power, and it was possible by moving the handle into an upright position to immobilise the machine while the motor was switched on. The moulds themselves were on spindles which passed through the side of the metal box. Inside the box were certain locking nuts which, when properly adjusted, kept the spindles in position.

On January 2, 1951, the plaintiff, believing it to be part of his duty to test the locking nuts, having immobilised the machine by pushing the starting handle into the neutral position, lifted the front lid of the box and inserted his hand inside the box. While doing so he inadvertently knocked his leg against the starting handle and so set the machine in motion. His hand was caught by the moving ramrod inside the box and was injured. He sued the defendant company for damages claiming that his injury was due to their negligence and/or breach of statutory duty in failing securely to fence the dangerous parts of the machine contrary to section 14 of the Factories Act, 1937 [1]; in causing or permitting the machine to be in motion notwithstanding that the covers of the guard were not in position contrary to section 16 [2] of the Act; failing to provide proper plant and appliances and exposing the plaintiff to unnecessary risk.

The employers denied negligence and breach of duty alleging that it was no part of the plaintiff's duty to test the nuts, which he well knew was the duty of one Wynne, the foreman and setter; that the injury had been caused by or contributed to by the plaintiff's own negligence; that he attempted to adjust the nut from a position in front of the machine and for this purpose opened the front window and passed his hand across the ram, although he well knew that it was dangerous so to do and although he knew that the correct practice was to lift the rear window in order to make the necessary adjustment; that he knocked the operating lever into a position which he well knew would cause the ram to move at a time when his hand was in jeopardy. The defendant company also pleaded that the plaintiff, by acting in the way he had, had committed a breach of section 119 [3] of the Act in that he had, contrary to subsection (1) of that section wilfully interfered with or misused the guard provided for securing the safety of persons employed in the factory; failed to use the guard; and, contrary to subsection (2),

[1] Factories Act, 1937, s. 14 (1): "Every dangerous part of any machinery . . . shall be securely fenced unless it is in such a position or of such construction as to be as safe to every person employed or working on the premises as it would be if securely fenced: Provided that, in so far as the safety of a dangerous part of any machinery cannot by reason of the nature of the operation be secured by means of a fixed guard, the requirements of this subsection shall be deemed to have been complied with if a device is provided which automatically prevents the operator from coming into contact with that part."

[2] S. 16. "All fencing or other safeguards provided in pursuance of the foregoing provisions of this Part of this Act shall be . . . constantly maintained and kept in position while the parts required to be fenced or safeguarded are in motion or in use, except when any such parts are necessarily exposed for examination and . . . adjustment shown by such examination to be immediately necessary. . . ."

[3] S. 119: "(1) No person employed in a factory . . . shall wilfully interfere with or misuse any means, appliance, convenience or other thing provided in pursuance of this Act for securing the health, safety or welfare of the persons employed in the factory. . . . (2) No person employed in a factory . . . shall wilfully and without reasonable cause do anything likely to endanger himself or others."

1954

CHARLES v. S. SMITH & SONS (ENGLAND) LD.

wilfully and without reasonable cause done something likely to endanger himself.

John Platts-Mills for the plaintiff.

H. I. Nelson Q.C., Stephen Chapman and John Stephenson for the defendant company.

The following cases were cited in argument: Smith v. Morris Motors Ld. and Harris[4]; Johnson v. Croggan & Co. Ld.[5]; Cummings v. Richard Thomas and Baldwins Ld.[6]; Carr v. Mercantile Produce Co.[7]; Norris v. Syndic Manufacturing Co.[8]; Vincent v. Southern Railway Co.[9]; Cakebread v. Hopping Bros. (Whetstone) Ld.[10]; Walker v. Bletchley Flettons Ld.[11]

HILBERY J. having stated the facts and considered the evidence, found that, although it was never specifically made part of the plaintiff's duty to test the nuts, he was impliedly licensed so to do, and that he was not guilty of negligence in opening the box and putting his hand in to see if the nuts were tight. Neither was he negligent in opening the front panel of the machine to inspect the nuts as he was copying the example of the setter who himself had been seen to use the front panel. His Lordship continued: The plaintiff suffered from a moving part of the machine that was dangerous, and the question is whether it had been securely fenced, and, if so, whether the fence was maintained when the machine was in motion, so as to comply with sections 14, 15 and 16 of the Factories Act, 1937.

It does not matter in the present case whether the box, with a loose lid which anyone could open, fenced the machine securely, because, in any event, since the decision in Cummings v. Richard Thomas and Baldwins Ld.,[1] although the plaintiff set the machine in motion when it was unguarded, his act in so doing involves the master in a breach of section 16 of the Act; but in those circumstances, the fact that it is the action of the servant, though involuntary—it was voluntary in Cummings v. Richard Thomas and Baldwins Ld.[1]—which involves the master in the breach, is a matter to be taken into consideration when deciding whether the master is wholly liable in respect of the accident or whether the servant is liable.

That drives me to consider whether the plaintiff here was guilty of, first, contributory negligence in doing what he did, or, secondly, a breach of section 119. I think that, in the circumstances, first that the plaintiff was not doing a

[4] [1950] 1 K.B. 194; 65 T.L.R. 642; [1949] 2 All E.R. 715.

[5] [1954] 1 W.L.R. 195; [1954] 1 All E.R. 121.

[6] [1953] 2 Q.B. 95; [1953] 2 W.L.R. 1104; [1953] 2 All E.R. 43.

[7] [1949] 2 K.B. 601; [1949] 2 All E.R. 531.

[8] [1952] 2 Q.B. 135; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 858; [1952] 1 All E.R. 935.

[9] [1927] A.C. 430.

[10] [1947] K.B. 641; 63 T.L.R. 277; [1947] 1 All E.R. 389.

[11] [1937] 1 All E.R. 170.

[1] [1953] 2 Q.B. 95; [1953] 2 W.L.R. 1104; [1953] 2 All E.R. 43.

wholly unauthorized act, and secondly that his action did not amount to contributory negligence, and ought not to be so held. The initial responsibility for the accident lies in the fact that the box was not a secure fencing of the dangerous part of the machine. It is not enough to provide something which will act as a guard if let alone and not made use of in the way in which a part of it is patently intended to be made use of. Section 14 requires machinery to be securely fenced, and it is not sufficient that that machinery is provided with a means of achieving security. This box achieved security so long as the perspex cover was left shut. If the handle on the perspex cover was used and the perspex cover lifted, then it ceased to be any guard for a person who, for any reason, put his hand inside the box. If it was not a secure fencing of the machine (and I think it was not, in those circumstances), then, before the situation is reached where the inadvertent action of the plaintiff himself set the machine in motion after the perspex panel was opened and the machine became unguarded so as to involve his master technically in a breach of section 16, one has the situation where the master was already in breach of section 14, and that breach by the master can, in the circumstances of this case, fairly be said to be causally connected with the accident.

The question which remains to be decided is whether the plaintiff was himself guilty of a breach of section 119. That section is singularly and unhappily bare of authority as to the way in which its words are to be construed. There has not been called to my attention, and I confess I do not know of, any authority stating how the words in subsection (1) are to be interpreted. That subsection provides: "No person employed in "a factory or in any other place to which any provisions of this "Act apply shall wilfully interfere with or misuse any means, "appliance, convenience or other thing provided . . ."

The words "wilfully interfere with or misuse" have to be construed in this case to decide whether the plaintiffs' action with regard to this box which performed the function of a guard was a "wilful interference or misuse" of that appliance. If "wilfully interfere" only means intentionally do something with the guard, then, of course, he did intentionally lift up the panel in order to put his hand inside the box.

I should not so construe those words. In my opinion the words "wilfully interfere with or misuse" in the context, more particularly the words "or misuse," are intended to mean something more than merely "touch" or "misplace." I think they mean something in the nature of a perverse intermeddling with the appliance; and the use of the word "wilful" in our language can and often does convey that meaning. One speaks of a "wilful child," as meaning a naughty child; but in the criminal law and in the domestic law, the word "wilful" is used to mean "intentional"; but this section puts a duty on the servant not wilfully to interfere with or misuse any means, and I think that, although a disjunctive is used there, its purpose is not to indicate that "misuse" is something quite different from wilful interference, but to indicate that the wilful interference is intended to be something which is also in the nature of a misuse. Therefore I do not think that section 119 (1) applies to this case.

1954

CHARLES v. S. SMITH & SONS (ENGLAND) LD.

Hilbery J.

When it is said in section 119 (2) that: "No person employed "in a factory or in any other place to which any provisions of "this Act apply shall wilfully and without reasonable cause do "anything likely to endanger himself or others," for the reasons I have given in dealing with the question of contributory negligence, I do not consider that the plaintiff was wilfully or without reasonable cause doing anything likely to endanger himself so far as he could tell. He did not foresee the accidental pressure on the starting handle, nor did he foresee—and was not, in my opinion, negligent in not foreseeing—that he might possibly on this occasion, although it had never happened before, start the machine by pressure on the handle.

In the circumstances, although I confess that my mind has vacillated a good deal in the course of the case, I think that on the whole the plaintiff succeeds, and there is no fractional apportionment to be made distributing any part of the blame as attributable to him, because it has not been shown either that section 119 has been violated or that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence. With the greatest respect to the judgment which Pilcher J. has given in Johnson v. Croggan & Co. Ld.[2] it is quite clear, in my view, that even though a plaintiff in such a case is shown to have been in breach of section 119, it does not make his cause of action a turpis causa; but I need not deal at length with that, because it does not arise in this case.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

Solicitors: W. H. Thompson; Carpenters.

[2] [1954] 1 W.L.R. 195; [1954] 1 All E.R. 121.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

1954 Feb. 2.

Gerrard J.

* CALVERT AND WIFE v. PICK AND ANOTHER.

[1952 C. No. 4826.]

Practice and Procedure—Discontinuance of action—Effect of settlement—Action for damages—Two plaintiffs and two defendants—Plaintiffs' claims settled—Damages and costs paid by second defendant—Plaintiffs' names left on record—Action brought to trial—No evidence offered by plaintiffs—Whether court has power to determine proportion of damages as between defendants.

Joint Tortfeasor—Contribution—Practice.

[Reported by Mrs. E. M. WELLWOOD, Barrister-at-Law.]

An action for damages brought by two plaintiffs against two defendants was settled, the defendants having reached an agreement whereby the second defendant paid the plaintiffs an agreed sum by way of damages and costs. The defendants arranged to retain the name of one plaintiff on the record to keep the action alive so that the court might determine the proportion of damages and costs properly payable by each defendant. At the trial the plaintiff offered no evidence:—

Held, that in reality the plaintiff's action was dead, and the court had no power to determine the issue between the two defendants.

Croston v. Vaughan [1938] 1 K.B. 540; 54 T.L.R. 54; [1937] 4 All E.R. 249 distinguished.

ACTION.

Mr. Monty Calvert and his wife, Mrs. Louise Calvert, brought an action against Mr. Kenneth Pick and Mr. Thomas William Sanders for damages arising out of a collision. Before the trial of the action the defendants, having reached an agreement as to the damages and costs likely to satisfy both plaintiffs' claims against one or other or both defendants, settled the plaintiffs' claims, the agreed sums for both damages and costs being paid by the second defendant with the concurrence of the first defendant. The defendants did not, as a term of that settlement, ask for the action to be discontinued, but arranged for one of the plaintiffs' names to be left on the record thus keeping the action alive, in order that the court could determine the proportion of damages and costs which each defendant should pay.

Mark Gore for the plaintiffs.
Malcolm Morris for the first defendant.
Hugh Forbes for the second defendant.

GERRARD J. stated the facts and continued: The proceedings opened today by Mr. Gore on behalf of the plaintiffs telling me that he had no instructions in this matter at all; that the action has been settled as between the plaintiffs and the second defendant, and that he had no instructions to offer any evidence. After that, the contest began. Mr. Malcolm Morris and Mr. Forbes have sought to persuade me to try the respective proportions which Mr. Pick and Mr. Sanders ought to pay of the moneys which the plaintiffs have received on the settlement. They say that I can do that because, although the claims have been disposed of between the plaintiffs and the defendants, and paid and satisfied, by keeping one of the plaintiffs on the record they can invite the court to, and the court should, proceed with the dispute between the two defendants.

I take a different view of that. It seems to me that the rights between the two defendants in this action could have been determined in a number of ways: they could have been considered in a separate action; they could have been determined, if one only had been sued, through the machinery of a third party notice; and they could have been adjudicated upon in a real action on the basis of the decision in Croston v. Vaughan,[1] if the circumstances had been appropriate. If the proceedings to settle the ratio of contribution between the defendants had been the subject of a separate action, no difficulty could possibly have arisen. Had the proceedings been brought as the result of one of them, being the defendant at the suit of the plaintiff, issuing a third party notice against the other defendant, again no difficulty could have arisen because R.S.C., Ord. 16A, r. 9 (2) is designed to cover the situation where there is a plaintiff, defendant and third party and the defendant and plaintiff come to an accommodation. That rule is specifically inserted in Order 16A to enable the court to sever the action from the proceedings and to allow the third party proceedings to continue in their own right as fully constituted proceedings, although in their ordinary nature they are dependent upon an original action. I think that the Rules of the Supreme Court have there provided for the difficulty which, but for the rule, would have occurred if, as it were, the head of the dog had been cut off and it was desirable to let the tail wag. But that state of affairs does not arise before me. There is no rule corresponding to rule 9 (2) which I can incorporate for the purpose of applying Croston v. Vaughan.[1] There are no cross-contribution notices in this case under Ord. 16A, r. 12, and (as naturally follows) there are no directions. The question is purely whether or not Croston v. Vaughan[1] can be invoked. I do not think that it can.

1954

CALVERT v. PICK.

Gerrard J.

During the course of his judgment in that case Scott L.J. said[2]: "I agree with the judgment delivered by my colleagues "on this point, holding that he had jurisdiction and that it was "the intention of subsection (2) of section 6 of the Act of 1935 "that the trial judge should deal with the matter, and that he "had power to dispense with any formal application. And I am "inclined to think that it was open to the learned judge, even "if one of the parties had dissented, to exercise the jurisdiction "of that section if he thought fit. Reading that section as a "whole, I think it was the intention of Parliament that the "judge who had heard a case of primary liability at the instance "of a plaintiff should, with the knowledge of the facts as proved "in evidence before him, then and there assess the apportionment "not merely of the damage, but also of the blame."

That is a general statement of the intention and policy of section 6 of the Law Reform (Married Women and Tortfeasors) Act, 1935, to be derived from a consideration of the section. I do not say that I do not propose to invoke the Croston v. Vaughan[3] jurisdiction merely because I have not heard the question of primary liability at the instance of the plaintiff. I think that that might be taking too narrow a view, although it may be that that is what the Court of Appeal had particularly in mind, and they might think that the narrower view was the right one. But the view I take about the matter is that this action remains in the list purely as the result of a three-cornered arrangement made to keep one plaintiff in the action so that the court can try an issue between the two defendants—a plaintiff whose damages and costs have been paid. In my opinion the court ought not to be used in that way. Further, there are practical difficulties which seem to me to show that my approach is the right one. In an action brought by a plaintiff against two defendants in which the plaintiff succeeds against both, judgment is given for the plaintiff against both defendants with costs. At that stage of the proceedings there are the plaintiff's costs and the defendants' costs, and when the defendants come to fight out the issue between each other the things to be apportioned between them are not only the plaintiff's claim and his costs but also, it may be, some apportionment of the defendants' costs. That is always a possibility and that emphasizes the matter to me because I can have no knowledge of and no jurisdiction over the defendants' costs which have already been paid to the plaintiff and which will never come before me in these artificially constituted proceedings.

[1] [1938] 1 K.B. 540; 54 T.L.R. 54; [1937] 4 All E.R. 249.

[2] Ibid. 565.

[3] Ibid. 540.

It seems to me that this action has not followed the ordinary course and it has not followed the proper course; and although I would like to oblige the parties and decide the issue between the two defendants, I do not think that the court ought to be used in this way. The ordinary procedures should be followed. I do not mean to suggest that there has been any abuse of the process of the court. The whole matter has been done in completely good faith; but the plaintiff's action is dead in reality. He has been paid and he is on the record merely as a lay-figure to enable the parties to ask the court to settle the other part of the dispute, where for their own convenience they have not followed methods which would have avoided this difficulty but have used a method which has created a completely artificial situation. In those circumstances I do not propose to try the issue between the two defendants.

No order.

Solicitors: Norman Chinn, Son & Woolley; William Easton & Sons; Neil Maclean & Co.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

* JAMES ARCHDALE & CO. LD. v. COMSERVICES LD.

C. A.
Dec. 8. 1953
Somervell, Denning and Romer, L.JJ.

[1952 J. 6447.]

Negligence—Contract—Exceptions clause—Building contract—Redecoration of premises—Damage by fire—Contracting out of liability—General words—Whether including negligence—Clear intention of parties—Effect of provision for insurance.

C. A.

1953

James Archdale & Co. Ld. v. Comservices Ld.

Contract—Exceptions clause. Building—Contract—Standard agreement of Royal Institute of British Architects. Insurance—Provision for, in contract—Effect on liability inter partes.

A contract under which the plaintiffs employed the defendants to redecorate their premises, provided by cl. 14 (b) that the defendants should be liable for and should indemnify the plaintiffs against and should insure against any liability, loss or claim in respect of any injury or damage whatsoever to any property, real or personal, in so far as such injury or damage arose out of or in the execution of the works, and provided always that the same was due to any negligence of the defendants, their servants or agents, and "subject also as regards loss or damage by fire to the "provisions contained in cl. 15." Clause 15 (b) provided that the existing structures and the works and unfixed materials (except plant, tools and equipment) should be at the sole risk of the plaintiffs as regards loss or damage by fire and the plaintiffs should maintain a proper policy of insurance against that risk.

During the work of redecoration a fire, which was caused by the negligence of the defendants' servants, broke out on the plaintiffs' premises and damage was caused to the building. The plaintiffs claimed to recover the cost of repairs from the defendants, relying on the principle that general words in an exception clause do not ordinarily except the party seeking to rely on the exception from liability for his own negligence or that of his servants:—

Held, that the principle on which the plaintiffs relied had no application when the parties had clearly expressed their intention; it was no more than a rule of construction and had not the status of a rule of law; and that in so far as cl. 14 (b) referred to loss or damage by fire it was clearly the intention of the parties that it should be read subject to cl. 15 (b), under which the risk of fire was placed on the plaintiffs.

Decision of Hilbery J. affirmed.

Appeal from Hilbery J., sitting at Worcester Assizes.

The plaintiffs, James Archdale & Co. Ld., engineers and manufacturers of machinery, had employed the defendants, Comservices Ld., to redecorate their factory and office premises under a contract which was in the form of, and included all the matters contained in the standard agreement of the Royal Institute of British Architects, and schedule of conditions for building contracts, as issued in 1952.

By clause 14 (b) of the contract it was provided: "The "contractor shall be liable for and shall indemnify the employer "against and . . . shall insure against any liability, loss, claim or "proceedings in respect of any injury or damage whatsoever to "any property, real or personal, in so far as such injury or "damage arises out of or in the course of or by reason of the "execution of the works, and provided always that the same is "due to any negligence, omission or default of the contractor, his "servants or agents or of any sub-contractor or to any circum-"stances within the contractor's control; and subject also as "regards loss or damage by fire to the provisions contained in "clause 15 of these conditions."

By clause 15 (b): "The existing structures and the works "and unfixed materials (except plant, tools and equipment) shall "be at the sole risk of the employer as regards loss or damage "by fire and the employer shall maintain a proper policy of "insurance against that risk, which policy and the receipt for "the last paid premium for its renewal he shall upon request "produce for inspection by the contractor and, if any loss or "damage affecting the works is so occasioned by fire, the "employer shall pay to the contractor the full value of all work "and materials then executed and delivered calculated as pro-"vided by clause 9 of these conditions."

In the course of the redecoration a fire occurred on the plaintiffs' premises, causing damage to the building, machinery and plant, and the plaintiffs claimed against the defendants a sum of £2,858 in respect of the cost of repairs to the building, alleging that the fire was caused by the negligence of the defendants' servants, and that the defendants were liable under clause 14 (b) of the contract. The defendants disputed the claim, contending that fire risk was by clause 14 (b) made subject to clause 15 (b) which placed on the plaintiffs the duty to insure against fire.

Hilbery J. found that the fire was caused by the negligence of the defendants' servants. He held, further, that on the true construction of clauses 14 (b) and 15 (b) the defendants were protected from liability to indemnify the plaintiffs against damage by fire to the buildings.

The plaintiffs appealed.

Ryder Richardson Q.C. and Paul Layton for the plaintiffs.
F. W. Beney Q.C. and E. G. H. Beresford for the defendants.

SOMERVELL L.J. stated the facts and having read clauses 14 (b) and 15 (b), continued: Mr. Ryder Richardson for the plaintiffs referred us to the cases which have considered exception clauses in relation to the negligence of the party claiming the benefit of the exception. Any clause, of course, has to be considered according to its actual wording, but speaking generally one can summarize the cases, I think, in this way: that general words in an exception clause do not ordinarily except the party seeking to rely on the exception from liability for his own negligence or that of his servants. There is an exception to what I may call that prima facie approach if, on looking more closely into the subject-matter, it is found that substantially the only scope for the operation of the exception clause is the negligence of the servant of the person who is seeking the benefit of it. In that case although the words are general it has been construed as excluding a liability for negligence. The example of this exception to what I call the prima facie approach will be found in Alderslade v. Hendon Laundry Ld.[1]

I do not myself think that clauses which are concerned with what I call an ordinary exception clause in a contract, where

[1] [1945] K.B. 189; 61 T.L.R. 216; [1945] 1 All E.R. 244.

C. A.
1953
James Archdale & Co. Ld. v. Comservices Ld.
Somervell L.J.

there is a primary obligation under the contract, and then the exception clauses with which we are familiar, afford any great assistance in construing these two clauses, but no doubt it is right that one should bear in mind the decisions to which I have referred. I think it is worth noting (and this does relate to the principle applied in Alderslade v. Hendon Laundry Ld.[1]) that clause 14 (b) in the main operates on the negligence of the contractor or his servants or agents. It is true that it brings in negligence of a sub-contractor or, presumably, his servants or agents, for which, normally, at common law the contractor would not be liable. It also contains the, to me, rather cryptic words "or to any circumstances within the contractor's control." But it is worth bearing in mind that far the most probable scope of its operation would be the negligence of the contractor or his servants or agents.

Another point which I think has some importance is that both 14 (b) and 15 (b) contain obligations in the one case on the contractor and in the other case on the employer to insure, and one can quite well understand the importance of such a provision. Indeed, if one looks at 14 (b) it was unnecessary to set out that the contractor should be liable for the negligence of his own servants or agents, and so far as that part of the subject-matter is concerned the operating words are the obligation to insure. Having those two points in mind I am quite clearly of opinion that the judge was right and that the natural construction of these two clauses, read together, is that in so far as loss or damage by fire comes within the earlier wrods of 14 (b), that is to be taken out of 14 (b) and taken out altogether. It is then dealt with under 15 (b), under which, of course, the sole risk is on the employer, who has to insure.

These questions do not bear of much elaboration, but I think that the phrase which was referred to in argument, namely, "the employer shall maintain a proper policy of insurance "against that risk," tends, apart from what I may call the general layout of the two clauses, to reinforce the conclusion to which I have come. For these reasons I think that the judge came to a right conclusion, and I would dismiss the appeal.

Denning L.J. This is not the ordinary case of a clause simply providing who is to bear the loss. The clauses in this case are directed to the additional question: who is to insure? The contractor is to insure against the risk of injury to persons. He is also to insure against the risk of injury to property, save for this: the clause expressly states that loss or damage by fire is in a category by itself. The employer is to insure against the risk of fire. When viewed in relation to insurance it is quite plain that the risk of fire is on the employer however caused (even though it is caused by the negligence of the contractors' servants) and he is the person who must insure against it. I agree, therefore, with my Lord that the appeal should be dismissed.

[1] [1945] K.B. 189.

ROMER L.J. I also agree. The principle which was established or recognized by the cases to which Mr. Ryder Richardson referred us can and ought to be invoked wherever the parties to a contract leave their intention in doubt. But when the parties have clearly expressed what their intention is there is no necessity to refer to the principle. The principle is one of construction and no more, and it is not entitled to the status of a rule of law.

Construing clauses 14 (b) and 15 (b) of this contract by themselves I have little doubt but that they bear the meaning which my Lord has attributed to them, for the reasons which he has given. If so, it would be quite wrong to attribute a different meaning simply because of a principle of construction which has been evolved for the solution of cases of a similar type, but where the parties have not expressed themselves sufficiently clearly.

With regard to the suggestion that the employers are personally liable to pay the contractors for damage by fire caused to the work by the negligence of the contractors themselves, I think that the clause in that respect has been clumsily worded; but the intention of the parties, I think, is reasonably clear, and the draftsman's mind was directed to the receipt of the policy moneys under the insurance policy which is contemplated by the sub-clause and the payment was to be made only out of those moneys. I do not think, really, that that element throws very much light on the problem which we have to solve. I agree that the appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Gardiner & Co.; E. P. Rugg & Co. for Buller, Jeffries & Kenshole, Birmingham.

A. W. G.

[CHELMSFORD ASSIZES.]

* REGINA v. RIDER.

1953
Nov. 18.
Streatfeild J.

Criminal Law—Carnal knowledge—Defence—Reasonable belief that girl over 16 — "First occasion on which he is charged" — Committal on separate occasions in relation to different girls—Trial on one indictment—Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, s. 5 (1)—Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1922 (12 & 13 Geo. 5, c. 56), s. 2, proviso.
"Occasion"—"Charged."

[Reported by NIUL HOGG, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

1953

Regina
v.
Rider.

The accused, who was at all material times under the age of 23 years, was alleged to have had unlawful carnal knowledge of two girls, each of whom was under the age of 16 years, contrary to section 5 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885.[1] He was committed for trial by the justices, separately in respect of each girl, but was tried on one indictment in respect of both: the indictment containing two counts, each alleging an offence against one girl. For the purposes of the proviso to section 2 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1922[2]:—

Held, (1) that the accused was first "charged" when he was brought before a court having jurisdiction to determine the matter in question; i.e., in the circumstances, when he was brought before the assizes.

(2) That, although an indictment might contain several counts alleging offences arising out of different sets of circumstances, yet the trial on that indictment was one and the same "occasion" in respect of all of them; and that, therefore, the accused was entitled to claim that that trial was the first occasion on which he had been charged with such offence within the meaning of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1922, s. 2, proviso.

Regina v. Rogers [1953] 1 Q.B. 311; [1953] 2 W.L.R. 52; [1953] 1 All E.R. 206 applied.

Trial on indictment.

The facts appear in the judgment.

E. C. S. Russell for the accused.

F. H. Lawton for the Crown.

Case cited in argument: Regina v. Rogers.[3]

Streatfeild J. I have to rule upon this matter of law, which I do not think has arisen before, and is probably unlikely to arise again. I have to construe section 2 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1922, which amended section 5 of the Act of 1885. Section 2 of the Act of 1922 provides that reasonable cause to believe that a girl was of or above the age of 16 shall not be a defence to a charge under section 5 of the Act of 1885, provided, however, that in the case of a man of 23 years of age or under the presence of reasonable cause to believe that the girl was over the age of 16 years it shall be a valid defence on the first occasion on which he is charged with an offence under this section.

[1] Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885, s. 5: "Any person who:—(1) "Unlawfully and carnally knows . . . "any girl being of or above the age "of 13 years and under the age of 16 "years . . . shall be guilty of a "misdemeanour. . . . Provided that "it shall be a sufficient defence to "any charge under subsection (1) of "this section if it shall be made to "appear to the court or jury before "whom the charge shall be brought "that the person so charged had "reasonable cause to believe that the "girl was of or above the age of 16 "years."

[2] Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1922, s. 2: "Reasonable cause to "believe that a girl was of or above "the age of 16 years shall not be a "defence to a charge under sections 5 "or 6 of the Criminal Law Amend-"ment Act, 1885 . . . Provided that "in the case of a man of 23 years "of age or under the presence of "reasonable cause to believe that the "girl was over the age of 16 years "shall be a valid defence on the first "occasion on which he is charged "with an offence under this section."

[3] [1953] 1 Q.B. 311; [1953] 2 W.L.R. 52; [1953] 1 All E.R. 206.

The circumstances of the present case are somewhat unusual. The accused, who, at the material time, was under the age of 23, is charged under section 5 of the Act of 1885 in respect of two girls under the age of 16. He was committed for trial by the justices in respect of one of the girls and was then brought before the justices on a later occasion and committed in respect of the second girl. The case now comes before me on both charges, joined in one indictment. The accused claims that he is entitled to set up the statutory defence in respect, not only of the first girl, but of both girls, on the ground that, today, in this court is the first occasion on which he has been charged with an offence under this section.

Although it is unlikely that this situation was contemplated by the draftsmen of the Act of 1922, nevertheless I have to construe the words which are used, and rule on what is meant by a "charge" in section 2, that is to say, when is a charge made. It is agreed by counsel that, within the meaning of the section, a charge is not that which is stated by a police officer verbally to a man when he is charging him with an offence. The question is whether a man is "charged" before the justices, or whether he is only charged effectively when he appears before a jury on an indictment. I have come to the conclusion that the word "charge" in section 2 refers to a charge before a court which has jurisdiction to determine the matter in question. That may well be the justices, if they refuse to commit a man for trial. They hear the evidence as examining justices, they then determine the question whether there is a prima facie case for committal for trial, and if they find that there is not, that clearly would be a charge before a court having jurisdiction to determine it.

But if the justices, in fact, commit a man for trial they are not adjudicating on the case. The only thing that they have then determined is whether there is a prima facie case to answer, and if there is such a case they commit him. The accused is then brought before the assize court on indictment, and then, for the first time, he is before a court having jurisdiction to determine the matter.

The next question is this: Having decided that the "charge" within the meaning of this section is the charge on indictment before assizes, I have to decide what is meant by an "occasion" and whether it is one occasion or two occasions if a man appears on an indictment on two counts. Force is lent to the argument that in such circumstances it is two occasions when one bears in mind that there have been separate committals for trial, although by the same justices, but on separate occasions. But in this connection I must have regard to Regina v. Rogers,[1] in which

[1] [1953] 1 Q.B. 311.

1953

Regina v. Rider.

Streatfeild J.

the word "occasions" in sections 21 and 22 of the Criminal Justice Act, 1948, had to be construed.

It is true—as Mr. Lawton has submitted—that one must not necessarily come to the conclusion that a word in one Act bears precisely the same meaning as it does in another Act, but in sections 21 and 22 of the Act of 1948, there occur three times the word, "occasions," in connexion with previous convictions. The Court of Criminal Appeal held in Rogers' case [2] that where a man appears on one indictment and is convicted of two offences charged in separate counts of that indictment, the resulting conviction is only one occasion of a conviction. In those circumstances it seems to me to be difficult to put a different interpretation on the word "occasion" in the Act of 1922, holding, as I do, that the charge is made on the indictment.

I admit that the matter is not beyond doubt, but there is another principle that one ought to apply, namely, that section 2 with its proviso exists for the purpose of the liberty of the subject, and if there is any doubt in its construction I think that one ought to lean more in favour of the subject than against the subject. In those circumstances I have come to the conclusion, following, as I do, the principle of Regina v. Rogers,[2] that the occasion which is applicable is the occasion of his appearance before this court on two counts of one indictment, and it follows, therefore, that the accused is entitled to set up this defence in respect of both counts of the indictment.

Verdict: Not Guilty on both counts.

Solicitors: G. Houghton & Son, Romford; A. Morgan, Chelmsford.

[2] [1953] 1 Q.B. 311.

[CHANCERY DIVISION.]

1954 Feb. 9.

Roxburgh J.

* FRIEDMANN v. AUSTAY (LONDON) LD.

[1953 F. No. 1955.]

Legal Aid—Costs—Security for costs—Plaintiff out of jurisdiction—Security for defendant's costs—Action for account—R.S.C. Ord. 65, r. 6A—Legal Aid and Advice Act, 1949 (12 & 13 Geo. 6, c. 51), s. 1 (7) (b).

Account—Action for—Preliminary point—Agent—Letter inter partes possible basis of account—Writ indorsed in different terms—R.S.C. Ord. 15, r. 1.

In an action by a foreign plaintiff resident abroad, who has obtained legal aid, it is not practicable, from a business point of view, to apply a means test to him before deciding whether or not he should give security for costs. Nor would it be just to accept the certificate of the National Assistance Board in every case as sufficient evidence of means. In connexion with the quantum, the fact that he has obtained legal aid is relevant; and, in dealing with such a case, care must be taken not to exact a sum by way of security which might have penal consequences; but a legally aided foreign plaintiff resident abroad must not be allowed, by the operation of the Legal Aid and Advice Act, 1949, to obtain an advantage over a British resident not legally aided.

Observations of Somervell L.J. in Jackson v. J. Dickinson & Co. (Bolton) Ld. [1952] W.N. 9; [1952] 1 All E.R. 104 considered and applied.

PROCEDURE SUMMONS.

An action was commenced by Emil Friedmann, a German national, resident in Hamburg, against Austay (London) Ld., in which he claimed an account "of all goods bought and of all goods "sold by the defendant company as the result of introductions "made by the plaintiff and of the amount of commission due to "the plaintiff in respect thereof." He also claimed payment of the amount found due with interest and, in the alternative, damages for breach of contract.

The plaintiff made an interlocutory application to the master, by summons, in which he sought an order pursuant to R.S.C., Ord. 15, r. 1, that an account (in the terms above set out) might be taken "and that all necessary inquiries and directions be taken "and made and that provision be made for the costs of this "application."

This procedure summons was then taken out by the defendant company in which they applied "for an order that the plaintiff "give security for the defendants' costs in this action to the satis-"faction of the master on the ground that the plaintiff resides at "75 Brennerstrasse, Hamburg I, Germany, out of the jurisdic-"tion of the court, and that in the meantime all further proceed-"ings be stayed, and that the costs of this application be the "defendant's in any event."

Neil Lawson for the applicant company.
Immanuel Goldsmith for the respondent plaintiff.

Cases referred to in argument: Jackson v. J. Dickinson & Co. (Bolton) Ld.[1]; Evans v. Evans.[2]

ROXBURGH J. [after stating the nature of the plaintiff's claim in the action and the prayers in the summonses set out above, his Lordship continued:] The plaintiff—who, as I have said, is a German national resident in Germany—has obtained a legal aid certificate to take the proceedings which I have mentioned. The National Assistance Board have determined that his disposable income for the purposes of the legal aid certificate—I shall have to consider the relevance of this later—is under £156, that his disposable capital is nil and that his maximum contribution is nil.

[1] [1952] W.N. 9; [1952] 1 All E.R. 104.

[2] [1953] P. 41; [1953] 1 W.L.R. 127; [1953] 1 All E.R. 70.

1954

Friedmann v. Austay (London) Ld.

Roxburgh J.

Exactly how the National Assistance Board make determinations of the disposable income and disposable capital of foreigners resident abroad, I do not know. I am not questioning that what they have done is adequate for the purpose of the certificate, but I am wondering how far it is adequate for any other purpose.

The case has had a curious history. There is a written agreement under which the plaintiff is entitled to commission from the defendants, the terms of which are indeed by no means simple. A letter from the defendants to the plaintiff dated September 20, 1950, contains the following words: "For all deals "or transactions negotiated and successfully concluded through "your co-operation in finding buyers for goods offered through our "company"—that is the defendants—"we are prepared to give "you a share in the net profits of 50 per cent. after deduction "of necessary expenses during negotiations and/or any charges "for sub-commissions, etc., that might be payable to agents on "both sides. Statements of accounts of transactions will be open "for your inspection after each transaction." The case has had a rather curious history, because not only was this contract unstamped (that, perhaps, is not curious) but it seems that nobody has really paid very much attention to the letter hitherto. That the letter is somewhat difficult to translate into an account is, I think, undeniable; and all sorts of difficulties would arise in taking an account on the footing of that letter; but at the present moment I am not prepared to say that I think that it is so obscure as to be incapable of interpretation.

Ord. 15, r. 1, under which the first application is made, reads as follows: "Where a writ of summons has been indorsed for an "account" [if the defendant . . .] "does not after appearance, "by affidavit or otherwise, satisfy the court or a judge that there "is some preliminary question to be tried, an order for proper "accounts, with all necessary inquiries and directions now usual "in the Chancery Division in similar cases, shall be forthwith "made."

[His Lordship, considering the application, said that counsel for the plaintiff had withdrawn an admission that the plaintiff would be content with an account in the form indicated in the letter; and that it would be noticed that the form asked for in the writ did not coincide with the form set out in the letter. His Lordship continued:] It seems to me, at once, that there was a preliminary point to be tried, the preliminary point being: on what footing ought the account to be taken? This is a written contract of agency. Everybody knows that it is possible in certain circumstances to vary a written contract by calling the transaction collateral, while in other circumstances that procedure is not to be tolerated. Indeed, the demarcation between those two points of law is by no means so clear that anyone could say that this is not a preliminary point. Therefore, it did seem to me, and does seem to me that, the moment that counsel for the plaintiff says that he is not prepared to have an account on the footing of the letter, but wishes to have it on the footing of the writ, a preliminary point arises. Therefore, in my judgment, I ought not to make an order for an account at this stage. Indeed, it would be a pure waste of time and money because, if the plaintiff succeeds in his action to the full extent, the account would have to be taken again, twice in all; and that seems to me to be a most foolish procedure, and I do not propose to order an account at the present time for the reasons which I have given.

I come now to the other summons, the summons for security for costs. I think that I can fairly say that, if the plaintiff had not been legally aided, I should have had no hesitation in ordering security for costs. The plaintiff is a foreign national resident out of the jurisdiction, and there is no evidence that he has any assets in this country apart from what he may recover if he is fortunate in this action. I may add that, if the Court of Appeal had not already decided the major part of the question before me, I should have been equally doubtful as to what I ought to do with regard to a legally aided plaintiff, even though he is a foreigner resident out of the jurisdiction; but I have fortunately authoritative guidance on this matter from the Court of Appeal in Jackson v. J. Dickinson & Co. (Bolton) Ld.[1] In that case the plaintiff, who was ordinarily resident abroad, claimed as an assisted person damages for personal injuries, and the defendants applied for an order for security for costs. "Held: the plaintiff being resident out of the "jurisdiction, the fact that he was an assisted person did not "disentitle the defendants to an order for security." Of course, that case binds me (and I am indeed happy to be bound by it) and, therefore, it follows that the defendants are not disentitled to an order for security; but that case does not lay down, of course, that they are always entitled to it. I still have to consider what bearing, if any, the fact that the plaintiff is a legally assisted person has on the problem. I have no doubt it has some bearing, though I am not prepared to do what the Court of Appeal has not done and to say precisely what bearing it has.

In that case Somervell L.J. delivered the judgment, in which Jenkins L.J. concurred. What I am about to read was not the ratio decidendi or the whole case—I think that is quite clear—but, in passing, Somervell L.J. did say[3]: "The fact that he is an "assisted person may well be relied on as some indication that "a full order for costs will probably not be made against him, "but we have had the advantage of having read to us the certifi-"cate under which he became an assisted person, and, having "regard to the figures therein, it is plain that it may well be that "some order for costs may be made against him should he lose "the action."

Naturally enough, counsel for the plaintiff, laying very proper hold on those words, says that, as the plaintiff's contribution is to be nil, there is no justification for ordering security. First of all,

[1] [1952] 1 All E.R. 104; [1952] W.N. 9.

[3] [1952] 1 All E.R. 104, 106.

1954

Friedmann v. Austay (London) Ld.

Roxburgh J.

I do not think that it can be said that Somervell L.J. meant quite that, though undoubtedly the passage does raise difficulties. In the second place, I do not think that it is what the Lord Justice made the basis of his judgment. In the third place, it appears to me to raise procedural difficulties of great complication. It is perfectly true that the National Assistance Board figures are always looked at, when the question of ordering a legally aided person to pay costs is under consideration, and it is perfectly true that they are properly to be looked at; but nobody has ever suggested that they are conclusive even for that purpose. Indeed, it is quite plain that they are not conclusive for that purpose; though it is true that, as a matter of practical application, it is often difficult or impossible to get away from those figures. That is the position when one is dealing with somebody resident in this country. How the National Assistance Board carry out the means test with regard to a foreigner resident abroad, I have no idea. I should think that it was an extremely difficult problem. I am by no means satisfied, notwithstanding the certificate, that the plaintiff is without assets, or is a person who could not properly be ordered to pay some costs if he failed in the action, even though he has obtained a certificate which says that his income is under £156 a year and that he has no disposable capital.

In order to raise this procedural difficulty, I invited counsel for the plaintiff to put in an affidavit as to his means, warning him that, of course, his client might have to attend in this country to be cross-examined as to his means before the question of security for costs could be determined. I did that in order to indicate the procedural difficulties which would result if counsel's submissions were accepted; and counsel—and, if I may say so, quite obviously for a good reason—said that he did not want to do so, and there that matter ends. I am only mentioning it to show that I do not think it is feasible to apply a means test to a foreign plaintiff resident abroad before deciding whether or not he should give security for costs. Theoretically it is quite practicable, but I do not think it is practicable from a business point of view. Nor do I think that it would be just to persons resident in this country, if in every case a certificate of the National Assistance Board should be accepted as sufficient evidence of the means of a foreigner resident outside the jurisdiction. Therefore, and notwithstanding the able way in which counsel for the plaintiff put the case, I think that this is a case in which I ought to order some security for costs. Then comes the question of how much, for I have no intention of sending it back to the master on that point.

That is a difficult question. I think, in connexion with the quantum, that the fact that the plaintiff has obtained legal aid is relevant. Somervell L.J. appears to have said so, and I am of the same opinion. I think that one must be careful in dealing with such a case as this, not to exact a sum by way of security which might have penal consequences, although they were not intended; but, of course, one must hold the balance even. One must not allow the legally aided foreign plaintiff resident abroad to obtain an advantage over the British resident not legally aided by the operation of the Legal Aid and Advice Act; and, therefore, it must come down to a rather nice balance of consideration.

There is another point which is perhaps special to this case, though it may arise in some other cases. If this plaintiff had been content to rely on the written contract of agency, and to ask only for relief founded on that written contract, he would appear to me to have so strong a case prima facie—I am not of course, deciding the merits—that I should be inclined to put the figure as low as I could possibly put it, in order that he should not, perhaps, be penalized; but he has chosen to open his mouth, as I think, very wide. He may succeed. I am not saying that he will not, but everybody knows that it is not easy to vary the terms of a written contract and thereby obtain something more than the written contract purports to give. This legally aided and foreign plaintiff, resident abroad, has elected, when he could have had now, without trial, an account on the footing of the written instrument, to put his case as high as it possibly could be placed. I think that that should incline me to make the figure rather larger than I should otherwise have done; because I feel that he may well win what I originally offered to him and yet find that, on balance, he has more to pay than to gain; because, if he goes to trial on this issue of what the form of the account ought to be and fails, the costs of that issue may well swamp anything that might come to him under the account which he would not accept. I do not know whether that will be so or not, but it is a possibility.

Taking everything into consideration, I think that £40 is the proper security to order, and I have endeavoured to give my reasons, because I think this question is one of some general public importance. The action will be stayed until security in the sum of £40 is given. The costs of the two summonses will, by agreement, be costs in the action.

Solicitors: Kenneth Brown, Baker, Baker; Cardew-Smith & Ross.

J. L. D.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

* REGINA v. BIRKENHEAD BOROUGH JUSTICES. Ex parte SMITH.

1954
Feb. 9.

Lord Goddard C.J., Cassels and Slade JJ.

Justices—Committal warrant—Affiliation order—Order made against American soldier—Arrears of payments—American forces' immunity from arrest—Magistrates' Courts Act, 1952 (15 & 16 Geo. 6 & 1 Eliz. 2, c. 55), ss. 64 (1) and 74—Army Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 58, as re-enacted), s. 145—United States of America (Visiting Forces) Order, 1942 (S.R. & O. 1942, (No. 966) I, p. 844).
Military Law—Immunity from arrest. Bastardy.

[Reported by MISS ELAINE JONES, Barrister-at-Law.]

1954

Regina
v.
Birkenhead
Borough
Justices.
Ex parte
Smith.

The United States of America (Visiting Forces) Order, 1942, extends to American soldiers serving in this country the same privileges or immunities as were conferred by the Army Act on British soldiers; and therefore justices have no power to issue a warrant for the arrest of an American soldier for non-payment of money due under an affiliation order.

Application for an order of mandamus.

On April 17, 1953, the applicant obtained an affiliation order against Robert L. Warren, a soldier serving in the American forces in England. Payments under the order were made but they eventually became in arrear and the applicant applied to the justices at Birkenhead under sections 64 (1) and 74 of the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1952,[1] for the issue of a warrant to bring

[1] Magistrates' Courts Act, 1952, s. 64 (1): "Subject to the following "provisions of this Part of this Act, "and to section one hundred and "seven of this Act, where default is "made in paying a sum adjudged to "be paid by a conviction or order of "a magistrates' court, the court may "issue a warrant of distress for the "purpose of levying the sum or issue "a warrant committing the defaulter "to prison."

S. 74 (1): "Where default is "made in paying a sum ordered to "be paid by an affiliation order or "order enforceable as an affiliation "order, the court shall not enforce "payment of the sum under section "sixty-four of this Act except by an "order made on complaint.

"(3) A magistrates' court shall "not hear a complaint under this section except in the presence of the "defendant; and for the purpose of "securing his presence a justice of "the peace acting for the petty sessions area for which the court acts "may, if the complaint is substantiated on oath, issue a warrant to "arrest the defendant and bring him "before the court, whether or not a "summons has been previously "issued."

Army Act, 1881, s. 145 (1): "A "soldier of the regular forces shall be "liable to contribute to the maintenance of his wife and of his children, "and also to the maintenance of any "illegitimate child of which he may "be proved to be the father, to the "same extent as if he were not a "member of the regular forces; but "execution in respect of any such "liability or of any order or decree in "respect of such maintenance shall "not issue against his person, pay, "arms, ammunition, equipments, "instruments, regimental necessaries, "or clothing; nor shall he be liable "to be punished for the offence of "deserting or neglecting to maintain "his wife or family, or any member "thereof, or of leaving her or them "chargeable to any area or place.

"(2) When any order or decree is "made under any Act . . . or at "common law for payment by a "man who is or subsequently becomes a soldier of the regular forces "either of the cost of the maintenance of his wife or child, or of any "illegitimate child of whom he is the "putative father, . . . a copy of such "order or decree shall be sent to the "Army Council, or any officer deputed "by them for the purpose, and in the "case—(a) Of such order or decree "being so sent; or (b) Of it appearing to the satisfaction of the Army "Council or any officer deputed by "them for the purpose that a soldier "of the regular forces has deserted "or left in destitute circumstances, "without reasonable cause, his wife "or any of his legitimate children "under sixteen years of age, the "Army Council or officer shall order "to be deducted from the pay of the "soldier and to be appropriated in "liquidation of the sum adjudged to "be paid by such order or decree "(including any sum paid on account "thereof in accordance with the provisions of subsection (3) of this "section), or towards the maintenance of the wife or children of the "soldier, as the case may be, in manner directed by the order, such portion of the soldier's pay as the "Army Council or officer in their or "his discretion from time to time "think or thinks fit. . . ."

United States of America (Visiting Forces) Order, 1942, Sch. 2: "(3) "Subject as hereinafter provided, any "enactment (whether contained in the American soldier before the court that he might be committed for non-payment.

The proceedings took place on the footing that the defendant was still a soldier serving in the American Forces. The justices, expressing doubts as to their jurisdiction in the circumstances, refused to issue a warrant.

The applicant applied for an order of mandamus.

C. J. I. Cunningham for the applicant.

Sir Lionel Heald A.-G., Q.C., and J. P. Ashworth as amici curiae.

No cases were cited in argument.

LORD GODDARD C.J. referred to sections 64 (1) and 74 of the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1952, and continued: The justices who heard this case were faced with a point which was novel to them because, although they no doubt knew that American soldiers could not be brought before English criminal courts, that is to say petty sessional courts sitting in a criminal capacity, they felt some difficulty about the extent of their powers in a quasi civil matter, for a bastardy order is a civil matter although it may be enforced by imprisonment.

Accordingly we have to consider whether this is a case in which we should issue a mandamus. When the court is asked to issue an order of mandamus there is often more than one consideration: one is whether the court is entitled to issue mandamus; and another, subject to some limitations, is whether the court in the exercise of its discretion will issue a mandamus.

First of all let us see what is the position in law. In 1942 the Visiting Forces Act, 1933, was applied by the United States of America (Visiting Forces) Order, 1942, to American forces then about to visit the country. The Order was made on May 22, 1942, and it will be remembered and must be a matter of common knowledge of which we should take judicial notice that the declaration of war against Japan, which led to the Americans entering the war, took place in December, 1941; and their forces began to arrive in this country in working parties to get ready for the larger numbers due to arrive in 1942. So his late Majesty was pleased to apply the provisions, or some of the provisions, of "the Naval Discipline Act, the Army "Act, the Air Force Act or any other "statute) which— . . . (b) in virtue "of a connexion with the home forces "or any of them, confers a privilege "or immunity on any person; or (c) "in virtue of such a connexion, "excepts any property, trade or "business, in whole or in part, from "the operation of any enactment, or "from any tax, rate, imposition, toll "or charge; or (d) imposes upon any "person or undertaking obligations in "relation to the home forces, or any "of them, or any member or service "court thereof; or (e) penalises mis-"conduct by any person in relation "to the home forces or any of them, "or any member or service court "thereof, shall, with any necessary "modifications, apply in relation to "an American force as it would apply "in relation to a home force of a "like nature to the American force."

1954

Regina
v.
Birkenhead
Borough
Justices.
Ex parte
Smith.

Lord
Goddard C.J.

the Army Act to the American Forces, and he extended the Visiting Forces Act, 1933, to the United States of America.

[His Lordship read Schedule II, paragraph (3) (b) (c) (d) and (e) of the United States of America (Visiting Forces) Order, 1942, section 145 (1) of the Army Act and continued:] As I understand that, it seems to be perfectly clear that paragraph (3) (b) of the Order was intended to confer on American soldiers the same privileges or immunities as were conferred by the Army Act on British soldiers. The Army Act provides that the person or the pay of a British soldier cannot be taken in execution for the purpose of enforcing a bastardy order. Paragraph (3) of the Order in Council clearly extends that immunity to American soldiers. It would, therefore, seem to follow that if a court in this country is asked to make an order which can only result in commitment against an American soldier, the court would be right in refusing to do so because such an order would be contrary to the provisions of the Army Act, which has been extended to American soldiers.

Mr. Cunningham, who has argued this case with great ability and has put before the court everything that can be said on behalf of his client—and of course we have every sympathy with women who have obtained orders which cannot be enforced—has called our attention to various other matters and, in particular, to the following words of paragraph (d) in the Order in Council, "imposes "upon any person . . . obligations in relation to the home forces, "or any of them, or any member or service court thereof," and suggests that that, read together with section 145 (2) of the Army Act, imposes a duty upon the American Army authorities to deduct from the pay of the soldier some amount towards the payment of this bastardy order. [His Lordship read section 145 (2) and continued:] Any opinion we were to give upon that proposition would be obiter because what we are asked for is the issue of a warrant against the man; but I should be very sorry to think that we should have to construe this legislation to mean that his late Majesty in Council was purporting to impose a duty upon the American Command to make deductions from their soldiers' pay. That must be a matter for the American Government to consider if they choose to do so. Apparently the American army authorities did at one time make such deductions but now, as the Attorney-General has told us, this procedure has been changed. That is entirely a matter for the authorities concerned. We cannot construe this Order as providing that there is an obligation upon the American Army authorities to make deductions from service pay and if there were, the present procedure would not be the proper means of enforcing it. I do not think that Mr. Cunningham was suggesting that, but rather that, as such deductions were not being made from service pay, therefore, the remedy in the courts of law must be open to the applicant. I am afraid I cannot agree to that. There is an absolute prohibition from taking a man in execution so long as he is a member of the American Forces.

The justices at Birkenhead were, therefore, justified, on being told that this man was an American soldier and that the application was being made to them on the footing that he was an American soldier, in refusing to issue their warrant, and this court will not order them to do otherwise.

If, on the other hand, it was put that the justices at Birkenhead ought to have taken the view that the defendant was a civilian, the affidavits which have been filed in this court exhibit letters from the American Army authorities stating that he has gone abroad. Nobody has contradicted that, and although the letters relied on may not be strictly evidence there seems to be no doubt, if we look at the realities of the situation, that the man has gone abroad. I cannot, therefore, see what use it would be at the present time for the applicant to have an order, because if the justices did issue their warrant there would be no means of serving the defendant in America and no means of issuing execution upon him in America. He is not extraditable from America. Should he return to this country as a civilian the applicant would then be able to take proceedings against him. It is some satisfaction to hear from the Attorney-General that this matter is engaging the attention of Her Majesty's Government and it may be when the Visiting Forces Act, 1952, comes into operation some reciprocal arrangement will be made under which these bastardy orders may be enforced against either American soldiers or those who have been American soldiers. We cannot speculate on that.

In this case I am satisfied that the justices were right in refusing the order and, therefore, this application fails and must be dismissed.

CASSELS J. I agree.

SLADE J. I agree.

Application refused.
Order for mandamus refused.

Solicitors: Field, Roscoe & Co. for Berkson & Berkson, Birkenhead; The Treasury Solicitor.

[CHANCERY DIVISION.]

1954
Feb. 10.

Danckwerts J.

* WOODWARD v. EARL OF DUDLEY.

[1953 W. No. 4153.]

Agriculture—Agricultural holding—Notice to quit—Validity—Reference to part only of land — Joint tenancy — Tenant dying within three months—"Tenant" including tenants—Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948 (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 63), s. 24 (1) (2) (g)—Interpretation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict., c. 63), s. 1.

The provision in subsection 1 of section 24 of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948, that a notice to quit an agricultural holding requires the consent of the Minister is subject to the exception, inter alia, in subsection 2 (g) where "the tenant with whom the contract "of tenancy was made had died within three months before the "date of the giving of the notice to quit, and it is stated in the "notice that it is given" for that reason.

Landlord and Tenant. Statute — Construction — Singular including plural. Joint ownership.

An agricultural holding was let to the plaintiff's father and grandfather as joint tenants by a memorandum of agreement dated September 24, 1928. The father died on May 13, 1948, and the grandfather died on September 17, 1952. The plaintiff was the sole executor of the grandfather's will. On February 5, 1953, the landlord served a notice to quit on the plaintiff, which, on the face of it, referred to only part of the property comprised in the agreement of 1928.

The notice concluded: "The reason for giving this notice to quit "is as follows: The said E. C. W. [the father] died some years "ago and the said C. W. [the grandfather] died on September "17, 1952."

The plaintiff contended that the notice was invalid because: (1) it referred to part only of the property comprised in the tenancy, and (2) the word "tenant" in section 24 (2) (g) of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948, included the plural, and as both the tenants had not died within three months of the notice being given, it was ineffective:—

Held, that the plaintiff succeeded on both contentions so that the notice was ineffective.

In re Bebington's Tenancy [1921] 1 Ch. 559; 37 T.L.R. 409 followed.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS.

By a memorandum of agreement, dated September 24, 1928, and made between Edward Henry Loyd, the predecessor in title of the defendant as landlord, and Charles Woodward and Ernest Charles Woodward, who were respectively the grandfather and father of the plaintiff as tenants, the landlord agreed to let and the tenants agreed to take the property described as "the "messuage buildings and enclosures of land known as Jeffries "Farm situate in the Parishes of Abbots Langley and Kings "Langley in the County of Hertford containing eighty-seven acres "two roods thirteen perches (little more or less) more particularly "described in the First Schedule hereto and the enclosures of "land formerly part of the farm known as Langley Lodge Farm "situate in the said Parish of Kings Langley containing forty-five "acres (little more or less) more particularly described in the "Second Schedule hereto," subject to certain exceptions not here material.

The first schedule referred to Jeffries Farm, Kings Langley, and contained a statement of the various fields which aggregated 87 acres, 2 roods, 13 perches. The second schedule contained a reference to two fields "or part of Langley Lodge Farm" aggregating 45 acres. In the aggregate, the tenancy was created in regard to 132 acres, 2 roods and 13 perches of land; it was a tenancy for a year and then from year to year.

The plaintiff's father died on May 13, 1948, and his grandfather died on September 17, 1952. The plaintiff obtained probate of his grandfather's will, of which he was the sole executor, on May 9, 1953. On the terms of the memorandum of agreement the father and the grandfather were joint tenants of the farm.

On February 5, 1953, before the grant of probate, a notice to quit was served by the solicitors for the defendant, the present landlord. It was headed "Notice to Quit," and was in these terms: "As solicitors for . . . your landlord we hereby give you "notice to quit and deliver up to your landlord on September 29, "1954, or at the expiration of twelve months from the end of "the now current year of your tenancy possession of the "messuage buildings and enclosures of land known as Jeffries "Farm situate in the parishes of Abbots Langley and Kings "Langley in the County of Hertford containing 87 acres 2 roods "13 perches or thereabouts and more particularly described in "the agreement dated September 24, 1928, made between "Edward Henry Loyd of the one part and Charles Woodward "and Ernest Charles Woodward of the other part and which "said premises are held from year to year. The reason for "giving this notice to quit is as follows: The said Ernest Charles "Woodward died some years ago and the said Charles Woodward "died on September 17, 1952." The notice to quit was dated February 5, 1953, signed by the solicitors and directed to "the "personal representatives of Charles Woodward deceased (the "surviving tenant under the above-mentioned agreement), the "occupiers of Jeffries Farm, the President of the Probate, Divorce "and Admiralty Division, High Court of Justice, and to all others "whom it may concern."

It appeared from the defendant's evidence that the managing clerk in charge of the matter in the solicitors' office intended to serve a notice to quit relating to the whole of the land comprized in the agreement of September 24, 1928. He drafted a notice and then gave it to a typist and directed her to copy the parcels from the agreement in question into the notice. She failed to copy the whole of the parcels on the first page of the body of the agreement, and ignored the schedule showing that there were another 45 acres included in the agreement as well as the 87 acres, 2 roods, 13 perches referred to in the notice itself.

1954

Woodward v. Earl of Dudley.

As the notice to quit was not compared and checked with the agreement, the managing clerk did not discover the error until the notice had been sent to the tenant.

The plaintiff served a counter-notice on February 12, 1953.

The tenant by this summons asked for a declaration that the notice to quit was invalid on the ground: (1) that it referred to part only of the land comprized in the tenancy, and (2) that it failed to comply with section 24 of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948.*

A. C. Goodall for the plaintiff.
H. F. J. Teague for the defendant.

Cases cited in argument are set out in the judgment.

Danckwerts J., having stated the facts, continued: The notice on its face plainly does not refer to the whole of the land comprized in the agreement of September 24, 1928. In fact, if it were desired to give notice for the part of the land relating only to Jeffries Farm, it is difficult to think of a more effective way of calling attention to the fact that the notice related only to that part of the land.

The first ground given by the plaintiff, the tenant and present occupier, for alleging that the notice is bad is that, as the notice refers only to part of the land included in the tenancy, the notice to quit is bad on well-established principles. It is plain from In re Bebington's Tenancy,[1] and other cases, that a notice to quit which refers only to part of the land included in the tenancy is invalid and ineffective.

But Mr. Teague, for the landlord, has argued on the authority of Doe d. Rodd v. Archer,[2] that, as it is obvious that the landlord could not have been expected to want to give a bad notice, the notice must be construed in such a way as to give it an effect in law, and it must, therefore, be treated as a notice referring to the whole of the land included in the agreement of tenancy. It is further contended that Jeffries Farm has for long been used as a method of describing not only the land originally known as Jeffries Farm but that part of the farm formerly called Langley

* The Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948, s. 24: "(1) Where notice to "quit an agricultural holding or part "of an agricultural holding is given "to the tenant thereof, and not later "than one month from the giving of "the notice to quit the tenant serves "on the landlord a counter-notice in "writing requiring that this subsec-"tion shall apply to the notice to quit, "then, subject to the provisions of the "next following subsection, the notice "to quit shall not have effect unless "the Minister consents to the opera-"tion thereof. (2) The foregoing "subsection shall not apply where ". . . (g) the tenant with whom the "contract of tenancy was made had "died within three months before the "date of the giving of the notice to "quit, and it is stated in the notice "that it is given by reason of the "matter aforesaid."

[1] [1921] 1 Ch. 559; 37 T.L.R. 409.

[2] (1811) 14 East 245.

Lodge Farm which was included in the tenancy. In Doe d. Rodd v. Archer [2] there were certain circumstances which aided the court in reaching the conclusion that the notice there referred to the manor house or mansion on the property and the notice added the word "etc." In those circumstances, it was possible for the court to reach the conclusion which it did. Mr. Teague also referred to Doe d. Cox and Others [3] and Doe d. Armstrong v. Wilkinson,[4] but those cases have little to do with the present case, because they refer to property which was included in the tenancy, and, though there was a mistake in the name of the property, it was perfectly obvious that the notice was referring to property held by the tenant from the landlord, the tenant in those cases holding no other property. They do not therefore assist me in reaching the conclusion which I ought to reach in the present case.

In Hankey v. Clavering,[5] it was pointed out by Lord Greene M.R. that the matter of giving a notice to quit has always been treated as a matter of technicality, and one cannot get out of difficulties merely by saying that there was an obvious mistake, and by saying that the notice which does something wrong should be treated as doing something right. In that case the date of December 21 was referred to, though it was a mistake for December 25, which is the quarter day, when the tenancy would be likely to end. None the less, though the mistake was purely inadvertent, the court refused to cure the mistake in the notice to quit and held that it was ineffective. It is quite plain that the notice in the present case is bad, because it refers in the most definite terms possible to part only of the property included in the relevant tenancy.

That is sufficient to dispose of the case, but I will also consider another point made against the landlord which arises under section 24 of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948.

[His Lordship read section 24 (1) and (2) (g) of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948, and continued:]

The reference in the notice to quit to the deaths of Ernest Charles Woodward and Charles Woodward was an attempt to bring the matter within the terms of paragraph (g). It seems clear to me, however, that the terms of the paragraph do not apply in the circumstances of this case. It appears from section 1 of the Interpretation Act, 1889, that words in the singular in a statute are capable of being treated as the plural. There were two tenants in this case, Ernest Charles Woodward and Charles Woodward. The notice must therefore be read in the following way: "The tenants with whom the contract of tenancy was "made having died . . ." but the "tenants" with whom the contract of tenancy was made was both Ernest Charles Woodward and Charles Woodward. They did not both die within three months before the date of giving the notice to quit, because Ernest Charles Woodward, the father of the plaintiff, died in

[2] 14 East 245.
[3] [1803] 4 Esp. 185.
[4] [1840] 12 A. & E. 743.
[5] [1942] 2 K.B. 326; [1942] 2 All E.R. 311.

1954

Woodward
v.
Earl of Dudley.

Danckwerts J.

1948. The wording of paragraph (g) is such that this case falls outside its terms. Although it is possible that the matter was never considered by the legislature, who would have treated it differently had it been brought to their notice, I have to consider the actual words contained in the statute. It seems to me that no construction of those words is possible other than that which I have stated.

It is argued by Mr. Teague that this paragraph does not apply to the case of a joint tenancy, because joint tenants hold per mie et per tout, and their tenancy is regarded as one and the whole. It is true that there is only one tenancy, but it does not alter the fact that the tenants with whom the contract was made are two persons and not simply one. There is nothing in the terms of the paragraph to include the survivor of the two joint tenants or the survivor of a number of tenants. It is plain that both or all tenants, if they were more than one, must have died within three months of the date of the giving of the notice to quit in order that the terms of the paragraph may be applicable.

This construction is supported by a number of cases in which the court has had to construe the reference in statutes to one person where the position is that there are several persons involved, and it has been decided that where there are several persons involved the singular includes the plural. See, for instance, T. M. Fairclough & Sons Ld. v. Berliner,[6] McIntyre v. Hardcastle,[7] Weatherall & Co. Ld. v. Stone and Others.[8]

In Howson v. Buxton[9] a liberal construction was given in the circumstances of that case, or was suggested as applicable, by Scrutton L.J., but the other members of the court decided the case on somewhat different grounds. That case was very different from the present. It does not seem to me that it is possible, however liberal one may be in one's desire to construe paragraph (g), to give any meaning to it other than that which the words contain and that which I have already stated.

In the absence, therefore, of the consent of the Minister, the landlord is also unable to succeed on this point on the construction of the words of the statute. Accordingly, I am of opinion that the application by the tenant is successful.

I will declare that on the true construction of the notice to quit dated February 5, 1953, and also having regard to section 24 (2) (g) of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948, the notice to quit is not valid or effective to determine the tenancy now vested in the plaintiff and created by the memorandum of agreement.

Declaration accordingly.

Solicitors: George Tilling & Knight, for Norman E. Kelly, Watford, Herts; Taylor & Humbert.

I. G. R. M.

[6] [1931] 1 Ch. 60; 47 T.L.R. 4.
[7] [1948] 2 K.B. 82; 64 T.L.R. 260; [1948] 1 All E.R. 696.
[8] [1950] W.N. 572; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 2) 1095; [1950] 2 All E.R. 1209.
[9] [1928] 97 L.J.K.B. 749.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

* V. M. SALGAONCAR E IRMAOS OF VASGO DE GAMA v. GOULANDRIS BROTHERS LD.

1954
Feb. 8, 12.

Devlin J.

Shipping — Charterparty— Demurrage—Lay time—Calculation—Cargo to be shipped "at the rate of 600 tons when vessel is in a berth "and 350 tons whilst in stream."

The number of lay days allowed under a charterparty which provides, "The cargo is to be shipped at the rate of 600 tons when "vessel is in a berth and 350 tons whilst in stream" per day, are ascertained by applying the formula:—

$$\frac{\text{Quantity loaded in berth}}{600} + \frac{\text{Quantity loaded in stream}}{350}$$

SPECIAL CASE stated by an umpire.

By a charterparty dated London, November 27, 1952, the charterers, V. M. Salgaoncar e Irmaos of Vasgo de Gama, chartered the steamship "Granford" to load a cargo of iron ore of 9,200 tons 10 per cent. more or less at captain's option for discharge at Antwerp or Rotterdam on the terms and conditions therein mentioned. The charterparty contained inter alia the following clauses: "(2) That the said ship . . . shall after "delivery of her outward cargo, proceed with all convenient "speed to Mormugao (Portuguese India) and there load at one "or two safe berths in charterers' option always afloat in the "customary manner when, where and as soon as ordered by "shipper's agent a full and complete cargo of iron ore, say "9,200 tons, 10 per cent. more or less at captain's option . . . "and being so loaded, shall with all convenient speed proceed "to Antwerp or Rotterdam . . . (5) The cargo to be shipped "at the rate of 600 tons when vessel is in a berth and 350 tons "whilst in stream and to be discharged at the rate of 1500 tons "per clear working day of 24 consecutive hours (weather per-"mitting), Sundays and holidays always excepted . . . (6) Time "for loading to count from 8 a.m. after the ship is reported and "ready, and in free pratique (whether in berth or not), and for "discharging from 8 a.m. after ship is reported and in every "respect ready, and in free pratique, whether in berth or not. "(8) Demurrage (if any) at the rate of £300 and part day pro "rata per running day. Owners to pay despatch money at half "demurrage rate on all time saved both ends. (9) Charterers "to have the right to average the days allowed for loading and "discharging."

Disputes having arisen between the parties in pursuance of a clause in the charterparty they appointed arbitrators who being unable to agree appointed an umpire.

The following facts were not in dispute and were stated in the umpire's award: The "Granford" loaded in Mormugao a cargo of 9,600 tons of iron ore, and discharged her cargo at

1954

V. M. Salgaoncar e Irmaos v. Goulandris Brothers Ld.

Rotterdam in accordance with the charterers' directions, the outturn quantity weighing 9,473·239 tons. Notice of readiness at Mormugao was given at 4 p.m. on January 30, 1953, and was effective at 8 a.m. on Monday, February 2, 1953, whereafter the charterers were allowed a further 48 hours in pursuance of clause (2) of the charterparty. The vessel completed loading on March 9, 1953, at 10 a.m. The vessel commenced discharging in Rotterdam on April 10, 1953, at 3 p.m. and completed on April 11, 1953, at 10 p.m. The lay time allowed for discharging the cargo at Rotterdam was 6 days 7 hours 34 minutes. The charterers exercised their right to average the days for loading and discharging pursuant to clause (9). The vessel loaded in Mormugao 2,020 tons while in stream and 7,580 tons while in berth.

The disputes between the parties concerned the method of calculating the lay days at the loading port of Mormugao. The charterers contended that they were entitled first to ascertain the times the vessel was in the stream and in berth respectively and then to multiply those times by the quantities the vessel was obliged to load as a minimum in accordance with clause (5). The owners submitted that one calculated the lay days by ascertaining the quantity loaded at each place, i.e. in stream and in berth, and then dividing it by the rate appropriate to each place. The umpire came to the conclusion that the clause was to be interpreted in accordance with the owners' formula and made an award in their favour subject to the approval of the court.

Ashton Roskill Q.C. and Desmond Neligan for the charterers.
Sir Robert Aske Q.C. and B. B. Goodden for the owners.

Compania de Navigacion Zita S.A. v. Louis Dreyfus et Cie.[1] was cited in argument.

Cur. adv. vult.

Feb. 12. Devlin J. read the following judgment: This is one of those cases like Compania de Navigacion Zita S.A. v. Louis Dreyfus et Cie.[1] in which the parties have introduced a refinement into the ordinary method of calculating lay-days. It is now usual, instead of providing for a fixed number of days, to provide for loading at a daily rate. If the exact quantity of cargo to be loaded was known in advance, the number of lay-days could be specified exactly in advance by dividing the quantity by the daily rate. But the exact quantity is not usually known; in the present case it may vary between 8,280 tons and 10,120 tons, and in fact turned out to be 9,600 tons. It is, therefore, fairer to leave the lay-days to be fixed retrospectively instead of trying to estimate the correct number in advance. But it is well settled that the lay-days when they are ascertained in this way have just the same effect as they would have if they had been inserted in the clause from the beginning.

[1] [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1399; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1359.

The refinement in this case is that instead of there being one daily rate, there are two. A daily rate is, of course, an estimate based on what the ship ought with reasonable diligence to be able to do, and must depend to some extent on the facilities afforded at the port of loading. It appears that in Mormugao, the port of loading in this case, the vessel may not get a berth and may have to do the whole or part of her loading in the stream —I suppose from lighters. That will take much longer than in berth; so the charterparty, by a special typewritten addition to clause (5), provides for two rates—600 tons a day in berth and 350 tons a day in stream.

The owners submit that this presents no difficulty in the calculation of the lay-days. When there is one loading place the lay-days are fixed by ascertaining the total quantity loaded and dividing it by the daily rate. Where there are two loading places the method is just the same, except that one calculates two figures instead of one and adds them together: instead of taking the whole quantity loaded, one takes the quantity loaded at each place and divides it by the rate appropriate to that place. The same method would be followed, the owners say, if, for example, the charterparty provided for different loading rates for different cargoes.

The charterers say that one must calculate the lay-days day by day as one goes along. For each day the ship is in the stream one debits her, so to speak, with 350 tons; then, if she moves to a berth, one debits her for each day with 600 tons, and when the total debit reaches 9,600 tons, the quantity loaded, she has exhausted the lay-days.

The reason why the two calculations produce a big difference in this case is that out of the 15 working days which the vessel spent in the stream she was loading only on the last three days; for the first 12 days, or thereabouts, she lay idle. To illustrate the difference simply, let me assume that after 12 days in the stream doing nothing the ship had moved to a berth and loaded her whole cargo there. On the owners' calculation the lay-days would be 16, i.e., 9,600 divided by 600. That would be the charterers' calculation too if the waiting days in the stream were ignored. But if those days are counted the lay-days are 21, arrived at as follows:

12 days in stream at 350	4,200
9 days in berth at 600	5,400
21 days	9,600

The charterers submit that one must count the waiting days because that is what clause (5) requires: "The cargo to be "shipped at the rate of 600 tons when vessel is in a berth and

1954

V. M. Salgaoncar e Irmaos v. Goulandris Brothers Ld.

Devlin J.

350 tons whilst in stream." The fallacy in the owners' calculation, they submit, is that it counts only the days on which loading takes place and treats the clause as if it read: "The "cargo to be loaded (shipped) at the rate of 600 tons when "vessel is loading in a berth and 350 tons whilst loading in "stream."

In my judgment, the clause is to be construed as if it contained the words I have put in italics, because I think that the sense and object of the charterparty as a whole plainly so requires. When the ship is in the stream, she is there either because for some reason or other she cannot load at all or because she is using it as a loading place instead of a berth. If she is in the stream waiting to load, it is the intention of the charterparty that, as is usual, she should be at the charterers' expense, that is, that the lay-days should run during the waiting period. Clause (6) provides: "Time for loading to count from 8 a.m. "after the ship is reported and ready, and in free practique "(whether in berth or not). . . ." The reduced loading rate is, I think, intended to apply only when the stream is actually being used as a loading place and is not intended to bring indirectly relief to the charterers in respect of the waiting period. The typewritten addition to clause (5) must be construed as part of a clause dealing with the calculation of the lay-days and the computation of loading time; so construed, it is, I think, plain that the words "whilst in stream" do not refer to the mere presence of the vessel in the stream, but mean while she is loading in the stream. The scheme of clauses (5) and (6) is that the lay-days are to be calculated on the assumption that loading will begin as soon as the vessel is reported and ready and will proceed at the rate of 600 tons if in berth and 350 tons if in stream.

If this construction is given to clause (5), the difference in result between the two calculations must be considerably narrowed, if not eliminated. If the charterers' calculation did not begin until the ship actually started loading, I am not sure whether there would be any difference in the results produced by the two methods. If there is, it is because the charterers' method is affected by the actual movements of the ship, for example, whether she loads first in berth or in stream. In my judgment, the actual movements of the ship are irrelevant to this calculation. Clause (5) is not really prescribing what the ship has actually got to do. It is setting a standard by reference to which the lay-days can be calculated. The lay-days are not intended to be made more or less according to the directions which may be given to the ship. The only thing in this type of clause that depends on actuality is the exact quantity of the cargo loaded in each place; if that were known in advance, the exact period for loading could be specified in the charterparty. I think that follows from the observations of Lord Sumner in Love & Stewart Ld. v. Rowtor S.S. Co. Ld.[2]; and as I considered the same sort of point recently in Compania de Navigacion Zita S.A. v. Louis Dreyfus et Cie.,[3] I need not elaborate it here.

[2] [1916] 2 A.C. 527, 535.

1954

V. M. Salgaoncar e Irmaos v. Goulandris Brothers Ld.

Devlin J.

The point is, however, well illustrated by one aspect of this case. If the loading time is greater than the lay-days, the charterers' method, by which the ship, as it were, consumes the lay-days until they are eaten up and then goes on demurrage, can, whether it be right or wrong, be made to work. But suppose the loading time is less than the lay-days: suppose the ship finishes loading in stream with 700 tons to her credit and then moves into a berth where she keeps pace exactly with the prescribed rate. How is the time saved to be assessed? Before the ship moved into berth she had saved two days. But if she had not saved them she would have used only an additional one day and four hours to complete her loading in berth. Mr. Roskill argues that the saving should be assessed at the rate appropriate to the place where the ship ends up. It is true that if the loading of 700 tons had not been accelerated the ship would have been detained for only one day and four hours if she remained in her berth; but she might have been moved back into the stream again. Although the umpire was wrong in thinking that this point arose directly on the figures in this case, I think he was right in regarding it as a difficulty in the way of the charterers' argument.

In my judgment, the owners' method of calculating the lay-days, which as Sir Robert Aske submits is the simple and obvious way of doing it, cannot be successfully attacked.

Solicitors: Sinclair, Roche & Temperley; Stokes & Mitcalfe.

C. J. E.

[3] [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1399, 1404.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

* REGINA v. HIGHGATE JUSTICES. Ex parte PETROU.

1954 Jan. 27.

Lord Goddard C.J., Byrne and Parker JJ.

Justices—Costs—Penalty in guise of costs—Order for costs exceeding costs of prosecution.

The manager of a club was summoned before justices under the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, on charges relating to the sale and supply of liquor at the club. The secretary was also summoned to show cause why the club should not be struck off the register. At the conclusion of the hearing the justices were informed that the costs of the prosecution amounted to 21 guineas. They convicted the manager, fined him £10 and ordered him to pay 20 guineas costs. They further ordered the secretary to pay £100 costs and they ordered the club to be struck off the register. On an application by the secretary for an order of certiorari:—

Held, that the order against the secretary was a penalty under the guise of an order for costs and one which the justices had no power to make.

1954

Regina
v.
Highgate
Justices.
Ex parte
Petrou.

Application for an order of certiorari.

The applicant, Helen Costas Petrou, was the owner of premises which she let to one Reeves for use as a club of which she acted as secretary.

Ten summonses were issued against Reeves charging him, as manager of the club, with offences relating to the sale of liquor without a justices' licence, contrary to section 65 (1) of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, and the supply of liquor other than during permitted hours, contrary to section 4 of the Licensing Act, 1921, and calling on him to show cause why the club should not be struck off the register under section 95 (1) of the Act of 1910. A summons was also issued against the applicant as secretary to show cause why the club should not be struck off. At the conclusion of the hearing the justices were informed that the costs of the prosecution amounted to 21 guineas. The justices then convicted Reeves, fined him £10, and ordered him to pay two guineas costs on each of the 10 summonses. They also ordered the applicant to pay £100 costs and the club to be struck off the register.

The grounds of the present application were (a) that the justices had no power to inflict a fine or penalty on the applicant under section 95 (1) of the Act of 1910; (b) that, in the circumstances, by ordering the applicant to pay £100 costs the justices were in substance imposing a fine on the applicant and (c) that they had exceeded their jurisdiction and acted improperly.

Norman King for the applicant.
S. A. Morton for the justices.

Lord Goddard C.J. stated the facts and continued: I regret that any bench of justices could have acted as these justices did. They were not imposing costs on the applicant; they were imposing a penalty on her when she had not been convicted of any offence, but had only come before the court to show cause why the premises should not be struck off the register. Under the guise of making an order for costs, the justices inflicted a penalty of £100, which could only have been intended as a penalty. Since, by their order against Reeves, they had satisfied the costs of the prosecution apart from one guinea certiorari will go and I shall direct that the papers be sent to the Lord Chancellor.

Byrne, J. I agree.

Parker J. I agree.

Application granted with costs.

Solicitors: A. L. Philips & Co.; Sir Clifford Radcliffe.

J. D. P.

[CHANCERY DIVISION.]

* SERVILLE v. CONSTANCE AND ANOTHER.

1954
Feb. 17.

Harman J.

[1954 S. No. 372.]

Passing Off—Sport—Boxing championship title—Foreign title—No confusion between plaintiff and defendant—Plaintiff no reputation in this country.
Slander of title.

The plaintiff became the "Welter-weight Champion of Trinidad" in December, 1952, and came to England in 1953. He found that the first defendant (who had in fact defeated him in Trinidad in September, 1952), was styling himself as the "Welter-weight "Champion of Trinidad" and "Welter-weight Champion of the "British West Indies." The defendant well knew that he had no right to the first title; the second did not exist. The plaintiff brought an action and launched a motion (treated as the trial) to restrain the first defendant and his manager from permitting the first defendant to assume those titles, or from passing him off as the holder of those titles.

The plaintiff was not able to prove that the first defendant had acted with an intention to injure him, or that he knew that the plaintiff had become the accredited champion:—

Held, that since the plaintiff had not proved that he held any reputation in England, or that there was any possibility of confusion in the minds of the public between the plaintiff and the first defendant, confusion, an element essential to an action for passing off, was lacking and the motion must be dismissed.

Hines v. Winnick [1947] Ch. 708; 63 T.L.R. 520; [1948] 2 All E.R. 517 distinguished.

Semble, that had the plaintiff been able to prove malice he would have had a good cause of action for slander of title.

MOTION treated as trial of the action.

The plaintiff, Hugh Serville, a native of Trinidad was recognized as the "Welter-weight Champion of Trinidad." He asked the court for an injunction to restrain the defendants, Hector Constance, also a native of Trinidad, and his manager Jack Burns, from permitting the first defendant to assume the titles of "Welter-weight Champion of Trinidad" or "Welter-weight "Champion of the British West Indies," or passing himself off as the holder of those titles. The facts are set out in the judgment.

Edward Grayson for the plaintiff.
Arthur Bagnall for the defendants.

Cases referred to in argument: Batty v. Hill[1]; Balden v. Shorter[2]; Draper v. Trist[3]; Forbes v. Kemsley Newspapers

[1] (1863) 1 Hem. & M. 264.
[2] [1933] 1 Ch. 427.
[3] [1939] 3 All E.R. 513.

1954

Serville v. Constance.

Ld.[4]; Franks v. Weaver[5]; Hines v. Winnick[6]; Loudon v. Ryder (No. 2)[7]; McCulloch v. Lewis A. May[8]; National Starch Manufacturing Co. v. Munn's Patent Maizena and Starch Co.[9]; Spalding & Bros. v. A. W. Gamage Ld.[10]; Tallerman v. Dowsing Radiant Heat Co.[11]

Harman J. This is an action between two young coloured men, natives of the island of Trinidad, each of whom has crossed the seas to this country in order to pursue his fortune with his fists. The plaintiff is the later-comer of the two; he arrived here only in December, 1953. He found the first defendant well established in the world of fisticuffs and describing himself and being described as "Welter-weight Champion of Trinidad." As the plaintiff himself was in fact and in right the "Welter-weight "Champion of Trinidad," he had some cause of complaint. Nothing can be said in defence of the conduct of the first defendant or of Mr. Burns, his manager, both of whom must, in my judgment, have known perfectly well that the first defendant was not the "Welter-weight Champion of Trinidad." The very experienced manager employed by the first defendant must have known the rule in the constitution and regulations of the British Boxing Board of Control, which provides: "A promoter shall "not bill a boxer or publish in the press that the boxer holds a "particular title unless he has fully satisfied himself that the "boxer is officially recognized as holding such title." Mr. Burns could have taken no such steps, because he would have found, if he had made the slightest inquiry into the matter, that his protégé had never held the title of "Welter-weight Champion of "Trinidad." A postcard is exhibited showing the first defendant in a pugilistic attitude on which it is stated "Hector Constance, "Welter-weight Champion of Trinidad: sole manager, Jack "Burns, . . ." I doubt not that so describing himself was of considerable assistance to the first defendant, but he was not content with that description: he went on to call himself "Champion of the British West Indies." There is no such title as "Champion of the British West Indies," as he must have been aware, but I suppose that it gave him an added status.

When the plaintiff arrived here he had been recognized for a year in Trinidad as the welter-weight champion. He was so recognized by the local board of control which performed functions similar to those of the British Board of Control in this country, and was entitled to name the champion at any weight.

[4] [1951] 2 T.L.R. 656.
[5] (1847) 10 Beav. 297.
[6] [1947] Ch. 708; 63 T.L.R. 520; [1948] 2 All E.R. 517.
[7] [1953] 1 Ch. 423; [1953] 2 W.L.R. 863; sub nom. Lewis's Declaration of Trust, Lewis v. Lewis, Lewis v. Ryder [1953] 1 All E.R. 1005.
[8] [1947] W.N. 318; [1947] 2 All E.R. 845.
[9] [1894] A.C. 275.
[10] [1915] W.N. 151; 31 T.L.R. 328; 32 R.P.C. 273.
[11] [1900] 1 Ch. 1.

The plaintiff, having become welter-weight champion of Trinidad in December, 1952, defended his championship title in November, 1953. He came to this country in December, 1953. It is fair to say that the defendant had come to England in September, 1952, before the plaintiff had been declared champion, and that earlier in 1952 the defendant had, in a ten-round contest, defeated the plaintiff. The plaintiff said that he made a complaint at the offices of the British Boxing Board of Control about the defendants' representations, but that he did not get any satisfaction. He had a coloured man for his manager, and there was a faint suggestion that he was fobbed off by the board, but there is little evidence about it and I am not in a position to say whether that was so or not.

The plaintiff obtained a licence from the British board, but he found, none the less, that he could not get any engagements, which he attributed to the fact that the first defendant was going about clothed in his feathers and had acquired a considerable reputation in the ring in this country, which probably he owed more to the readiness of his fists than to the title to which he wrongly laid claim. Nevertheless, a title of that sort is obviously a matter of importance, as shown by the regulation which I have read, and it gives a man a certain start in the world which will enable him to get engagements.

The plaintiff discovered that the defendant was billed to appear at the Albert Hall in a boxing tournament on Tuesday, January 26. The defendant was billed to box against somebody known as George Happe, and he was described as "Champion of the British West Indies", which, of course, he was not, because such a title did not exist.

The plaintiff consulted a solicitor on Friday, January 22, so that there was not much time before the fight took place. The solicitor applied to the legal aid committee for an emergency certificate for his client, but this action has not, in the events which have happened, involved any expense to the public. The solicitor rang up the British Boxing Board of Control, who by their secretary, one Waltham, told him on Saturday, January 23, 1954, on the telephone, that the British Boxing Board of Control had ample power to deal with this kind of dispute and that it was not worth the plaintiff's while to take legal proceedings in the matter, because the board would dispose of his complaints more quickly and effectively. That is true, because a board of control of this nature has absolute command over those who make their living by following the sport in question. It is the greatest pity that that hint was not taken and that the matter was not referred at once to the board.

Instead, the writ in this action was issued on Tuesday morning, January 26, and an application was made to me on the same day ex parte, the urgency alleged being that the fight was to take place that night at the Albert Hall, and that it was essential that relief should be given, otherwise, it was argued, the whole

1954

Serville
v.
Constance.

Harman J.

proceeding would be stultified. I did not feel that it was a matter in which to grant that kind of relief; but it appears that some notice appeared in the press of what passed on that occasion and, as a result, the first defendant, to whom no letter about the complaint had been written before action, went with his manager to ask the board what he should do, and he was told that he must withdraw his claim as champion. The master of ceremonies for that evening at the Albert Hall was told that he must not, when introducing the defendant in the ring, describe him any more as "Welter-weight Champion of the British West "Indies."

The result was, that in the next edition of the board's bulletin, which is sent round to their members and also communicated to the press, a notice appeared with the assent of the defendant and his manager in these words: "Boxer Hector "Constance. Hector Constance wishes it to be known that he "does not make claim to be the Welter-weight Champion of "Trinidad or British West Indies. Promoters are therefore "instructed not to bill or advertise in any way that Constance "is the holder of either of these titles." That notice, in fact, gave the plaintiff all that he needed. An offer was also made when the motion first came on for hearing, and before the evidence was complete, of an undertaking substantially to the same effect. But the plaintiff refused it because he was not offered his costs, and therefore the time of the court has been occupied for a day and a half arguing in effect about who shall pay the costs of an action which was, in the circumstances of the case, unnecessary.

The legal problem which, in consequence, I have to decide, is not an uninteresting one. It is, I think, clear enough that the defendants were slandering the title of the plaintiff, or uttering what the law sometimes calls an injurious falsehood about the plaintiff. That the plaintiff had a cause of action against the defendants under that head I do not doubt. The leading modern case on the subject is Balden v. Shorter,[1] a decision of Maugham J. But the gist of that action is what the law knows as malice. It is not possible to succeed against a man for slander of title unless it can be proved that he uttered the slander, knowing it to be untrue, with the object of causing injury, or with what in other connexions lawyers call a by or sinister purpose. The plaintiff here admits that he is not in a position to prove that the defendants acted with intention to injure him. He is not in a position to prove that the defendants knew that he, the plaintiff, was the accredited welter-weight champion of Trinidad, and therefore those advising the plaintiff elected not to rest their claim on that cause of action.

Instead of that, this action has been dressed up as a passing-off action, or, as was said in the course of the argument, a colourable imitation of a passing-off action; and as such it seems to me to be a complete novelty. It is said that the championship of Trinidad is the plaintiff's stock-in-trade, and that whosoever steals that is passing himself off in a sense as the plaintiff, and that confusion will arise if there be two Harrys in Harry's coat. It was claimed that he is entitled to an injunction to restrain the defendants from using, in connexion with pugilistic activities, the title of "Welter-weight Champion of Trinidad" or any other style resembling the style or title of the plaintiff, or which is calculated to lead to the defendant Constance being confused with the plaintiff as a boxer under that style, or to lead the public to believe when they see the first defendant box that they are watching the performance of the "Welter-weight Cham-"pion of Trinidad." That, as I have said, seems to me something entirely new.

[1] [1933] 1 Ch. 427.

The action of passing off, without going into the metaphysics or the origins of it, which appear to be doubtful enough, is essentially a cause of action arising out of confusion. That element is entirely lacking here; there is no confusion here between Hector Constance and Hugh Serville. Nobody believes, when he sees Hector Constance in the ring, that he is looking at Hugh Serville. There is no likelihood of the one person being mistaken for the other. The plaintiff cannot allege, as it would be necessary for him to allege, in the statement of claim that the words "Welter-"weight Champion of Trinidad" when applied to a boxer mean to the English public the plaintiff and the plaintiff alone. The answer is that nobody in this country knows anything about the plaintiff. He only came here in December, 1953, and he has no reputation here to protect. The words "Welter-weight Champion "of Trinidad," if they point to anybody in this country, point to the defendant, who appears to have been successful, and is, I suppose, known to some extent by those who attend boxing matches. This is, therefore, so to speak, the opposite of a passing off action—it is the unknown seeking remedies against the known. It is not the well-known trying to stop the unknown from stealing his reputation.

I may also point out that to be a champion is to be here today and gone tomorrow. There is nothing inherent to the plaintiff's self or boxing career in being a champion; two minutes in the ring may on any day easily see the end of it. It is a curious view that one should be able to obtain the permanent remedy of injunction against a defendant from representing himself as being the champion, when that defendant may by hitting the plaintiff sufficiently hard on the morrow become in fact the champion. This is not, therefore, a case of passing off at all; none of the essential elements of passing off is involved. It occurred to me for the first time during the hearing to regret the desuetude of ordeal by battle as a method of trial.

1954

Serville v. Constance.

Harman J.

It was argued that this case was analogous to Hines v. Winnick,[2] a recent decision of Vaisey J., where the plaintiff had become identified in broadcasts with a certain Dr. Crock; "Dr. Crock and his Crackpots" had become the sobriquet of the plaintiff there, and he had the right to protect that reputation. He had become identified with Dr. Crock, so that when the words "Dr. Crock" were mentioned on the wireless, the plaintiff would be recalled to the listener's mind; but, when "the Welter-weight Champion of Trinidad" is mentioned to the boxing enthusiast, it is most unlikely that he will say: "Ah, that "is the plaintiff"; he has never heard of the plaintiff. That line of cases does not therefore help the plaintiff at all.

I do not propose to enlarge further on the law, because on the facts the essential element cannot even be predicated. Although the plaintiff had great reason to complain of what the defendants did, he has chosen the wrong remedy.

Mr. Bagnall, for the defendants, very properly admitted (a) that the plaintiff is at the present moment holder of the welter-weight championship of Trinidad; and (b) that the first defendant is not, and to give an undertaking not, so long as the plaintiff holds that championship, to represent that the first defendant holds it.

In the circumstances I propose to make no order except that the applicant must pay the costs of the motion and the action.

Action dismissed.

Solicitors: S. M. Fruitman; Barnett, Janner & Davis.

I. G. R. M.

[2] [1947] Ch. 708; 63 T.L.R. 520; [1948] 2 All E.R. 517.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

C. A.

1954
Feb. 12, 15.

Somervell, Birkett and Romer L.JJ.

* S.A. MARITIME ET COMMERCIALE OF GENEVA v. ANGLO-IRANIAN OIL CO. LD.

Shipping — Charterparty — Time — Right to substitute vessel "at any "time"—Clause—Construction.

Contract—Construction — Commercial document — Application of rules applicable to other documents—Surplusage.

By a charterparty shipowners contracted to provide the charterers with a named vessel for a series of voyages over a stated period. Clause 38 of the charterparty provided: "Owners have the liberty "of substituting a coiled vessel of similar size and position at any "time before or during the charterparty and owners undertake to "give charterers reasonable notice of such intention." Before the first voyage the owners notified the charterers of their intention to substitute an identical vessel for the named vessel. Thereafter the substituted vessel fulfilled the charterparty until compelled to go into dry dock for repairs. The owners then proposed to substitute the originally named vessel for the remainder of the charter voyages and so informed the charterers. The latter refused to accept the substitution on the ground that clause 38 gave the owners liberty to make only one substitution and they had already exercised that liberty before the commencement of the charterparty. The owners claimed damages for breach of charterparty:—

Held, that the charterparty must be looked at as a whole, and as it was for a succession of voyages, before and during which the shipowners were given liberty to substitute a vessel similar to the named vessel, the natural meaning was that they could substitute whenever it became convenient to do so.

Decision of Devlin J. [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1379 affirmed.

Appeal from Devlin J. on a special case stated by an umpire.[1]

By a charterparty dated March 27, 1951, between S. A. Maritime et Commerciale of Geneva (the shipowners) and Anglo-Iranian Oil Co. Ld. (the charterers) the shipowners' tank motor vessel Driade was chartered to carry oil from the Persian Gulf to the United Kingdom by a series of voyages over a period between September, 1951, and September, 1952.

Clause 38 of the charterparty provided: "Owners have the "liberty of substituting a coiled vessel of similar size and "position at any time before or during this charterparty and "owners undertake to give charterers reasonable notice of such "intention."

On August 7, 1951, the owners informed the charterers that their tank motor vessel Nayade, which was a younger sister-ship of the Driade, would be performing the charterparty. Thereafter the Nayade carried out a number of chartered voyages until in August, 1952, she had to go into dry dock for repairs. The owners then advised the charterers that they proposed substituting the Driade, under clause 38, for the remainder of the charter. The charterers declined to accept this substitution on the ground that the owners had already exercised their liberty of substitution under clause 38, by nominating the Nayade for the Driade before the commencement of the charterparty.

In view of the charterers' refusal to accept the Driade, the owners of that vessel found alternative employment for her and claimed damages for breach of charter. The matter went to arbitration, and the umpire stated for the decision of the court the question whether on the facts and on the true construction of the charterparty the substitution of the Nayade for the Driade by the notice of August 7, 1951, constituted a final exercise of the option conferred on the owners by clause 38.

Devlin J. answered the question in the negative and gave judgment for the shipowners for the alternative award of damages made by the umpire.

The charterers appealed.

[1] [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1379.

C. A.
1954
S.A. Maritime et Commerciale of Geneva v. Anglo-Iranian Oil Co. Ld.

John Megaw Q.C. and Michael Kerr for the charterers. Burton v. English,[2] Alexander v. Vanderzee,[3] Ashforth v. Redford,[4] and Bowes v. Shand[5] were referred to.

Eustace Roskill Q.C. and B. B. Goodden, for the shipowners, were not called on for argument.

Somervell L.J., having stated the facts and read the material clauses of the charterparty, said:—The charterers objected to the substitution of the Driade for the Nayade on the ground that under clause 38 there should be only one substitution. There is what I will call a subsidiary point which I at one time thought might be conclusive. I will mention it though it is not necessary for me to consider it. It was argued below by Sir Robert Aske, who then appeared for the shipowners, that on the basis for which the charterers contend, namely that the clause only allows one substitute, there was here only one substitute because there were only two vessels involved, the original Driade, named in the charterparty, and the Nayade. As was pointed out, however, the original substitution was indefinite in period and would have been effective if the Nayade had done all the voyages in the 12 months. There had therefore to be a further notice to replace the Nayade by the Driade in the 12 months. If there had been a substitution which was expressly for one voyage or for one month only different considerations might have arisen. I therefore do not think that there was clearly only one substitution.

I will proceed, as did Devlin J., on the basis that the point to be decided is whether this clause provides for only one substitution or whether it provides for successive substitutions, if the owners so require, for the different voyages which might fall under the agreement. Devlin J. said: "I do not think that the language "of the clause gives any indication, on the surface of it, one way "or the other. I say 'on the surface of it' because Mr. Megaw "has analysed it and he relies upon certain matters in the words "as supporting his construction; but there is nothing on the face "of it, no clear phrase, that is a signpost of one meaning or the "other." I agree with that in this sense: there are certain things which can only happen once for all. I gave an example in the course of the argument. If a man undertook to marry A to B before or after a certain date the parties would normally be contemplating only one ceremony. I think that if these words in this contract were by their context restricted to a thing which could be only contemplated as happening once they would not be inapt words and would not have to be distorted in order to cover such a situation. But I am quite clear in my own mind that as a matter of English they are capable of covering successive substitutions. On the construction for which the charterers contend the words "at any time" are in my opinion mere surplusage.

[2] (1883) 12 Q.B.D. 218.
[3] (1872) L.R. 7 C.P. 530.
[4] (1873) L.R. 9 C.P. 20.
[5] (1877) 2 App.Cas. 455.

Although one finds surplusage in contracts and deeds and in Acts of Parliament one leans towards treating words as adding something rather than as mere surplusage. I think that these words are capable of meaning that at any time before, or at any time during, the charterparty the owners may have the liberty of substituting for the first, second or other voyage another vessel, provided she is of similar size. I think that is their natural meaning in this contract.

It was suggested that the judge was going outside what is to be gathered from the agreement itself and the intention of the parties as found in its terms. I do not think that he was, although one might fix upon a sentence or two which looked as if he might be doing so. If he did proceed on that basis, with great respect he would be wrong. I think that this document has to be considered, as other documents, having regard to its provisions as a whole. There was no suggestion that there are here words used in some technical or trade sense. This being a charterparty under which the vessel originally named is to perform successive voyages, or as many as she can, and the owners are given liberty to substitute, I think that the natural meaning is that they can do so whenever it may become convenient. For these reasons I think that the judge came to the right conclusion and I would dismiss the appeal.

Birkett L.J. referred to the facts and continued: Mr. Megaw says that the words of clause 38, read in their primary meaning and on their true construction, mean that the owners can substitute once, but that having done that their powers are exhausted and they cannot do so again. He said, secondly, that if the words are not quite capable of being so simply and clearly disposed of, and there is an ambiguity, then there is a clause which is in favour of the owners and the ambiguity must be resolved in favour of the other party. He says, further, that if there be an ambiguity then the judge was not entitled to do what he purported to do, namely to discuss and decide what was the commercial object of clause 38; and finally, that if the judge was entitled to do that he went wrong in so doing.

I think, for my own part, that those words "a coiled vessel of "similar size and position at any time before or during this "charterparty," read in the context of the charterparty itself and the other clauses, quite clearly mean that the owners were taking power under the charterparty and the additional clauses to say, "At any time before the charterparty comes into opera-"tion, or at any time during the continuance of the charter-"party, we have the liberty of substituting a coiled vessel of "similar size and position." I think this case is vastly different from a case where one voyage only was contemplated. When there is a long series of consecutive voyages it seems to me that these words are not really ambiguous at all. In the context in which they are set I think that that is the true, ordinary and reasonable meaning and I should be in favour of dismissing the appeal.

C. A.
1954

S.A. Maritime et Commerciale of Geneva v. Anglo-Iranian Oil Co. Ld.

Romer L.J. I agree. I think if one takes clause 38 by itself one could legitimately construe it either in the way contended for by the charterers or in the way relied on by the shipowners without doing undue violence to the language used. But it is not permissible to construe one clause in isolation from the others. Mr. Megaw drew our attention to certain other indications in the charterparty which he relied upon as supporting the view that only one substitution was in contemplation and permitted under clause 38. For example, he drew our attention to the fact that whereas in clause 38 the words are "at any time "before or during this charterparty," in some other clauses the words used are "and/or," as, for example, in clause 1; and to certain other indications of that kind. If one looks at the charterparty as a whole, and takes into consideration the duration of the charter and the purposes and objects which the parties had in mind, as disclosed expressly or as a matter of legitimate inference from the charterparty itself, and attributing proper weight to every clause, I think that the original ambiguity (which, as I have said, does exist in clause 38 if taken by itself) disappears, and the clause accordingly should be construed in the sense which my brethren have indicated. I agree that the appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: William A. Crump & Son; Stokes & Mitcalfe.

A. W. G.

[CHANCERY DIVISION.]

1954
Feb. 18.

Vaisey J.

* In re BRANSBURY, decd.
GRECE v. BRANSBURY.

[1953 B. No. 3289.]

Power of Appointment—General power—Nature as absolute property—Advancement—Grant of general power by will before 1926*—Exercise of power by will after* 1925*—Whether appointment "constituted "or created before the commencement of" the Trustee Act,* 1925*—Powers over real or personal property—Trustee Act,* 1925 (15 Geo. 5, c. 19), s. 32.

A testator who died in 1921 made a disposition in trust "for "such person or persons and in such manner as my wife shall "from time to time by will or codicil appoint." The wife, who died in 1934, by her will made in August, 1926, exercised the power by creating certain trusts under which infants took contingent beneficial interests.

A summons was taken out to ascertain whether the discretionary power of advancement conferred by section 32 of the Trustee Act, 1925, could be exercised in respect of the funds so appointed:—

Held, that the power being a general power, the trusts created by its exercise did not have to be read into the instrument creating the power; so that the trusts were "constituted or created" after the coming into force of the Act, and the trustees were authorized to make advancements pursuant to section 32.

In re Gordon and Adams' Contract [1914] 1 Ch. 110, and observations of Lord Romer in Williams v. Muir [1943] A.C. 468, at p. 483 applied. In re Batty [1952] Ch. 280; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 412; [1952] 1 All E.R. 425 distinguished.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS.

Henry Bransbury, who died in 1921, by his will made in 1915 and a codicil made in 1919, made a disposition on trust "for such "person or persons and in such manner as my said wife shall "from time to time by will or codicil appoint."

The wife, who died in 1934, by her will made in August, 1926, exercised the power of appointment by declaring that her trustees were to hold the property subject to the power "upon "and subject to the same trusts powers and provisions for the "same person or persons and in the same manner in all respects" as the trusts declared in relation to her own residuary estate; which was so settled that certain infants were entitled to shares, contingently on attaining a certain age and on surviving their parents.

Section 32 of the Trustee Act, 1925, which authorizes trustees to advance beneficiaries with contingent interests, provides by subsection (3): "This section does not apply to trusts "constituted or created before the commencement of this Act."

A question arose whether the statutory power of advancement could be exercised in respect to the funds appointed by the wife, and the trustees of both wills (who were the same persons) took out a summons for the determination of the question.

H. E. Francis for the trustees.

A. J. Belsham, C. D. Myles, and P. W. Taylor for the defendants.

The following cases were referred to in argument: In re Batty[1]; In re Gordon and Adams' Contract[2]; Williams v. Muir[3]; Venables v. Morris.[4]

VAISEY J., after stating the facts: There is no doubt that, so far as the testatrix's own estate is concerned, section 32 of the Trustee Act, 1925, is applicable, so that the powers of advancement can, without any fetter or doubt, be exercised for the benefit of the children entitled in remainder. But a doubt has arisen as

[1] [1952] Ch. 280; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 412; [1952] 1 All E.R. 425.
[2] [1914] 1 Ch. 110.
[3] [1943] A.C. 468.
[4] (1797) 7 Term Rep. 342.

1954

Bransbury, decd., In re.

Vaisey J.

to whether that applies also to the funds which were handed to the trustees of her will by virtue of the appointment to them under the will of her late husband, and I am asked to determine whether or not, in the events which have happened, the power of advancement conferred by section 32 of the Trustee Act, 1925, is exercisable by the plaintiffs as the trustees of the will and codicil of the testator in respect of the capital of the trust funds representing the residuary estate in favour of the infant beneficiaries.

That question, in my judgment, is not aptly framed, because, the appointment having been made in terms by the testatrix to the trustees of her own will, I think that the trusts of the husband's will have long since come to an end. She might have said and declared "that the trustees of my husband's will shall "hold the same upon and subject to the same trusts as I have "declared in respect of my own residuary estate," but she did not. She appointed out and out, and the effect of the appointment was to direct the trustees of the husband's will, if they had been independent persons, to hand over the funds to her own trustees to be held on the same trusts as those declared regarding her own residuary estate. I think the proper answer to this question—I will anticipate my conclusion—is a declaration that the power of advancement conferred by the section is exercisable by the plaintiffs as trustees of the testatrix's will both in respect of the capital of the trust funds which originally represented the residuary estate of her husband, as well as in respect of the property which formed part of her own residuary estate.

I regret that this summons seems to have been instigated in some measure owing to a decision of my own in In re Batty,[1] of which the headnote reads: "Where a will, which confers a "power of appointment, takes effect before January 1, 1926, and "that power is exercised by an instrument executed after that "date, the trusts set up by the later instrument are, for the pur-"poses of section 32 (3) of the Trustee Act, 1925, 'constituted' "before the commencement of that Act; and the trustees have "no statutory power to make advancements under the provisions "of that section."

That headnote does not state, as the headnote in another report[2] does, that I was dealing with a special power. I did say at the outset of my judgment that I was dealing with a special power; and I did not go out of my way to say "This decision "has nothing to do with a general power, and nothing I say "must be considered as expressing any view that a special power "and a general power stand in any relevant respects on the same "footing." I will not refer to my judgment, from which I see no ground to depart.

I think, as regards a special power, that the ordinary rule applies, which is this. Where a special power is exercised—and remember always that a special power is a power which has to be exercised by a person in the capacity of a trustee, so that it is a fiduciary power—the document exercising the power is read back into the original document on this kind of footing: the document creating the power indicates an area within which the fund has to be allocated, and the document exercising the power fills in what still remains in doubt as to how, among those objects in that limited range, the fund appointed is to go. I should like to make it perfectly clear, if it was not clear before, that my own decision in In re Batty [3] applies, and was intended to apply, exclusively to the powers which are called either special powers or—as they are called in the classic text book of Farwell on Powers—limited powers.

[1] [1952] Ch. 280.

[2] [1952] 1 All E.R. 425.

Now, does that rule, that the provisions by which a special power is exercised have to be read into the original document creating the power, apply in any way to a general power? In my judgment, I should have thought it was a matter of very clear principle. So far as personal estate is concerned, at any rate, there is no shadow of doubt at all that that principle does not apply in any respect, either applying the rule against perpetuity or any other rule, to a general power. The nature of a general power has been stated many many times and in many places. I should like, in this connexion, to refer to In re Gordon and Adams' Contract,[4] the facts of which are not relevant but which contains some very valuable statements, I think, about the law in this respect.

It was held there that, the general power of appointment having been fully exercised by a widow, there was a resettlement of the estate; and, there being no outstanding interests or charges having priority over that resettlement, the original settlement created was at an end, and the following observations were made by Cozens-Hardy M.R.[5]: "Then it is said that the "appointment has to be read into the instrument creating the "power, and therefore" that certain consequences followed. "I am quite unable to assent to that view. The law has made "a clear distinction between general and special powers. A "special power must be read into the instrument creating it, but "that cannot be treated as applicable to general powers." Then he quotes a passage from the second edition of Farwell on Powers in these words: "'There is an important distinction between "'general and particular powers in this respect. The donee of a "'general power is virtually absolute owner of the property over "'which his power extends; and he is to be regarded as absolute "'owner for the purpose of considering the application of the

[3] [1952] Ch. 280.
[4] [1914] 1 Ch. 110.
[5] Ibid. 113.

1954

Bransbury, decd., In re.

Vaisey J.

"'rule against perpetuities to him.'" In my judgment, he is equally to be considered as absolute owner of the property for the purpose of creating trusts which take effect whether under statute or otherwise, in just the same way and in the same manner and in the same consequences as the donee of the power can do with his own property.

Swinfen Eady L.J. said[6]: "This is a case in which there "is a general power of appointment which has been fully exer-"cised." This case is the same. "The whole estate has been "resettled, and there are no interests or charges having priority "to the resettlement. The original settlement is entirely at an "end," and the conclusion was reached which I have already indicated. Now, that decision seems to me to be, I should have really thought, with due respect to everybody concerned, almost a platitude or an axiom.

There is another case to which I referred in In re Batty,[7] and that was Williams v. Muir.[8]. There is a passage in the speech of Lord Romer which puts the point with a force and a conciseness with which we are familiar in the judgments and speeches of that very learned judge. He said[9]: "if a person "be given a general power of appointment over certain property "he is virtually the owner of that property. If and when he "exercises the power the interests of his appointees come to "them by virtue of and are created by the deed of appointment. "In the case of a special power it is very different." Now, that difference is the difference which I desired to emphasize, and which I now again reiterate, in In re Batty.[10] I think that the exercise of a general power, and in this case particularly, is such as to destroy altogether the limitations, qualifications and provisions of the earlier document—that is, the document creating the power—and to bring into operation the new power which derives its force and originates in the later of the two documents exclusively.

Declaration accordingly.

Solicitors: Loxley & Preston for G. Lewis F. Grece, Redhill; Eland, Nettleship & Butt.

F. R. D.

[6] Ibid. 114.
[7] [1952] Ch. 280.
[8] [1943] A.C. 468.
[9] Ibid. 483.
[10] [1952] Ch. 280.

[COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL.]

* REGINA v. MABER.

1954
Mar. 1.

Lord Goddard C.J., Pilcher and Slade JJ.

PRACTICE NOTE.

Criminal Law — Sentence — Probation order — Breach — Charge of — Probation order and statement of breach in respect of which charged to be included in papers.

APPLICATION for leave to appeal against sentence.

The applicant was charged with and pleaded Guilty before a court of summary jurisdiction to a breach of a probation order and was committed to London Sessions for sentence when she received a sentence of borstal training. The probation order was not sent to the sessions nor was it before the Court of Criminal Appeal. The applicant applied for leave to appeal against sentence.

PILCHER J. The application is refused, but inasmuch as it appears that the probation order for the breach of which she was charged was not sent to the sessions, the court wishes to say that where a person is charged with breach of a probation order, the probation order together with a statement of the breach in respect of which the charge was brought should be with the papers in the case.

J. F. L.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

* DRUMMOND v. BRITISH BUILDING CLEANERS LD.

1954
Feb. 8, 9, 10, 17.

Pilcher J.

[1951 D. No. 2398.]

Negligence—Safe system of work—General precautions—Window-cleaning—Outside of sash window cleaned by window-cleaner standing on sill — Method recognized by trade — Fall of window-cleaner — Commercial impracticability of instituting system reducing hazards —Employers' liability.

The plaintiff, an experienced and efficient window-cleaner employed by the defendants, was cleaning the outside of a first-floor sash window by standing on a sloping sill outside the window and holding on with one hand by a finger grip under the bottom of the top sash when his foot slipped, his finger hold was wrenched away and he fell to the ground. The window and sill were of sound construction and in good condition. Above the top sash was a transom and above that a fanlight. Although the plaintiff had a safety belt none of the windows in the building had eye-bolts or hooks to which it could be attached. The plaintiff was not instructed to hitch the rope attached to his safety belt round the transom above the window nor to use a ladder provided by the defendants. In an

1954

Drummond
v.
British
Building
Cleaners
Ld.

action by the plaintiff alleging negligence on the part of his employers and claiming damages in respect of his injuries:—

Held, that the evidence did not justify a finding that in causing or permitting the plaintiff to clean the window from the sill the defendants were in breach of their common law duty to provide a safe system of work; that the method adopted by the plaintiff was the one by which upper storey sash windows were almost invariably cleaned and was the normal and general method in the trade; and that there was no way of reducing its hazards unless eye-bolts were available, and it was commercially impracticable for window-cleaning firms to refuse to clean sash windows unless eye-bolts were installed outside each window or to insist on the provision of cradles; accordingly, the defendants, acting as reasonable and prudent employers, had not been guilty of any lack of care for the plaintiff's safety.

General Cleaning Contractors Ld. v. Christmas [1953] A.C. 180; [1952] 2 All E.R. 1110 distinguished.

Observations of Lord Oaksey and Lord Tucker in General Cleaning Contractors Ld. v. Christmas [1953] A.C. 180, 190, 192, 198, 199 and of Lord Normand in Paris v. Stepney Borough Council [1951] A.C. 367, 382; [1951] 1 All E.R. 42 applied.

Action.

On November 14, 1949, the plaintiff, an experienced and efficient window-cleaner with a good head for heights, had for about three years been in the employment of the defendants, a company carrying out the general cleaning and window-cleaning of offices and other premises. The defendants' practice was to pay their employees 50 per cent. of the contract price for any particular job, a system under which the men had an incentive to work expeditiously and usually earned more than if they had been paid by time. One of the defendants' contracts was for the monthly cleaning of windows in Bovril's factory, a building with some 700 windows which, during his employment by the defendants, the plaintiff and his squad had cleaned many times.

On November 14, 1949, the plaintiff was cleaning a first-floor window, some 21 feet above the ground, in Bovril's factory. It was an ordinary sash type window with two panes in the top and two in the bottom sash. Above the top sash was a transom and above that a fanlight. Both sashes were about three feet in height and the whole construction of the window and its woodwork was solid and well maintained. In order to clean the outside of the window the plaintiff, adopting the "jumping" method, stood on a sloping sill seven inches long, also in good condition, outside the window. Having cleaned the panes of the top sash he pushed the bottom sash nearly down leaving himself a finger grip under the bottom of the top sash. He was holding on to this with his right hand and squatting down to clean the bottom of the left hand pane with his left hand when his right foot slipped, his finger, or hand, hold was wrenched away, and he fell into the yard below, receiving serious injuries.

The plaintiff was provided with a safety belt, with an eight-foot rope with a spring hook attached to it at the end, but there were no eye-bolts or other solid object fitted to any of the windows of Bovril's factory. The defendants had upon the site a No. 90 two-part extension ladder which reached about 30 feet up if fully extended.

The plaintiff claimed damages in respect of his injuries, alleging that his fall was due to the negligence of the defendants. In particular he alleged that the defendants were negligent in that they (1) failed to provide suitable ladders; (2) failed to arrange with the occupiers of the building for the insertion of eye-bolts; (3) failed to provide a cradle or other safe platform from which he could have worked; (4) failed to provide a device which could have been clamped to the window frame and to which his safety belt could have been attached; (5) failed to instruct him to hitch a rope round the transom above the window and attach it to his safety belt; (6) failed to instruct him to place a short ladder horizontally across the inside of the window and attach his safety belt to it; and (7) required him to clean the window without making adequate arrangements for his safety.

The defendants denied negligence.

Marven Everett Q.C. and Jonathan Sofer for the plaintiff.
F. W. Beney Q.C. and Stephen Chapman for the defendants.

The following cases were referred to in argument: General Cleaning Contractors Ld. v. Christmas[1]; Paris v. Stepney Borough Council[2]; Latimer v. A. E. C. Ld.[3]; Winter v. Cardiff Rural District Council[4]; Bowater v. Rowley Regis Borough Council[5]; Smith v. Baker & Sons[6]; Sheppey v. Matthew T. Shaw & Co. Ld.[7]

Cur. adv. vult.

February 17. PILCHER J. stated the facts and continued: A considerable body of evidence was called upon either side and it is perhaps desirable that I should deal at once with certain general matters to which the evidence called was directed. It was not in dispute that it is virtually unknown for eye-bolts, designed to take the hook of a window-cleaner's safety belt, to be found outside the upper storey windows of an ordinary dwelling-house, even where there are windows which cannot be reached by a ladder. Large blocks of offices or flats and factory buildings are seldom fitted with such eye-bolts. Such evidence as was available was to the effect that such fitments are found in less than 5 per cent. of the large blocks of buildings in London.

[1] [1953] A.C. 180; [1952] 2 All E.R. 1110.
[2] [1951] A.C. 367; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 25; [1951] 1 All E.R. 42.
[3] [1953] A.C. 658; [1953] 2 All E.R. 449.
[4] [1950] W.N. 193; [1950] 1 All E.R. 819.
[5] [1944] K.B. 476; 60 T.L.R. 356; [1944] 1 All E.R. 465.
[6] [1891] A.C. 325; 7 T.L.R. 679.
[7] [1952] W.N. 249; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 1272.

1954

Drummond v. British Building Cleaners Ld.

Pilcher J.

Some window-cleaners do not take kindly to wearing safety belts, even when eye-bolts are provided, as the rope leading from the safety belt to the eye-bolt tends to drop in a bight which is liable to impede free movement on the sill and catch the feet.

Some large buildings are fitted with permanent runners along the roof from which cradles can be suspended for window-cleaning or painting. Such buildings are very rare. Temporary scaffolding can be erected, if the construction of the roof permits of it, from which cradles can be suspended. The use of cradles, even when suspended from permanent runners, enormously increases the cost of a window-cleaning operation. If scaffolding has to be erected ad hoc the cost is still further increased. In practice, window-cleaning is very rarely done from cradles. When cradles are used it is generally because the occupier of the building specifies that they shall be used and agrees to pay the increased price. If a large window which does not open and is too high to be cleaned from a ladder requires outside cleaning the operation must be done from a cradle. Where sash windows are concerned window-cleaning firms sometimes refuse to tender if the sashes and sills of the windows are in bad condition. Casement windows can be cleaned from inside the room.

The vast majority of sash windows which cannot conveniently be reached from the outside by a ladder of manageable length are cleaned by what is called the "jumping" method. This was the method which the plaintiff was using when he fell from the sill. In this method the window-cleaner seldom wears a safety belt because it is only very rarely that the window to be cleaned is fitted with eye-bolts to which he can make fast the hook attached to the rope on his belt. It is essential that whatever the window-cleaner's hook or rope is attached to should be very firmly secured, and window-cleaners are rightly aware of the danger of hooking on to metal window fitments which would, in all probability, break or pull out if subjected to the sudden jerk of a falling body.

Whilst it would be difficult to contend that cleaning sash windows on upper storeys by the "jumping" method was not a hazardous occupation, the experienced window-cleaners who were called before me, including the plaintiff, obviously did not regard the method as a dangerous one for an experienced and active man with a good head for heights. The evidence completely satisfied me that this method was the quickest way of cleaning the outside of a sash window, and thus the most economical, and there is no question upon the evidence that window-cleaners are averse to using any method which tends to slow up their work.

Certain figures were given in evidence with regard to the number of accidents sustained by window-cleaners. By no means all of those which were particularized were due to the fact that the "jumping" method was used, and I do not find it possible to conclude, from such figures as were given, that the accident rate amongst window-cleaners, due simply to the use of the "jumping" method, is high.

There was evidence that a number of associated window-cleaning companies had recently considered on several occasions what, if any, additional precautions could be taken to safeguard window-cleaners working the "jumping" method on the sill. The type of eye-bolts to be recommended to occupiers willing to instal such fitments was considered at these meetings. The horizontal ladder method, which was discussed in the present case, was considered and rejected, because it was thought that even with modifications it would necessarily involve damage to the interior of the premises and might not be effective. I mention this matter only because it serves to show that the directors of some window-cleaning companies have appreciated their responsibilities in regard to the safety of their servants in a trade which the ordinary man would regard as hazardous but which, oddly enough, does not seem to be so regarded by a large body of experienced workmen in the trade itself.

The problem is, of course, to provide inside each window not fitted with eye-bolts something in the nature of a completely reliable anchor to which the rope on a safety belt can be attached. No such anchor exists, as a rule, in the ordinary room, and accordingly it would seem that if such an anchor is to be provided window-cleaning firms must devise and provide such an anchor or contrivance. It must be capable of being moved from room to room, and employers of window-cleaners must institute a system of work which ensures that the anchor or contrivance is always used by their servants. No satisfactory and practical anchor has yet, apparently, been devised.

[His Lordship considered the evidence in detail and found (1) that there was no material difference in the risk involved to an experienced window-cleaner in cleaning a window from the top of a ladder of the type provided and in cleaning it by the "jumping" method; (2) that as most sash windows were not surmounted by a sufficiently stout transom round which a rope could be passed the defendants were not lacking in reasonable care because they failed to instruct the plaintiff to take the precaution of wearing his safety belt, passing the rope round the transom and then hooking it on to itself; (3) that no one had ever used a ladder placed horizontally across the inside of a window to provide an "anchor" to which to attach the rope of the safety belt and the defendants were not to blame for not instituting such a precaution; (4) that the defendants were not guilty of lack of care in not insisting on the provision of cradles or temporary scaffolding from which cradles could be suspended; and (5) that it would have been unsafe for the plaintiff to clean the window in question by sitting upon the outside sill with his legs inside the room. He continued:] During the course of the trial it was inevitable that frequent reference should be made to General

1954

Drummond v. British Building Cleaners Ld.

Pilcher J.

Cleaning Contractors Ld. v. Christmas.[1] The facts of the present case are very similar to those in the Christmas case,[1] except that the present case is uncomplicated by the "creeping sash," which was present in the Christmas case.[1] The general evidence called before me in regard to the practice of window-cleaners was probably fuller than that called in the Christmas case,[1] and it was apparent that the parties had done their best to bring before the court all the evidence reasonably available in regard to the general practice of window-cleaners, the hazards attending their work, and such practical measures as could reasonably be taken by employers of window-cleaners to safeguard their servants. The evidence called before me only served to reinforce the evidence given in the Christmas case [2] in regard both to the general practice of window-cleaners and to the practicability of taking further precautions for the safety of men working on the sill. It seems clear from a perusal of the speeches in the House of Lords in the Christmas case [2] that upon the evidence adduced in that case none of the noble lords would have been prepared to find in favour of the respondent had it not been for the appellants' failure to devise and institute a safe system of work in regard to creeping sashes. The evidence in the case I am considering was, if anything, more favourable to the employers than the evidence in the Christmas case.[2]

In the Christmas case [2] Lord Oaksey, dealing with a man working on the sill, said [3]: "If either sash is kept open the hand-"hold is available and, on the evidence in this case, is, in my "opinion, reasonably safe." In the case before me one sash was left open. The plaintiff had a handhold and his position was, in my view, reasonably safe. Unfortunately he slipped and his grasp was torn away.

Lord Oaksey said [4]: "A plaintiff who seeks to have condemned "as unsafe a system of work which has been generally used for a "long time in an important trade undertakes a heavy onus: if he "is right it means that all, or practically all, the numerous "employers in the trade have been habitually neglecting their "duty to their men. The evidence in this case appears to me "to be quite inadequate to establish either that the window-sill "method is so inherently dangerous that it cannot be made "reasonably safe by taking proper precautions, or that the ladder "method or the safety belt method are as a general rule reason-"ably practicable alternatives."

This passage occurs in Lord Tucker's speech [5]: "My Lords, "I have felt considerable doubt on this matter. It is true that "in some cases there may be precautions which are so obvious "that no evidence is required on the subject, but in a case like "the present it is eminently desirable before condemning a "system in general use that it should be clearly established by

[1] [1953] A.C. 180; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1110.
[2] [1953] A.C. 180.
[3] Ibid. 190.
[4] Ibid. 192.
[5] [1953] A.C. 180, 198.

"evidence that some other and safer system is reasonably practicable and that its adoption would have obviated the particular accident which has occasioned damage to the plaintiff." A little later, Lord Tucker said[6]: "I desire to add that, in my opinion, there is nothing in this case to justify the inference that in all the circumstances the cleaning of windows from the sill by the handhold method is always to be condemned as constituting a breach of the duty to take reasonable care to provide a reasonably safe system of work."

I am well satisfied that in the case before me there is nothing in the evidence which justifies a finding that in causing or permitting the plaintiff to clean this particular window from the sill the defendants were in breach of their common law duty to provide a safe system of work.

In arriving at the conclusions stated above I have borne in mind the general principle that where faults of omission are concerned an employer of labour charged by a servant with failure to institute and maintain a safe system of work is on strong ground if he can show, as the defendants have shown in this case, that the accident to the workman occurred while the work was being done in the fashion recognized by the trade to be normal and general.

In this connexion I draw attention to the well-known passage in Lord Dunedin's judgment in Morton v. William Dixon Ld.[7]: "Where the negligence of the employer consists of what I may call a fault of omission, I think it is absolutely necessary that the proof of that fault of omission should be one of two kinds, either—to show that the thing which he did not do was a thing which was commonly done by other persons in like circumstances, or—to show that it was a thing which was so obviously wanted that it would be folly in anyone to neglect to provide it."

In Paris v. Stepney Borough Council,[8] Lord Normand, after quoting this passage, said[9]: "The rule is stated with all the Lord President's trenchant lucidity. It contains an emphatic warning against a facile finding that a precaution is necessary when there is no proof that it is one taken by other persons in like circumstances. But it does not detract from the test of the conduct and judgment of the reasonable and prudent man. If there is proof that a precaution is usually observed by other persons, a reasonable and prudent man will follow the usual practice in the like circumstances. Failing such proof the test is whether the precaution is one which the reasonable and prudent man would think so obvious that it was folly to omit it."

I do not propose to refer to any further cases, but draw attention to some very useful passages in Mr. Monckton's book on Employers' Liability, 2nd ed., pp. 34 to 37.

[6] [1953] A.C. 199.
[7] 1909 S.C. 807, 809.
[8] [1951] A.C. 367; [1951] 1 All E.R. 42.
[9] [1951] A.C. 367, 382.

1954

Drummond v. British Building Cleaners Ld.

Pilcher J.

Sash windows appear to be the most common type of window in this country. If such windows cannot be cleaned from a ladder of safe and manageable length they are in practice almost invariably cleaned outside by the "jumping" method. It would, in my view, be commercially impracticable for window-cleaning firms to refuse to clean sash windows until the occupiers of the premises installed eye-bolts outside each window. To insist upon the work being done from cradles would also be commercially impracticable. The evidence in the case does not satisfy me that there is any commercially practicable method by which the hazards incurred by a man working on the sill can be reduced unless eye-bolts are available.

In this state of affairs I am not satisfied that the defendants in the present case, acting as reasonable and prudent employers, were guilty of any lack of care for the safety of the plaintiff. The result is that there must be judgment for the defendants.

Judgment for the defendants.

Solicitors: Matthew Morris; J. F. Coules & Co.

J. F. L.

[COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL.]

1954 Mar. 1.

Lord Goddard C.J., Pilcher and Slade JJ.

* REGINA v. FALLOWS.

PRACTICE NOTE.

Criminal Law — Sentence — Preventive detention — Qualifying age — Offence committed before but conviction after thirtieth birthday.

APPLICATION for leave to appeal against sentence.

The applicant who had a number of previous convictions recorded against him, was convicted of attempted warehouse breaking, and sentenced to eight years' preventive detention. The offence was committed a few days before his thirtieth birthday, but at the time when he was convicted he had attained 30 years of age. He applied for leave to appeal against sentence on the ground that he was not of the qualifying age for preventive detention.

LORD GODDARD C.J. The only question that arises in this application is whether, considering that the offence for which he was sentenced was committed a few days before he attained the age of 30, the applicant was liable to be sentenced to preventive detention. He had passed his thirtieth birthday when he was tried and sentenced and, in the opinion of the court, his age at the time of trial is the governing factor. In view of his shocking record a sentence of preventive detention was necessary for the protection of the public and the application for leave to appeal is refused.

J. F. L.

[PRIVY COUNCIL.]

*AMOAH ABABIO, OHENE OF ASAMANGKESE, REPRESENTING THE STOOL OF ASAMANGKESE AND ANOTHER . . . APPELLANTS;

AND

JOHN EDMUND TURKSON . . . . RESPONDENT.

J. C.†

1954
Mar. 2.

ON APPEAL FROM THE WEST AFRICAN COURT OF APPEAL.

West Africa—Gold Coast—Jurisdiction—Claims in respect of debt or liability against specified Stools—Certificate of Governor in Council —"The amount which ought to be paid"—Reference re whole question of liability and not merely quantum—Asamangkese Division Regulation Ordinance, 1935 (Laws of Gold Coast, 1936 Rev., c. 78) (as amended by Asamangkese Division Regulation (Amendment) Ordinance, No. 5 of 1945 (Gold Coast), s. 2 (b)), s. 6 (2).
Statute—Construction—Ambiguity—Relevance of inconvenient results of one construction.

The Asamangkese Division Regulation Ordinance, 1935, of the Gold Coast, the effect of which was to withdraw entirely from the jurisdiction of the courts any claim against the Asamangkese and Akwatia Stools for a debt or liability incurred before the date of the Ordinance, provided by section 6 (2), as amended by the Asamangkese Division Regulation (Amendment) Ordinance, 1945, that inter alia, the Governor in Council "if he thinks fit, may "refer the matter to the Executive Council for consideration as "to whether or not it is desirable, in the interests of justice, that "the claim or any part thereof, or the amount which ought to be "paid, should be adjudicated upon in an action against the Stool," and may, upon such reference, if he considers it desirable, in his absolute discretion certify that the circumstances in respect of any such claim were such that the matter might properly be the subject of legal proceedings. Pursuant to those provisions, a certificate was issued by the Governor in Council to the respondent which, after reciting that a claim by the respondent against the Asamangkese and Akwatia Stools for moneys alleged to be due to him under an agreement made in 1921, whereby the Stools agreed to pay him five per cent. of all moneys received by them in respect of certain mineral concessions granted to companies introduced by the respondent, had been referred to the Executive Council, stated that the Governor in Council "hereby certifies that in his opinion the "circumstances are such that . . . the amount which ought to be "paid in respect of the said claim, may properly be the subject "of legal proceedings" by the respondent against the Stools:—

Held, that the words "the amount which ought to be paid" in the Ordinance and certificate covered the question of liability on the claim as a whole, and were not referring to a mere question of quantum.

Judgment of the West African Court of Appeal set aside, and case remitted.

APPEAL (No. 48 of 1950) from a judgment of the West African Court of Appeal (Gold Coast Session—Accra) (February 9, 1949)

† Present: LORD PORTER, LORD REID, LORD KEITH OF AVONHOLM.

J. C.
1954
Ababio
v.
Turkson.

which set aside a judgment of the Supreme Court of the Gold Coast (Eastern Judicial Division) (October 1, 1947) which had dismissed an action by the respondent claiming an account of commission alleged to be due to him, and an order for payment of the amount found due, against the then representatives of the Stools of Asamangkese and Akwatia.

On October 22, 1945, the Governor in Council of the Gold Coast, under section 6 of the Asamangkese Division Regulation Ordinance, 1935, as amended, issued a certificate which, after reciting that a claim by the respondent against the Asamangkese and Akwatia Stools for moneys alleged to be due to him under an agreement made in the year 1921 had been referred for consideration to the Executive Council and that the Governor in Council considered it desirable that the amount which ought to be paid in respect of the said claim should be adjudicated upon in an action against the Stools, certified that in the opinion of the Governor in Council the circumstances were such that the amount which ought to be paid in respect of the claim might properly be the subject of legal proceedings by the respondent against the Stools.

The provisions of the Ordinance and the terms of the certificate of the Governor in Council are set out in the judgment of the Judicial Committee.

The respondent thereupon, on August 29, 1946, issued a writ of summons constituting a statement of claim in which he alleged that in or about August, 1921, it was agreed between the respondent and the defendants, the then representatives of the Stools, that if the respondent introduced to the defendants a company or companies who would enter into mining leases with the defendants in respect of minerals on the Stool lands and financed the prospecting for minerals the defendants would pay to the respondent a commission of five per cent. of all rents or royalties paid by the company or companies introduced during the continuance of a mining lease or leases. The respondent further alleged that the Stool lands were prospected at his expense and that on the discovery of diamonds he introduced to the defendants two named companies who entered into mining leases. He further alleged that he received commission at the rate of five per cent. from 1921 to 1935, but not since 1935, although he had orally and by letters requested payment. He claimed an account of all moneys by way of rents and royalties received by the defendants from the companies and the commission due in respect thereof to him, and payment of the amount found due.

The defendants delivered a defence whereby they denied, inter alia, the making of the agreement alleged; said that the alleged agreement was unknown to, invalid by and unenforceable under, native customary law, and, if purporting to be made in accordance with English law, did not comply with the Statute of Frauds.

Coussey J. in the Supreme Court reached the conclusion that the agreement which the respondent alleged and the consideration for it had never been entered into. He found no money to be due to the respondent in respect of his claim, and accordingly gave judgment for the defendants. As regards the contention that the certificate of the Governor in Council precluded the court from finding that there was no binding contract between the parties, Coussey J. held that the court's duty was not limited to adjudication only as to the amount. He construed the Ordinance and certificate as empowering the court to adjudicate upon the claim as brought and to determine whether any money was due to the respondent and, if so, the amount.

On appeal by the respondent to the West African Court of Appeal (Blackall P., Smith Ag. C.J. (Gold Coast), and Lewey J.A.) on the ground, inter alia, that the trial judge was wrong in reopening and trying the whole case in the face of the certificate issued under section 6 of the Ordinance, the Court of Appeal set aside the judgment of Coussey J. and remitted the case to the court below to determine the amount which ought to be paid in respect of the respondent's claim.

The Stools, through their representatives, appealed.

1954. Feb. 2, 3. Frank Gahan Q.C. and W. T. Wells for the appellants.

S. N. Bernstein for the respondent.

March 2. The judgment of their Lordships was delivered by LORD KEITH OF AVONHOLM. This appeal raises a short but troublesome question as to the extent of the jurisdiction conferred upon the courts of the Gold Coast Colony, by a certificate of the Governor in Council, to entertain legal proceedings against the Asamangkese and Akwatia Stools. The certificate was issued to the respondent in this appeal and following upon its issue he brought proceedings against representatives of the Stools, in the Divisional Court of Accra. In the writ of summons it was stated that in or about August, 1921, it was agreed between the plaintiff and the defendants that (1) if the plaintiff introduced to the defendants a company or companies who would enter into mining leases with the defendants, and (2) financed the prospecting of the Stool lands for minerals, the defendants would pay to the plaintiff a commission of 5 per cent. on all moneys paid by the company or companies to the defendants by way of rents or royalties during the continuance of a mining lease or leases. The writ states that in consequence of the agreement the defendants' Stool lands were prospected at the expense of the plaintiff, and on the discovery of diamonds the plaintiff introduced to the defendants a company and a syndicate who entered into mining leases with the defendants. The writ further states that in pursuance of the agreement the defendants paid the plaintiff the commission of 5 per cent. as from 1921 to 1935; that the plaintiff is not aware

J. C.
1954
Ababio
v.
Turkson.

of what sums of money the defendants have received from the company and syndicate since 1935: and that the defendants have not since that date paid the plaintiff any money or commission or rendered him any account of moneys received from the companies, although requested orally and by letters to do so. He therefore claims (1) for an account of all moneys by way of rent and royalties received by the defendants from the companies and of the amount of the commission due to the plaintiff, and (2) for the payment of the amount found due on the accounting. The defendants entered a defence denying the plaintiff's allegations and stating various other defences, including invalidity of the agreement by native customary law, the Statute of Frauds, and the Statute of Limitation.

The parties joined issue on the allegations and defences and, after hearing evidence, the trial judge found that the agreement and the consideration for it was never entered into. He also rejected a contention for the plaintiff that by the terms of the certificate of the Governor in Council he was precluded from finding that no binding contract existed between the plaintiff and the defendant because the Governor in Council must be deemed to be satisfied as to the existence of such a contract and that the court was called upon to adjudicate only as to the amount which ought to be paid to the plaintiff. He accordingly found no money due to the plaintiff and gave judgment for the defendants. On appeal, the West African Court of Appeal, for reasons which the Board will consider in a moment, took the view that the trial judge, by considering the validity of the claim instead of confining himself to the question of the amount to be paid to the plaintiff, had gone beyond the matter to be adjudicated upon by the terms of the certificate of the Governor in Council. He had thus acted in excess of the jurisdiction conferred upon him. By their judgment the appeal was allowed, the order of the trial judge was set aside, and it was ordered that the case be remitted to the court below to determine the sole issue which had been left to the court by the certificate of the Governor in Council, namely, the amount which ought to be paid in respect of the appellants' claim.

The certificate issued by the Governor in Council is as follows: "Whereas a claim by John Edmund Turkson against the "Asamangkese andAkwatia Stools for moneys alleged to be due to "him from the said Stools under an agreement made in or about "the year 1921, whereby the said Stools agreed to pay to the "said John Edmund Turkson 1s. in the £1 of all moneys received "by the said Stools in respect of certain concession granted to the "Consolidated African Selection Trust Ld. and the West African "Diamond Syndicate, has been referred for consideration to the "Executive Council pursuant to the terms of the proviso to "section 6 (2) of the Asamangkese Division Regulation Ordinance "(c. 78): And Whereas the Governor in Council considers it "desirable that the amount which ought to be paid in respect to "the said claim should be adjudicated upon in an action against "the said Stools: NOW THEREFORE pursuant to the terms of para"graph (ii) of the proviso to section 6 (2) aforesaid, the Governor

"in Council hereby certifies that in his opinion the circumstances
"are such that the matter, to wit, the amount which ought to be "paid in respect of the said claim, may properly be the subject
"of legal proceedings by the said John Edmund Turkson against
"the said Stools."

To appreciate the purpose and effect of this certificate it is necessary to have regard to certain legislation affecting the control and regulation of the property, revenues and expenditure of the Stools in the Asamangkese Division. The matter starts with an Ordinance of March 30, 1935, enacted by the Governor of the Gold Coast Colony, with the advice and consent of the Legislative Council, which had for its purpose to prevent the incurring of any debt or liability on behalf of a Stool without the consent of the Treasurer of the Stool Treasuries appointed under regulations made by the Governor in Council. The Ordinance also enacted that as from its commencement no action should lie against a Stool, and no execution should issue or be enforceable against the revenues of the Stool or any Stool property in respect of any debt or liability incurred whether before or after the commencement of the Ordinance by a person on behalf of the Stool, unless such debt or liability if incurred after its commencement was incurred with the consent of the prescribed officer, i.e., the Treasurer of the Stool Treasury. The effect of this Ordinance was to withdraw entirely from the jurisdiction of the courts any claim against the Stool for a debt or liability incurred before the date of the Ordinance. But under a power given by section 8 of the Ordinance to the Governor in Council to permit and regulate the discharge of debts due and liabilities incurred by a Stool prior to the commencement of the Ordinance, regulations were made, to which it is unnecessary to refer in detail, prescribing certain procedure upon which the Governor could approve of the payment of such debts, and expressly providing that no claim for debts existing prior to the commencement of the Ordinance should be paid by the Treasurer of the Stool Treasury unless such debt had been first approved by the Governor. So matters stood until 1945 when an amendment of subsection (2) of section 6 of the Ordinance of March 30, 1935, was made by an Ordinance of April 7, 1945. It is upon the interpretation of section 6 (2) of the Ordinance of 1935, as so amended, that the question in issue in this appeal depends. As amended the subsection reads as follows:—

"(2) From and after the date of the commencement of this "Ordinance no action save as is hereinafter provided shall lie
"against a Stool or against any officer appointed under section 8
"(e) for the collecting, safe custody, and management of the "revenue of a Stool and no execution shall issue or be enforceable
"against the revenues of the Stool or any Stool property in respect

J. C.
1954
Ababio
v.
Turkson.

"of any debt or liability incurred whether before or after the commencement of this Ordinance by a person on behalf of the Stool, unless such debt or liability if incurred after the commencement of this Ordinance was incurred with the consent of the prescribed officer; Provided that in any case where a claim in respect to a debt or liability alleged to have been incurred by or on behalf of the Stool before the commencement of this Ordinance has been the subject of an inquiry in accordance with any regulations made under this Ordinance, and the Governor, upon consideration of the record of the inquiry and of any recommendation transmitted to him in connexion therewith is in doubt as to whether or not any payment ought to be made in respect to the claim or any part thereof, or as to the amount which ought to be paid, the following provisions shall have effect:—(i) The Governor, if he thinks fit, may refer the matter to the Executive Council for consideration as to whether or not it is desirable, in the interests of justice, that the claim or any part thereof, or the amount which ought to be paid, should be adjudicated upon in an action against the Stool: (ii) where, upon any such reference, the Governor in Council considers it desirable that there should be any such adjudication, he may, in his absolute discretion and without assigning any reason, certify that in his opinion the circumstances are such that, notwithstanding anything in this Ordinance, the matter may properly be the subject of legal proceedings: (iii) in any case where the Governor in Council has so certified, nothing in this subsection shall be deemed to preclude any court of competent jurisdiction from adjudicating upon the matter to which the certificate relates or to prohibit the issue or enforcement, after judgment, of execution against the Stool property or revenues."

Their Lordships have come to the view that, on a sound construction of this provision, the words "the amount which ought to be paid" cannot be read in the restricted sense put upon them by the Court of Appeal. These words, in the context in which they are used, are not in the opinion of their Lordships unambiguous, as the judges in the court below seem to have thought. The word "ought" in itself introduces an element of ambiguity. Does it mean ought as a mere matter of assessment or accounting or ought as a matter of law? The support for the first meaning lies in the contrast between the words "as to whether or not any payment ought to be made in respect to the claim or any part thereof" in the one branch of the alternative and the words "as to the amount which ought to be paid" in the other branch. But in their Lordships' opinion the difference can be explained by the contrast between "debt" and "liability" in the first part of the subsection and in the opening words of the proviso. This contrast, their Lordships think, is between a claim to an ascertained or liquid sum and a claim to an unascertained or illiquid amount. On this reading the question whether any payment ought to be made refers to a claim in respect to a debt, and the question as to the amount that ought to be paid refers to a claim in respect of a liability. Their Lordships find support for this meaning in the fact that in each of subheads (i), (ii) and (iii) of the proviso "the matter" there mentioned refers naturally to the claim as a whole. If, accordingly, under subhead (ii) the Governor in Council may certify that "the matter" may properly be the subject of legal proceedings there seems to be no point, and maybe even a doubt as to the competence, of excluding any part of the claim from legal proceedings. In their Lordships' opinion, accordingly, it accords best with the natural and reasonable meaning of the language used to construe the words "the amount which ought "to be paid" as covering the question of liability upon the claim as a whole and not as referring to a mere question of quantum.

It is not out of place to point to the difficulties and inconveniences which would result from the more restricted meaning being put upon these words. It was conceded that it would be relevant to consider whether the "amount" had been satisfied by payment, in whole or in part. But if so, why should a defence based on the Statute of Limitation, or the Statute of Frauds, or on the invalidity of the agreement, or the absence of agreement, be excluded? These may all bear on the question whether any sum "ought" to be paid. There are also, in their Lordships' view, practical difficulties and inconveniences in part of a claim being determined by the Governor and part by the courts, and as to the manner of its enforcement. Where there is ambiguity, as in their Lordships' view there is here, these are relevant considerations.

The view was apparently taken by at least one of the Justices of Appeal in the court below that the trial judge should have proceeded on the basis that the claim had already been admitted by the Governor in Council. If the conclusion reached by the Court of Appeal were a sound one that may have been a proper assumption to make, but for the reasons stated it falls to be rejected. There is, in fact, no such statement in the certificate of the Governor.

For these reasons their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty that the appeal should be allowed, that the judgment of the West African Court of Appeal should be set aside and the case remitted to the Court of Appeal to adjudicate upon the other grounds of appeal contained in the appeal from the judgment of the trial judge. The costs of the appeal and of the hearing in the West African Court of Appeal which led up to the judgment dated February 9, 1949, must be paid by the respondent. The costs otherwise will be dealt with by the West African Court of Appeal after the case has been determined on the merits.

Solicitors: Sole, Sawbridge & Co.; A. L. Bryden & Williams.

C. C.

[PROBATE, ETC., DIVISION.]

1954
Jan. 13.

Wallington J.

* IN THE ESTATE OF CAMPBELL, DECD.

Will—Interlineation—Interlineation in codicil—Validity—Examination of circumstances.

Executor and Administrator — Executor — Remuneration—Bank—Bank appointed as executor and trustee by codicil—No charging clause—Bank entitled to charge.

The deceased made and duly executed a codicil to his will. The codicil contained an interlineation, but the attesting witnesses were unable to state whether the words were included in the codicil at the time of execution.

The will appointed certain solicitors as executors and trustees, with a provision that they should be paid their ordinary professional charges. The codicil substituted for the solicitor a bank but neither will nor codicil contained power for a trust corporation to charge remuneration in accordance with its scale fees:—

Held, (1) that an examination of the circumstances surrounding the creation and execution of the codicil, and of the document itself, showed that the interlineation had been included before execution of the codicil.

(2) That the bank was in the circumstances entitled to charge its ordinary charges in administering the estate.

PROBATE MOTION.

The facts before the court were summarized in the case on motion as follows:—

"Fuller Alfred Bromley Campbell late of Trevona Ashtead "Woods Ashtead in the County of Surrey died on September 5, "1953 at Leatherhead Hospital, Leatherhead in the County of "Surrey. By his will dated March 14, 1944, he appointed John "Cyril Perry (who died on December 30, 1948) and John Melliar "Adams Beck to be the executors and trustees thereof. Such "persons were at that time two of the partners in Messrs Parson "Lee & Co. of 35, John Street, Bedford Row, London, solicitors. "By a codicil dated August 6, 1953, the deceased appointed "Westminster Bank Ld. to be executor and trustee of his will "in the place of Messrs. Parson Lee & Co. . . . The learned "registrar has directed that this Honourable Court be moved "to determine the proper person to apply for a grant of probate.

"Neither the said will nor the said codicil contains power for "a trust corporation to charge remuneration in accordance with "its scale fees. The said codicil contains an interlineation. "There appears to be no conclusive evidence that such inter-"lineation was made prior to the execution thereof.

"Subject to specific legacies given by the said will and subject "also to certain questions of construction which may arise as a "result of the wording of the said codicil, it is apprehended that "the persons beneficially interested in the estate of the deceased "are as follows:—(1) Alice Dillon Malcolm Longbotham (sister "of the deceased) and Mary Davison (nurse housekeeper of the "deceased) are entitled to the income of the residuary estate "during their respective lives; (2) after the death of the sur-"vivor of such persons, Arthur Davison is entitled to the income "of the residuary estate during his life; (3) the capital devolves "on the Greater London Fund for the Blind."

The court was moved "to decree probate of the said will and "codicil (if proper, with the omission of the said interlineation) "to Westminster Bank Ld. and to authorize the said bank to "act as executor and trustee on its standard terms and conditions "in force at the date of the said codicil including those governing "the bank's remuneration in accordance with its scale of fees."

The executor Perry died in December, 1948, but Beck survived the deceased. The bank manager swore in support of the case on motion an affidavit in which he averred:—"The said will "contained the following provisions (shortly stated):—(a) The "deceased gave a number of specific bequests. (b) The deceased "gave one half of his residuary estate to his sister Alice Dillon "Malcolm Longbotham during her life and after her death to his "nurse-housekeeper Mary Davison during her life. (c) The "deceased gave the other half of his residuary estate to the said "Mary Davison during her life subject to a power for the trustees "in certain circumstances to suspend payment of the income to "her and after her death to the said Alice Dillon Malcolm Long-"botham during her life. (d) After the death of the survivor of "the said Alice Dillon Malcolm Longbotham and Mary Davison "the deceased gave the income of his residuary estate in per-"petuity to any society or organization selected by his trustees "which undertakes to look after the welfare of aged and incapaci-"tated nurses. (e) The will contained a power for a professional "trustee to charge for business done by him. The bank has been "advised that in accordance with the decision in Re Cooper[1] this "power would not entitle a trust corporation to charge its scale "fees.

"The deceased was admitted to Leatherhead Hospital on "July 26, 1953. On August 6, 1953, he executed a 'home-made' "codicil to his said will which was to the following effect:—(a) "It was addressed to 'my solicitor, Messrs. Parson Lee & "'Co. . . .' (b) Subject to certain questions of construc-"tion which may arise as to the exact meaning of the "words used by the deceased, the deceased in substance "revoked the trusts declared by his will concerning his residuary "estate and gave the income thereof to the said Alice Dillon "Malcolm Longbotham and Mary Davison during their respective "lives and after the death of the survivor to Arthur Davison "during his life and subject as aforesaid the deceased gave the "capital of his residuary estate to the Greater London Fund for "the Blind. (c) The deceased then provided as follows:—'I "'wish to change the executors and trustees named in my will "'from Messrs. Parson Lee & Co. . . . to the Westminster Bank "'whom I now appoint executors and trustees.'

1954

Campbell, decd., In the Estate of.

"The codicil was witnessed by Dr. Gordon Newbury Box and "Sister Mary Elizabeth Walsh of the Leatherhead Hospital. "The deceased died as aforesaid on September 5, 1953, at the "hospital.

"The primary difficulty which has arisen is whether the West-"minster Bank Ld. has been properly appointed as sole executor "and trustee of the deceased's will. . . . It is understood by "the bank that John Melliar Adams Beck does not dispute that "the effect of the codicil is to appoint the bank to be executor "and trustee in the place of himself. If the bank has been "duly appointed executor and trustee, it would not desire to act "unless it were able to charge remuneration in accordance with "its scale fees. Messrs. Parson Lee & Co. have communicated "with the said Alice Dillon Malcolm Longbotham, Mary Davison, "Arthur Davison and the Greater London Fund for the Blind "and all such beneficiaries have consented to the bank receiving "remuneration in accordance with its scale fees.

"The codicil contains an interlineation to the effect that on "the death of the first to die of the said Alice Dillon Malcolm "Longbotham and Mary Davison the survivor shall be entitled "to the whole income during the residue of her life. The bank "has been advised that if such interlineation were deleted then "on the death of the first to die of such beneficiaries the income "of her share as a matter of construction of the codicil might not "devolve on the survivor but might be payable to the estate of "the deceased beneficiary until the death of the survivor.

"The bank has been informed by Messrs. Parson Lee & Co. "who were accustomed to act as the deceased's solicitors, that "the codicil, including the interlineation, is in the handwriting "of the deceased."

The witness Mary Elizabeth Walsh, after swearing to the attestation of the codicil, stated: "I saw both sides of the piece "of notepaper to the extent that I was aware that there was "writing on both sides. My attention was not drawn to the "interlineation which appears in the said paper and I am unable "to say whether or not such interlineation was present when "Mr. Bromley Campbell signed his name. I did not know the "nature of the document I was signing. After I had signed the "piece of notepaper I gave it back to Mr. Bromley Campbell. "Dr. Box and I then left the room."

The witness Dr. Gordon Newbury Box averred: "I visited "Mr. Bromley Campbell in hospital at frequent intervals and I "was there on August 6, 1953. Mr. Bromley Campbell told me "that he wanted me to witness his signature on a paper and that "another witness was required. Sister Mary Elizabeth Walsh "was in the room with me. Mr. Bromley Campbell produced "a small sheet of notepaper. He then signed his name at the "foot or end thereof as the same now appears thereon in my "presence and also in the presence of the said Mary Elizabeth "Walsh both of us being present at the same time. I was able "to see that the sheet of paper had writing on both sides of it. "Miss Walsh and I thereupon attested and subscribed the said "sheet of notepaper in the presence of Mr. Bromley Campbell. "The said piece of notepaper is now produced and shown to me "marked 'G. N. B.' My attention has been drawn to what "appears to be an interlineation on the front page of the paper "inserting the words 'survivor of either of the above taking the "whole income.' At the time of the execution of the paper I "did not see the front of it sufficiently closely to examine it. I "could see that both sides contained writing and that I was "signing on the back page. No reference was made by Mr. "Bromley Campbell to the interlineation and I am unable to say "whether or not such interlineation was present when Mr. "Bromley Campbell signed his name.

"In my opinion prior to during and subsequent to the "execution of the said document Mr. Bromley Campbell was of "good mental capacity although physically he was a sick man."

J. A. Brightman for the applicant, the Westminster Bank Ld.

Richard Vick for Mrs. Longbotham.

Michael Bowles for Mary and Arthur Davison.

C. A. Marshall-Reynolds for the Greater London Fund for the Blind.

Reference was made to Mortimer on Probate Law and Practice, 2nd ed., p. 171 (as to interlineations) and to In re Cooper.[1]

WALLINGTON J. This is a very interesting matter; although it is within a comparatively small compass.

The deceased made a will dated March 14, 1944, whereby he appointed John Cyril Berry and John Melliar Adams Beck to be the executors and trustees thereof. There was no doubt about the due execution and validity of that will. The executors thereby appointed were then two of the partners in the firm of Messrs. Parson Lee & Co. who were the solicitors for the deceased. On December 30, 1948, John Cyril Perry died.

On August 6, 1953, the deceased made a codicil to his will whereby in effect he revoked the appointment of executors and trustees contained in the will of March 14, 1944, and substituted the Westminster Bank. His language was "I wish to change "the executors and trustees named in my Will from Messrs. "Parson Lee & Co. . . . to the Westminster Bank whom I now "appoint executors and trustees."

The first question which I have to determine is whether or not that codicil (an admittedly home-made document) is, as everybody concerned thinks that it is, a codicil to the will of the testator made on March 14, 1944, and, if it is, whether an interlineation in it is or is not in fact to be treated as part of the [1] (1939) 160 L.T. 453.

1954

Campbell, decd., In the Estate of.

Wallington J.

document and therefore as a valid part of the codicil and included in the probate. The interlineation appears to me to have been written either before or after the rest of the document, and the attesting witnesses in their affidavits are unable, for reasons which they have given, to say whether the words interlined were in the codicil at the time when it was executed. The matter, therefore, must be determined by an examination of the circumstances surrounding the creation and execution of the codicil. I have examined with the greatest care everything upon the face of the document including the interlineation and I have come to the conclusion (a) that the whole of the codicil was written by the testator himself; (b) that within a short period of time all the words in the codicil including those interlined, were written by him; (c) that the ink with which the writing was done is the same throughout; (d) that the testator had written the words interlined after the rest of the document was written out; and (e) that he wrote those words in the document before it was executed and that he intended that his signature, and that of the attesting witnesses, should authenticate the whole document as it then stood.

In those circumstances my opinion is that the document is a complete document, including those interlined words. There is, in my opinion, no doubt as to its due execution.

Questions have been raised as to: (i) whether there is a valid appointment of the Westminster Bank as sole executor and trustee under both will and codicil; and (ii) whether the bank should be given the right to charge for its services as executor and trustee under the will and codicil. In my opinion it is clear that the codicil contains an express and unambiguous appointment of the bank as executor and trustee under both will and codicil; it is the plain intention of the testator to place the administration of his whole estate in the hands of the bank on the basis of both the testamentary documents.

The only reference in the will to any question of charges is a provision that the solicitors for the testator (who, under the will, were appointed as executors and trustees) should be paid their ordinary professional charges. Obviously that provision cannot apply to the bank. It is however plain that the testator intended the bank should be the executor and trustee and would not have wished them so to act con amore. Moreover the testator clearly intended (for he said so in the will) that his solicitor executors and trustees should be entitled to charge their ordinary professional charges for their work in that capacity. Therefore, when in the codicil, he expressed a wish to change the executors named in his will "from Messrs. Parson Lee & Co. to the Westminster "Bank" it follows that he changed from one professional executor, to be paid, to another who would act in the same capacity and with the same right to be paid.

Further it is plain to my mind that the testator never contemplated the appointment of an unpaid executor or that the bank

1954

CAMPBELL, DECD., IN THE ESTATE OF.

Wallington J.

would accept the appointment upon a gratuitous footing. There is also ample authority that the court is entitled in cases of this kind to order that the bank acting in the capacity of executor and trustee should be entitled to charge their ordinary charges for the work they do in administering the estate.

I therefore decree that probate of both the will and codicil, including the interlined words, be granted to the Westminster Bank Ld. and that the bank when acting under the grant so act on their standard terms and conditions in force at the date of the said codicil including those governing the bank's remuneration in accordance with their scale of fees.

[The following order was made:—" . . . it is ordered that " probate of the last will and testament, with codicil thereto " bearing date respectively March 14, 1944, and August 6, 1953, of " Fuller Alfred Bromley Campbell deceased be granted to West- " minster Bank Ld. the sole executor appointed by the effect of " the said will and codicil and it is further ordered that the said " codicil be admitted to proof in its entirety including the inter- " lineation of the words ' Survivor of either of the above taking " ' the whole income ' between lines 10 and 11 thereof. And it " is further ordered that the said Westminster Bank Ld. be " authorized both as executor and trustee of the said will and " codicil to act on its standard terms and conditions in force at the " date of the said codicil including those governing the said " bank's remuneration in accordance with its scale of fees.

" Costs of Alice Dillon Malcolm Longbotham, Mary Davison, " Arthur Davison and Greater London Fund for the Blind to be " paid on a solicitor and client basis out of the estate of the said " deceased."]

Solicitors: Parson, Lee & Co.; William Sturges & Co.; Woodhouse-Smith & Co.; Gregory, Rowcliffe & Co.

J. B. G.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

* SPRINGETT v. HAROLD.

1953 Oct. 15.

Lord Goddard C.J., Sellers and Havers JJ.

Public Health—Nuisance—Dwelling-house—Rooms in need of decorative repair—Discomfort and inconvenience—Not injurious to health—Public Health (London) Act, 1936 (26 Geo. 5 & 1 Edw. 8, c. 50), s. 82 (1) (a).

The internal walls and ceilings of some rooms in a dwelling-house owned by the respondent were stained and peeling and in need of decorative repair. They were alleged by the appellant, a sanitary inspector, to be in such a condition as to cause a nuisance within the meaning of section 82 (1) (a) of the Public Health (London)

[Reported by Mrs. E. M. WELLWOOD, Barrister-at-Law.]

1953

Springett
v.
Harold.

Act, 1936. The owner having failed to comply with notices served on him requiring him to abate the nuisance, the sanitary inspector preferred a complaint against him. The magistrate, finding that the rooms in question were not damp or verminous or injurious to health and were fit for human habitation, dismissed the complaint, holding that the mere want of decorative repair did not constitute a nuisance within the meaning of the section. On appeal:—

Held, that on the facts found by the magistrate his decision was correct in law.

Betts v. Penge Urban District Council [1942] 2 K.B. 154; 58 T.L.R. 283; [1942] 2 All E.R. 61 distinguished on the facts.

Special case stated by metropolitan magistrate sitting at Tower Bridge.

A complaint was preferred by the appellant, John Louis Springett, a sanitary inspector employed by the Bermondsey Borough Council, against the respondent, Harold F. Harold, for that he had failed to abate a nuisance at 12 Culling Road, Bermondsey, caused by his act, default or sufferance, and of which nuisance he had been given notice, contrary to section 82 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1936.

At the hearing of the complaint the following facts were proved or admitted.—The respondent was the owner of the premises which were let to a tenant. On March 20, 1953, following a visit made by the appellant to the premises, a notice was served on the respondent on behalf of the borough council alleging that the premises were in such a state as to be a nuisance by reason of the fact that the walls and ceilings of certain of the first floor rooms and a landing were stained and peeling. The respondent was required to abate the nuisance. On May 15, 1953, a statutory notice was served on him. No work was done in pursuance of the notices prior to the hearing of the complaint save that certain of the rooms in question had been decorated. The walls and ceiling of the first floor rooms and landing were stained and dirty and flaking and were in need of decorative repair. They were not damp or verminous or injurious to health, and the premises were fit for human habitation.

It was contended for the borough council that the rooms and landing were in such a condition as to cause discomfort and inconvenience to the tenant and that consequently there existed in the premises a "nuisance" within the meaning of section 82 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1936.[1]

The respondent denied the contention and asserted that he was prepared to supply the tenant with materials with which to redecorate the rooms and landing.

The magistrate dismissed the complaint, holding that the mere want of internal decorative repair did not constitute a

[1] S. 82 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1936 provides: "(1) "The following matters shall . . . be "nuisances which may be dealt with "summarily under this Act, that is to "say:—(a) any premises in such a "state as to be a nuisance or injurious "or dangerous to health; . . ."

nuisance within the meaning of the section even if it did cause discomfort and inconvenience to the tenant. The sanitary inspector appealed.

Leonard Caplan for the borough council. The magistrate was wrong in deciding that a condition causing discomfort and inconvenience could not be a nuisance within the meaning of the Act. In Betts v. Penge Urban District Council,[2] an authority under the Public Health Act, 1936, it was held that a landlord who caused discomfort and inconvenience to a tenant committed a statutory nuisance under that Act.

[LORD GODDARD C.J. Whatever the court may say in considering a case it must have some regard to the facts before it. In Betts v. Penge Urban District Council[1] a landlord removed the doors and windows of a house which was occupied by a tenant. That is very far from this case where there is merely a failure to put into decorative repair. Whether or not discomfort and inconvenience caused is such as to be a nuisance must always be a question of degree. The magistrate could not possibly have held that a nuisance had been committed on the facts that he has found in the present case.]

If he had found on these same facts that the want of decorative repair did amount to a nuisance it would be a point of law.

[LORD GODDARD C.J. You are asking the court to give a consultative opinion. It will not do that, but will decide the case on the facts found by the magistrate.]

The defendant appeared in person.

LORD GODDARD C.J. The court has already intimated the view it is taking in this case. The facts are quite different from those in Betts v. Penge Urban District Council.[1] We do not propose to give a judgment because the case is too clear for argument. The appeal is dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor: F. W. J. Baldwin.

[2] [1942] 2 K.B. 154; 58 T.L.R. 283; [1942] 2 All E.R. 61.

[1] [1942] 2 K.B. 154.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

C. A.

1954
Feb. 18, 19.

Lord Goddard C.J., Singleton and Hodson L.JJ.

* WINGROVE v. PRESTIGE & CO. LD.

[1951 W. 1953.]

Building—Safety regulations—Scaffold—Safe means of access—Scaffold protruding across access to building site—Safe means of access to "every place at which any person . . . has to work"—Duty limited to employees of contractor—Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948 (S.I. 1948, No. 1145), regs. 4 (ii), 5.

Regulation 5 of the Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948, which directs that contractors and employers of workmen must provide "suitable and sufficient scaffolds . . . for "all work that cannot safely be done on or from the ground . . . "and sufficient safe means of access . . . so far as is reasonably "practicable . . . to every place at which any person has at any "time to work" is intended only for the protection of workmen employed by the contractor concerned, and a person not so employed has no right of action for personal injuries suffered by him as a result of a breach of the regulation.

Decision of Hilbery J. [1953] 1 W.L.R. 449; [1953] 1 All E.R. 694 affirmed.

Appeal from Hilbery J.[1]

The plaintiff, Henry James Wingrove, was employed by the Middlesex County Council as clerk of the works in connexion with the building of a school for the county council by the defendants, Prestige & Sons Ld., a firm of building contractors. The defendants were in occupation and control of the building and works on the site which were operations to which regulation 5 of the Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948, applied.

Sometime before June 29, 1950, the defendants had partially removed some scaffolding which they had erected, with the result that a scaffold pole had been left at a height of about 5 ft. 7 ins. across a passage-way through which people might have to pass. On the day of the accident, the plaintiff, thinking, as he said, that he saw two men "sneaking off" from work, hurried after them through the passage and struck his head against the scaffold pole and seriously damaged his eye. He had already lost the sight of one eye in an accident which he had suffered some years previously, and as the result of the present accident he lost the sight of the remaining eye and subsequently died from the injury received after the trial before Hilbery J. The proceedings were continued by his executor. The plaintiff was aware of the existence of, and the position of, the scaffold pole at the time of the accident and had protested to the defendants' general foreman that it was dangerous. He brought an action against the defendants claiming damages for negligence or, in the alternative, for a breach by the defendants of their statutory duty under regulations 4 and 5 of the Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948.[2]

[1] [1953] 1 W.L.R. 449; [1953] 1 All E.R. 694.

Hilbery J., applying the principle laid down by the House of Lords in London Graving Dock Co. Ld. v. Horton,[3] held that the plaintiff was an invitee, but that, as he was aware of the existence of the obstruction, it did not constitute an unusual danger so far as he was concerned which entitled him to succeed at common law. He further held that there had been no breach by the defendants of their statutory duty under regulation 5. The plaintiff appealed against the latter finding only, it being conceded that in regard to his claim at common law there was evidence to support the finding of Hilbery J.

J. H. Bassett Q.C. and W. G. Wingate for the plaintiff.

Montague Berryman Q.C., Marven Everett Q.C. and Scotney Russell for the defendants.

The following case was referred to in argument: Sheppey v. Matthew T. Shaw & Co.[4]

LORD GODDARD C.J. stated the facts and continued: Mr. Bassett argued that the plaintiff had a cause of action for breach of regulation 5 of the Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948, which provides that "Suitable and sufficient "scaffolds shall be provided for all work that cannot safely be "done on or from the ground or from part of the building, or "from part of a permanent structure or from a ladder or other "available means of support . . ." Stopping there for a moment, it is quite obvious that this accident did not occur by reason of any defect in a scaffold, because the plaintiff was not using a scaffold. The regulation goes on: "and sufficient safe means "of access shall so far as is reasonably practicable be provided "to every place at which any person has at any time to work."

The joint effect of the first and second parts of regulation 5 is that the later words in the regulation in regard to means of access are clearly confined to the contractor's own workmen. The words "any person" mean "any person employed by the "contractor," and, therefore, as the plaintiff was not employed by the contractor he had no cause of action under the words of that regulation. The only question, therefore, is, had he any

[2] Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948, reg. 4 (ii): " . . . it shall be the duty of "every contractor and employer of "workmen who erects or alters any "scaffold to comply with such of the "requirements of regulations 5–30 as "relate to the erection or alteration "of scaffolds. . . ."

Reg. 5: "Suitable and sufficient "scaffolds shall be provided for all "work that cannot safely be done on "or from the ground . . . and suffi-"cient safe means of access shall so "far as is reasonably practicable be "provided to every place at which any "person has at any time to work."

[3] [1951] A.C. 737; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 949; [1951] 2 All E.R. 1.

[4] [1952] W.N. 250; [1952] T.L.R. 1272.

C. A.
1954
Wingrove v. Prestige & Co. Ld.

right at common law? It is not now contended that on the findings of Hilbery J. he had such cause of action, and therefore this appeal must be dismissed.

Singleton L.J. I agree that the appeal should be dismissed. I felt some difficulty at one time about the two separate provisions in regulation 5 of the Regulations of 1948, but it appears clear when one examines the regulation more closely that the defect, if defect it be, of which complaint is made here, could not apply to a person who was not in the employment of the contractors at the time.

Hodson L.J. I agree, and have nothing to add.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Philcox, Sons & Edwards; Barlow, Lyde & Gilbert.

P. B. D.

[CHANCERY DIVISION.]

1954
Mar. 1.
Upjohn J.

In re* WORTHINGTON, decd.
LEIGHTON v. MacLEOD.

[No. 193 of 1951.]

Solicitor—Costs—Trustee—Administrator—Insolvent estate—Solicitor acting as administrator—Court's discretion to allow costs—Exceptional circumstances.

Trust and Trustee—Remuneration—Solicitor. Executor and Administrator.

The general rule that a solicitor acting as trustee of an estate cannot charge for his professional services is subject to the inherent jurisdiction of the court to order remuneration where it thinks fit, but that jurisdiction should be exercised sparingly and only in exceptional circumstances.

A testator died in 1947 having appointed his wife sole beneficiary and executrix under his will. The estate was insolvent, the liabilities being greatly in excess of the assets, and the widow on the advice of her solicitors did not take out a grant of probate. During 1948, the first applicant, a partner in the firm of solicitors who were conducting her affairs, negotiated with the principal creditors with a view to a compromise of their claims in order to save something out of the estate for the widow.

She appointed him to act as her attorney, and he obtained a grant of administration with the will annexed. It proved impossible to reach a compromise and he decided that the estate ought to be administered in bankruptcy. He prepared the bankruptcy petition, and carried out the preparation and lodgment of accounts and receipts of the estate during administration under rule 304 of the Bankruptcy Rules, 1952.

The solicitors asked for an order for payment of their profit costs out of the estate in connexion with those matters, notwithstanding that the administrator was a solicitor and a partner in the firm of solicitors acting for the widow:—

Held, that although the partner had acted properly and had done work which had to be done, there were no exceptional circumstances to justify a departure from the rule that a solicitor trustee was not entitled to remuneration.

In re Masters [1953] 1 W.L.R. 81; [1953] 1 All E.R. 19 and Dale v. Inland Revenue Commissioners [1954] A.C. 11; [1953] 3 W.L.R. 448; [1953] 2 All E.R. 671 applied. Bainbrigge v. Blair (1845) 8 Beav. 588 and In re Salmen (1912) 107 L.T. 108 considered.

MOTION.

Sydney Neville Worthington, by his will dated May 20, 1940, appointed his wife his sole beneficiary and executrix. He died on September 27, 1947. The widow consulted as solicitors the second applicant, Messrs. Franks, Charlesly & Leighton; and the first applicant, Lionel Lazurus Leighton, a partner in the firm, was concerned with the conduct of her affairs. It appeared that the estate was insolvent, the liabilities amounting to £45,000 and the assets to about £9,500. The widow was advised by Mr. Leighton that it was of little use to take out a grant of probate, as it would occasion great expense with little prospect of her receiving any moneys out of the estate.

During 1948 Mr. Leighton, whom the court held had acted with absolute propriety, conducted negotiations with the principal creditors with a view to a compromise, in order to save something out of the estate for the widow. On October 11, 1948, he wrote to the widow (who had gone to live with a daughter in New Zealand) suggesting that she should appoint an attorney administrator. He pointed out that it would save money if she appointed him or his partner, but that she was of course at liberty to appoint whom she pleased. The widow appointed Mr. Leighton her attorney. On May 10, 1950, he obtained letters of administration with the will annexed.

No settlement with the creditors could be reached, and Mr. Leighton decided that the proper course was to have the estate administered in bankruptcy. He prepared a petition to the court in bankruptcy, and undertook the preparation and lodgment of accounts and receipts during administration of the estate pursuant to rule 304 of the Bankruptcy Rules, 1952.

By this motion the applicants, Mr. Leighton and the firm of Franks, Charlesby & Leighton, asked that notwithstanding that Mr. Leighton was a solicitor of the Supreme Court he might be allowed to charge the estate of the deceased his profit costs for preparing the bankruptcy petition and the preparation and lodgment of the accounts and receipts under rule 304.

Edward Sutcliffe for the applicants.

John Sheldon for the respondent, the trustee in bankruptcy.

1954

Worthington, decd., In re. Leighton v. Macleod.

Cases cited in argument other than those referred to in the judgment: In re Bignell *; In re Corsellis †; In re Smith's Estate.‡

Upjohn J. Mr. Leighton is the sole administrator of the deceased, and the law as to receiving remuneration is of course quite clear. He cannot charge for work done as administrator, but must give his services gratuitously. On the other hand it cannot be doubted that the court has a jurisdiction to direct remuneration shall in a proper case be allowed to the administrator. That appears from the recent decision in In re Masters, decd.,[1] and from the statement by Lord Cohen in Dale v. Inland Revenue Commissioners,[2] where his Lordship said this[3]: "These cases undoubtedly establish that a trustee cannot "make a profit out of his trusteeship unless authorized so to do "by the instrument creating the trusteeship or by an order of "the court, and that if a testator attaches remuneration to the "trusteeship, that remuneration is, as between the trustee and the "estate bounty, liable to legacy duty while that duty was leviable "and postponed to the claims of creditors if the estate was "insolvent . . ." Lord Cohen was there referring to In re White,[4] a decision of Kekewich J. which was affirmed[5] by the Court of Appeal, where it was held that a trustee in a case where there was a charging clause in the will could not, when the estate became insolvent, charge for his services because that was a gift to him.

It is clear equally that although the court has a jurisdiction to allow remuneration to trustees, that jurisdiction should only be exercised sparingly, and in exceptional cases. Danckwerts J. in In re Masters, decd.[6] has given one example of such a case; that was the case of In re Macadam[7] where trustees who, by virtue of the trust holding of shares in a company, became directors and received directors' fees, and it was held that in the circumstances of that particular case it would be proper to allow them to keep at any rate part of those fees as and by way of remuneration for doing that exceptional work, that is acting as directors of the company.

Another illustration was given by an ancient case of Bainbrigge v. Blair,[8] where Lord Langdale M.R. gave, again purely by way of example, the case of a trustee who said that he was willing to carry out certain matters for the benefit of the trust, but that he was not prepared to spend the time necessary to do those things unless he received some remuneration. It might, he thought, in such a case be proper to sanction remuneration. I should

* [1892] 1 Ch. 59.

† (1887) 34 Ch.D. 675; 3 T.L.R. 355.

‡ [1894] 1 I.R. 60.

[1] [1953] 1 W.L.R. 81; [1953] 1 All E.R. 19.

[2] [1954] A.C. 11; [1953] 3 W.L.R. 448; [1953] 2 All E.R. 671.

[3] [1954] A.C. 34.

[4] [1898] 1 Ch. 297.

[5] [1898] 2 Ch. 217; 14 T.L.R. 503.

[6] [1953] 1 W.L.R. 81.

[7] [1946] Ch. 73; 62 T.L.R. 48; [1945] 2 All E.R. 664.

[8] (1845) 8 Beav. 588.

observe in passing that Bainbrigge v. Blair[8] might have been decided differently had it been heard a few years later because it appears to be the type of case of which the leading authority is Cradock v. Piper,[9] which decided that where a trustee solicitor acts for himself and co-trustees, and the work which he has done for himself and his co-trustees has been of benefit to the estate, and no additional expense has been incurred by his acting for himself, then he is entitled to claim and to charge for his professional services. That rule is well recognized and must be taken as settled; but it is exceptional and anomalous and not to be extended beyond the case where a trustee is acting for himself and for another or others. Notwithstanding that Bainbrigge v. Blair[10] might have been decided differently, the statement which I have quoted from the judgment of Lord Langdale in that case is useful, as showing by way of example, the sort of cases in which the court might exercise its discretion to allow remuneration.

I must not be taken as laying down any rule that where trustees act as directors or refuse to undertake work in the future without remuneration, the court ought to treat them as exceptional cases and allow remuneration. I merely refer to those cases as examples of what may in some circumstances be considered exceptional cases and where the court on a review of all the relevant facts may come to the conclusion that remuneration should be allowed.

The matter was also considered by Eve J. and the Court of Appeal in In re Salmen.[11] In that case the testator "appointed "three persons as executors and trustees of his will and gave to "them his business and the premises where it was carried on "upon trust to carry on the same for such period as they might "think fit; and he gave power to the trustees to employ one or "more of them at a salary to manage the business. One of the "executors and trustees having been appointed by the others of "them to manage the business at a salary which was duly paid "to him, they claimed to be entitled, in an action brought for "the administration of the estate, to be allowed that remunera-"tion. It was anticipated that the estate would prove to be "insolvent"; and it was held that "the allowance claimed could "not be made to the executors and trustees as against creditors "of the estate."

In his judgment Eve J. said: "I am not saying that the "court has not jurisdiction in exceptional cases to provide for "remuneration of executors and trustees even in the absence of "special provision in the will. And in the face of the decision in "Foster v. Ridley,[12] to which Mr. Buckmaster has drawn my "attention, it would be impossible for me to say that there is "no such jurisdiction." Eve J. then said that in his view the

[8] 8 Beav. 588.
[9] (1850) Mac. & G. 664.
[10] 8 Beav. 588.
[11] (1912) 107 L.T. 108, 110.
[12] (1864) 4 De G.J. & S. 452.

1954

Worthington, decd., In re. Leighton v. Macleod.

Upjohn J.

jurisdiction ought to be founded on some proposition of implying a contract "on the part of those persons against whom the claim "for remuneration is made to remuneration for services which "the person claiming to be remunerated has discharged . . ." I do not think that it is right to put the matter upon such a basis. I think the true rule is that the court has an inherent jurisdiction to allow a trustee remuneration even as against creditors, but that it must be exercised sparingly and only in exceptional cases. When In re Salmen[13] was heard in the Court of Appeal, that court did not consider the question of inherent jurisdiction at all; there the matter was held to be governed by the decision in In re White.[14]

[His Lordship stated the facts substantially as set out above and continued:] It was said that the whole object of Mr. Leighton becoming attorney administrator was to keep the costs down to a minimum; the work which he did in preparing the petition and the necessary accounts was work which had to be done by somebody, and the estate, therefore, had suffered no loss; on the contrary it has benefited because Mr. Leighton was, of course, acquainted with the whole matter and could therefore prepare the petition and accounts more quickly and less expensively than anyone else. There is much force in that contention. But the rule seems to me to be a strict one, and if in this case I granted the application it would be open to solicitors to say in almost every case that they had acted honestly and properly, and that there had been no loss to the estate, so that they were entitled to their costs; and the salutary rule that a solicitor trustee cannot charge for his services would be virtually destroyed.

Although I have much sympathy with Mr. Leighton I can find nothing in this case which can be described as exceptional in any way, and on that ground I must refuse this motion.

Application refused.

Solicitors: Franks, Charlesly & Leighton; Kingsley, Napley & Co.

I. G. R. M.

[13] 107 L.T. 108.

[14] [1898] 1 Ch. 297.

[COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL.]

*REGINA v. WARREN.

C. C. A.

1954
Feb. 22.

Lord Goddard C.J., Cassels and Slade JJ.

Criminal Law — Court of Criminal Appeal — Jurisdiction — Summary conviction—Committed to quarter sessions for sentence—Powers of Court of Criminal Appeal to inquire into committal order—Criminal Justice Act, 1948 (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 58), s. 29 (3).

The appellant, having been convicted by a magistrate on four charges of indecent assault on small boys, was committed to quarter sessions for sentence, the magistrate being of the opinion that the case warranted a greater sentence than he could impose. Quarter sessions passed a sentence of five years' imprisonment. The appellant appealed against that sentence to the Court of Criminal Appeal under section 29 (3) of the Criminal Justice Act, 1948, which provides: "(d) if the appeal committee or court of quarter sessions "passes a sentence which the court of summary jurisdiction would "not have had power to pass, the offender may appeal against "the sentence to the Court of Criminal Appeal as if he had been "convicted on indictment":—

Held, that in such cases the Court of Criminal Appeal had no power to inquire into the question of whether the appellant was rightly committed to quarter sessions, but could consider only the sentence under the powers given to the court by section 4 of the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907. The right course for a person who wished to take the point that he had been wrongly committed to quarter sessions was to apply to the Divisional Court of the Queen's Bench Division for an order of prohibition or certiorari before he appeared before quarter sessions.

APPEAL against sentence.

The appellant, Vincent Roy Warren, a housemaster at a London County Council Reception Home, was charged with four cases of indecent assault on small boys. At the hearing the prosecution asked the magistrate to deal with the cases summarily under section 19 of the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1952. The magistrate, being of the opinion that the case deserved a greater sentence than the twelve months' imprisonment which he was empowered to give, exercised his powers under the Criminal Justice Act, 1948, section 29,[1] and the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1952, s. 29,[2] and, having convicted the appellant, committed him

[1] Criminal Justice Act, 1948, s. 29 (3): "Where an offender is [committed to quarter sessions] for sentence . . . the following provisions shall have effect, that is to say:— "(a) the appeal committee or court of quarter sessions shall inquire into the circumstances of the case, and shall have power to deal with the offender in any manner in which he could be dealt with by a court of quarter sessions before which he had just been convicted of the offence on indictment; . . . "(d) if the appeal committee or court of quarter sessions passes a sentence which the court of summary jurisdiction would not have had power to pass, the offender may appeal against the sentence to the Court of Criminal Appeal as if he had been convicted on indictment. . . ."

[2] Magistrates' Courts Act, 1952, s. 29: "Where on the summary trial under . . . section 19 of this Act of an indictable offence triable by quarter sessions a person who is not

C. C. A.
1954

Reg.
v.
Warren.

to quarter sessions for sentence. The appeal committee of London Sessions sentenced him to five years' imprisonment.

Montague Waters for the appellant.
J. H. Buzzard for the Crown.

The following cases were cited in argument: Rex v. Dean[3]; Rex v. Norfolk Justices, ex parte Director of Public Prosecutions[4]; Rex v. Vallett[5]; Rex v. Johnson[6]; Rex v. Evans[7]; Rex v. Bradford.[8]

Lord Goddard C.J. delivering the judgment of the court stated the facts and continued: It is contended for the appellant that the magistrate ought never to have sent the appellant to quarter sessions for sentence because he can only do so if he has regard to his character and antecedents, and I understand that Mr. Waters wanted to argue that there was no information as to the appellant's character or antecedents within the meaning of the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1952, which would have justified the magistrate in sending him forward for sentence. I am not going to attempt to deal with the meaning of the words "character and "antecedents" because we have not heard argument on the matter and because the present case differs in some respects from Rex v. Vallett.[1] I am going only to examine the powers of this court as distinct from the Divisional Court of the Queen's Bench Division. The fact that the judges are the same is quite fortuitous. This court exercises a different jurisdiction and our jurisdiction is a purely statutory one. If a man who is committed for sentence desires to take the point that he was wrongly committed the right course for him to take is to apply to the Queen's Bench Division for a prerogative order, either of certiorari to bring up the order of committal and quash it, or of prohibition directed to sessions to prevent them proceeding, and he must do that before he goes before the sessions. This court has no power to issue certiorari or prohibition.

[His Lordship read section 29 (3) of the Criminal Justice Act, 1948, and continued:] If the offender comes before the Court of Criminal Appeal, as he has in the present case, he does so solely "less than 17 years old is convicted "of the offence, then, if on obtaining "information about his character and "antecedents the court is of opinion "that they are such that greater "punishment should be inflicted for "the offence than the court has "power to inflict, the court may, in-"stead of dealing with him in any "other manner, commit him in cus-"tody to quarter sessions for sentence "in accordance with . . . section 29 "of the Criminal Justice Act, 1948."

[3] (1924) 18 Cr.App.R. 133.

[4] [1950] 2 K.B. 558; sub nom. Rex v. South Greenhoe Justices, ex parte Director of Public Prosecutions, 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 2) 452; [1950] 2 All E.R. 42.

[5] (1950) 34 Cr.App.R. 251; [1951] 1 All E.R. 231.

[6] [1909] 1 K.B. 439; 25 T.L.R. 229.

[7] [1915] 2 K.B. 762; 11 Cr.App.R. 178; 31 T.L.R. 410.

[8] (1911) 7 Cr.App.R. 42; 28 T.L.R. 26.

[1] (1950) 34 Cr.App.R. 251; [1951] 1 All E.R. 231.

because the appeal committee has passed a sentence which the court of summary jurisdiction has no power to pass. If the committee had passed a sentence of 12 months, which the court of summary jurisdiction has power to pass, there would have been no appeal to this court. The offender appeals to this court against the sentence as if he had been tried and convicted by quarter sessions on indictment. Section 29 (3) of the Act of 1948 is intended to put the appeal committee or quarter sessions into exactly the same position as though they had before them an offender who at quarter sessions had pleaded guilty. When the offender is once before the quarter sessions and the conviction has been proved and the order of the magistrate sending him for sentence has not been challenged, quarter sessions are to deal with him as though he had just been convicted before them on indictment. It is only offences triable by quarter sessions on indictment that can be sent forward, and the Divisional Court held in Rex v. Middlesex Quarter Sessions, ex parte Director of Public Prosecutions [2] that where a man had been committed for sentence for an offence which was not triable at quarter sessions, but only at assizes on indictment, and quarter sessions had refused to sentence him, an order of mandamus would not issue to quarter sessions because they had no power to deal with the offence on indictment.

In our opinion, it is clear that once the appellant comes to this court we cannot go into the conviction; we can only look at the sentence which has been passed, and if we find that it is more severe than the court of summary jurisdiction could have passed, we can consider the sentence under the powers given to us by the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907, s. 4 (3) of which provides: "On an appeal against sentence the Court of Criminal "Appeal shall, if they think that a different sentence should "have been passed, quash the sentence passed at the trial, and "pass such other sentence warranted in law by the verdict "(whether more or less severe) in substitution therefor as they "think ought to have been passed, and in any other case shall "dismiss the appeal."

Our attention has been called to certain cases under the Vagrancy Act, 1824. The procedure under that Act has some likeness to the procedure under the Criminal Justice Act, 1948, for this reason: quarter sessions can deal with a person who has been convicted by a court of summary jurisdiction of being an incorrigible rogue and vagabond, and certain cases have been before this court in which the court has quashed the sentence because they found that the man had not been convicted before the magistrates of being an incorrigible rogue. The section under which the court proceeds in that case is section 20 (2) of the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907, which provides: "This Act shall "apply in the case of convictions on criminal informations and [2] [1950] 2 K.B. 589; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 1) 804; [1950] 1 All E.R. 916.

C. C. A.
1954
Reg.
v.
Warren.

"coroners' inquisitions and in cases where a person is dealt with "by a court of quarter sessions as an incorrigible rogue under "the Vagrancy Act, 1824, as it applies in the case of convictions "on indictments. . . ." Being an incorrigible rogue is not an offence for which a person could have been convicted on indictment, and that section only gives the power to this court to deal with the sentence on a man who has been convicted of being an incorrigible rogue. But the words in section 29 (3) of the Act of 1948 which we are considering are "may appeal against the "sentence . . . as if he had been convicted on indictment."

We have, therefore, a man before us who says: "I have been "sentenced to more than the magistrate could have sentenced "me, and therefore I appeal to you as if I had been convicted "on indictment." If he wanted to challenge the magistrate's power to commit him for sentence, it should have been done by another procedure.

No injustice has been done to the appellant by the way in which the magistrate dealt with him because it was a very serious case. The only question which we have to consider is whether the sentence of five years' imprisonment is one which we would allow to stand. Although it is a serious offence, we are willing to take into account that the man had previously been of good character, as far as is known, and may not have been subject to these tendencies for very long, and taking all the circumstances into consideration, the court has come to the conclusion that they can reduce this sentence and substitute for it one of three years' imprisonment.

Sentence varied.

Solicitors: Sylvester, Amiel & Co.; Director of Public Prosecutions.

C. J. E.

[PROBATE, ETC., DIVISION.]

1954
Feb. 10, 11.

Collingwood J.

*WRIGHT v. WRIGHT.

Husband and Wife—Maintenance—High Court—Application for injunction to restrain husband from dealing with property—No arrears under current order—Application for further provision pending.

A wife applied for an injunction to restrain her former husband from dealing with certain property and assets pending the disposal of her applications to vary orders previously made in her favour for maintenance and for a secured provision. The husband was not in arrears in his payments under the current order and had provided the security as ordered:—

Held, that although the wife held those orders of the court, that did not give her the right to an injunction to restrain her former husband from dealing with his property until her rights, if any, were determined in regard to the future orders for which she asked; any right she might have was restricted to the enforcement of the existing order.

Scott v. Scott [1951] P. 193; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 2) 1077; [1950] 2 All E.R. 1154 applied.

SUMMONS for injunction.

The following statement of facts is taken from the judgment of Collingwood J.: On May 21, 1941, the wife, the respondent in a suit, obtained a decree nisi on the grounds of her husband's adultery. On July 16, 1941, she filed a notice of application for maintenance. The decree was made absolute on November 26, 1945. On November 11, 1946, an order was made by the registrar for the maintenance of the wife for £100 per annum secured for her life, and a further £500 unsecured for their joint lives. There was a further sum in respect of the maintenance of the child of the marriage, as to which no question arose. The reason for the delay was that the husband was in Malaya and for a number of years a prisoner of war in the hands of the Japanese.

A deed was duly settled by conveyancing counsel in respect of the order for the payment of the secured sum of £100. On January 19, 1949, the wife took out a summons to vary the amount, and on May 31, 1949, the registrar made an order varying the maintenance, so far as the unsecured sum was concerned, to £620 per annum, as from January 19, 1949. He also varied the sum due to be paid for the child's maintenance. On April 29, 1953, the wife filed a notice of application for further variation of the unsecured maintenance. On July 29, 1953, the application was adjourned by the registrar for the filing of further affidavits by the wife and an interim order was made at the rate of £1,350 per annum. On January 22, 1954, the matter was again adjourned for the filing of further affidavits and the order was varied to £850 per annum as from that date. That application still stood adjourned, pending the return of the husband, at the date of the hearing of the summons.

The husband was a rubber planter in Malaya, and in his affidavit of means, sworn on September 16, 1953, in answer to the wife's summons to vary the unsecured maintenance, he referred to an account with the Provident Fund in Malaya. He stated that his account with that fund stood on December 31, 1952, at £16,306, and that his contributions would continue until December 31, 1953, on which date the total would be £17,020. He continued as follows in his affidavit: "This includes contributions from myself and from my employers and is the amount which I expect to receive on my retirement next year. No insurance policy has been effected in my case since at the time of the fund's inception members were not required to take out an insurance policy. Members who joined later were so required. I expect the payment out to me of my interest in the Provident Fund to be made in or about the month of April, 1954; that is, about a month after my retirement." The husband also gave particulars in his affidavit of his salary for the years 1950, 1951 and 1952; and stated that his employment in Malaya would finish on March 10, 1954, and that passages had been booked for him and his present wife on a ship leaving Singapore on March 11, 1954. In paragraph 6 of the affidavit he said: "It is my intention when I receive payment out of the "Provident Fund to devote about £2,500 to the purchase of a "home for myself and my wife and to utilize the balance to "purchase a joint annuity of £600 per annum for my wife and "myself. Any small balance I intend to invest in government "stocks."

1954

Wright v. Wright.

On February 2, 1954, the wife filed a further application to vary the secured allowance, and the present application was for an injunction to restrain the husband pending the hearing of that application, from carrying out his intentions expressed in paragraph 6. During the course of the hearing, counsel for the wife applied to amend the summons to cover the disposal of the application as to unsecured maintenance, which, it was expected, would be heard at the same time as the application of February 2, 1954, relating to the secured payments.

D. A. Fairweather for the wife.
J. B. Latey for the husband.

The cases cited are referred to in the judgment.

Cur. adv. vult.

Collingwood J. stated the facts set out above and continued: Counsel for the wife submitted that she had an order in her favour for secured payment of £100 a year, and, further, an order for interim maintenance at the rate of £820 a year, and that once she had obtained an order which gave her the right to be paid out of the property of the husband she was entitled to an injunction in order to preserve that property. Counsel referred to Scott v. Scott.[1] Mr. John Latey, counsel for the husband, submitted that there was no power to grant an injunction in the circumstances of this case, as so to do would be to grant it quia timet before the right to relief had been established.

In regard to Scott v. Scott,[1] the parties in that case were still married, and it was an application by the wife under section 5 of the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1949 (now section 23 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950). Before the hearing and determination of the summons the wife alleged that her husband was realizing all his assets with a view to emigrating with them, and applied for an injunction to restrain him from removing the assets out of the jurisdiction. Wallington J. refused to grant an injunction on the ground that he had no jurisdiction so to do before any order contemplated by section 5 had been made. The wife appealed.

[1] [1951] P. 193; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 2) 1077; [1950] 2 All E.R. 1154.

Somervell L.J., after reading section 5 of the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1949, and stating the facts, said [2]: "The question here is not on the facts but on the "question of jurisdiction. The judge granted an interim injunc-"tion, but when the summons came on for hearing he decided "that he had no jurisdiction to grant an injunction at that stage "in the proceedings, namely, before any order as contemplated "by section 5 had been made. Unaided by authorities I would "have said that that was plainly right. The general principle "of our law is well known, i.e., that an injunction of this kind "cannot be granted quia timet before some right to relief has "been established. Therefore, reading this section by itself, "notwithstanding the fact that it gives the court the power to "secure the payment, I would have said that if Parliament had "intended that there should be what may be, as Mr. Latey has "submitted, a very important safeguard in some cases, it would "have expressly so provided.

"We are not unaided by authorities however. Under "statutory provisions which, I agree, were different, but which "seem to me for this purpose analogous, it has been held that "an injunction of this kind cannot be granted. The headnote to "Newton v. Newton [3] states: 'The court will not, in order to "'protect a wife's right to alimony, restrain a husband from "'removing his property out of the jurisdiction of the court "'before an order for alimony has been made.' There was a "considered judgment by Sir James Hannen. He overruled a "case in which he had previously given a decision in a contrary "sense, examined the authorities, considered the matter in the "light of the principle, and said [4]: 'I come to the conclusion that "'as it has been decided that the Judicature Act does not give "'any enlarged powers to the court in this respect, it is not "'competent for a court, merely quia timet, to restrain a "'respondent from dealing with his property. The case "'would be different, of course, if the circumstances were the "'same as in Sidney v. Sidney.[5] In that case that decision "would be binding on me'." The Lord Justice continued: "Sidney v. Sidney [5] is interesting, because there a decree absolute "of divorce had been made. The court had ordered permanent "maintenance to be secured to the petitioner, and an application "was made by the wife to restrain the husband from dissipating "his property for the purpose of putting it out of the control of "the court. Sir James Hannen said [6]: 'It is to be observed "'that in that case there was, what there is not in this case, a "'subsisting order for the payment of the annuity.' That "principle was followed by Sir Samuel Evans P. in Burmester

[2] [1951] P. 193, 195.
[3] (1885) 11 P.D. 11.
[4] Ibid. 13.
[5] (1867) 17 L.T.(N.S.) 9.
[6] 11 P.D. 11, 12.

1954

WRIGHT v. WRIGHT.

Collingwood J.

"v. Burmester,[7] and in this court in Jagger v. Jagger.[8] It is "quite true that in the latter case there were other grounds on "which certainly two members of the court thought that the "matter could be decided, but Lord Hanworth M.R. and "Scrutton L.J. stated the principle which I think puts the "difficulty in the way of the appellant here. The latter said: "'I am not aware of any statutory or other power in the court "'to restrain a person from dealing with his property at a time "'when no order against him has been made'." Birkett L.J. agreed.

In Sidney v. Sidney[9] an order for permanent alimony had been made and a direction given to the respondent to furnish an abstract of title, or abstracts of title, to various properties; or, alternatively, to furnish a draft conveyance in order that it might be submitted to conveyancing counsel for their consideration. The husband did not comply with either of the orders, and the court granted an injunction and a receiver, holding it had jurisdiction to protect the property for the benefit of the wife. Sidney v. Sidney[9] was referred to in Newton v. Newton.[10] That was an application for alimony pendente lite, and the court held that it could not, before an order was made, restrain the husband from removing property out of the jurisdiction. The President said[11]: "In support of the application two cases were cited, "the one of Sidney v. Sidney,[9] decided by Malins V.-C. in 1867, "and the other, a case decided by myself, Noakes v. Noakes & "Hill,[12] in the year 1878. With regard to the first of these "cases, Sidney v. Sidney,[9] it was one in which the decree "absolute for a dissolution of marriage had been pronounced, and "the court had ordered permanent maintenance to the amount "of £245 a year to be secured to the petitioner, and a reference "to one of the conveyancing counsel of the Court of Chancery "to settle a proper instrument to be executed by the respondent "so as to carry out the order, and an application was after-"wards made to Malins V.-C. to restrain the husband from "dissipating his property for the purpose of putting it out of the "control of the court. It is to be observed that in that case "there was, what there is not in this case, a subsisting order for "the payment of the annuity. The application therefore to the "Vice-Chancellor was for the purpose of enforcing that order, "and it was similar to, though it was not actually, the process "in execution of the order which had already been made by this "court. In that it is distinguished from the present case." He then refers to Noakes v. Noakes & Hill,[12] and said: "I "therefore dissolve this injunction."

That case was followed by Burmester v. Burmester,[13] in which the same principle was applied to permanent maintenance.

[7] [1913] P. 76; 29 T.L.R. 323.
[8] [1926] P. 93, 102; 42 T.L.R. 413.
[9] 17 L.T.(N.S.) 9.
[10] 11 P.D. 11.
[11] Ibid. 12.
[12] (1877) 4 P.D. 60.
[13] [1913] P. 76.

In Jagger v. Jagger[14] Hill J. held, according to the headnote of the case, "That although the Divorce Court had power to "restrain a respondent husband by injunction from parting with "his own property in order to defeat the claims of the petitioning "wife to alimony or permanent maintenance which the court had "already ordered, it had no power to set aside an assignment of "his property made by him in consideration of a second marriage, "even if the result might be to defeat the claim of the petitioner "to maintenance not yet actually ordered." The Court of Appeal upheld that decision.

There is one passage in the judgment of Hill J. to which Mr. Fairweather directed attention, and that is where Hill J. says[15]: "Upon the making of the interim order on July 1, 1925, "I think an injunction might have been granted, but none was "applied for, and on July 23, 1925, the property was assigned "and the power of the court to act by injunction was gone."

The last case is Fanshawe v. Fanshawe,[16] the headnote of which reads: "The court will interfere by way of injunction to "restrain a husband from dealing with his property so as to "defeat an order for costs or alimony pendente lite when the "amount of the latter has been fixed and an instalment of it is "already due and in arrear, but will not so restrain him in respect "of instalments of alimony to become due at a future date."

In the present case the respondent wife is applying for new orders in substitution for existing orders. In order to succeed in her pending application for variation she must, it is conceded, bring herself within the proviso in section 28 (1) of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950, in view of the date of the original order. She may, or she may not, succeed in obtaining the variation for which she asks. In my opinion, what she is seeking to do is to preserve the status quo in regard to her husband's property until such time as the order for which she asks is made. It is quite true that she has an order of the court, but I think that whatever right to an injunction she may have is restricted to the enforcement of that order. It does not give her the right to an injunction to ensure that the husband shall still retain property which he now has, when the time comes for the determination of her rights in regard to a future order, and, in my opinion, on the authorities to which I have referred, the court has no power to grant the injunction asked for.

Summons dismissed: no order as to costs.

Solicitors: Strong & Co.; John Bartlett & Son.

J. B. G.

[14] [1926] P. 93.
[15] Ibid. 96.
[16] [1927] P. 238; 43 T.L.R. 666.

[CHANCERY DIVISION.]

1954
Mar. 1.

Wynn-Parry J.

* In re T. W. CONSTRUCTION LD.

[00440 of 1952.]

Company—Winding up—Disposition after commencement—Dispositions made between presentation of petition and winding-up order—Bank overdraft facilities before and after presentation of petition—Arrangement to enable company to continue its business—Principles for exercise of discretion by court—Companies Act, 1948 (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 38), s. 227.

On March 25, 1952, a company asked their bankers for a temporary overdraft of £1,000 to finance an export order, and produced documentary credits. On April 4, the bank confirmed the overdraft. On further requests by the company, the bank extended the overdraft to £1,200 over May 12.

On May 7, a petition was presented for the winding up of the company. On further representations by the company, the bank extended the overdraft until the credit in favour of the company should be met, and allowed the company to draw two cheques for wages. On May 21 £1,308 was paid to the bank in respect of the transactions by a third party. On May 22, the bank first became aware of the petition. On June 23, a winding-up order was made.

A summons having been taken out by the liquidator for the repayment to him by the bank of the sum of £1,308, the registrar made an order that the bank should repay to the liquidator the sum of £803, that being the amount standing to the debit of the account on May 3, 1952, which was the last entry before the date of the petition.

On appeal by the bank by motion against that order:—

Held, allowing the appeal, that, as the accommodation was arranged for a limited period for the express purpose of enabling the company to carry on its business, it was a transaction for the benefit of and in the interests of the company; so that it was a proper exercise of the court's discretion to permit the bank to retain the whole of the £1,308.

In re Wiltshire Iron Co. (1868) 3 Ch.App. 443; In re Park Ward & Co. Ld. [1926] Ch. 828; In re Steane's (Bournemouth) Ld. [1949] W.N. 490; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 1) 71; [1950] 1 All E.R. 21, applied.

Dictum of Vaughan Williams J. in In re Répertoire Opera Co. (1895) 2 Manson 314, 316, questioned.

In re Liverpool Civil Service Association (1874) 9 Ch.App. 511; and In re Civil Service and General Store Ld. (1887) 57 L.J.Ch. 119; 4 T.L.R. 168, distinguished.

Motion.

In April, 1946, the company opened a current account with Barclays Bank at its branch at 8 Angel Court, in the city of London, and maintained that account until the company went into liquidation. The managing director of the company was one Weininger. On March 25, 1952, he called at the bank and produced to it certain documentary credits relating to the proposed shipment for export by the company of certain machinery, and asked for a temporary overdraft of £1,000. On April 4, 1952, at a subsequent interview, which he had with the assistant manager of that branch of the bank, that overdraft was confirmed. On April 9, Weininger telephoned to the bank and explained that the credits in question had been extended to April 26, and requested that the overdraft facilities should be extended to that date. After a further call at the bank, and the bank having been informed that the credits had been further extended to May 5, it was arranged that the bank would provide overdraft facilities to the company to the extent of £1,200 over May 12, 1952. That was a special arrangement for a strictly limited period and was for the purpose of enabling the company to continue its business.

On May 7, 1952, a petition was presented for the winding up of the company. On May 9, 1952, the overdraft at the bank was increased by the amount of the wages cheque. On that day Weininger again called at the bank and told the assistant manager that he was going to the United States of America on business. He said that the goods, the subject of the documentary credits, would be shipped on May 14, when the bills of lading would become available, and that a firm, Leopold Joseph & Co., would be collecting £1,300 shortly afterwards, with the result that the bank agreed to extend the overdraft facilities until the receipt of the collection of that £1,300 and until the bank should have received that sum. On May 13, 1952, the petition was advertised in the London Gazette, and on the following day in The Times. On May 16 Mrs. Humphreys, who was a director and secretary, telephoned the bank and obtained permission to draw a further cheque for £100 for the purpose of paying wages, and on May 20, 1952, that cheque was drawn. On May 21, 1952, the sum of £1,308 6s. 10d. was paid to the credit of the account of the company at the bank by Leopold Joseph & Co.

The bank first became aware of the petition on May 22, 1952. On June 23, 1952, an order was made for the winding up of the company. On August 6, 1953, a summons was taken out by the liquidator claiming repayment by the bank of the sum of £1,308 6s. 10d. On January 27, 1954, an order was made by the registrar that the bank should repay to the liquidator the sum of £803 11s. 0d., being part of the sum of £1,308 6s. 10d. referred to in the summons.

On March 1, 1954, this motion came before the court, in which the bank sought that the order of the registrar might be "discharged or varied in manner following, that is to say, that "it may be declared that the payment to Barclays Bank Ld. "of the said sum of £1,308 6s. 10d. is or ought to be treated "as valid and that Barclays Bank Ld. is to be at liberty to "retain the whole of such sum of £1,308 6s. 10d. and that the "[liquidator] do pay to Barclays Bank Ld." [the costs of the summons and the costs of the motion].

1954

T. W. Construction Ld., In re.

C. R. Richmount for the applicant bank.
Frederick Hallis for the respondent liquidator.

Cases cited in argument: In re Steane's (Bournemouth) Ld.[1]; In re Répertoire Opera Co.[2]; In re Wiltshire Iron Co.[3]; In re Park Ward & Co. Ld.[4]; In re Liverpool Civil Service Association[5]; In re Civil Service and General Store (Ld.)[6]

Wynn-Parry J. This is a motion by Barclays Bank Ld. for an order discharging an order made by the registrar on January 27, 1954, in which he ordered the bank to repay to the liquidator of the company the sum of £803 11s. 0d., being part of a sum of £1,308 6s. 10d. paid into the credit of the banking account of the company with the bank on May 21, 1952.

[His Lordship stated the facts and continued:] According to the evidence filed on behalf of the bank, the bank did not become aware of the petition before May 22, 1952, when the manager of the branch saw a reference to it in Stubbs' Gazette: that is to say, no one on behalf of the bank became aware of the presentation of the petition until after the payment into the bank of the sum of £1,308 6s. 10d. to which I have referred. On June 23, 1952, the company was ordered to be wound up. On August 6, 1952, a summons was issued by the liquidator claiming repayment by the bank of the sum of £1,308 6s. 10d. On January 27, 1954, the order was made by the registrar which comes before me under appeal. He ordered that the bank should repay to the liquidator the sum of £803 11s. 0d., that being the amount standing to the debit of the account on May 3, 1952, which is the last entry before May 7. It is for the discharge of that order that this motion has been launched.

The relevant section of the Companies Act, 1948, is section 227, which reads as follows: "In a winding up by the court, "any disposition of the property of the company, including "things in action, and any transfer of shares, or alteration in the "status of the members of the company, made after the com-"mencement of the winding up, shall, unless the court other-"wise orders, be void."

Certain authorities have been referred to. It may be convenient if I turn in the first place to the recent case of Re Steane's (Bournemouth) Ld., a decision of Vaisey J.[1] In the course of his judgment in that case Vaisey J. said: "The "legislature, by omitting to indicate any particular principles "which should govern the exercise of the discretion vested in "the court, must be deemed to have left it entirely at large, "and controlled only by the general principles which apply "to every kind of judicial discretion. I have reviewed the facts

[1] [1949] W.N. 490; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 1) 71; [1950] 1 All E.R. 21.
[2] (1895) 2 Manson 314.
[3] (1868) 3 Ch.App. 443.
[4] [1926] Ch. 828.
[5] (1874) 9 Ch.App. 511.
[6] (1887) 57 L.J.Ch. 119; 4 T.L.R. 168.

"of the present case somewhat at length because I think that "such a review must usually be necessary whenever a case of "this nature falls to be decided." In the older case of In re Répertoire Opera Co.,[2] Vaughan Williams J. said: "I have "an absolute discretion to validate this transaction or not. If "the transaction is one which would be valid under the pro-"tective sections of the Bankruptcy Act, that would be a very "strong reason for my validating it here. That is what Lord "Cairns means in Ex parte Pearson, In re Wiltshire Iron Co.[3]" With that statement I respectfully entirely agree. Vaughan Williams J. continued: "The cases on section 153"—which was the corresponding section to section 227—"are an adoption "by the court of the principle of the protective sections in "bankruptcy. It would be very unfortunate if the principles of "administration in bankruptcy and in the winding up of com-"panies were not as far as possible the same." I have some difficulty in following the reasoning in those two sentences because the protective section in the present Bankruptcy Act, 1914, s. 45, confers no discretion on the court. A transaction to be protected under that section must fulfil the conditions laid down in the section, otherwise it does not obtain the protection; whereas, as Vaughan Williams J. himself recognized, there was under the section corresponding to section 227 of the present Companies Act an absolute discretion, as was clearly stated by Vaisey J. in the passage in his judgment in the Bournemouth case[4] to which I have just referred.

The facts in In re Wiltshire Iron Co.,[5] the case to which Vaughan Williams J. refers, can be simply stated by reading a sentence from the headnote: "Where a customer of a trading "company had bona fide ordered and paid for goods, and the "company had loaded the goods on a railway to his address, "and sent him the invoices, after the presenting of the petition "but before the winding-up order:—Held, that the disposition "of the property was complete before the winding-up order, and "the goods ordered to be delivered to the customer." In the course of his judgment Lord Cairns said: "The 153rd section "no doubt provides that all dispositions of the property and "effects of the company made between the commencement of "the winding up (that is the presentation of the petition) and "the order for winding up, shall, unless the court otherwise "orders, be void. This is a wholesome and necessary provision, "to prevent, during the period which must elapse before a "petition can be heard, the improper alienation and dissipation "of the property of a company in extremis. But where a "company actually trading, which it is the interest of everyone "to preserve, and ultimately to sell, as a going concern, is "made the object of a winding-up petition, which may fail or "may succeed, if it were to be supposed that transactions in

[2] (1895) 2 Manson 314, 316.
[3] (1868) 3 Ch.App. 443.
[4] [1949] W.N. 490.
[5] 3 Ch.App. 443, 446.

1954

T. W. Construction Ld., In re.

Wynn-Parry J.

"the ordinary course of its current trade, bona fide entered into "and completed, would be avoided, and would not, in the "discretion given to the court, be maintained, the result would "be that the presentation of a petition, groundless or well-"founded, would, ipso facto, paralyse the trade of the company, "and great injury, without any counter-balance of advantage, "would be done to those interested in the assets of the "company."

In the later case of In re Park Ward & Co. Ld.[6] Romer J. applied the case of In re Wiltshire Iron Co.[7] After quoting the passage from the judgment of Lord Cairns which I have myself quoted, he says[8]: "If I were to adopt the view put forward "by Mr. Clayton, a company would in very few cases be able "to obtain the assistance necessary to enable it to carry on "business as a going concern. Lord Cairns evidently regarded "the power given to the court by the section as one given for "the benefit and in the interests of the company, so as to "ensure that a company which is made the subject of a "winding-up petition may nevertheless obtain money necessary "for carrying on its business and so avoid its business being "paralysed. If, therefore, I were to hold that no one who "knows of the presentation of a petition can safely enter into "any arrangement with the company, I think I should be "depriving the company of the benefit which, according to Lord "Cairns, the provision of the section was intended to secure to "it." That was a case in which, between the date of the presentation of the petition and the date of the order for its compulsory winding up, a debenture was issued by the company to secure to the debenture-holder the repayment of £1,200 advanced to enable the company to pay wages due to its staff. Apart from the circumstance that in this case the bank did not go so far as to demand a debenture, the facts appear to me to have a distinct similarity. It is true that only part of the overdraft here was applied in the payment of wages, but it is clear from the evidence, and to my mind it is the only possible inference from the facts, that the accommodation arranged was arranged for a limited period for the express purpose of enabling the company to continue to carry on its business. Therefore, to use the language of Romer J., it was a transaction for the benefit of and in the interests of the company.

In the case before Vaisey J., In re Steane's (Bournemouth) Ld.,[9] a debenture was issued to secure moneys which were advanced for the purpose, as stated by Vaisey J. in his judgment, of keeping the company going or of keeping things going generally. Those three authorities appear to me to govern this case and to bring it within the benefit of the section.

Against that there are said to be two cases to which reference was made. The first is In re Liverpool Civil Service

[6] [1926] Ch. 828, 831.
[7] 3 Ch.App. 443.
[8] [1926] Ch. 831.
[9] [1949] W.N. 490.

Association.[10] That case appears to me to be distinguishable from the present case. In the course of his judgment Mellish L.J. said: "I do not mean to express any dissatisfaction with "the cases which have been cited by Mr. North, as deciding "that all bona fide transactions in carrying on the ordinary "business of a company, which take place between the petition "and the winding-up order, and have been completed before "the winding-up order is made, should be confirmed. But here "the question is, whether the very creditor who has prosecuted "the petition should be allowed to retain money which he has "obtained by means of the petition, when the result of the "petition is that the assets of the company are to be divided "equally amongst its creditors."

The second case is In re Civil Service and General Store Ld.[11] Apart from the circumstance that the Wiltshire Iron Co. case[12] was not cited, it appears to me that that case is clearly distinguishable from the present case. There, on the same day on which the petition for winding up was being presented, the company agreed to pay a trade creditor who was ignorant of the presentation of the petition the sum of £175, being part of a debt of £320 previously due to him, on the condition that he continued to supply the company with goods for a cash payment. The £175 was paid after the presentation of the petition, and also a sum of £13 for goods supplied. The winding-up order was subsequently made, and the payment of £13 was allowed, but the £175 was ordered to be repaid. Chitty J. in his judgment states the case as put forward on behalf of the creditors in this way[13]: "The argument of the "respondents is a somewhat strange one. They say that the "part payment of their debt was a condition of their supplying "goods, and that they are therefore entitled to treat the trans-"action as a new and complete transaction." As the judge makes clear, that was the case of the creditor. Small wonder, then, that he goes on to say: "But to affirm a transaction of "that kind under the discretion conferred upon the court by "section 153, would be to exercise such discretion upon a "totally erroneous principle." He further relies on the circumstance that, as he put it, "the respondents, at the least, knew "at the date of the agreement that the company was in "embarrassed circumstances, although they do not seem then "to have had knowledge of the presentation of a petition." Then in the next sentence there is a circumstance stated which would of itself, I think, be sufficient to distinguish that case from the present case: "When, however, they actually received "the two payments of £100 and £75, they were, in my judgment, "aware of a petition having been presented. I can only treat "the transaction as an attempt to get a preference over other

[10] (1874) 9 Ch.App. 511, 512.
[11] (1887) 57 L.J.Ch. 119.
[12] 3 Ch.App. 443.
[13] 57 L.J.Ch. 119, 120.

1954

T. W. Construction Ld., In re.

Wynn-Parry J.

"creditors." Therefore it seems to me that these two cases do not in any sense govern the present case or stand in the way of the disposition in question being validated.

It appears to me, viewing the evidence as a whole and drawing the inference that I do, that this was a transaction which is directly within the passage from the judgment of Lord Cairns, which I read, and I can see no ground for distinguishing between the amount of the debit existing immediately before the presentation of the petition, namely, £803 11s. 0d., and the amount by which the overdraft became increased after the presentation of the petition.

For these reasons, therefore, I propose to allow this appeal and discharge the order of the registrar and to declare that the bank are at liberty to retain the whole of the sum of £1,308 6s. 10d.

Declaration accordingly.

Solicitors: Durrant Cooper & Hambling; Booth & Blackwell.

J. L. D.

[CHANCERY DIVISION.]

1954
Mar. 4, 5.

Harman J.

* In re BRITISH SCHOOL OF EGYPTIAN ARCHAEOLOGY. MURRAY v. PUBLIC TRUSTEE.

[1953 B. No. 3398.]

Charity—Education—Archaeology—Society for conducting excavations in Egypt and publishing works—Whether charitable—Supervening impracticability of objects—Whether resulting trust for subscribers. Trust and Trustee—Resulting trust.

A society was founded in 1905 by the well-known archaeologist, Sir Flinders Petrie, who became honorary director. The society's regulations provided: "3. The objects of this association shall be "any or all of the following:—A. To conduct excavations and to "pay all expenses incidental thereto. B. To discover and acquire "antiquities and to present the same to public museums. To hold "exhibitions when practicable. C. To publish works. D. To pro-"mote the training and assistance of students. All of these objects "shall be carried on in relation to Egypt, and any part of the "former Kingdom of Egypt. Exceptions may be considered. 4. "All money received by contribution, bequest or sales of books, "shall be applicable to the above purposes only. . . . 9. All con-"tributors of one guinea or two guineas annually . . . shall receive "the corresponding publication of work free. Those who contribute "a larger amount annually or at once shall receive a corresponding "value of publication when such be issued, or antiquities may be "allocated to such public museums as they desire."

The society was active in the field for many years; excavations were carried out under the supervision of the director, and a large number of works was published. In 1939 war put an end to activities in the field. Sir Flinders Petrie died in 1942. Since then nothing was done except to publish a number of manuscripts left by him. In 1951 it was decided to publish one more work, and wind up the society. Questions then arose whether the society's funds were held on charitable trusts, whether there was a resulting trust in favour of the subscribers. The committee were desirous, if possible, to devote the funds to the foundation of a scholarship in Egyptian archaeology in memory of Sir Flinders Petrie. The Crown disclaimed any right in the funds as bona vacantia.

On the hearing of a summons taken out for the determination of these questions:—

Held, (1) that as the society's purpose was the discovery and diffusion of archaeological knowledge and the training of students, it was an educational charity; (2) that on the true construction of the regulations contributions were given for the society's purposes generally, and the contributors' rights were limited to receiving such publications as the society thought fit to publish, so that no resulting trust arose; (3) that there should be a reference to chambers to settle a scheme to found a scholarship on the lines proposed by the committee.

In re Hillier's Trusts, ante, p. 9; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1547 distinguished.

In re Welsh Hospital (Netley) Fund [1921] 1 Ch. 655 and In re North Devon and West Somerset Relief Fund [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1260; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1032 followed.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS.

The facts are stated in the judgment.

W. J. Tonge for the plaintiffs, officials of the society.

J. P. Hunter-Brown for the donor of a lump sum.

P. C. Lucking for an annual contributor.

Denys Buckley and N. S. Warren for the Attorney-General.

The following cases, not cited in the judgment, were referred to in argument: In re Wokingham Fire Brigade Trusts *; Royal College of Surgeons of England v. National Provincial Bank Ld. †

HARMAN J. This is an originating summons issued under section 28 of the Charitable Trusts Act, 1853, by the persons responsible for the conduct of an institution known as the British School of Egyptian Archaeology, an unincorporated body, sometimes known as the British School of Archaeology in Egypt. The question before me is whether this body is or is not to be accounted a charity, and that is a matter which can be raised under the Charitable Trusts Act, in proceedings entitled "In the Matter of The Charity," as was decided in In re Norwich Town Close Estate Charity,[1] where the headnote reads: "On "a summons issued under the Charitable Trusts Acts the court

* [1951] Ch. 373; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 446; [1951] 1 All E.R. 454.

† [1952] A.C. 631; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 978; [1952] 1 All E.R. 984.

[1] (1888) 40 Ch.D. 298; 5 T.L.R. 197.

1954

British School of Egyptian Archaeology, In re.

Harman J.

"has jurisdiction to decide the question whether the property "which is the subject of the summons is held upon a charitable "trust or not."

The property here in question consists of investments and cash worth about £4,000 now standing to the credit of the treasurer of this institution, of which the controlling body say that it is at the end of its useful life and that its affairs should be wound up. This body was founded in 1905 by the well-known archaeologist, the late Professor Sir Flinders Petrie, who for many years was the mainspring and inspiration of its activities. He carried out, as is well known, many remarkable excavations, particularly on the borders of Egypt and Palestine, and rendered considerable service to learning by his activities and by the publication of their results. A print of its regulations as they stood after revision in 1936 was in evidence. The only evidence that they are such regulations is a statement at the end of them in these terms: "The Regulations were passed by the meeting "of constitution of the School on July 21, 1905, and revised "and passed by Executive Committee on April 24, 1936."

At that time, for some reason, the revised regulations were registered with the Government of Palestine, then the mandatory government under British auspices. The regulations purport to be "Regulations of the British School of Archaeology in Egypt other-"wise known as the British School of Egyptian Archaeology."

Regulation 1 states the name. "2. The headquarters of the "school is in London. The office of this association"—which is the same as the school—"is at University College, London. "3. The objects of this association shall be any or all of the "following:—A. To conduct excavations and to pay all expenses "incidental thereto. B. To discover and acquire antiquities "and to present the same to public museums. To hold exhibi-"tions, when practicable. C. To publish works. D. To promote "the training and assistance of students. All of these objects "shall be carried on in relation to Egypt, and any part of the "former Kingdom of Egypt. Exceptions may be considered. "4. All money received by contribution, bequest, or sales of "books, shall be applicable to the above purposes only.

"7. Publication of results shall be as rapid as practicable; "and all drawing and writing shall be finished for this purpose "before fresh work be undertaken, unless the executive deter-"mines otherwise.

"8. Students joining the school shall devote most of their "time to such work, in such manner, as the director and "assistant director shall agree upon with them. Their notebooks "shall be inspected by the director, and shall revert to the school. "They shall report the results of their work, and prepare them "for publication, if required, before undertaking fresh subjects "of work."

Then under a new heading called "Of contributors," there is regulation 9: "All contributors of one guinea or two guineas

"annually are members of the school and shall receive the "corresponding publication of work free. Those who contribute "a larger amount annually or at once shall receive a correspond-"ing value of publications when such be issued, or antiquities "may be allocated to such public museums as they desire. "Contributors of seven or ten shillings are associates, and shall "receive the half-yearly bulletin."

It will be observed that learning in Egyptology does not connote a capacity to express oneself clearly or succinctly in English. A worse-drawn document it would be hard to find; but I have to construe it as best I can, because it is on the terms of those regulations, stating the objects of this society, that its nature must be ascertained. I shall therefore return to them later.

The school was active in the field year by year for many years, but I have no direct evidence about it for a long time and indeed until 1929. For that year I have an official report, which was presented to the contributors with the subscription list and balance sheet. By this time Flinders Petrie had become Professor Sir Flinders Petrie. He was holding the Edwards Chair of Egyptology at University College, London, and no doubt that was why the college was the headquarters of the school. The report shows that there were distinguished patrons; there was a large general committee with a smaller executive committee. Professor Sir Flinders Petrie was the honorary director and his wife was the organizing secretary. On the front page is a list of publications of the school, which amounted by that time to no less than 51 volumes. The report told of the activities of the year, and was followed by a list of subscriptions and donations during the period November, 1928, to October, 1929, which came to nearly £3,000, and ranged from £500 in one instance down to a guinea, which was the commonest figure. There were also some American subscriptions on a small scale. At the end was a statement: "Annual payments made by con-"tributors to the British School of Egyptian Archaeology: "Ordinary annual contribution to receive the volume or volumes, "2 guineas. Contribution to receive other volumes or in part "payment of annual volume, 1 guinea. Ancient Egypt and "illustrated quarterly journal, four parts, post free, 7s. Asso-"ciateship of school, journal supplied post free, 10s." There was appended a balance sheet from which it appears that at that time the financial position of the school was a comparatively flourishing one. Its expenditure was about £4,800, £500 over its income for the year; but it had investments of a value of about £8,000, and so it was better off than many other learned concerns. I have several subsequent reports, but they do not differ materially from that.

In 1935 Sir Flinders Petrie resigned his chair at University College, and removed the main activities of the school to Palestine. The war put an end to the school's activities. Its last active year in the field was 1938. Sir Flinders Petrie died in 1942 and the school has really never since been a going concern. He left behind him much material which was thought worthy of publication, and two volumes have been published since the war and distributed among the members. A third volume is now in the press. These are large and sumptuously illustrated volumes and their retail price is two guineas.

1954

British School of Egyptian Archaeology, In re.

Harman J.

There is no doubt that a good many of those who subscribed two guineas a year did so on the footing that they were paying for the yearly volume, because in general no year passed without at least one volume being published by the school.

In 1950 a new committee was formed and an attempt was made to administer the remaining funds. Eventually it was decided that it was useless to continue; that, after publishing the remaining material worth publication left in the society's hands, the only thing to do was to wind it up. In December, 1951, a circular letter was written by the committee to a number of subscribers who were supplied with a balance sheet for 1950, and were informed that the amount of their subscription lying in the society's hands was in excess of the nominal value of the books with which they had been supplied; and they were asked whether they wanted their money back. Some of them said that they did; some of them said that they did not; and a certain amount of money was paid back to those who asked for it. Whether that was right or not is quite immaterial on the present application.

What I have first to decide is whether this body is charitable or not. If it be a charity, it cannot make any difference that one course or another was taken in 1951: that cannot have any effect on the question whether the funds are devoted to charitable purposes. Charitable purposes are an endless subject of discussion. To be within the intendment of the Statute of Elizabeth I, which (as Lord Morton of Henryton recently pointed out in Royal College of Surgeons of England v. National Provincial Bank[2]), was never intended to give a definition of "charity," is to be charitable in law; and every day an argument is put forward that some activity or other is charitable. Such objects include those beneficial to the public, or as benefiting the public by the spread of knowledge or the advancement of education.

Mr. Buckley, for the Attorney-General, referred to Beaumont v. Oliveira,[3] where it was said that the Royal Society and the Royal Geographical Society were charities. It is, of course, somewhat ironical to remember that in those days the aim of societies was to establish that they were not charitable, in order to escape the consequences of the Mortmain Acts. Selwyn L.J. said[4]: "The Royal Geographical Society is a corporation, and

[2] [1952] A.C. 631, 650.
[3] (1869) L.R. 4 Ch. 309.
[4] Ibid. 313.

"its objects are stated to be and are, 'the improvement and "'diffusion of geographical knowledge.' The Royal Society is "also a corporation, and its objects are 'for improving natural "'knowledge.' The objects of both these societies are public, "and they are both societies for the advancement of objects of "general public utility"; and he decided that both societies were therefore charities.

The objects of this society I have already stated. They are not stated so succinctly as in those two admirable instances, but I think that they amount to this: that this is a body whose funds and whose objects are devoted to the discovery of knowledge connected with ancient Egypt and its kingdom, to publishing works in that connexion, and, in the course of its activities, to train students in the craft or art of excavation.

Two criticisms are made against the view that this was an educational charity or a charity for the promotion of knowledge:—first, that there was no obligation to diffuse the knowledge outside the ranks of the members of the society itself. It was said that a body merely established for study and for the discussion of the subjects of study among its members, does not necessarily confer any benefit on the public. In my view that would be quite a valid criticism if it were not that I read the objects as clearly showing an intention of making the knowledge public; the antiquities acquired are to be presented to public museums, and it is an object to hold exhibitions when practicable and to publish works.

The second criticism was directed to the words "to publish "works." Apart from the fact that it is an inelegant phrase, and that in other contexts it might be too vague to mean anything in particular, a work is something done, something worked upon in relation to the object of study. It was contended that the "works" might include novels about modern Egypt. But here "works" are plainly works in relation to Egypt and the kingdom of Egypt, and when read in connexion with the provisions regarding excavations, the expression can only have reference to ancient Egypt and the former kingdom of Egypt; so that the "works" to be published are works which are to disclose to the public the results of the excavations which it is the society's object to carry out. I cannot doubt that this was a society for the diffusion of a certain branch of knowledge, namely, knowledge of the ancient past of Egypt; and that it also had a direct educational purpose, namely, to train students in that complicated branch of knowledge known as Egyptology. In my view this is clearly a charity from the educational aspect, and it will be observed that "All money received by contribution "bequest, or sales of books, shall be applicable to the above "purposes only." It is in connexion with that, in my judgment, that one must read the 9th regulation about contributors.

The correspondence of 1951 showed that many contributors supposed that they contributed their two guineas a year as the price of the book they would receive or usually did receive during the year. It was said that that showed that the relationship between the society and the contributors was merely contractual, and that the society held itself out to be willing to supply a book at a retail price of two guineas in return for a subscription of that amount; and that if the subscription was one guinea, the contributor would have to wait two years before getting a book; that that was the nature of the society's relation with many of the contributors, who were museums and places of learning in other branches. But that in my judgment cannot override the regulation, which is that the contributions are to be devoted to the objects. One of the objects, of course, is the publication of these very works. In my view, what the contributors do is to contribute towards the objects of the society; and the society in return, as it is entitled to do, lets them have for nothing what otherwise would cost them two guineas, namely, the annual or it may be biennial volume of what might be called the transactions of the society.

1954

British School of Egyptian Archaeology, In re.

Harman J.

I think that that has a bearing on the other part of the case, because, even though this be a charity, there remains this question: when people contributed to this charity one guinea, or two guineas, or £500, did they do it on the footing that they should receive in return so much published work regarding the society's activities, with the added implication that if the society's objects were stopped or ceased to be possible or practicable, the money should come back as on a failure of consideration; or did they pay their money out and out as contributions to a learned society? If the former, then there may well be a resulting trust in favour of the donors or subscribers so far as they have subscribed; if the latter, then the money was devoted once and for all to a charitable purpose, and the fact that the charity has come to an end and its affairs must be wound up entitles no one to have any money back.

The well-known case of In re Slevin[5] was concerned with a gift by will; it indicated that if money once be given by will to a charity, it matters not that the charity comes to an end shortly after the death of the testator and before the bequest is given effect to by the executors; it showed that once the testator is dead, his money is devoted to the charity, subject, of course, to the rights of creditors; and that it makes no difference if the charity is thereafter dissolved.

That principle, of course, is not easy to apply to subscriptions and gifts inter vivos. In my judgment the subscriptions here were given on a contractual basis to this extent; that the subscriber had a right to say to the society: "To the extent of the "value of my contribution you have promised to supply me with "copies of your transactions"; but further or otherwise I think that there was no contract. I think that there was no obligation on the society either to continue to publish works up to the value of the subscriptions, or, alternatively, to pay them back. I think that the only contract was to supply contributors with copies of such works as the society decided to publish. That is made clear in the rules in respect of those who contribute a larger amount than two guineas; such contributors are to receive a corresponding value of publications when such shall be issued, or they can take their money out by directing antiquities to be sent by the society to museums of their choice. At this time there are no more antiquities, which means objects of art or virtu, in the society's hands; there will be no more publications after the one now in the press; and therefore it is clear that those who contribute a larger amount have no further right. In my judgment, the contributors of one and two guineas are in no stronger position. These rules are very loosely drawn, but I cannot think that such contributors have any right by contract to have their money back.

[5] [1891] 2 Ch. 236; 7 T.L.R. 394.

Have the contributors any other right? In my judgment, on the true view of the whole transaction, they must be taken to have parted with their money once and for all. It is, of course, possible to give or to offer money for a purpose which fails at some time or fails ab initio, and thereafter to get it back. That was recently decided by Upjohn J. in In re Hillier's Trusts.[6] That was a case where the project was never started: money was collected for erecting a hospital which became impracticable, and the judge held that the contributions specially earmarked for that hospital must be paid back to the subscribers. There are other cases, notably In re Welsh Hospital (Netley) Fund,[7] and In re North Devon and West Somerset Relief Fund Trusts,[8] where it was decided that the money had been given out and out and could not be paid back. In my judgment, this case is more in line with those two than with Upjohn J.'s recent decision [9]; but no case of this sort is binding in any other case. I can only decide this case on its own merits.

I am told that if the court decides that a subscriber did not intend to have his money back in any event, he must be taken to have had a general charitable intent. I am not sure that the two things are synonymous. I do not think that follows. I think that a man may well say: "I parted with my money to "this society; I do not reserve any right to have it back," without having any positive intention that it should go to an analogous society or, indeed, to something to which the court might think proper to devote the money. In my judgment, all that is necessary is that the inference to be drawn should be that a subscriber, or donor or testator, cannot be supposed to have expected, or to have impliedly contracted, to have his money back.

[6] [1954] 1 W.L.R. 9; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1547.

[7] [1921] 1 Ch. 655.

[8] [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1260; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1032.

[9] [1954] 1 W.L.R. 9.

1954

British School of Egyptian Archaeology, In re.

Harman J.

There is something like £4,000 worth of assets, and it has been proposed to establish with that a Flinders Petrie scholarship in Egyptian Archaeology at University College. There could be no better memorial to a great man, and, though the scheme is still tentative, it is, I doubt not, one of which something can be made; and I propose to refer to chambers to settle a scheme for the devotion of these assets to the creation of a Flinders Petrie scholarship for the study of Egyptian archaeology.

There will be a declaration that the funds, investments, and future receipts from publications are held on valid charitable trusts; and I will direct that it be referred to chambers to settle a scheme generally; but I would have it known that I should not be willing to sanction a scheme other than one for the promotion of knowledge of Egyptian archaeology, commemorating the name of the founder of this school.

Declaration accordingly.

Solicitors: Pyke, Middleton & Brown; Powell, Skues & Graham Smith; Treasury Solicitor.

F. R. D.

[HOUSE OF LORDS.]

H. L. (E.)† 1954 Feb. 25

* YORKSHIRE COPPER WORKS LD. . . Appellant;

AND

REGISTRAR OF TRADE MARKS . . . Respondent.

Trade Mark — Registration — Distinctiveness — Geographical name — Whether inherently adapted to distinguish—"Yorkshire" copper tubes—Trade Marks Act, 1938 (1 & 2 Geo. 6, c. 22), s. 9.

A company which manufactured most of its products in Yorkshire applied for registration of the word "Yorkshire" as a trade mark for goods specified as "solid drawn tubes and capillary "fittings, all being made of copper or non-ferrous copper alloys." There was no other manufacturer of such goods in Yorkshire. Evidence was filed that the mark had acquired "100 per cent. "distinctiveness":—

Held that, even though the mark might have acquired "100 per "cent. distinctiveness," the Registrar of Trade Marks, in considering whether it fell within section 9 (1) (e) of the Trade Marks Act, 1938, was still bound under subsection (3) to have regard to the extent to which it was "inherently adapted to distinguish" the goods in question, and, inasmuch as it was not so adapted and, further, did not fall within section 9 (1) (a), (b), (c) or (d), it should not be registered.

A. Baily & Co. Ld. v. Clark, Son & Morland [1938] A.C. 557; 54 T.L.R. 688; [1938] 2 All E.R. 377 applied.

---

† Present: Lord Simonds L.C., Lord Oaksey, Lord Morton of Henryton, Lord Asquith of Bishopstone and Lord Cohen.

Per Lord Simonds L.C.: A geographical name can only be inherently adapted to distinguish the goods of A when it is such a name as would never occur to B to use in respect of his similar goods.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (sub nom. Yorkshire Copper Works Ld.'s Application) (1952) 70 R.P.C. 1 affirmed.

APPEAL from the Court of Appeal (Evershed M.R., Denning and Romer L.JJ.).

This was an appeal from a judgment and order of the Court of Appeal, affirming the judgment and order of Lloyd-Jacob J. which affirmed the decision of the Assistant Comptroller, acting for the respondent, the Registrar of Trade Marks, who refused an application by the appellants, Yorkshire Copper Works Ld., to register the mark "Yorkshire" in respect of "solid drawn tubes "and capillary fittings, all being made of copper or non-ferrous "copper alloys." The appellant company submitted that the registrar should be directed to proceed with the application.

The facts are stated by Lord Simonds L.C.

K. E. Shelley Q.C. and J. B. Shelley for the appellant company.

Sir Lionel Heald A.-G. and P. Stuart Bevan for the respondent.

The following cases, besides those referred to in their Lordships' opinions, were cited in argument: In re R. J. Lea Ld.'s Application [1]; In re J. & P. Coats Ld.'s Application [2]; In re Boots Pure Drug Co. Ld.'s Trade Mark,[3] and In re Alexander Pirie & Sons Ld.'s Application.[4]

Their Lordships took time for consideration.

Feb. 25. LORD SIMONDS L.C. My Lords, in my opinion this appeal should be dismissed, and as the facts are not in dispute and the law applicable to those facts appears to me to be clearly settled by the authority of this House, I shall not detain your Lordships for long.

In March, 1950, the appellants applied for registration of a trade mark consisting of "Yorkshire," represented in special type and between inverted commas, for goods which were eventually specified as "Solid drawn tubes and capillary fittings, all being "made of copper or non-ferrous copper alloys." Nothing turns on the special type or the inverted commas.

The appellants supported their application by cogent evidence that in fact the mark "Yorkshire" was distinctive of their goods. I am content to accept the statement reiterated by their counsel that the mark had acquired 100 per cent. distinctiveness. In

[1] [1913] 1 Ch. 446.
[2] (1936) 155 L.T. 127; 53 R.P.C. 355.
[3] [1938] Ch. 54; 53 T.L.R. 1005; [1937] 4 All E.R. 23.
[4] (1933) 149 L.T. 199; 50 R.P.C. 147.

H. L. (E.)
1954
Yorkshire Copper Works Ld. v. Registrar of Trade Marks.
Lord Simonds L.C.

spite of this fact the registrar refused registration and has been upheld in his refusal by Lloyd-Jacob J. and the unanimous opinion of the Court of Appeal. It becomes necessary, then, to examine the grounds of this decision, and I will at once refer to the relevant provisions of the Trade Marks Act, 1938.

It is convenient to set out verbatim the terms of section 9 of the Act, which provides as follows:—" (1) In order for a trade " mark (other than a certification trade mark) to be registrable in " Part A of the register, it must contain or consist of at least one " of the following essential particulars:—(a) the name of a com- " pany, individual, or firm, represented in a special or particular " manner; (b) the signature of the applicant for registration or " some predecessor in his business; (c) an invented word or " invented words; (d) a word or words having no direct reference " to the character or quality of the goods, and not being accord- " ing to its ordinary signification a geographical name or a sur- " name; (e) any other distinctive mark, but a name, signature, or " word or words, other than such as fall within the descriptions " in the foregoing paragraphs (a), (b), (c) and (d), shall not be " registrable under the provisions of this paragraph except upon " evidence of its distinctiveness. (2) For the purposes of this " section ' distinctive ' means adapted, in relation to the goods in " respect of which a trade mark is registered or proposed to be " registered, to distinguish goods with which the proprietor of " the trade mark is or may be connected in the course of trade " from goods in the case of which no such connection subsists, " either generally or, where the trade mark is registered or pro- " posed to be registered subject to limitations, in relation to use " within the extent of the registration. (3) In determining " whether a trade mark is adapted to distinguish as aforesaid the " tribunal may have regard to the extent to which—(a) the trade " mark is inherently adapted to distinguish as aforesaid; and (b) " by reason of the use of the trade mark or of any other circum- " stances, the trade mark is in fact adapted to distinguish as " aforesaid."

As we are dealing with a mark, which is beyond question a geographical name, I point out that under section 9 (1) (d) a word, even though it has no direct reference to the character or quality of the goods, cannot be registered if it is according to its ordinary signification a geographical name. A special warning appears to be given against such a name. But under section 9 (1) (e) it may yet qualify for registration if it satisfies certain conditions, i.e., if there is such evidence of its distinctiveness as the section by the later subsections postulates. These I have set out and I only make this comment that, though I can think of no other factor relevant to distinctiveness than those set out in subsection (3), yet if there is such a factor it would be the right and duty of the registrar to take it into consideration. I do not think it necessary to discuss whether the word " may " means " must," for I cannot conceive that as a practical matter the registrar could ignore either of the factors (a) or (b).

The position, then, is this, that the registrar will have to consider both the inherent adaptability and the distinctiveness in fact of a geographical name before he makes his decision. Here I must express my emphatic dissent from the proposition which was strenuously urged by counsel for the appellants that distinctiveness in fact is conclusive—at any rate, if there is what he called 100 per cent. distinctiveness. In my opinion the decisions of this House in Trade Marks Registrar v. W. & G. du Cros. Ld.[1] and A. Baily & Co. Ld. v. Clark, Son & Morland[2] (the Glastonbury case) are fatal to this proposition and I am content to accept as accurate the clear exposition of those cases given by the learned Master of the Rolls in the present case. He took the view which I share that the Court of Appeal had in In re Liverpool Electric Cable Co. Ld.'s Applications[3] rightly interpreted the opinion of Lord Parker in the W. & G. case[4] and that this House, in its turn, in the Glastonbury case[5] endorsed that interpretation. Accepting that view of the law, which indeed, if the matter were res integra, I should not hesitate to commend to your Lordships, I do not see how the registrar could have come to any other conclusion. Unless, having found distinctiveness in fact, he needed to pay no regard to the other factor of inherent adaptability, he was faced by the fact that there could not well be a geographical name less "inherently adapted" than Yorkshire to distinguish the goods of the appellants. I do not propose to try to define this expression. But I would say that, paradoxically perhaps, the more apt a word is to describe the goods of a manufacturer, the less apt it is to distinguish them: for a word that is apt to describe the goods of A, is likely to be apt to describe the similar goods of B. It is, I think, for this very reason that a geographical name is prima facie denied registrability. For, just as a manufacturer is not entitled to a monopoly of a laudatory or descriptive epithet, so he is not to claim for his own a territory, whether country, county or town, which may be in the future, if it is not now, the seat of manufacture of goods similar to his own. I do not ignore that some protection is given by section 8 of the Act, but I accept the view frequently expressed in regard to this section and to section 44 of the earlier Act which it replaced and in particular by Lord Maugham, Lord Atkin and Lord Russell of Killowen in the Glastonbury case,[5] that it should not afford a guide as to whether a name should be registered or not.

I am led to suggest that it is perhaps easier to define "inherent "adaptability" in negative than in positive terms: in other words, I would say that a geographical name can only be

[1] [1913] A.C. 624; 29 T.L.R. 772; sub nom. Re Du Cros' Application, 30 R.P.C. 660; 57 S.J. 728.

[2] [1938] A.C. 557; 54 T.L.R. 688; [1938] 2 All E.R. 377.

[3] (1928) 46 R.P.C. 99.

[4] [1913] A.C. 624.

[5] [1938] A.C. 557.

H. L. (E.)
1954
Yorkshire Copper Works Ld. v. Registrar of Trade Marks.
Lord Simonds L.C.

inherently adapted to distinguish the goods of A when you can predicate of it that it is such a name as it would never occur to B to use in respect of his similar goods. Of such names the classic examples are "Monte Rosa" for cigarettes or "Teneriffe" for boiler plates. There will probably be border-line cases, but there is, in my opinion, no doubt on which side of the border lies Yorkshire, a county not only of broad acres but of great manufacturing cities. If the Liverpool Cable case [6] was rightly decided, as I think it clearly was, a fortiori the registrar was right in refusing registration to "Yorkshire." And if it were a border-line case, which it is not, I think that a court, to which an appeal is brought from the registrar, though, no doubt, it must exercise its own discretion in the matter, should be slow to differ from the experienced official whose constant duty it is to protect the interests of the public not only of today but of tomorrow and the day after. In uttering that warning I only repeat what has been said more than once in this House. But, as I have already said, the present case is one in which there can be no doubt that the registrar came to a proper conclusion, and I move that the appeal be dismissed with costs.

Lord Oaksey. My Lords, I had prepared an opinion in this case, but, as I entirely agree with the opinion which has just been delivered by the Lord Chancellor, I withdraw it.

Lord Morton of Henryton. My Lords, I have had the advantage of reading the opinion which is about to be delivered by my noble and learned friend Lord Asquith of Bishopstone. I agree with his views as to the construction and effect of section 9 of the Trade Marks Act, 1938, and the principles which should be followed in applying that section to any trade mark whereof registration is sought.

If there had been no authority to guide me, I should have found it a difficult task to arrive at a decision by applying these principles to the facts of the present case, but in my view the present case cannot be distinguished on its facts or on any other ground from the decision of the Court of Appeal in In re Liverpool Electric Cable Co. Ld.'s Applications.[7] The decision in that case, and the reasoning upon which it was founded, were clearly approved by this House in A. Baily & Co. Ld. v. Clark, Son & Morland [8] (the Glastonbury case), and I entirely agree with the following passages from the judgment of the Master of the Rolls in the present case. Dealing with the Liverpool case [9] he said [10]: "As in the present case, the name of the applicant company had "as its first word the very geographical name which they sought "to register. The name was the Liverpool Electric Cable Co. Ld.

[6] 46 R.P.C. 99.
[7] Ibid.
[8] [1938] A.C. 557.
[9] 46 R.P.C. 99.
[10] (1952) 70 R.P.C. 1, 6.

"In that case, as in the present, the applicant company appeared "to be the only company making articles of the kind in question "within the ambit of the place, the geographical name of which "was sought to be registered. There was in the Liverpool case [11] "no evidence of any other company making electric cables in or "around Liverpool, just as here (though there appeared to be other "persons making copper tubes) there are no other manufacturers "of goods of the somewhat specialized character with which we "are concerned. In the Liverpool case,[11] as in the present, a body "of evidence had been submitted so that the learned judge, "Romer J., could say of it [12]: 'I arrive . . . at this conclusion "'that the words "Liverpool cables" do in fact now serve, and "'have for some time past in fact served, to distinguish the appli-"'cants' goods from those of the rest of the world.' So in this "case I assume (and I am not hinting in any way to the contrary) "that the evidence filed in this case established that the word "'Yorkshire' as applied to these drawn copper tubes, etc., does "in fact now serve, and has for some time in fact served, to dis-"tinguish the applicants' goods from those of the rest of the "world." Later, the Master of the Rolls observed [13] "Without "attempting any exhaustive exposition, it seems to me that no "valid distinction in this case can be drawn between the applica-"tion of Liverpool to a particular industrial product and the "application of Yorkshire to a particular industrial product. If "a point of difference could be found, I think the result would be "only to introduce into the law refinements which could not "advantage either the law or those whom the law serves. "Although some reference was naturally made in the Liverpool "case [14] to the fact that Liverpool is a very large city, the "emphasis was upon the circumstance that it is a centre of "industry. As I have already indicated, as regards a substantial "part of it, so is Yorkshire—certainly the part of Yorkshire which "includes Leeds where this company has its main place of "business. I therefore think we should not be justified upon "principle or otherwise in drawing a distinction between the use "of this county name in the present case and the use of the name "of the city of Liverpool in the earlier case." These passages exactly express my own view, and I would dismiss this appeal.

LORD ASQUITH OF BISHOPSTONE. My Lords, the decision in the present case turns primarily on section 9 of the Trade Marks Act, 1938. The mark proposed for the goods in question—in substance solid drawn copper and copper alloy tubes—is simply the word "Yorkshire" in inverted commas, the presence of which last is admitted to be immaterial for purposes of a decision.

It is plain that the mark "Yorkshire" does not fall within section 9 (1) (a), (b), (c) or (d) of the Act of 1938. Therefore,

[11] 46 R.P.C. 99.
[12] Ibid. 104.
[13] 70 R.P.C. 1, 8.
[14] 46 R.P.C. 99.

H. L. (E.)
1954
Yorkshire Copper Works Ld. v. Registrar of Trade Marks.
Lord Asquith of Bishopstone.

unless it falls within section 9 (1) (e), it does not qualify for registration. It only falls within section 9 (1) (e) if there is what that sub-paragraph calls "evidence of distinctiveness." "Distinctive-"ness" is defined in subsection (2) as meaning some quality in the trade mark (if I may paraphrase) which earmarks the goods so marked as distinct from those of other producers of such goods. It is not enough that it should earmark the goods as complying with a particular description, or as originating from a particular geographical area, or having claims to a peculiar excellence.

Subsection (3) is designed to help the registrar to determine when the requirements of subsection (2) are satisfied. It provides that in so determining the registrar "may"—and I think "may" here means "must" or the subsection is nugatory—must have regard to two factors and to their "extent": the extent, namely, to which "(a) the trade mark is inherently "adapted to distinguish as aforesaid; and (b) by reason of the "use of the trade mark or of any other circumstances, the trade "mark is in fact adapted to distinguish as aforesaid."

I think "have regard to" and "extent" are important words. They indicate that (a) and (b) are not cast iron "require-"ments" each of which must be satisfied to the extent of 100 per cent. Touching these two factors (a) "inherent" distinctiveness; (b) distinctiveness "in fact," there is no doubt that the registrar "had regard to" (b) and has held, rightly or admittedly, that the factor is present "to the extent"—I am using the words of the subsection—of 100 per cent. There is equally little doubt, on the authorities, that this does not dispose of the matter: viz., it does not dispense the registrar from considering to what extent factor (a) is present. On the decisions, which I do not need to cite, the contrary is unarguable.

As to factor (a), your Lordships have to consider to what extent this factor is present in the particular case in which the mark proposed for registration is a geographical term, e.g., "Yorkshire." I prefer to envisage this problem in the first instance in abstraction from authority. So considered, a geographical area, unless extremely small, seems to me inherently unadapted to distinguish the products of one producer in that area from those of another in the same area. When the area is as large as Yorkshire, it seems to me fanciful to dispute this proposition. Indeed, when the trade mark is geographical, it follows, paradoxical as it may sound, that it can only satisfy factor (a) where its significance, in the particular context, is non-geographical. For only so can it serve to distinguish the goods of one producer from the goods of others. Good imaginary instances of this paradox are "North Pole Bananas," "Monte Rosa Cigarettes," and so on. In these instances the geographical term is clearly not applied in any geographical sense, and pro tanto may—I will not say must—be a sufficient compliance with section 9 (3) (d). If it were applied in a purely geographical sense, it could not so comply, because it would simply indicate that the goods in question were supplied within a particular locality, not that they were supplied only by a specific supplier, and the last consideration is the only one which, for this purpose, counts.

I would only add that the primary question posed by section 9 (1) and (2) is whether there is evidence of "distinctiveness": and that subsection (3), in supplying pointers to the solution of this question, itself raises questions of degree under both limb (a) and limb (b). This question of degree as applied to (b) of subsection (3) is assumed to be answered in the sense that that factor is fully present. As regards subsection (3) (a), the factor involved, viz., "inherent" adaptedness, may be present or satisfied to the extent of 1 per cent. or 100 per cent.: and the question posed by subsection (2)—distinctiveness as a whole vel non—depends on the combined answers to subsection (3) (a) and (b). In the present case the answer to subsection (3) (a) seems to me almost wholly negative and the addition of (a) to (b) inadequate to justify registration. If, as so many of the cases state or imply, the registrar has a discretion in regard to the summation of these factors, I think he has on these materials either exercised it rightly, or has exercised it in a sense which appellate courts cannot properly dispute.

But apart from these general considerations of principle, the immediately relevant question in the present case seems to me to be concluded in a manner binding on this House by its own decision in the Glastonbury case [15] affirming that of the Court of Appeal in the Liverpool case.[16]

I would accordingly dismiss the appeal.

LORD COHEN. My Lords, I am of the same opinion. I need not re-read the provisions of the Act or repeat the statement of facts. It is sufficient for my purpose to say that I am prepared to accept that the evidence in this case establishes what Mr. Shelley called 100 per cent., or universal distinctiveness in fact of the appellants' mark. On this basis Mr. Shelley contended that it was unnecessary to consider whether the trade mark "Yorkshire" was inherently adapted to distinguish the appellants' goods and that the respondent was bound to proceed with their application for registration.

This argument is not supported by authority. Indeed, as Mr. Shelley admitted, it is in conflict with the decision of the Court of Appeal in the Liverpool case.[17] Mr. Shelley submitted that that case was wrongly decided and that it was open to your Lordships to overrule it. I am unable to agree. As I read the judgment of Lord Russell of Killowen in the Glastonbury case [18] (a judgment with which all their Lordships expressed their agreement) this House expressly approved the ratio decidendi of and the decision

[15] [1938] A.C. 557.
[16] 46 R.P.C. 99.
[17] Ibid.
[18] [1938] A.C. 557.

H. L. (E.)
1954
Yorkshire Copper Works Ld. v. Registrar of Trade Marks.
Lord Cohen.

in the Liverpool case.[19] But even if the matter were open, I should reach the same conclusion. I agree with Lord Russell of Killowen that the Liverpool case [19] laid down no new law but was correctly applying the observations of Lord Parker in the W. & G. case [20]: "But the tribunal is not bound to allow registration even "if the mark be in fact distinctive. A common law mark is still "not necessarily registrable. If the tribunal finds that a mark is "anywhere, or among any class of people, in fact, distinctive of "the goods of the applicant, it may be influenced by this fact "in determining whether it is adapted to distinguish these goods "from those of other persons, but distinctiveness in fact is not "conclusive."

In my opinion, on the true construction of section 9 of the Trade Marks Act, 1938 (which for present purposes may be regarded as indistinguishable from section 9 of the Trade Marks Act, 1905, as amended by the Trade Marks Act, 1919), the tribunal, in considering whether a trade mark is adapted to distinguish goods with which the proprietor of the mark is or might be connected in the course of trade from goods in the case of which no such connexion exists, should take into account both the factors referred to in section 9 (3). It is the duty of the tribunal to weigh all relevant factors in reaching its conclusion. A geographical word may be inherently "adapted to distinguish as "aforesaid," as in the instances given by Fletcher Moulton L.J. in In re Joseph Crosfield & Sons Ld.[21] (the Perfection Soap case) of "Monte Rosa" cigarettes or "Teneriffe" boiler plates. At the other end of the scale would be such a word as "British." Words such as "Yorkshire" and "Liverpool," associated as they are with large manufacturing centres, are, in my opinion, much nearer the "British" end of the scale than the opposite end. I agree with the Master of the Rolls in the present case where, after saying that geographical names might in some cases be allowed, he continued [22]: ". . . there seems to me to be one principle applic- "able to them all, a principle which is stated in the Perfection "Soap case [23] by Sir Herbert Cozens-Hardy, then the Master of "the Rolls, and by Farwell L.J. The principle is thus put by Sir "Herbert Cozens-Hardy [24]: 'Wealthy traders are habitually "'eager to enclose part of the great common of the English "'language and to exclude the general public of the present day "'and of the future from access to the inclosure.' Farwell L.J. "observes [25] 'The court is careful not to interfere with other "'persons' rights further than is necessary for the protection of "'the claimant, and not to allow any claimant to obtain a mono- "'poly further than is consistent with reason and fair dealing.'"

[19] 46 R.P.C. 99.
[20] [1913] A.C. 624, 637.
[21] [1910] 1 Ch. 130, 144; 26 T.L.R. 100.
[22] 70 R.P.C. 1, 4–5.
[23] [1910] 1 Ch. 130.
[24] Ibid. 141.
[25] Ibid. 150–1.

H. L. (E.).
1954
YORKSHIRE COPPER WORKS LD. v. REGISTRAR OF TRADE MARKS.

Applying this principle to the present case, I think the Assistant Comptroller came to the right conclusion, and I agree that the appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Woodham Smith, Borradaile & Martin; Solicitor to the Board of Trade.

[CHANCERY DIVISION.]

* PRACTICE DIRECTION (COMPANIES COURT).

1954
Mar. 12.

Company—Investigation of affairs—Motion—Notice—Board of Trade, how notified—R.S.C., Ord. 53B, r. 7 (c)—Companies Act, 1948 (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 38), s. 165.

IN the case of an application by originating motion under Order 53B, r. 7 (c) of the Rules of the Supreme Court for a declaration that the affairs of a company ought to be investigated under section 165 of the Companies Act, 1948, the notice of motion need not be served on the Board of Trade, but notice of the intended application should be sent to the Solicitor of the Board of Trade together with copies of any affidavits intended to be used at the hearing. Evidence should be filed proving that this direction has been complied with.

J. T. WILSON,
Registrar.

By direction of the judges. March 12, 1954.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

* KNIGHT v. DEMOLITION AND CONSTRUCTION CO. LD. RANSOME v. THE SAME.

C. A.
1954
Feb. 2, 3, 24.
Somervell, Birkett and Romer L.JJ.

Building—Safety regulations—Demolition—Gas retorts surrounded by brick arches—Archways demolished—Collapse of adjoining wall—Fatal accident.

Decision of Parker J. [1953] 1 W.L.R. 981; [1953] 2 All E.R. 508, affirmed.

APPEAL from a decision of Parker J.[1]

In the course of demolition of blocks of gas retorts housed in vertical columns, surrounded by brickwork and surmounted

---

[Reported by Miss ELAINE JONES, Barrister-at-Law.]

[1] [1953] 1 W.L.R. 981; [1953] 2 All E.R. 508.

Knight v. Demolition and Construction Co. Ld. Ransome v. The Same.

by heavy brick arches, demolition contractors had adopted a system of work in use in the trade and had provided adequate supervision and visual inspections by a competent person. While two workmen were employed in clearing away debris from under an arch, the outer wall of which had been demolished, the adjoining wall fell and both were killed. On the trial of actions by their widows under the Fatal Accidents Act, 1864, and the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934, in June, 1953, Parker J. negatived allegations of lack of supervision and failure to inspect the wall by a person competent to do so, but held that the defendants were, nevertheless, in breach of their common law duty to their employees. In case he should be held to be wrong as to breach of common law duty, the judge held that the defendants were also in breach of the Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948, reg. 79. The case was reported only on the latter point before Parker J.

F. W. Beney Q.C. and Martin Jukes for the appellants.

C. N. Shawcross Q.C. and R. Castle-Miller for the respondent Knight.

Gerald Gardiner Q.C. and Gilbert Dare for the respondent Ransome.

The Court of Appeal held that the demolition contractors, having failed to direct their minds to foreseeable and special dangers, which ought to and could have been guarded against, were in breach of their common law duty to their employees. The judgment of Parker J. being affirmed on this point, the court did not consider the construction of regulation 79 of the Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948.

Solicitors: J. F. Coules & Co.; Darracotts & Emtringham; Hepburns.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

C. A.

1954
Mar. 1.

Evershed M.R., Denning and Romer L.JJ.

In re* YATES' SETTLEMENT TRUSTS. YATES and Another v. YATES and Others.

[1954 Y. 65.]

Practice and Procedure—Adjournment—Discretion of court—Jurisdiction of Court of Appeal to review judge's decision—Settlement—Tax avoidance scheme—Appeal in similar case pending in House of Lords—Risk of death of settlor meanwhile.

Judicial Precedent—Court of Appeal decision—Effect pending appeal to House of Lords—Similar decision only under appeal.

An application for the approval of the court to a scheme of family arrangement was adjourned by the judge, pending the decision of the House of Lords in In re Chapman's Settlement

Trusts [1953] Ch. 218, 225; [1953] 1 All E.R. 103, which was then before them. On appeal to the Court of Appeal it was shown that injustice might result to the parties if the adjournment was continued, because the proposed compromise could never be effective, even if approved, unless the settlor, whose health was precarious, was alive when the court's approval was obtained. The appellants argued that the case was governed not by In re Chapman but by In re Downshire Settled Estates [1953] Ch. 218; [1953] 1 All E.R. 103, a similar decision not under appeal:—

Held, (1) that the Court of Appeal had jurisdiction to review the judge's decision to adjourn a case or to refuse an adjournment, although the court would be reluctant to interfere with his decision since this was a matter within his judicial discretion; (2) that, in the circumstances, having regard to the injustice which might result from a continued adjournment, the case should be heard and determined by the judge without waiting for the opinion of the House of Lords.

Hinckley and South Leicestershire Permanent Benefit Building Society v. Freeman [1941] Ch. 32; 57 T.L.R. 71; [1940] 4 All E.R. 212 approved.

Decision of Harman J. reversed.

APPEAL from Harman J.

On February 8, 1954, Harman J. adjourned an application for the approval of the court to a scheme of family arrangement or compromise on matters relating to the trusts of a settlement made by H. J. Yates on November 29, 1938. The ground for the adjournment was that Harman J. considered that the case appeared to be similar to In re Chapman's Settlement Trusts,[1] which had about that time come before the House of Lords on appeal; and he, accordingly, adjourned the case pending the giving of the opinion of the House of Lords in In re Chapman's Settlement Trusts.[1] The settlor's two sons appealed against the adjournment, contending first that the case was not analogous to In re Chapman's Settlement Trusts[1]; and, secondly, that the law should be applied as it was at present and without waiting for the opinion of the House of Lords to be given. If the scheme was to be effective, it was necessary for the settlor to be alive at the date when the scheme was approved, if it was approved; and evidence was adduced showing that he was in a precarious state of health. It was submitted that injustice might result if the adjournment was continued.

Raymond Jennings Q.C. and J. A. Brightman for the two sons of the settlor, the plaintiffs.

Harold Lightman for the first four defendants, the four children of one of the settlor's sons.

John Plowman for the brothers and sisters of the settlor and their children.

J. A. Wolfe for the trustees of the settlement.

The settlor was not represented and did not appear.

[1] [1953] Ch. 218, 225; [1953] 1 All E.R. 103.

C. A.
1954

Yates' Settlement Trusts, In re. Yates v. Yates.

No cases other than those referred to in the judgments were cited in argument.

Evershed M.R. This is a curious and unusual appeal, arising out of a matter which came before Harman J. on February 8, 1954. Application was made for the approval of the court to be given to a proposed scheme of compromise or family arrangement.

Mr. Jennings, for the two plaintiffs, has contended and contends that the particular type of arrangement or compromise falls within the scope of In re Downshire Settled Estates,[1] which was decided by the Court of Appeal, together with two other cases, in December, 1952. The third of those cases, In re Chapman's Settlement Trusts,[2] was before the House of Lords on appeal when the present matter came before Harman J. on February 8, 1954. The appeal in In re Chapman's Settlement Trusts [2] has now been heard, but the decision of the House has not yet been given. From what I have said, it will be noted that only In re Chapman's Settlement Trusts,[2] and not In re Downshire Settled Estates,[1] was the subject of appeal, but I think that it must be taken that the decision of the House in In re Chapman's Settlement Trusts [2] might well have a bearing on the grounds on which this court based its decision in In re Downshire Settled Estates.[1]

Subject, however, to any such pronouncement, the law has been stated by the Court of Appeal in In re Downshire Settled Estates,[1] which case is not subject to appeal. The result is that prima facie any case falling completely within the scope of In re Downshire Settled Estates [1] would, by the authority of that case, be held to be within the jurisdiction of the Chancery Judge to determine; but whether, for the reasons which I have indicated (namely, the measure of uncertainty which necessarily surrounds this class of application until the House has delivered its opinion), or whether because the hearing of In re Chapman's Settlement Trusts [2] had begun on the very day when this matter came before Harman J., the judge came to the conclusion that he would adjourn the hearing until after the result of the appeal in In re Chapman's Settlement Trusts.[2] The order drawn up was, accordingly, one which simply ordered that "the said application "do stand over"; and it thereafter stated that the judge did not require further argument, but gave leave to appeal.

There is, I think, no doubt that if a judge adjourns or refuses to adjourn a case, he has performed a judicial act which can be reviewed by the Court of Appeal; although I need not say that an adjournment or a refusal of an adjournment is a matter which prima facie is entirely within the discretion of the judge. The Court of Appeal would, therefore, be very slow to interfere with any such order, but there is no doubt that the Court of Appeal has jurisdiction to entertain appeals in such matters. As authority for what I have said, Mr. Jennings referred to Hinckley and South Leicestershire Permanent Benefit Building Society v. Freeman [3] and Maxwell v. Keun.[4]

[1] [1953] Ch. 218; [1953] 1 All E.R. 103. [2] [1953] Ch. 225.

It may well be that if an important case is known to be subject to appeal to the House of Lords, or to appeal from a judge of first instance to the Court of Appeal, a judge may reasonably and properly think that it is in the public interest not to decide another similar case until the result of the case under appeal has become known: whether he should so decide depends very much on all the circumstances of the particular cases; and if the judges of the Chancery Division have reached the conclusion that it would be in the public interest, generally speaking, to postpone considering applications of this kind until the decision in In re Chapman's Settlement Trusts [5] is known, then I should feel that it was, prima facie at any rate, a matter for the Chancery judges to decide. Whether the judges have made any such decision I do not, of course, know. I have said this because I desire to confine my judgment to the particular case before the court.

Mr. Jennings stressed most strongly that it was essential, in order that the proposed compromise should be effective, that the settlor should live until the date when the court approves, if it did approve, the present scheme. There is evidence before the court to show that this settlor, who is of the ripe age of 80 years, is also in a very delicate, not to say precarious, state of health; and, indeed, it is said that although it is impossible to say how long he is likely to live, his health is such that he might die within a very short space of time.

Whatever might be the right answer to a case not affected by a consideration of that kind, it seems to me that a real injustice might result if this case were adjourned, perhaps for some months, and if during that period Mr. Yates were to die. I have, therefore, come to the conclusion that the Court of Appeal ought to intervene, and that the fact that In re Chapman's Settlement Trusts [5] is pending before the House of Lords is not a sufficient justification for the judge's decision to adjourn this case. It may be that the judge will wish to have further elaboration of the medical evidence; the affidavit seems to support what I have stated about Mr. Yates' health, and in those circumstances I think that Harman J. should not have adjourned the hearing, but should have heard and determined this case. The judge may, of course, decide that it is not within the scope of In re Downshire Settled Estates [6]; or he may decide that it is, but that in the exercise of his discretion he will not affirm it; or, on the other hand, he may think that it is within In re Downshire Settled Estates [6] and that he should sanction the scheme. These are matters which are exclusively for the judge at this stage.

[3] [1941] Ch. 32; 57 T.L.R. 71; [1940] 4 All E.R. 212.
[4] [1928] 1 K.B. 645; 44 T.L.R. 100.
[5] [1953] Ch. 218, 225.
[6] [1953] Ch. 218.

C. A.
1954
Yates' Settlement Trusts, In re. Yates v. Yates.
Evershed M.R.

In my judgment the result is that we should allow this appeal and order that the judge should hear and determine the summons. I add two things: first, I am the less discouraged from making the order in this case by the circumstance that Harman J. expressly gave leave to appeal, and obviously felt, therefore, some doubt whether in all the circumstances it was right to adjourn it. Secondly, it is said that the adjournment has indicated a certain reluctance on his part to determine the case, and that it would be desirable that we should order the case to go back to be heard and determined by some other judge of the Chancery Division. For myself, I cannot see any good ground for a step of that kind, for I feel no doubt whatever that if Harman J. hears this matter he will hear it with all the attention that he invariably gives to the cases which come before him. I hope, therefore, that the parties will not feel any want of confidence on that account, because Harman J. had made up his mind on this occasion that the proper thing to do was to adjourn the case, which he did. This appeal should be allowed and the court should make the order which I have indicated.

Denning L.J. The law has been stated by the Court of Appeal in In re Downshire Settled Estates,[7] and Harman J. should have applied the law as there laid down, without any misgivings about what the House of Lords might hereafter say. I do not think that the plaintiffs should be sent away for an indefinite period, especially when it is not known whether the settlor will live so long. I agree with the order proposed by the Master of the Rolls.

Romer L.J. I also agree, and I should like to make it clear that, so far as I am concerned, and I think so far as the court as a whole is concerned, we are not casting any doubt on the general principles laid down by Farwell J. in Hinckley and South Leicestershire Permanent Benefit Building Society v. Freeman.[8] Farwell J. said[9]: "It is a novel proposition to me that this court "has not power to adjourn any matter on any proper ground. "No doubt the court would not arbitrarily postpone the hearing "of a matter indefinitely, because to do so might lead to defeating "justice altogether; and a mere arbitrary refusal to hear a "particular case is not a course which any judge would take or "which would ever become a recognized thing. But to say that "the court has not inherent power to direct that any matter "which comes before it should stand over for a period if the "court thinks that that is the proper way to deal with the matter, "is an entirely novel proposition to me." He then points out that if the judge takes the course of adjourning a particular case, that decision would be subject to appeal in the Court of Appeal.

[7] [1953] Ch. 218.
[8] [1941] Ch. 32.
[9] Ibid. 38.

C. A.
1954
YATES' SETTLEMENT TRUSTS, In re. YATES v. YATES.
Romer L.J.

I think that that is a correct statement of procedural law, and I do not think that anything has been said to cast any doubt upon it.

This is, however, a special case, for the reasons that my Lord, the Master of the Rolls, has indicated, because it is a case where the gentleman whose life is of considerable importance in the proposed scheme is some 80 years of age, and an affidavit has been put in before the Court of Appeal, which was not in evidence before Harman J., showing that his state of health is serious. He may not live very long, and in those circumstances, which are rather special, I agree that this is a matter which might properly be dealt with by the judge of the Chancery Division, having regard to the fact that In re Downshire Settled Estates,[10] which was before this court and which has not been appealed from, may apply to this case (a point on which I express no opinion); and if In re Downshire Settled Estates[10] applies there seems to me to be no reason why this case should not be decided and determined in the light of the decision in that case. I agree with the order proposed.

Appeal allowed, costs of all parties of the appeal as between solicitor and client to be paid out the trust fund.

Solicitors: Bulcraig & Davis.

E. D.

[10] [1953] Ch. 218.

[COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL.]

* REGINA v. DAVENPORT.

C. C. A.
1954
Feb. 8, 22.
Lord Goddard C.J., Cassels and Slade JJ.

Criminal Law—Larceny—Larceny by servant—Cheques signed by master in blank—Servant paying master's cheques to his own creditors—Indictment charging larceny of moneys—Whether correct offence charged. Embezzlement—Servant paying master's cheques to friend—Money received in exchange—Indictment charging larceny. Fraudulent conversion.

Banking—Current account—Relationship between banker and customer.

The appellant, the secretary of a company, received blank cheques signed by the directors of the company, and it was his duty to fill in the names of the payees. On a number of occasions the appellant paid the cheques to his own creditors by filling in as payee the name of the creditor's bank. In three other instances he gave cheques to one S., having filled in the name of S.'s bank as payee, and S. cashed the cheques by giving the appellant either cash or open cheques. The appellant was convicted on an indictment containing 14 counts, charging him with larceny as a servant of moneys (the proceeds of the cheques). On appeal:—

Held, first, that in respect of the cheques which the appellant paid to his creditors, the appellant had not been guilty of larceny

C. C. A.

1954

Regina
v.
Davenport.

because there was no asportation; he did not steal the company's money but caused their bank account to be debited with the amounts received by his creditors. Had the appellant been charged with fraudulent conversion there could have been no answer to the charges.

Held, secondly, that in respect of the cheques for which the appellant received cash, that amounted to embezzlement, and applying the provisions of section 5 (2) of the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907, the court could substitute a verdict of embezzlement for that of larceny.

Regina v. Gale (1876) 2 Q.B.D. 141 followed.

Appeal against conviction.

The appellant, Laurence Henry Christopher Davenport, was charged on an indictment containing 14 counts, with larceny as a servant of moneys.

The appellant was the secretary of a company. He received blank cheques signed by two directors of the company which he had to counter-sign and pay to those persons to whom the company wished to make payments. The names of the payees were left blank and the appellant's duty was to fill them in to the proper payees. In respect of four cheques amounting to £2,250 referred to in the first four counts in the indictment, the appellant paid them to one Lawrence, to whom he owed money, by filling in the name of the payee as Lloyds Bank Ld., of which Lawrence was a customer. Lawrence paid the cheques into Lloyds Bank, the cheques were presented and the company's account was debited. The appellant used seven other cheques in a similar manner. In respect of three other cheques he approached one Samuel, and handed him the cheques made out to Samuel's bank. Samuel cashed the cheques and handed to the appellant their value partly in money and partly in open cheques, which the appellant cashed.

The appellant was convicted on all the counts in the indictment and sentenced to 18 months' imprisonment. He appealed against conviction.

Eric Myers for the appellant.
Maxwell Turner for the Crown.

The following cases were referred to in argument: Joachimson v. Swiss Bank Corporation[1]; Regina v. Gale[2]; Regina v. Cullum[3]; Regina v. Wilson.[4]

Lord Goddard C.J., delivering the judgment of the court, stated the facts and continued: The indictment charged the appellant with larceny. That could only have been done because everyone, from the recorder downwards, seems to have been under a misapprehension with regard to the more or less elementary principles of the laws of banking and larceny. There was no

[1] [1921] 3 K.B. 110; 37 T.L.R. 534.
[2] (1876) 2 Q.B.D. 141.
[3] (1873) L.R. 2 C.C.R. 28.
[4] (1839) 9 C. & P. 27.

larceny here because in larceny there must be an asportation—a taking and carrying away. The fallacy that led to this charge of stealing money was that it was thought that because the master's account got debited that that was enough to make a theft. But although one talks about people having money in a bank, it should be understood that the only person who has money in a bank is a banker. If I pay money into my bank either by paying cash or a cheque, that money at once becomes the money of the banker. The relationship between banker and customer is that of debtor and creditor. He does not hold my money as an agent or trustee; the leading case of Foley v. Hill[1] exploded that idea. Directly the money is paid into the bank it becomes the banker's money, and the contract between the banker and the customer is that the banker receives a loan of money from the customer against his promise to honour the customer's cheques on demand. When the banker is paying out, whether he pays in cash over the counter or whether he is crediting the bank account of somebody else, he is paying out his own money, not the customer's money; but he is debiting the customer's account. The customer has a chose in action, that is to say, a right to expect that the banker will honour his cheque. Therefore, in the present case, the money paid on these cheques was the banker's money, but it led to the customer's account being debited. If the appellant had been charged with the fraudulent conversion of the cheques, there could have been no answer; but it is obvious that he could not be convicted of larceny because he did not steal the company's money. He merely caused their account to be debited.

The question is, therefore, whether the court has to quash the whole of this indictment. I think that it ought to quash all the counts except those which relate to the transactions with Samuel. There, the appellant got Samuel to cash his master's cheque and he obtained cash in his hands, bank notes. It follows that that money, as it was the proceeds of his master's cheque, was received for and on behalf of his master and, therefore, he embezzled that money because he applied it to his own uses instead of handing it over. On that part of the case it is only necessary to refer to Regina v. Gale,[2] where the facts as set out in the headnote read: "The prisoner was the clerk and servant "of an insurance company, and head manager at their chief "office at L. In the ordinary course of business he received "several cheques payable to his order from the managers of "branch offices, and it was his duty to indorse these cheques and "hand them over to the company's cashier. Instead of doing "so, he indorsed the cheques and obtained money for them from "friends of his own, who paid the cheques into their own banks. "He then took the amount so received to the cashier and handed "it over to him, saying he wished it to go against his salary,

[1] (1848) 2 H.L.Cas. 28. [2] (1876) 2 Q.B.D. 141.

C. C. A.
1954
Regina
v.
Davenport.

"which was overdrawn to a like amount; and he got back from "the cashier I.O.U.s, which he had previously given for the "amount of the overdraft." In other words, what he did was to use cheques for the purpose of reducing his own overdraft. The court held that he could have been convicted of the embezzlement of the cheques or the proceeds of the cheques and, in principle, I cannot see any difference between that case and the present. In that case the cheques were made out payable to his master. In the present case the appellant received the cheques drawn by his master. He used those cheques to get cash and apply that cash for his own uses, and therefore he was guilty of embezzlement. I think that case entirely covers the present case so far as the cheques given to Samuel are concerned. Therefore, the court can apply the provisions of the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907, and say that the appellant ought to have been convicted on those counts of embezzlement and not larceny. Section 44 (2) of the Larceny Act, 1916, provides that a person who is charged with larceny may be convicted of embezzlement if the facts show embezzlement.

Section 5 (2) of the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907. provides: "Where an appellant has been convicted of an offence and the "jury could on the indictment have found him guilty of some "other offence, and on the finding of the jury it appears to "the Court of Criminal Appeal that the jury must have been "satisfied of facts which proved him guilty of that other offence, "the court may, instead of allowing or dismissing the appeal, "substitute for the verdict found by the jury a verdict of guilty "of that other offence. . . ." The jury must have been satisfied that there was a fraudulent act of the appellant, because they convicted him of stealing. They must also have been satisfied that Samuel did hand this money to the appellant, and that he received it as a clerk or servant and applied it to his own use.

The consequence is that the convictions on all the counts except the three referring to the cheques cashed by Samuel will be quashed; but he only received a sentence of 18 months' imprisonment on each count to run concurrently, and the court is not going to interfere in a case where the appellant has been guilty of the most atrociously dishonest conduct and has received thousands of pounds. As there is no appeal against sentence the court cannot increase the sentence, but we shall not alter the sentence in view of the quashing of the other counts. The appeal succeeds as to those counts.

Appeal allowed in part.

Solicitors: Beach & Beach; Director of Public Prosecutions.

C. J. E.

[CHANCERY DIVISION.]

* In re LYBBE, DECD.
KILDAHL AND ANOTHER v. BOWKER AND OTHERS.

1954
Jan. 22, 26.

Roxburgh J.

[1953 L. 1937.]

Will—Construction — "Children" — Whether including issue — Trusts for "children . . . and . . . issue"—Ultimate trusts for "children "... similar to the trusts hereinbefore declared so far as may be "and the law will allow"—Whether "issue" included in ultimate trusts. "Similar" trusts.

Accruer—Clause—Second accruer—"Share"—Accruing share not prima facie included in word "share"—No words in clause permitting other than natural construction of "share."

By his will a testator left his residuary estate to A for life and after her death in trust for such of her children living at his death and attaining the age of 21 years or if female marrying as she should appoint and in default of appointment in equal shares. In 1883 he settled property on trust to pay the income of it as in the settlement provided during the lives of A, himself and the survivor of them and thereafter in trust for such of A's children B C and D and of such other persons if any as the testator should by deed, will or codicil appoint and in default of appointment in trust for such of B C and D as should attain 21 years of age or marry if more than one in equal shares. By a codicil made in 1887 reciting that C had recently married, the testator appointed the settled property to be held after A's and his own death on trust for such of B C and D as should be living at his death in equal shares, on trust to pay the income of one such equal share to each of B C and D for life or until forfeiture: and he directed the trustees, after the decease of any of B C and D, to "stand possessed of the "share of the person so dying . . . upon trust in equal shares for "... the children of such person living at the time of such person's "decease who . . . attain the age of 21 years or being female . . . "marry . . . and for all or any of the issue living at that time "on attaining 21 or marrying of any child of the person so dying "who dies in the lifetime of such person leaving issue living at "the time of such person's death . . . and . . . if there shall be no "child or other issue of the person so dying . . . who attains a "vested interest under the trusts lastly hereinbefore contained . . . "the share of the person so dying shall be held on trust for the "benefit of B C and D or the survivor or survivors of them or of "their children on trusts similar to the trusts hereinbefore declared "with regard to [the settled fund] so far as may be and the law "will allow." In 1897 the testator died, in 1919 A died and in 1922 B died without having been married. In 1945 C died, predeceased by her only child, a son, and survived by 5 grandchildren, all 21 years old at the date of this summons. In 1953 D died leaving a will, without having been married.

A summons was issued to determine whether the property subject to the trusts of the settlement was held in trust for C's grandchildren or for residuary legatees under D's will or how otherwise:—

Held, (1) that, as the gift to the children and issue was to a single composite class, the word "similar" in the codicil meant that the testator intended the preceding trusts to prevail, with the result that issue would take under the ultimate trust in the codicil although that trust did not contain the word "issue": (2) that the word "share" in the accruer clause meant the original share and prima facie did not include an accruing share, and that nothing in the accruer clause enabled the court to give it a construction which it did not naturally bear; and that there was therefore no second accruer, with the result that D's accrued share went in default of appointment.

1954

Lybbe, decd., In re.

In re Allan [1903] 1 Ch. 276 considered.

Adjourned summons.

By his will dated April 23, 1870, Philip Lybbe Powys Lybbe (hereinafter called "the testator") directed his trustees to stand possessed of his residuary estate on trust to pay the income thereof to Fanny Worth for her life and after her death in trust for such one or more of Fanny Worth's children living at the time of his decease as should attain 21 or being female marry under that age and if more than one in such shares and proportions as Fanny Worth should appoint and in default of appointment in trust for Fanny Worth's said children in equal shares. By a settlement made by the testator in 1883 it was declared that the settled property should be held on trust to pay or apply the income thereof as therein mentioned during the lives of Fanny Worth and the testator and the survivor of them and after the survivor's death in trust for such of Fanny Worth's children, Amy, Mabel and Helen Lybbe and of such other person or persons if any in such shares and proportions and generally in such manner as the testator should by deed or will or codicil appoint and in default of appointment in trust for such of them the said Amy, Mabel and Helen Lybbe as should attain the age of 21 years or marry under that age and if more than one in equal shares. The testator made two codicils to his will not material to this report and by a third codicil, dated November 16, 1887, after reciting inter alia that Mabel Lybbe had recently married Herbert Bowker the testator appointed that after the decease of Fanny Worth and himself the trustees of the settlement should stand possessed of all the trust funds and premises on trust for such of them the said Amy Lybbe Mabel Bowker and Helen Lybbe as should be living at the time of his decease and should as regarded the said Helen Lybbe attain the age of 21 years or marry with the consent therein mentioned in equal shares as tenants in common in manner following that was to say upon trust to pay the income of one such equal share to each of them the said Amy Lybbe Mabel Bowker and Helen Lybbe during her life or until forfeiture as therein mentioned, and that after the decease of any of them the trustees of the settlement should stand possessed of the share of the person so dying on trust in equal shares for all or any of the children of such person living at the time of such person's decease who should attain the age of 21 years or being female marry with the consent therein mentioned and for all or any the issue living at that time who should attain the age of 21 years or being female marry with such consent as aforesaid of any child of the person so dying who died in the lifetime of such person leaving issue living at the time of such person's death, and so that such issue should take per stirpes according to their stocks in equal shares the share which the parent of such issue would have taken if living at the time aforesaid. The testator continued as follows: "And I hereby declare that if there shall be no child or other "issue of the person so dying as aforesaid who attains a vested "interest under the trusts lastly hereinbefore contained then the "share of the person so dying shall be held upon trust for the "benefit of the said Amy Lybbe Mabel Bowker and Helen Lybbe "or the survivor or survivors of them or of their children similar "to the trusts hereinbefore declared with regard to [the sum "over which the testator was exercising the power] so far as "may be and the law will allow." On September 12, 1897, the testator died, on August 5, 1919, Fanny Worth died and on April 1, 1922, Amy Lybbe died without having been married.

Mabel Bowker subsequently married Lewis Vinall. By her first marriage she had one child only, Claude Herbert Bowker, who predeceased her on August 16, 1939, having had five children, all of whom had attained the age of 21 years at the date of this summons, to which they were defendants. On January 29, 1945, Mabel Bowker died. On April 17, 1953, Helen Lybbe died without having been married: and by this summons, taken out on August 5, 1953, the trustees of the settlement, who were also trustees of the will and codicils so far as regarded the trust funds subject to or held on the trusts of the settlement, asked, inter alia, whether, on the true construction of the settlement, will and codicils and in the events which had happened, the whole, or, if not the whole some and if so what part, of the trust funds held by the trustees were held (a) in trust for the children of Claude Herbert Bowker in equal shares or (b) in trust for the residuary legatees under Helen Lybbe's will.

J. V. Nesbitt for the trustees.
W. A. Bagnall for Claude Herbert Bowker's children.
M. J. Albery for the residuary legatees.

His Lordship dealt first with the question whether issue were able to take under the ultimate trust in the codicil in which only the word "children" and not the word "issue" was used.

ROXBURGH J. This very difficult point must be one, not of first or last impression, but just impression.

The testator in his codicil appointed interests to Amy Lybbe, Mabel Bowker and Helen Lybbe, and provided: "After the "decease of any of them the said Amy Lybbe Mabel Bowker "and Helen Lybbe the trustees or trustee shall stand possessed "of the share of the person so dying as aforesaid upon trust "in equal shares for all or any of the children of such person

1954

Lybbe, decd., In re.

Roxburgh J.

"living at the time of such person's decease who being male "attain the age of 21 years or being female attain that age or "marry with the consent of her guardian or guardians and for "all or any of the issue living at that time who being male "attain the age of 21 years or being female attain that age or "marry with such consent as aforesaid of any child of the "person so dying who dies in the lifetime of such person leaving "issue living at the time of such person's death and so that such "issue shall take per stirpes according to their stocks and in "equal shares the share which the parent of such issue would "have taken if living at the time aforesaid."

The testator proceeded: "And I hereby declare that if there "shall be no child or other issue of the person so dying as "aforesaid who attains a vested interest under the trusts lastly "hereinbefore contained"—that has happened with regard to Helen's original share and Helen's accrued share, but for the moment I am only dealing with Helen's original share—"then "the share of the person so dying shall be held upon trust for "the benefit of the said Amy Lybbe Mabel Bowker and Helen "Lybbe or the survivor or survivors of them or of their children" —not "issue"—"similar to the trusts hereinbefore declared "with regard to" [the sum in question] so far as may be and "the law will allow." The question is: can issue come in under that ultimate trust in which only the word "children" is used?

First, the word "similar" caused me more trouble than it should have done, because really the testator has, I think, himself defined the meaning of the word. It means that the trusts are to be the same so far as may be and the law will allow, or, putting it the other way round, are to be modified only so far as the circumstances or the law require. Had the meaning been different the disposition would probably have been void for uncertainty; but I need not pursue that, because, in my judgment, that is what the testator meant, and so there is no question of being void for uncertainty.

The crux of the case is whether the word "similar" is pregnant in meaning or not. Does it mean that the trusts which have been declared in favour of children and issue have to be modified so as to exclude issue—in which case it is clearly very pregnant, because it imports all that—or does it mean merely that the testator intends the preceding trusts, which he has not accurately set out again, to prevail so far as the circumstances and the law will allow?

I think that the determining factor in this very doubtful case is the circumstance that the gift to the children and the issue is a gift to a single composite class. If the gift had taken a somewhat similar but different form, namely, had been a gift to children with substitution of "the issue of deceased children" for "children deceased at the time of distribution," my decision would have been the other way, I think; because prima facie "children" does not include issue, and it will not include issue unless the context requires or unless such a construction is required under the doctrine of ut res magis valeat quam pereat, and, had it been possible to segregate the two trusts so as to say that in the preceding trusts was a trust for children separate and independent from the trust for issue, as would have been the case had the gift been a true substitutional gift, I should, I think, have said that by these words the testator had reintroduced only those trusts which referred to the propositae and their children; but as it is a class gift, issue and children being combined in one single class, it seems to me that it is impossible to give effect to the gift for children in the ultimate gift without at the same time giving effect to the gift for issue, unless I am prepared to treat these words, "similar" and so on, as a positive direction to re-write the trusts in such a manner as will benefit the children and exclude their issue.

I cannot give such strong effect to the words "similar "so far as may be and the law will allow." On balance, I think that these words are intended to be referential and that when the testator did not set out the issue in the referential trust he left it out merely because he thought he had sufficiently described the trusts to which he intended to refer. Therefore, with considerable doubt, I hold that with regard to the original share the issue can take under the ultimate trust.

[His Lordship then heard argument on the question whether the word "share" in the accruer clause included an accruing share as well as an original share.]

ROXBURGH J. This point is one of the most difficult that I have ever had to decide. The rules of construction on these matters have attained such a degree of artificiality that it is really difficult to be certain about a problem of this kind.

This is actually the exercise of a power of appointment, but I do not think that that affects the principle in any way. The testator, making this appointment by a codicil, appointed the fund over which he has a special power "upon trust for the "benefit of such of them the said Amy Lybbe Mabel Bowker "and Helen Lybbe as shall be living at the time of my decease "and shall as regards the said Helen Lybbe attain the age of "21 years or marry with the consent of the said Fanny Worth "and myself or of the survivor of us in equal shares as tenants "in common in manner following . . . upon trust to pay the "income of one such equal share to each of them the said Amy "Lybbe Mabel Bowker and Helen Lybbe during her life. . . ." It is a protected life interest. The testator continued: "After "the decease of any of them the said Amy Lybbe Mabel Bowker "and Helen Lybbe the trustees or trustee shall stand possessed "of the share of the person so dying as aforesaid upon trust in "equal shares for all or any of the children of such person"

1954

Lybbe, decd., In re.

Roxburgh J.

therein mentioned and the issue of any who are dead. He continued: "And I hereby declare that if there shall be no "child or other issue of the person so dying as aforesaid who "attains a vested interest under the trusts lastly hereinbefore "contained then the share of the person so dying shall be held "upon trust for the benefit of the said Amy Lybbe Mabel Bowker "and Helen Lybbe or the survivor or survivors of them or of "their children similar to the trusts hereinbefore declared with "regard to [the fund over which the power of appointment was "exercisable] so far as may be and the law will allow."

I am dealing with an alleged second accruer. There was a first accruer by reason of the death of one of the propositae without issue, and no doubt therefore the share of the other two was augmented, not because the word "share" included an accruing share, but because the accruer clause operated to carry over to the others' shares an aliquot part of the share which failed.

I feel no doubt that where the word "share" comes first it means "original share" and that it is the accruer clause and not the word "share" which augmented that share. In In re Allan,[1] which has caused me so much difficulty and uncertainty, Stirling L.J. recognizes that prima facie such a word does not include an accruing share. Therefore, as a matter of construction, my conclusion would be straightforward, namely, that there is no second accruer for the simple reason that there are no words in the will to bring one about, but I recognize, however, several considerations. The first is that that is unlikely to be the intention of the donee of the power. That does not help me much because my answer would be that he did not think of a second accruer, and that if anything does go in default of appointment it is certainly not because he intended it so to go but possibly because he forgot to provide for that eventuality, and I should expect that that was the reason; but, of course, as an old saying has it, a person is not likely to be thought to intend to die partially intestate, and the same kind of reasoning might (though not perhaps so strongly) be applied to the exercise of a power of appointment. What causes much more difficulty is the existence of a kind of rule which has been evolved and which is stated in the decision of the Court of Appeal in In re Allan,[1] and I am most anxious to give effect to it: but I have certainly experienced some little difficulty in ascertaining precisely what the rule is.

In In re Allan[1] there was an undoubted division in shares, and the accruer clause read as follows[2]: "'I declare that if any "'one or more of my said daughters, Marion Harriett, Charlotte, "'and Sophia Henrietta, shall die without leaving any child, or "'the issue of a child lawfully begotten, living at their respective "'deceases, or if my said daughter Eleanor shall die without "'leaving any child or issue of a child by any husband other

[1] [1903] 1 Ch. 276. [2] Ibid. 277.

" ' than the said George Mence, the shares or share of my said " ' daughters or daughter so dying shall fall into and become part " ' of my residuary estate, and be held and disposed of on the " ' same trusts as are hereinbefore declared thereof.' "

In those circumstances, the Court of Appeal, reversing Buckley J., held that there was a second accruer. Vaughan Williams L.J. says this [3]: " Mr. Medd "—that was counsel—" says that the closing words, ' hereinbefore declared thereof,' " cannot mean to include that which is included in this clause " itself, but that ' hereinbefore ' must mean that which appears " in this will antecedently to this clause. I do not at all mean " to say that that is not a possible, and even a natural, con- " struction of these words; but, in my opinion, we ought not so " to deal with this case."

I understand that to mean that there is a rule which the court thought precluded them from giving the natural construction to those words. Then, when I come to look for the rule, my difficulty arises. Vaughan Williams L.J. continues [4]: " This " is a case in which, although there are both original shares and " accrued shares, which in a testamentary instrument may very " often be dealt with in different ways, it is obvious that the " intention of the testator was to create one aggregate fund, and " to dispose of that absolutely." To what is he referring? I am not quite sure, I must confess; but it is quite certain that the testator did intend the fund which was settled to be split up and divided into parts. Therefore, I think that Vaughan Williams L.J. must have been referring to the concluding words of the gift over, namely, to the words in which the testator said " shall fall into and become part of my residuary estate, and " be held and disposed of on the same trusts as are hereinbefore " declared thereof."

Then he reads a passage from a judgment of Sir Thomas Plumer in Barker v. Lea,[5] and, having read it, says [6]: " Here " it seems to me to be manifest, following the words of Sir " T. Plumer,"—I may say that Barker v. Lea [7] was an entirely different case on its language—" that the disposition is of one " aggregate fund which the testator meant should remain an " aggregate fund, and should not be broken into fragments if " some person to whom interests in it were given happened to " die." What does that mean? Again, I am not sure; but I think that it means that, again regarding the words to which I have referred, it is plain that the testator did not mean to die intestate as to any part of this fund. Stirling L.J.[8] adopts the reasoning of Vaughan Williams L.J. and adds nothing of his own. Therefore, I need say nothing more about his judgment. Cozens-Hardy L.J. bases his conclusion on what I think is really the same ground as the other Lords Justices, if I have

[3] Ibid. 284.
[4] Ibid. 284.
[5] (1823) T. & R. 413, 415.
[6] [1903] 1 Ch. 276, 285.
[7] T. & R. 413.
[8] [1903] 1 Ch. 276, 285, 286.

1954

Lybbe, decd., In re.

Roxburgh J.

rightly construed their language. He says[9]: "The subsidiary "point"—that is the one with which I am dealing—"raised "by Mr. Medd created for a moment, I thought, a little more "difficulty; but, on consideration, I am satisfied that there is "sufficient in this will to shew that the testator was dealing with "his residue as a whole, and disposing of it as a whole. . . ." I understand that, however, to mean that there is sufficient context—it must not, I think, be a mere matter of guessing—to show that the testator did not intend to die intestate as to any part of his residue, and I think that the context to which he was referring consisted of the words which I have already read.

If that be so, it seems to me that there are no words in this case enabling me to depart from the natural meaning of the language used. True, the testator did, I think, intend to exhaust his power of appointment. That, however, is certainly not enough. I must not merely guess: I must find a context—especially as it seems to me most likely that he overlooked the possibility of a second accruer, and for that reason alone failed to deal with that possibility. I cannot find any context. There are no words at all resembling the words which I have stressed in In re Allan.[10] There is certainly no re-amalgamation of a secondly accruing share with the original trust fund as there was in In re Allan,[10] because the words are "to be held" not "upon the same trusts" but "upon similar trusts so far "as may be and the law will allow," which seem to me to point to the view that the testator did not contemplate that there would necessarily be any complete re-amalgamation.

On the whole, I can see nothing in those words enabling me to put on the word "share" a construction which it does not naturally bear, and there will be no second accruer unless the word "share" includes "an accrued share." With doubt, because I am not at all sure that I fully understand the decision in In re Allan,[10] I feel bound to hold that there is no second accruer.

Declaration accordingly.

Solicitors: Field, Roscoe & Co. for Pye-Smith, Hulbert & Kildahl, Salisbury; Blyth, Dutton, Wright & Bennett; Robbins, Olivey & Lake.

K. R. A. H.

[9] Ibid. 276, 286, 287.

[10] Ibid. 276.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

* FRANCE v. PARKINSON.

C. A.

1954
Mar. 5.

Somervell, Birkett and Morris L.JJ.

[1951 F. 1205.]

Road Traffic—Negligence—Collision—Inference from facts—Collision in centre of cross-roads of equal status—Plaintiff's car driven by hirer—Disappearance of hirer—Submission of no case to answer by defendant's counsel—No evidence called by defendant.

Negligence.

Two motor-cars proceeding along cross-roads of equal status were in collision in about the centre of the crossing. The plaintiff's car was being driven by a man who had hired it and who, having apparently given a false name, disappeared after the collision. The other car was being driven by a servant of the defendant. In proceedings in an action for damages the plaintiff, being unable to call the hirer of his car, had to rely on the evidence of the police as to the position of the cars after the collision and as to a statement by the defendant's driver to the police that "I was going along the road "and we met in the middle." Counsel for the defendant submitted that he had no case to answer and did not call any evidence. The trial judge held that the plaintiff had not proved his case and dismissed the action. On appeal:—

Held, that on the facts both drivers had prima facie been negligent; that there was a prima facie case against the defendant on which, in the absence of any evidence given by him, the judge should have found him negligent; and that the plaintiff, being in the same position as an innocent passenger, was entitled to recover his whole damages.

Baker v. Market Harborough Industrial Co-operative Society Ld. [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1472 followed.

Decision of Croom-Johnson J. reversed.

APPEAL from Croom-Johnson J.

The plaintiff, France, was the owner of a motor-car which he had let out on hire to a man who gave the name of Fitzgerald. On May 19, 1953, the plaintiff's car, while being driven by Fitzgerald, was in collision with another car driven by a servant of the defendant Parkinson. The collision took place in about the middle of the crossing of Tower Bridge Road and Abbey Street, roads of equal status. There was therefore no question of which car was on the major road. After the collision Fitzgerald disappeared, and therefore, at the trial of the action, the plaintiff was unable to produce him as a witness and had to rely on the police evidence. At the close of the plaintiff's case counsel for the defendant submitted there was no case to answer. He repeated that submission at the conclusion of argument by plaintiff's counsel, and the driver of the defendant's car was therefore not called.

In these circumstances the judge held that the plaintiff had not proved his case and dismissed the action.

The plaintiff appealed.

C. A.
1954
France
v.
Parkinson.

P. M. O'Connor and E. W. Eveleigh for the plaintiff. He was in the same position as an innocent passenger: as the driver of his car had disappeared and the driver of the defendant's car had refused to go into the witness-box, or had not been called as a witness, the court should draw the inference that both drivers were in fault and the plaintiff was entitled to judgment for 100 per cent. of his damages. Baker v. Market Harborough Industrial Co-operative Society Ld.[1] is relied on.

D. P. Croom-Johnson for the defendant.

Somervell L.J. The plaintiff claimed for damage to his motor-car, which was involved in a collision with the defendant's motor-car in the early hours of May 19, 1951, at the cross-roads where Tower Bridge Road crosses Abbey Street. The crossing is some 20 yards across from east to west and less from north to south. The roads were of the same status; there was not a "Slow down" or "Halt" sign on either of them. The plaintiff had hired out his car to a man whose name we do not know. He called himself Fitzgerald, but it is said that that was not his real name. He kept the car a day over the hire contract, which provided that for that he would have to pay double. After the accident he disappeared. At the trial, therefore, the plaintiff was unable to call him. He put in certain answers to interrogatories, which I do not think add very much. He called a police officer who was at the spot after the accident happened, and from whose evidence it is reasonably plain that the plaintiff's car was on its right side of the road and that the defendant's car was on its right side of the road. They collided somewhere where the two cross-roads meet. There was an island and the plaintiff's car damaged a bollard on the island after the collision. The policeman was asked whether the defendant's driver made a statement to him, and he said "Yes, the defendant said, 'I was going along "'the road and we met in the middle'."" The defendant elected to call no evidence and in those circumstances the judge dismissed the plaintiff's claim. The plaintiff appeals.

The sort of problem which arises here arose in the recent case of Baker v. Market Harborough Industrial Co-operative Society Ld.[1] That was a case where there had been a head-on collision between two vehicles and both drivers had been killed. The two widows sued the employers of the deceased drivers. It is fair to the parties to say that they did make application to consolidate the actions, but for some reason that application was not acceded to. One case came on before Ormerod J., who held that the plaintiff had not proved her case. The other case came on before Sellers J., who held (and his decision was upheld by this court) that in the circumstances of that accident the balance of probabilities was that both were to blame. He therefore awarded the widow 50 per cent. of her damages. We held that that was right, reversing on that point Ormerod J.

[1] [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1472.

Each case turns on its own facts, but I would have said that a collision at cross-roads, where both roads were of equal status, was, in the absence of special circumstances, a case where the balance of probabilities was in favour of both drivers having been negligent, particularly having regard to the place of collision, and also the statement made to the police officer by the defendant. It is possible, of course, that a man may be going very slowly, keeping a careful look-out, and suddenly find himself run into by a car going at, say, 70 miles an hour. If that had happened the statement made to the police officer would have been on different lines.

Mr. Croom-Johnson sought to raise in this court a question whether it was this hirer who was driving the plaintiff's car, and whether the car might not have been delivered back to the plaintiff and been driven at the time of the collision by one of his servants. We ruled that that point could not be taken. The case, therefore, proceeded on the basis that the car was being driven by the hirer. In those circumstances, it is not disputed that the plaintiff was in the same position as a passenger and, therefore, even if the driver of the car had been negligent, so long as the plaintiff can establish some negligence on the defendant's part he could claim his whole damages. I think, therefore, that there was here a prima facie case against the defendant on which the court should have found him negligent in the absence of any evidence given by him. The damages I think have been agreed. Therefore, in my opinion, the appeal should be allowed and judgment entered for the agreed amount, £236 7s. 4d.

BIRKETT L.J. I agree. Each of such cases as these must, of course, be decided on its own facts. That is particularly important when dealing with this class of case because the variety of circumstances in which road accidents happen is really quite infinite. The facts as we know them, although the evidence is extremely meagre, have been detailed by my Lord in outline. The principal feature of the facts is that, at the time of night when this accident happened, these two roads, though unequal in width, could be regarded as of equal status. The cross-road, as shown on the plan, is a very spacious cross-road, and in the ordinary way one would think that with people exercising ordinary care an accident would not take place there. We merely know that a collision did take place at that wide and spacious cross-road between two motor-cars, and I should have thought that on those facts there was a prima facie case that both the drivers were negligent in the circumstances. In any event, I am quite satisfied that here there was a prima facie case of negligence against the defendant.

We have had evidence about the position of the cars, and I attach very considerable importance indeed to the fact that the police constable gave evidence that the defendant driver, after the

C. A.
1954
France v. Parkinson.
Birkett L.J.

accident said: "I was coming along the road and we met in the "middle." The ordinary kind of expression used by a defendant immediately after an accident, where he has suffered some wrong at the hands of another driver, is usually very different from that. The customary thing one hears is: "The man came at a furious "rate across and gave me no chance." But all this defendant says is: "I was coming along the road and we met in the "middle." The defendant driver was available to give evidence and did not do so, and I think an adverse inference may be drawn against him from that fact. If there was, as I think there was, prima facie evidence of negligence on the part of the defendant, and he chooses to make no attempt to show that he was not negligent, I think that an adverse inference must be drawn against him. The plaintiff was strictly in the position of a passenger in the car, and it was enough for him to prove negligence against the defendant even if it were not the whole of the negligence. In those circumstances I think that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the agreed damages against the defendant, and the appeal ought to be allowed.

Morris L.J. I also agree. The car belonging to the plaintiff was involved in a collision at cross-roads and it was established that whoever was driving the plaintiff's car was not driving as the servant or agent of the plaintiff. The facts that were before the court, in my judgment, amounted to very much more than the mere fact that there had been a collision between the two motor-vehicles. My Lords have referred to the evidence which was before the court. There was all the evidence with regard to the plan and as to the nature of the cross-roads. There was evidence as to the damage done to the two motor-cars, and there was evidence of the statement made by the defendant. Although the interrogatories do not help very much it might perhaps be worth while referring to the eighth interrogatory and the answer to it which was put in. "Identify the position of your Rover "motor-car in relation to the said road junction at the moment "when you first saw the said Ford motor-car." The answer was: "I say that the Rover motor-car"—that is the defendant's car—"was very slightly upon the junction." In my judgment the evidence which was before the court was sufficient to establish a prima facie case that there was negligence in the defendant, and that was sufficient to avail the plaintiff if that prima facie case was never displaced. I agree, therefore, that the appeal should be allowed.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Hewitt, Woollacott & Chown; Barlow, Lyde & Gilbert.

A. W. G.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

* JUDSON v. BRITISH TRANSPORT COMMISSION.

C. A.

1954
Feb. 17, 18.

Lord Goddard C.J., Singleton and Hodson L.JJ.

[1952 J. No. 903.]

Railway—Statutory duty—Permanent way men—Man injured at work on line—"Relaying or repairing the permanent way"—Men engaged on preliminary inspection—Whether "working for the "purpose of relaying or repairing"—Railway Employment (Prevention of Accidents) Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 27), s. 1 (1): Sch. para. 12—Prevention of Accidents Rules, 1902 (S.R. & O., 1902, No. 616), r. 9.

Negligence—Safe system of work—Suspension—Railway—Inspection of permanent way—Re-layer struck by engine—Duty of ganger.

The plaintiff, a re-layer in the employment of a railway company, and a ganger, under whose directions the plaintiff was working, were walking along a stretch of line to make an inspection to decide what lengths of line would be required for the repairing and relaying of the line on a later day. While so engaged, the plaintiff was struck by an engine and injured. Neither of the men had followed the directions laid down in rule 234 (a) of the British Railways' Rules, 1950, and the ganger had not taken the action prescribed in rule 234 (d) nor had he taken steps to see that the plaintiff followed the safety procedure enjoined by para. (a). The plaintiff brought an action against the defendants for alleged breach of their statutory duty under rule 9 of the Prevention of Accidents Rules, 1902, made under the Railway Employment (Prevention of Accidents) Act, 1900, s. 1 (1), and for negligence, on the ground that the ganger, who was in charge of the work being done, failed to take any steps under rule 9 or rule 234 to protect the plaintiff from danger:—

Held, (1) that at the time of the accident, the men were not engaged in "relaying or repairing" the permanent way. The words in rule 9 "for the purpose of relaying or repairing," when read in conjunction with those in paragraph 12 of the schedule to the Act of 1900, meant "when repairing or relaying." Both rule 9 of the Rules of 1902 and rule 234 (d) of the Rules of 1950 contemplated men working in a particular place and had no application to those engaged in a peripatetic inspection. There had therefore been no breach by the defendants either of the statutory regulation or of rule 234 (d).

(2) That there was no negligence on the part of the ganger in failing to see that the plaintiff carried out the directions in rule 234 (a) since it was no part of his duty to see that the plaintiff who was familiar with the rule, was safe. Both men neglected the rules made for their safety but nothing that the ganger did or omitted to do contributed to the plaintiff's accident so as to make the defendants vicariously responsible.

Stapley v. Gypsum Mines Ld. [1953] A.C. 663; [1953] 3 W.L.R. 279; [1953] 2 All E.R. 478 distinguished.

APPEAL from Donovan J.

The plaintiff, James Edward Judson, was, at the material time, a re-layer employed by the London and North Eastern Railway Co. Among his duties was that of taking part in the relaying of parts of the railway line which were found to be in need of attention. On July 12, 1949, the day before the work of relaying

C. A.
1954
Judson
v.
British Transport Commission.

was to start on a stretch of line between Newcastle and Low Fell, the plaintiff and a ganger called Varty, under whom the plaintiff was working, were, according to practice, walking along the part of the line which was to be relayed, to note the lengths of new metals which would be required. While the two men were walking along the line, Varty in the 4 ft. way of the up line from Newcastle, and the plaintiff on the left hand side of the 4 ft. way, walking on the ends of the sleepers, a train travelling on the line on which they were walking appeared out of the tunnel from the direction of Newcastle, travelling very slowly. Both men saw it and had ample time to get out of the way and stepped to the left into the 6 ft. way, the space between the up and down lines. The plaintiff, who was slightly in front of Varty stepped into the 4 ft. way of the down line and was struck by an engine which came up from behind, with the result that his leg had to be amputated above the knee. At the time of the accident the requirements of rule 9 of the Prevention of Accidents Rules, 1902, made pursuant to section 1 (1) of the Employment on Railways (Prevention of Accidents) Act, 1900, and of para. 12 of the Schedule thereto [1] were not in operation. Neither of the men adopted the safety procedure laid down in rule 234 (a) of the London and North Eastern Railway Rules, 1933 (now the British Railway Rules, 1950,[2] for the avoidance of danger from an approaching train, nor did the ganger take the steps indicated in rule 234 (d).

The plaintiff brought an action against the defendants for breach of their statutory duty under rule 9 of the rules of 1902,

[1] Railway Employment (Prevention of Accidents) Act, 1900, s. 1: "(1) The Board of Trade may . . . "make such rules as they think fit "with respect to any of the subjects "mentioned in the schedule to this "Act, with the object of reducing or "removing the dangers and risks "incidental to railway service." Sch. para. 12: "Protection to permanent "way men when relaying or repairing "permanent way."

[2] Prevention of Accidents Rules, 1902, r. 9: "With the object of protecting men working singly or in "gangs on or near lines of railway in "use for traffic for the purpose of "relaying or repairing the permanent "way of such lines, the railway companies shall, after the coming into "operation of these rules, in all cases "where any danger is likely to arise, "provide persons or apparatus for the "purpose of maintaining a good look-"out or for giving warning against "any train or engine approaching "men so working. . . ."

British Railways Rules, r. 234 (a): "When a train is approaching, men "working on or near to the line must "not remain on any running lines ". . . but must at once move clear "of all lines unless they can distinctly "see that they are in a place of safety "and in no danger from another train "approaching them unobserved. . . ."

(d) "When work is about to be "undertaken on or near lines in use "for traffic and danger is likely to "arise, the ganger or man in charge, "must . . . appoint one or more persons . . . expressly to maintain a "good look-out, and to give warning "of any train approaching. He must "also satisfy himself that the look-"out man appointed is stationed in a "suitable position, is wearing a look-"out armlet, and is equipped with a "whistle or horn, not less than 6 "detonators, red and green flags "during daylight, and a hand signal "lamp after sunset or during fog or "falling snow. This man must on no "account leave his post whilst the "men he is protecting continue at "work unless he is properly relieved, "when he must transfer the 'look-"out' armlet to the reliefman."

and also for negligence on the ground that the ganger, who was in charge of the work being done, failed to take any steps under rule 9 or rule 234 (a) and (d) to ensure the safety of the plaintiff.

Donovan J. held that there had been a breach of statutory duty by the defendants, but that the plaintiff's injury was entirely due to his own negligence and, accordingly, he gave judgment for the defendants. The plaintiff appealed.

F. W. Beney Q.C. and W. R. Steer for the appellant.
Marven Everett Q.C. and Tudor Evans for the respondents.

The following cases were cited in argument: Vincent v. Southern Railway[1]; Roberts v. Dorman Long & Co.[2]; Redpath v. London and North Eastern Railway Co.[3]; Hutchinson v. London and North Eastern Railway Co.[4]; London and North Eastern Railway Co. v. Berriman[5]; Stapley v. Gypsum Mines Ld.[6]; Stevens v. Railway Executive.[7]

